"RESOLVED: That this Board of Bishops, now in session, invite our Book Agents, Brothers Barbee & Smith, to a brotherly and religious interview with us, with the hope of inducing them to voluntarily vacate their respective offices in the interest of the Church which they, in common with ourselves, both love and serve.

("Signed:)" "J. S. KEY,
"H. C. MORRISON,
"O. P. FITZGERALD,
"W. A. CANDLER."

"The following resolution was introduced after the first one had failed:

"RESOLVED: That we call for the immediate reassembling of the General Conference of 1898 that it may take in hand and adjust the unfortunate conditions which have arisen from the process employed in collecting the claim of our Publishing House against the United States Government.

("Signed:)" "J. S. KEY,
"H. C. MORRISON,
"O. P. FITZGERALD."

"While Bishop Candler's name is not signed to the last resolution, he voted for it."

The editor had expected to give extended comment upon the paper of the Bishops, published last week, but as, owing to the length of it, the paper of the Book Committee cannot be given in this number, only one or two observations will be made this week.

(1.) The deliverance of the Bishops, published last week, meant what it said, and its utterances cannot be nullified by such an utterance as the editor of the Richmond "Advocate" made last week.

This utterance, whether meant to be so or not, was a reflection upon the character of the College of Bishops. It makes them as bad as Barbee and Smith. When the point is reached that our Bishops, as well as our Book Agents, write one thing and mean another, then the time will have come to lose all faith in our Church organization. The Bishops say—"We recognize the distinguished courtesy of the United States Senate in its dealings with the Church and its desire to protect the beneficiaries of the Church." The Richmond "Advocate" says—"This paragraph is a polite way of noticing senatorial hypocrisy." The "Advocate" has from the beginning thrown dirt and stones at the Senate, and many persons have been led by such writing to spend their indignation on the Senate. Now the Bishops come out and state that the Senate has treated the Church with such "distinguished courtesy" as to merit public recognition by the Bishops. This statement of the Bishops is so contrary to the statements made by the "Advocate" to its readers that its force had to be broken in some way, and it is done by informing the Church that the Bishops, in a deliverance on the most serious question which has ever disturbed our Church, deliberately said the "distinguished courtesy of the Senate," when they meant "Senatorial hypocrisy." In order to save itself, the "Advocate" seems to be willing to make the Bishops a set of ironical hypocrites.

The editor rejoices to say from definite information that no such thought is implied or intended by the Bishops, but they mean just what they say.

(2.) The Bishops appear to be unwilling to assume any responsibility in the matter, but leave the situation about as they found it, except that it is now clear that the men who favored conservatism of Conference action on the ground that we could leave the whole matter to the "goodly judgment of our beloved Bishops" can no longer hope for anything from the Bishops. They have left the matter to the Book Committee, which by its conduct is equally as bad as Barbee & Smith, and to the Annual Conferences. THEY HAD THE RIGHT TO CALL A SESSION OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE, and this editor thinks they should have done so. As they have not done so, it cannot be done till the Conferences do so.

(3.) The present deliverance of the Bishops should be compared with the previous deliverance of last summer. They asserted in the first deliverance that under certain conditions they would take steps to return the money to the United States Government. They could not do this without a General Conference. But in this last deliverance they say that they are not members of the Book Committee and cannot interfere in its work. But they can do exactly what they would have been obliged to do in case they thought their conditions to have been met. They can call a General Conference, as the four Bishops are said to have desired.

(4.) There is no way now to clear the Church of this disgrace but by General Conference action. The Book Committee will not condemn themselves. The Tennessee Conference has passed the character of Dr. Barbee. The Board of Bishops, by a majority of two, (not unanimously, it can be said with thankfulness), has declined to take further action. The only recourse is to a session of the General Conference. This would have to be called by the Annual Conferences. The Nashville District Conference and the Atlanta Preachers' meeting have already voted for this method. It is the only hope left.

NASHVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE ADOPT STRONG RESOLUTIONS.

The very first gathering of Methodists held since the recent action of the Methodist official bodies was the Nashville District Conference, which closed its sessions in this city yesterday. Before adjourning the Conference, by a large majority, passed the most drastic resolutions which have been offered since the agitation began.

By a vote of 24 to 14, the Conference adopted the following resolutions after a warm discussion:

"WHEREAS, Under the action of our Bishops the Publishing House Claim matter is relegated to the Church at large, acting through the General Conference, therefore, be it

"RESOLVED: That the delegates to our Annual Conference be, and they are hereby, instructed: First, to vote for calling a special session of the General Conference; second, to vote for a new set of delegates to said session; third, to vote for persons as such delegates who disapprove of the methods resorted to by the servants of the Church in procuring the passage of the bill in the United States Congress appropriating $288,000 to our Church, and who will use their efforts to purge our Church of the shame and disgrace that has been brought upon it."

The resolutions, as introduced, were signed by John L. Nolan, James Whitworth, J. L. Wright, B. Jackson and P. H. Wade.—"Nashville American," May 14, '99.

NOT SATISFIED.

ATLANTA PREACHERS WANT PUBLISHING HOUSE MATTER RECONSIDERED.

ALLANTA, GA., May 15.—The Methodist ministers of Atlanta passed resolutions calling for the appointment of a committee to urge upon the forthcoming Annual Conferences a movement for an extra General Conference to reconsider the Publishing House matter. The preamble states that there is great dissatisfaction with the way in which this matter has been disposed of.—"Leader."

DR. PALMORE SUED

The North Carolina Christian Advocate's Nashville correspondent says: "In the midst of the church work of the week there has been quite a sensation. E. B. Stahlman, the Publishing House attorney for the collection of the War Claim, entered a libel suit for $50,000 in the Circuit Court May 3d, against the editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. Notice was served upon Dr. Palmore, while he was attending a meeting of the Board of Missions. Mr. Stahlman is reported as saying that several other similar suits will follow."

It is greatly to be hoped that this action taken against Dr. Palmore will not be dropped, but that it will be pushed through to the end. Then Barbee and Smith, Stahlman, the Book Committee, and certain Senators and Representatives will be put on the witness-stand, and the Church at large will see the pitiable condition of our representatives. The more light turned on the better. Thousands of our people do not yet know the true facts in this case. If the policy of silence had not been followed by the Conference organs, the wave of moral indignation would have been so great as to have swept all before it. Let the suit proceed.

PUBLICATION OF QUARTERLY CONFERENCE ROUNDS.

The METHODIST RECORDER was established in the city of Lynchburg in April, 1893, chiefly through the instrumentality of J. P. Pettyjohn, Esq., with Dr. E. M. Peterson as editor. The presiding elder of the district at that time was Dr. J. P. Garland. The FARMVILLE DISTRICT METHODIST was established in May, 1893, with Rev. James Cannon, Jr., as editor. Rev. T. H. Campbell was presiding elder of the district. The two papers were consolidated in 1894, under the name of THE METHODIST RECORDER, with Rev. James Cannon, Jr., as editor, and Dr. E. M. Peterson and Revs. L. S. Reed and T. H. Campbell as associate editors. The paper was considered to be the special organ of the two districts, and in a report adopted by the Virginia Conference in the city of Richmond in the year 1895, it was called the "organ of the Farmville and Lynchburg districts." The people of these districts had subscribed to the paper in large numbers, and expected to find in it the special items of news pertaining to their districts. In course of time the Norfolk District Methodist suspended, and by arrangement with the publishers, the METHODIST RECORDER agreed to fill out the unpaid subscriptions. Not very long after, the Eastern Shore Methodist decided to suspend, and in open District Conference an arrangement was made with the RECORDER to finish out all unexpired subscriptions. Thus it came to pass by a natural process, that the RECORDER circulated within the bounds of the Lynchburg, Farmville, Norfolk, Portsmouth, and Eastern Shore districts. Gradually it became known beyond these limits, and subscriptions were received from other districts, until the paper now circulates in every district of the Conference, although very slightly in the Danville district, which furnishes a low-priced paper to its people. For some years the Quarterly Conference rounds of the Farmville and Lynchburg districts have appeared in its columns, Bros. Campbell and Riddick, of the Farmville, and Bro. Littleton, of the Lynchburg, having sent them to the office. Later, Bro. Campbell sent for some time the rounds of the Petersburg district. Some of our subscribers in other sections, seeing these notices, spoke to the editor, and some wrote, asking that he publish notices of Quarterly meetings in their districts, as they liked to know some time ahead, and they did not want, or did not feel able, to take the "Richmond Advocate," the only paper which did publish them. The type-setting of the Quarterly Conference rounds is more troublesome than other matter, and it was a question of no personal moment to the editor, but after a number of requests had been made he decided to do so. He had no thought that any objection would be raised, and copied them as he copied any other official notice, signing the name of the elder to them. He had never thought, nor does he think now, that an official notice, published in a paper becomes the property of that paper. It is simply a medium by which it is given to the public. After it has once been given to the public it becomes public property. The Bishops publish the list of Annual Conferences after the May meetings in the Nashville "Advocate" and they are copied as official notices throughout our connection. The RECORDER did exactly the same way with the Quarterly Conference rounds. Some of the elders had told him they preferred him to do that rather than to make out a second list. That any question should be raised by any one because the editor published Church notices at the request of his readers, without giving credit to the paper in which the notice first appeared, had not crossed his mind, and he is glad that he could not conceive that anyone would raise so small a question. But having heard that the question had been raised, and that it had been intimated that some of the elders objected, the editor immediately sent a letter to all the elders except Bro. Wright (in whose district there is a low-priced paper and comparatively few copies of the RECORDER circulated) and Bro. Riddick, who had just sent his rounds in writing.

The following is an exact copy of letter sent to all the elders:

BLACKSTONE, VA., April 14, '99.
REV. R. T. WILSON,
PETERSBURG, VA.

DEAR BROTHER WILSON:—The subscribers to the RECORDER in different sections of our Conference desire me to publish in our paper the Quarterly Conference rounds. I have not troubled the presiding elders by requesting them to send copies to me, but, supposing that none of them would object, I have simply taken the printed notices from the "Richmond Advocate" and published them in our paper. There has been an intimation, however, that this has been regarded as improper, and that the presiding elders do not want their rounds published in the RECORDER. I write therefore to inquire whether you have any objection to the publication of the Quarterly Conference rounds in the RECORDER, and if you have not, whether you will send us the rounds written out, or whether you will authorize us to copy them from the "Advocate" without putting you to the trouble of making out more than one slip. This matter, as you will perceive, is not at all a personal matter with the editor of the RECORDER, but it is simply a matter of giving information to those members of our Church who subscribe to the RECORDER, and have no other paper from which to learn when the Quarterly Conference meets.

With best wishes for your success in the great work which has been committed to you, I am,

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

To this letter the following written replies were received:

PETERSBURG, VA., May 9, '99.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

DEAR BROTHER CANNON:—Enclosed please find my appointments for the "third round," which I prefer to send you direct. * * * * *

Fraternally yours,
R. T. WILSON.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA., April 20, '99.

DEAR BROTHER:—Certainly, copy my list of Quarterly meetings from "Advocate." The more widely the appointments are known the better.

I trust that Blackstone Female Institute is closing up well.

Very truly yours,
J. S. HUNTER.

PORTSMOUTH, VA., April 19, '99.

DEAR BROTHER:—Certainly, I have no objection whatever to the publication of my notices in the RECORDER, nor to your copying them from the "Advocate."

Fraternally,
W. C. VADEN.

RICHMOND, VA., 805 East Clay st., }
April 21, '99. }

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
Editor SOUTHERN RECORDER,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to your letter of the 14th instant, I beg leave to say that it has been a long-established custom for the presiding elders of the Virginia Conference to publish their appointments in the "Richmond Christian Advocate," the organ of the Conference, and I know of no reason for departing from this custom.

I regard the publication in the organ of the Conference as proper and sufficient, and see no reason for additional publication.

If, however, in the interest of your paper, you desire special permission to copy my notices from the "Advocate," then I refer you to its editors.

Respectfully,
J. POWELL GARLAND.

(The last paragraph of this letter is evidently intended to be a bit of humor, as the writer of the letter knew, of course, that published matter, unless copyrighted, can be copied by any paper without obtaining "special permission" from editors. Only matter of unusual value is copyrighted. Quarterly Conferences, even when held by the most experienced elders, have not been thought to be proper subjects for copyright heretofore.—EDITOR.)

518 Clay street,
LYNCHBURG, VA., April 19, '99. }
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

DEAR BROTHER:—I have received yours of April 14th, in respect to the publication of my rounds as P. E. of the Lynchburg district, in the RECORDER.

I do not propose to have anything whatever to do with the publication of matter in the RECORDER. The owner, or owners, and the editor can do as they please in that respect so far as I am concerned. My rounds will be furnished by me, as always heretofore, to the Church organ in our Conference, the "Richmond Christian Advocate."

What you copy from that paper is no affair of mine.

Sincerely yours,
PAUL WHITEHEAD.

(Inasmuch as the RECORDER was established in Lynchburg and has a number of subscribers in the district, Bro. Littleton for four years, up to last November, regularly sent his rounds to the RECORDER for the information of its readers. Not receiving any from the present elder, the letter was sent him, as to all others, with the above result.—EDITOR.)

BLOXOM, VA., April 20, '99.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

DEAR BRO:—Yours of April 14th received yesterday. My Quarterly meetings are not only published in the authorized organ of our Conference, the "Richmond Christian Advocate," but also our county paper, and timely notices given of them in the congregations by the pastors; hence nothing is gained by, and I can see no need of, their publication in your paper—the RECORDER.

With thanks for your kind wishes, I am,
Fraternally yours,
W. E. JUDKINS.

(As the Eastern Shore "District Methodist" published the presiding elder's appointments (although they were published at the same time in the "Advocate," and "timely notices given of them in the congregations by the pastors"), and as the editor of the RECORDER made a public agreement with the District Conference at Harborton to fill out the unexpired subscriptions, he continued to publish these notices, especially since the subscribers and friends of the RECORDER have steadily increased in this, the home district of the editor.)

ASHLAND, VA., April 26, '99.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
Editor SO. METHODIST RECORDER,
MY DEAR MR. EDITOR:—Your communication of the 14th instant is at hand. In reply I will say that it has been my custom to send all communications of public interest to the Church, to the "Richmond Advocate," the official organ of our Conference. I have considered such notice as sufficient. As far as I can recall, I have made no objection to other parties publishing my notices, nor do I now object, provided due courtesy is shown, and credit is given, to the Conference organ, from which they are copied.

I am, with sincere regards,
T. H. CAMPBELL.

(In reference to the above letter, the editor would state that up to the last few months, Bro. Campbell has sent notices of his rounds to the RECORDER ever since its establishment, in 1893.—EDITOR.)

WALKERTON, VA., April 29, '99.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

DEAR BROTHER:—After thinking about what I said to you in Richmond this week with regard to publishing my Quarterly meetings in your paper, have come to the conclusion that you may have misunderstood me.

You have not until lately asked if I had any objections to my Quarterly meetings appearing in your paper, but published them as you pleased. I shall in the future, as in the past, send list to "R. C. Advocate," organ of the Virginia Conference, and have no right to authorize anyone to copy from it. If anyone do so, he is responsible to said paper. Yours fraternally,
JOS. H. AMISS.

(Our readers will please take note and bear us witness in days to come that, although it first saw the light in our columns, the editor of the RECORDER did not originate this new "statute of limitation" upon the rights of a presiding elder. He does think that eight years successively is long enough, but even such a radical "ecclesiastical demagogue" as he is, never dreamed of limiting the power of the presiding elder to such an extent that the elder would not have the right to authorize anyone to copy the Quarterly Conference appointments from a Conference organ. The editor cannot go that far in the matter of limitation, and should anyone attempt to pass such a law, the editor will feel obliged to oppose it and to defend the eldership from such limitation of its power. It is a common thing for persons to send notices to papers and request other papers to copy.—EDITOR.)

The editor did not receive a letter from Dr. Brown, but saw him in person. Several months ago in a conversation he had authorized his rounds to be copied from the "Advocate," as it would save two writings, but as the question had been raised, a letter had been sent to him, as to all the others. In this last interview he said that he could not imagine who could have stirred up such a trivial question, that he certainly had not, and that he authorized me again to copy his rounds as published in the "Advocate," his only concern being that as he occasionally made changes a careful watch be kept to see if any changes had been made.

As noted above, no letter was sent to Bro. Wright, who is on a district where the RECORDER does not circulate, or to Bro. Riddick, who sends his appointments regularly to the RECORDER.

The above correspondence speaks for itself. It is published as the best way to let our readers know why the Quarterly Conference rounds of the Lynchburg district (which we have published for years), West Richmond, Rappahannock, Petersburg, and Eastern Shore districts will no longer be published in the RECORDER. Our readers may draw any conclusions they please from these letters. The editor draws but one public conclusion, namely: THE RECORDER, WONDERFUL TO RELATE, HAS SURVIVED THE SHOCK. ALTHOUGH THESE ELDERS WILL NOT FURNISH THE DATES OF THEIR CONFERENCES FOR ITS COLUMNS IT IS STILL ALIVE, AND HAS DETERMINED TO SIGNALIZE ITS SEVENTH BIRTHDAY BY REDUCING THE PRICE OF THE PAPER TO FIFTY CENTS PER YEAR FROM NOW UNTIL SEPTEMBER THE FIRST.

CORRESPONDENCE.

UNDER SHEPHERDS,
FEED MY SHEEP

(BY HERBERT T. BACON.)

At no time are our secular papers watched with keener interest than when a new President takes his seat. Among the matters most closely observed is "whom will he appoint to constitute his Cabinet? Whom will he appoint over the Treasury? Over the Army? Israel was an agricultural people. The wealth of the people largely consisted of herds of cattle and flocks of sheep, and when taxes were paid fleeces of wool were used as "circulating medium," and special attention was given to the state of the flocks that the State and the King should suffer no damage. When a new King came to the Throne and appointed his Cabinet there was an appointee whose business it was to look after this important interest. Hundreds of under-shepherds were under the control of this chief shepherd by whom they were appointed to office and by whom they were retained if found faithful and competent or dismissed if found faithless or inefficient.

The prophet compares our Lord to a shepherd: "He shall feed His flock as a shepherd." The psalmist says: "The Lord is my shepherd." Christ says of Himself: "I am the Good Shepherd. The Good Shepherd giveth His life for His sheep." The Apostle Peter calls Him the "Chief Shepherd."

Truly blessed are they whom the Lord chooses as His under-shepherds, counts them faithful, and calls them to His ministry, admits by the door into the fold, and says to them: "Go feed my sheep, succor the tempted, strengthen the weak, comfort the sorrowing; lo, I have sent thee, I will be with thee."

The coming together of the flock of Christ on the Sabbath day, to the eye of sight and sense, is men and women resting from worldly labor to hear a sermon, but to the eye of faith, it affords a sweet and pleasant interview with the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls, Himself who has said: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

As the shepherd gets near to the sheep when he feeds them, with his own hand caressing them, in tender words calling them pet names, and as the sheep are safe and blest when he ministers to them, so it is when Christ calls his people together to be fed on the Sabbath day.

Almost worn down by Satan's temptation during the past week, feeling his hot hand on his soul, almost ready to say, "It is useless to pray, God does not hear my prayer," one goes up to hear of Him who, tempted like as we are, is able to succor them that are tempted, he resists the devil and he flees from him.

One comes who says, "I have had no delight in my Bible, no comfort in its promises, no nearness to God in prayer; like Mary, I have sought an absent Lord, like her, I find Him in His Father's house, and I am cheered, full of peace and joy."

Another comes, whose bowed form, clad in the mourner's garb, shows that she has lately hidden some dear face behind the coffin lid, but through strength received this day, she kisses the rod and cries, "Thy will be done."

The sinner recollects some black deed that would brand him with disgrace and shame if made public and starts as is the Judge had made it known from the book of His remembrance from the judgement seat.

Under-shepherds feeding the sheep of the Chief Shepherd! What word has such comfort and such power in it as theirs!

A Great Combine
Capitalized at Millions

put of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

HERE IS THE PLAN A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideals are: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price."
—Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."
—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine."
—Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work."
—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it."
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none."
—Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate."
—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus."
—The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Naphthali Lucock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning."
—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long. Address orders and make remittances payable to

MRS. H. E. WALL, Rec Sec.

CONDITION OF DR. BROWN.

In a card received on Monday, written by himself to the editor, Dr. Brown states that he is improving, and that he hopes to be present at the Norfolk District Conference, which is to be held at Lambert's Point, beginning July 12. This will be good news to the brethren, who will be glad to know that his sickness is yielding so speedily to the treatment employed.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

West Richmond will meet in Centenary Church, Richmond, May 30th, at 9 a. m.

Portsmouth will meet at Franklin, July 12th, at 9 a. m.

Norfolk will meet at Lamberts Point July 12th at 9 a. m.

Eastern Shore will meet at Drummondtown, July 17th, at 8 p. m.

Rappahannock will meet at King George C. H., July 19.

Richmond will meet at Gloucester Point, July 25th.

Farmville will meet at Crowe, July 26th.

DR. ROBERT N. SLEDD.

Surely this has been a year of mourning, and now the climax appears to have been reached. What man stood higher among us in the qualities and gifts which make a faithful, effective minister of the Lord than Dr. R. N. Slodd? His character as well as his talents shone out pre-eminently. He was a great preacher and a great pastor, a combination not always found in one person. His great intellectual ability gave him great weight with his people as a pastor, and his watchful pastoral care gave his sermons added power with his flock. From the beginning of his ministry to its close he served the Church in important positions, and he did the work assigned him with faithfulness and great success. He had trained his mind so carefully and prepared himself so thoroughly and persistently for his work that his public ministry was always helpful and stimulating. He was in great demand among his brethren for special occasions, and his sermons and addresses were not only polished in style and strong in thought, but they were also delivered with vigor and real fervor, and his face which was rather quiet, sometimes almost sad in repose, in preaching lighted up until sometimes it fairly shone and glowed. He was the best known preacher in our Conference throughout the State and Church at large. He had been sent as a delegate to the General Conference a number of times, and twice received a large number of votes for the Bishopric. Had it not been for his retiring, unassuming disposition there is little doubt that he would have been elected. He was sent by the College of Bishops as Fraternal Messenger to the Canadian Church several years ago. He was rarely heard on the floor of any body, Annual or General Conference, except when performing some duty which had been definitely assigned to him. His greatest service to our Conference, outside of the regular pastorate, was rendered as president of the Conference Mission Board. His management of its affairs has been both prudent and progressive, and his reports were never merely routine, lifeless documents, but were strong, earnest, convincing appeals which showed careful thought and preparation. For several years he has represented this section on the Board of Missions and is the Vice-President of the Board. He was an A. M. of Randolph-Macon College, and a trustee of the college and Vice-President of the Board.

A special from Atlanta to The Times, says.

"Rev. Dr. R. N. Slodd, the well known and beloved Virginia pastor, died suddenly this morning at 11 o'clock at the Grady Hospital of typhoid fever. He was taken with bilious fever Friday morning while passing through Atlanta en route home from the bishops' meeting in Nashville, and was taken to a hotel, but his condition becoming more serious he was removed to Grady Hospital. At first Dr. Slodd rallied some, and the hospital physicians entertained strong hopes of his recovery, but typhoid fever had developed, and since early morning he sank rapidly, the end coming peacefully shortly before noon.

"Dr. Slodd was given every possible attention while in Atlanta, and since Saturday his son, Professor Andrew Slodd, and his daughter-in-law, have been constantly at his bedside. His son married a daughter of Bishop Warren Chandler, of Georgia, only a few weeks ago. The noted divine met death this morning with a smile, no murmur escaping his lips, and as the end drew near, he raised his hands and called for God's blessing to rest upon his loved ones. He referred tenderly to his congregation in Danville, and with a sweet smile the gentle spirit drifted away.

"The Evangelical Ministers Association of Atlanta called in a body in the afternoon to view the remains, and numbers of friends have paid tributes of respect during the day. The body was escorted to the train at midnight by many friends."

The funeral services were held at Main-Street Church, Danville, at six o'clock on Tuesday evening. They were conducted by Bishop Granbery, under whose ministry he made a profession of religion, assisted by Drs. Whitehead and Tudor, all of whom made short and appropriate addresses, in addition to the usual burial service. The notice of death and funeral did not appear until Tuesday morning, and so very few of the Conference were able to be present. Besides the presiding elder and the pastors of Danville, there were present, Revs. J. J. Lafferty, H. C. Cheatham, W. J. Twilly, and James Cannon, Jr. After the services the body remained in the Church till midnight when it was carried to the depot, and thence by the Southern road to Powhatan county, where it was interred in the family burying ground.

There is great sorrow in many parsonages in the Conference. The preachers trusted and honored him, and brethren cannot but wonder who can fill his place. May it be said of him, as it was said of Abel: "He being dead yet speaketh."

The following facts are given, taken mostly from the Conference Sketches:

He was the son of James V. and Ann P. Slodd, and was born in Powhatan county, Virginia, on the 19th of December, 1833. His father was of English and his mother of French descent—the former of Methodist and the latter of Baptist parentage. His earliest religious instruction and impressions were received in the school of Methodism. His education began and was continued until his seventeenth year, in such schools as his neighborhood afforded. In 1851, he entered Randolph-Macon College and graduated with distinction four years later.

In March, 1855, he was converted and joined the Church, under the ministry of Rev. J. C. Granbery, then college chaplain. Immediately after graduation, he became principal of the Clarksville Male Academy, which position he held one year.

In September, 1855, he was married to Miss Fannie Carey Greene, of Warren, North Carolina, who died about a year ago, leaving him five grown children, three sons and two daughters to mourn his loss.

In the year 1856, he returned to Randolph-Macon, and devoted himself to the study of theology under Dr. William A. Smith, then President of the College.

In November, 1857, he was received into the Virginia Annual Conference.

He served Churches in all our cities having been pastor of the following charges: Suffolk, Albemarle Circuit, Market-Street Church, Petersburg; Court-Street, Lynchburg, and Centenary, Richmond, twice; Trinity, Richmond, one term; Granby-Street, Norfolk, four years; Washington-Street, Petersburg, two years; Centenary, Norfolk, three years. His last appointment was Main-Street Church, Danville, where he was closing his fourth year at the time of his demise. Dr. Slodd has also filled the office of Presiding Elder.

THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, convened on the 3rd at the Methodist Publishing House, Col. E. W. Cole, presiding.

The report of the Secretaries, Drs. W. R. Lambuth and J. H. Pritchett, was read by Dr. Lambuth. It reviewed the work done in the several foreign fields during the past year. In the summary it states that Rev. H. L. Gray, formerly of the China Mission, joined the Mexico Mission; Rev. H. T. Reed and wife, Rev. J. A. G. Shipley, and Miss Florence Keiser were sent to China; Rev. R. A. Hardie and wife, of the Canadian College Mission in Korea, were accepted in the field; Miss Anna B. Lanier was sent to the Japan Mission; Rev. G. N. MacDonald was sent to Havana; Rev. H. W. Baker and wife to Matanzas; Rev. W. E. Smith and wife to Cienfuegos; Rev. H. B. Someilan and wife to Santiago. Besides these, Rev. Thad E. Leland, at Havana, and Messrs. C. A. Nichols and E. E. Hubbard at Matanzas are co-operating as teachers. Dr. C. A. Fulwood, superintendent, was in charge of the Cuban work on the mainland.

The Secretaries recommend the following:

"In view of our depleted numbers and the providential preparation of that great field, we recommend the strengthening of our force in China at the earliest possible day.

"That a careful scrutiny be made of the new treaties, which will go into effect this year in Japan, especially in so far as they relate to the tenure of property.

"That the needs of our training schools in foreign lands be laid before the Boards of Education of the Annual Conferences, with the request that a percent of their portion of the Twentieth Century Fund be a grant in aid of those institutions in which our native converts are being prepared for the ministry.

"That suitable action be taken with reference to the approaching Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in New York City, Saturday, April 21, to Tuesday, May 1, 1900."

The statistics of the foreign missions in all the fields are as follows: One hundred and twenty-eight missionaries, 87 native preachers, 147 local helpers,

THE JUNIOR RECORDER.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., MAY 18, 1899.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON IX, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MAY 28.

Text of the Lesson, John xviii, 28, 40. Memory Verses, 38-40—Golden Text, John xix, 4—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

28. "Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment." In Math. xxvii, 2, it is written that they led Him away and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate, the governor. Some of these self righteous people, with murder in their hearts, would not enter Pilate's house lest they should be defiled, for they desired to eat the Passover. They did not know that the true Passover Lamb was being put to death by them and that their Passover, like their Sabbaths and all their feasts, was a mere form—a husk without a kernel, chaff to be burned up. What is your religion? In what do you trust? Is it in some church or creed or ceremony, or is it in Jesus only and His precious blood?

29, 30. "If He were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered Him up unto thee." This from them in reply to Pilate's question, "What accusation bring ye against this man?" It is easy to call Him an evildoer, but impossible to prove it. They must, however, say something, and having yielded themselves to the devil he will suggest many a lie to them. In all His life He never said or did a wrong thing except in the eyes of those who hated Him. He knew no sin.

31. "Take ye Him and judge Him according to your law." Thus said Pilate, to which they replied, "It is not lawful for us to put any man to death." So they confess that they have determined that He must die, and they only desire that Pilate will attend to it for them. It would not do for them to say how long ago they had made up their minds to kill Him as soon as possible. It might show their hearts toward Him too plainly. If it was unlawful for them to put any one to death, how was it that only a little later they found no difficulty in stoning Stephen?

32. "That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which He spake, signifying what death He should die." The Jewish mode, according to their law, was stoning, but Jesus had said that He should be crucified (Math. xx, 19). This was typified by the serpent of brass lifted up on a pole (Num. xxi, 9; John iii, 14) and was plainly described in Ps. xxii, 16, "They pierced My hands and My feet." The law said, "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree," and Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law being made a curse for us (Deut. xxi, 23; Gal. iii, 13).

33. "Art Thou the King of the Jews?" Pilate's question to Jesus when He entered the judgment hall again. The wise men from the east came with the inquiry, "Where is He that is born King of the Jews?" The prophets had foretold a Messiah who would sit on David's throne as King of Israel (Math. ii, 2; Isa. ix, 6, 7; Jer. xxiii, 5, 6; Ezek. xxxvii, 22), but what did Pilate know of these things and why did he ask this question? Were not the Jews subjects of Caesar?

34. "Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of Me?" Of course Jesus knew why he asked it, for He knew what is in man. He knows the things that come into our minds, every one of them (John ii, 25; Ezek. xi, 5). He had a reason for asking Pilate, for He does nothing without a cause (Ezek. xiv, 23).

35. "Pilate answered: Am I a Jew? Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered Thee unto me. What hast Thou done?" It is unusual to have a prisoner and have no charge against him, and unusual also to see the judges, as in the case of Caiaphas and Pilate, asking the prisoner to tell what he has done. Was ever seen on earth such a travesty on justice as in this case?

36. "Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world." How often this word of Christ is used to try to prove that our Lord shall never have a kingdom on this earth except that which He is now said to have in the hearts of men—a very poor sample of a kingdom truly, judging from the lack of subjection to Him everywhere manifest! But one might as well say that the believer has no business on earth because he is not of this world. That is the very reason that he is here—in the world, but not of it, that he may glorify God in it. His origin is not earthly, for he is not a child of God until born from above, and Christ is here speaking of the origin of His kingdom, as He Himself explains in the last clause of this verse, "Now is My kingdom not from hence." It will be as truly a kingdom on this earth as was Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece or Rome, but it will not be set up by force of arms, but by the mighty power of God, the same that brought Israel out of Egypt, divided the Red sea and the Jordan and subdued Canaan before them.

37. "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth beareth My voice." Thus Jesus replied to Pilate's question, "Art Thou a king, then?" He was the truth, sent by the God of truth, filled with the spirit of truth. Yet we are called upon to spend three weeks in this eighteenth chapter of John, full of a record of the works of the devil through Judas and the rulers Caiaphas and Pilate and even Simon Peter, and the wonderful words of truth in chapters 16 and 17, some of the most wonderful words on record, we are asked wholly to omit.

38, 39. "I find in Him no fault at all." Such was Pilate's testimony again and again. Judas also confessed that he had betrayed innocent blood (Math. xxvii, 4). Pilate's wife called Him a just man and urged her husband to have nothing to do with condemning Him. But Pilate had Him on his hands and must either condemn Him or release Him. The latter he wished to do, but had not the courage to do it. He hopes for a way out of his difficulty by suggesting that as it was his custom to release unto them a prisoner at Passover he should now release unto them Jesus. As an alternative he mentions a notable prisoner named Barabbas, probably thinking that, he being so wicked, the people will not ask to have him released, but will at once choose Jesus. He knows not the destroyer who was behind the scene that day, nor did he know that he himself was making choice between God and Satan.

40. "Not this man, but Barabbas." Thus they deliberately chose a murderer and rejected the Prince of Life. They preferred darkness to light and Satan to God. They did what they always had been doing as a nation since they were brought out of Egypt—turned their backs upon their Redeemer and leaned upon an arm of flesh, for when Pilate said, "Told your king!" they cried, "We have no king, but Caesar!" (John xix, 14, 15.)

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning May 28, "Established in Heart"—Text, Rom. i, 11-12; Ps. cxli, 1-10.

"His heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord."

Doubt gives the death stroke to all resolution. Confidence alone is strong. He that hesitates is lost for any enterprise. Conviction, assurance, firm faith and trust—these drive the wheels of progress. What one believes firmly he is apt to regard with feelings intense in proportion to his trust. Things once settled definitely do not often allow of much after debate. The mind has come to clear ideas, the heart is fixed, and the course of action decided upon—there how much easier it is for one to live!

Distressing doubts find no place for entrance; vacillation is banished, strength of purpose and joyousness of soul grow, because the course is clear and consistent.

Most of the discontent of life, the unhappiness and misery, would be banished if only each person would settle for himself once and forever his belief in God and purpose to serve Him obediently. It would require will power and submission, but it would give liberty and contentment. It would change sighs into songs and weariness into restfulness.

The expressions of supreme and unquestioning trust in God heard from aged saints often sound strange to half hearted disciples, but they are true to fact and should be natural to all followers of Christ. If He is the Saviour, trust Him fully, obey Him absolutely, love Him devotedly.

Many wish they might have more love for Christ, but never use the means of increasing the love they do have. Serve Him diligently, and love will increase. Trust His word, and faith will grow. Rest in His promises, and the heart will be fixed.

Our Schools.

The public schools are justly the pride of the republic. But they cannot supply all our need. The conference seminary, college and university are needed also. Whatever the coming years may bring we shall need for a long time our denominational schools. The associations formed during the stay of the young people at the academy and college shape their whole future life. The advantages which our own schools offer to the children of Methodist homes outweigh all the benefits to be found in those of other churches or of the state. It is of vast importance that our young people choose their life associates from those who have been trained under similar influences to their own. If Methodist principles are right, then it is unwise to neglect to teach them to our young people.

Every church should have a deep regard for its young people who are away from home attending any of our schools.

A POLITICAL WIRE PULLER AND HIS PUPPETS.

AN UNPLEASANT IMPUTATION.

In the town where Dr. Emmons was pastor, there lived a physician who was a pantheist, and took pains to let every one know it. He had made frequent boast that he could easily conquer Dr. Emmons in argument, and one day came his chance. He and the doctor met at the house of a sick man.

"How old are you, sir?" asked the physician, brusquely.

"Sixty-two," replied Dr. Emmons, quietly, although his eyes showed his surprise. "May I ask your age in turn?"

"I've been alive since the creation, in one form or another," said the physician, curtly.

"Ah, then, I suppose you were with Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden?" inquired the doctor.

"Certainly," came the reply.

"Um!" said Dr. Emmons, placidly, meditating on the other's face. "I always thought there was a third person there out some have differed from me."

THE CONVERSION OF CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE.

The account of the conversion of the eminent Chief Justice of the United States was given recently by Bishop Newman in introducing a communion service in San Francisco, and was published in the California Christian Advocate, as follows:

I had observed, when I was pastor of the Metropolitan Church, Washington, that when I was administering the communion, Chief Justice Chase always retired. I was impressed that I ought to talk to him about the matter, so I asked him why he did not come to the sacrament, to which he replied, "I am not a Methodist, and I am not good enough."

Said I, "We will omit consideration of the former point, and speak of the latter." Then I turned to the communion invitation, and read, "Ye that do truly and earnestly repent of your sins"—"Stop right there," said the Justice. And for a mortal hour we talked upon repentance.

Awile after this, as I was administering the communion, Mr. Chase was present. After all had communed who seemed to wish to do so, I waited still, and said: "Is there another who wishes to come? If you feel worthy, you are not fit to come. If you feel unworthy, but repent of sin and trust in Christ, come." With that, the Chief Justice arose, and, with face resting upon his bosom, he came to the altar, but instead of kneeling, he fell upon the carpet. Thus we lingered, for a soul was seeking God. By and by I administered the communion to him. Finally he rose upon his feet, with head erect, and the smile of forgiving grace on his face.

Not long after, Judge Miller, on the eve of his departure for Europe, came to see Mr. Chase. The latter, being about to go several miles to see a faithful domestic, took Mr. Miller in his carriage with him. Miller turned and said to him, "How are you?"

Said he, "Brother Miller, I am well in mind, feeble in body, but Christ is my satisfying portion. I have given up all to him."

"Well," said Miller, "I wish I could say that. I have been trying for eighteen years to solve that problem. I am a Unitarian, but have not solved it yet."

Said Chase, "I have solved it, and Christ is my satisfying portion." They parted. Judge Miller sailed for Europe, and Chase went to New York. He returned on Monday to the home of his daughter, spent the evening with some friends, and retired. In the morning, when he was called, there was no answer. The Chief Justice was dead. When discovered, his head was resting upon his right hand, and he looked as if sweetly sleeping.

COULD WE BUT SEE OURSELVES AS OTHERS SEE US.

"No; I wouldn't want to have anything to do with any of this here temperance business; I can't afford to have my personal liberty interfered with."

WORTH QUOTING

In commenting on the need of every-day religion, Watchword and Truth says: "God's grace is great, but it cannot do much for the Christian who is only trying to serve the Lord an hour or two a week."

"Trusts are forming on every side," says The Midland. "Business men see the advantage of co-operation. Is there no lesson here for the church? When rivalry between the churches shall cease, then profits or results will increase."

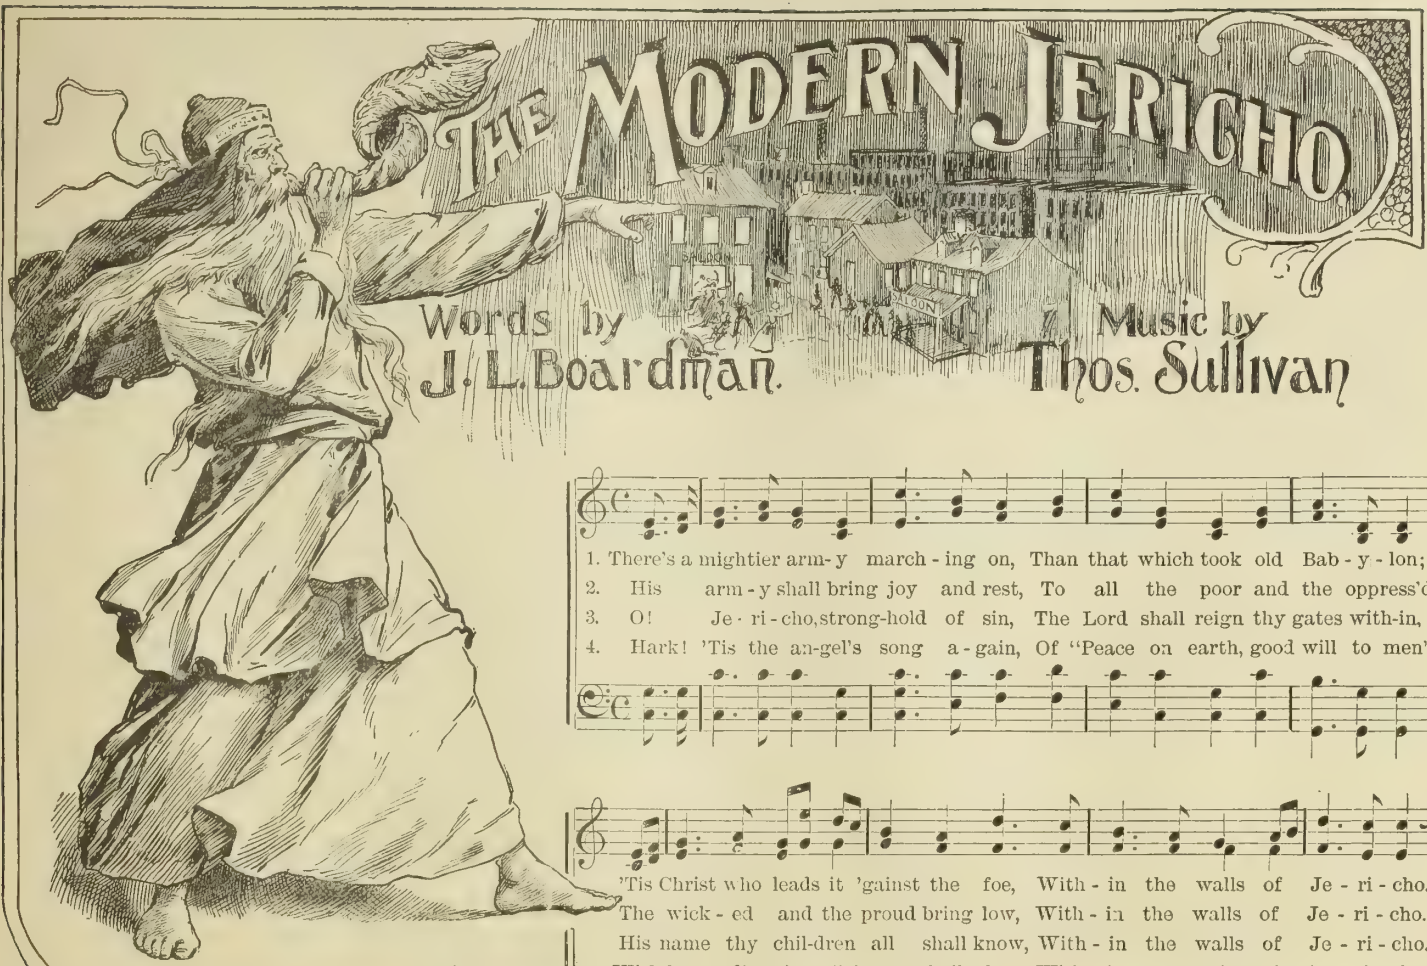

Describing character, The Sunday School Times says: "True wealth is not what my estate amounts to, but what I amount to. Character is the only eternal security. Jesus had no beatitudes for earthly success, such as gold or power."

Concerning union in missionary efforts, The Advance says: "Missionary work is doing much to bring the various Protestant denominations into substantial Christian union. The army of the Living God should present a united front when it faces the vast hosts of heathenism."

The Methodist Church is buckling on its armor. Zion's Herald says: "A mighty weapon truly will be the twenty millions we purpose to put into Christ's hands, as our thank-offering before the century closes. The war chest must be filled if the campaign against sin and misery is to be successfully carried on."

The evils of rigid sectarianism is thus commented on by The Christian Register: "There are too many denominations, and in some places, too many churches. Everywhere there is too much sectarianism. Let us dispense with superfluities in religion and get down to the real things which make real men and women."

In its recent temperance issue, The Epworth Herald said in an editorial: "The brewery is America's greatest oligarchy. It has grown fat and sleek and strong. Before it the multitude bows. The combined liquor interest of the country has our rulers by the throat. It has Congress by the throat. It has state legislatures by the throat. It has governors and mayors and aldermen and editors and even ministers, by the throat."

Joshua I. 9

Let your good thoughts get into your hands.

The walls of sin totter when we use the weapons of God.

"Fear thou not, for I am with thee," is a tower of strength in the day of battle.

In the morning thank God for what he will do, and at night thank him for what he has done.

It is wrong theology that will induce a man to travel farther to see his mother dead than alive.

Don't let the tear of pity for sufferers in other lands, blind our eyes to rum's victims at our own door.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Our young people can find no better schools than those of their own church. The Woman's college of Baltimore is the leading institution of its kind in the world. Our new university at Washington is destined to take like high rank.

Ten Years of Growth.

May 15, 1889, in Cleveland, O., the Epworth League had birth. The story, so often told, of the delegates from the five Young People's societies of Methodism meeting to effect a union, never grows wearisome. The difficulties were seemingly insuperable. The solution was unexpected and providential. The League was phenomenal in its growth. Ten years have served to bring it to a solid basis. Its powers and limitations are better known than ever before. It is not to be expected that it can increase in numbers so rapidly in the future as in the past years, because all parts of worldwide Methodism are now well organized, and there is not much room for new chapters. But the age of consolidation and upbuilding and development has come.

Whatever may have been the misgivings of some as to the usefulness of the League and the wisdom shown in its organization, it is now clear that it has been of immense benefit to the church in bringing the young people into fuller knowledge of religious and churchly life and training them in Christian activity.

A Wise Answer.

A bright young man of wealth and social position, but with bad habits, recently asked a young woman to be his wife. Many girls would have felt flattered and have accepted him. Her answer was sharp and decided. "You say I have qualities you wish in the woman who is to be your wife. I do not know as to that. But there are habits I do not have, and I cannot accept a husband who has them. I do not smoke, nor swear, nor indulge in wine. I am not in debt. I do not spend my days in idleness or walking the streets with silly, unthinking girls nor my nights with questionable associates. As you have most of these habits, I am not willing to become your wife. Nothing but misery could come of such a union." It was wisely thought and bravely spoken.

Resistance.

It needs power to resist the influences at work for sin around us on every side. Young Christians are especially subject to these allurements. An attitude of firm determination based on fixed principles carefully wrought out in hours of calm thought is the essential safeguard against the attacks of worldliness. The higher one gets in social circles the more difficult it becomes to live the humble, consistent life followed in days of poverty and obscurity. The late Secretary Windom said: "You don't know what pressure is brought to bear on us here in Washington to live the same life all the days of the week, but I never have and I never will accept any kind of an invitation on Sunday. The world crowds me hard six days of the week, and I cannot afford to let it have this one."

WATCH AND BE SOBER

MOTTO OF THE BRITISH ARMY TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION

In the Advance on Khartum Lord Kitchener Spilled the Liquor of the Camp Followers—Total Abstinents Make the Best Soldiers.

The most admired men in London are the members of the First battalion of Grenadier Guards, recently back from the victories in the Sudan. Wherever they go the soldiers are feted and feasted with all the hospitality shown to our own American troops on their return from Santiago. I was talking to some of the heroes of Omdurman in Wellington barracks, adjoining Buckingham palace, writes a correspondent of The New Voice, and asked in particular regarding the temperance principles for which this battalion is noted, in common with most of the forces lately under Lord Kitchener in his march upon Khartum.

"Yes, it is true that Lord Kitchener ordered all outside liquors confiscated and destroyed, and that our campaign was conducted without the use of the army canteen," said Lieutenant E. F. O. Gascoigne and Corporal Fred Martin, both of whom saw heavy fighting with the Grenadiers. "A lot of Greek merchants were following up our troops, carrying cases of rum, contrary to the orders of General Kitchener. Our commander is a strong temperance man, and he held a consultation with his officers and doctors, with the result that the casks of liquor were captured and had holes bored in them, the rum running out on the desert sands."

"Did the soldiers grumble at this?"

"Not a bit. They knew the danger of alcoholic stimulants in that hot country, and understood it was for their protection. Our men showed excellent good sense all through our six weeks' operations, which constitute perhaps the most notable temperance campaign the British army has ever prosecuted. Little liquor was carried outside the medicine cases, as of course it was in the first place impossible to transport by the camel trains anything more than was absolutely necessary, and then so many of the men have taken the pledge that a canteen would do a small business in beer or porter."

"I have many times proved for myself what a blessing total abstinence can be for the soldier," continued Corporal Martin, who wears an advanced medal of the Army Temperance association. "In all of our hard campaign up the Nile I kept to the front, and never once had to call upon the doctors for help, while I have many times noticed that even the moderate drinkers fall out early on a hard march, especially in the hot countries."

It is well worth while, in this connection, to tell something of the work being done to keep John Bull's soldiers in trim on the drink question.

"Watch and Be Sober," is the motto of the Army Temperance association, which has a membership of over 23,000 men in the service in India, which means one-third of the white troops there, and 14,000 in the home service, including the British Isles, Australia, Canada and the West Indies. A new branch has lately been organized among the Canadian artillery at Quebec.

The first army temperance movement was started in India 30 years ago as the Soldiers' Total Abstinence association, and about ten years ago it was reorganized by Lord Roberts, then commanding the Indian forces. Officers bear testimony to the good results of temperance work, for out of 1,800 court martial proceedings last year, only 93 of them were against total abstainers, whereas their numerical pro rata was about 600. Twenty per cent less of the total abstainers apply for hospital treatment than of the canteen's patrons.

Lord Wolseley, the commander in chief of the English army, is a strong advocate of military temperance, and in the Red river expedition enforced prohibition after the fashion that General Kitchener has just done on the Nile. One of the most notable war office papers of the year is that issued in Lord Wolseley's memorandum to officers, ordering them to better attend to the morality of the troops, and especially recommending that they lead the way by setting a good personal example before their men. The following is one paragraph of the memorandum:

"It will be the duty of company officers to point out to the men under their control, and particularly to young soldiers, the disastrous effects of giving way to habits of intemperance and immorality. The excessive use of intoxicating liquors unfits the soldier for active work, blunts his intelligence and is a fruitful source of military crime."

To Illustrate Drink Evil.

The Belgian secretary of the interior has published a call for competitive designs to represent the horrors of inebriety. The competition is open to everybody, four pictures being required, on these subjects: A scene in a drunkard's home, showing in detail unhappy and broken family life. The happy home of a total abstainer. The wrecked nerves and physiological chart of a drunkard's system and a similar chart of a temperate man.

For each picture a prize of 1,000 francs is announced, the meritorious pictures to pass into the possession of the government, to be photolithographed and copies to be placed in all public places and halls.

Pledge For Boys.

I pledge my brain God's thoughts to think,
My lips no fire or foam to drink
From alcoholic cup
Nor link with my pure breath tobacco's taint,
For have I not a right to be
As wholesome, pure and free as she
Who through the years so glad and free
Moves gently onward to meet me?
A knight of the new chivalry
For Christ and temperance I would be In nineteen hundred. Come and see!

PHYSICIAN AND DRUGGIST.

All Prescriptions compounded by experienced Druggists.

9,503 members—an increase of 462—230 Sunday schools, 689 officers and teachers, 8,375 pupils, 48 Epworth Leagues, 1,660 members, 275 organized Churches, 10 self-supporting Churches, 102 Church buildings with a value of $164,995.57, parsonages, with a value of $81,674, eight boarding schools with 34 teachers and 1,000 pupils, 17 day schools with 11 teachers and 483 pupils, nine school buildings valued at $50,853, five hospitals valued at $14,440; patients treated, 15,689. Total value of mission property, $388,639; collections, $13,403.88.

There was an increase of 462 members, which brings the total membership up to 9,503, with about 30,000 adherents.

During the year the publication of the "World for Christ" was suspended.

The "Review of Missions" has over 18,000 circulation and steadily increasing.

Dr. J. H. Pritchett read the twenty-first annual report of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions to the General Board, submitted by Mrs. S. C. Truehart, corresponding Secretary.

Statistics of the work at home show 34 Conference Societies, 270 District Societies, 3,453 Auxiliary Societies. Collections for the year ending March, 1899, $83,552.68, a loss of $3,000; subscribers to the "Woman's Missionary Advocate," 11,886; subscribers to the "Little Worker," 15,606, nearly double that of last year.

Statistics of work of Woman's Board in foreign fields is as follows:

China: 20 missionaries, 59 assistant teachers, 43 boarding and day schools, 2,500 pupils, 31 Bible women, 2 Bible schools, 2 hospitals, 86 scholarships.

Korea: 2 missionaries, 5 assistant teachers, 32 pupils.

Mexico: 17 missionaries, 57 assistants, 25 scholars, 2,687 pupils, 14 scholarships, 19 Bible women.

Brazil: 11 missionaries, 28 teachers, 88 schools, 277 pupils.

Indian Mission: The work grows rapidly and successfully. There are 10 teachers, helpers and missionaries, over 100 pupils, 2 schools, 1 hospital, and 1 Bible woman.

Cuba: The work opened there a few months ago. One missionary and 1 helper have been sent there, and one school, with 32 pupils, has been established.

The report of the Committee on Estimates, composed of T. P. Weakley, J. D. Hamilton, J. H. Pritchett, and W. R. Lambuth, shows that there is $207,606.72 subject to appropriation. The total amount asked for is $332,016; total amount recommended, $205,150. The total expenses during the past year amounted to $16,600. The committee recommends that $350,000 be apportioned among the several Annual Conferences for collection.

Rev. W. E. Towson, of Japan; Rev. J. M. Gross, of the Indian Mission Conference, and Rev. M. Dickey, of Brazil, were introduced as returned missionaries. Prof. P. A. Roderiguez, official translator of the Board, was introduced by Dr. Lambuth. He spoke for a few minutes on Cuba and Porto Rico.

The following resolution was adopted: "RESOLVED: That, as a Board, we recognize with much satisfaction the work of Prof. P. A. Roderiguez in translating important Christian literature, into the Spanish language."

A committee was asked for by Dr. Pritchett to consider the condition of FIVE BOOKS That help make BETTER AND WISER.

BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH. (182 pages.) Complete and Unabridged from original edition. By IAN MACLAREN.

A collection of beautiful stories, full of pathos and Christian spirit. One of the most helpful and successful books of the age.

BLACK BEAUTY. (245 pages.) Complete and Unabridged. By ANNA SEWELL.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Horse. Adopted by the Boston Grammar Schools as supplementary reading, to instil into their pupils the principles of kindness and justice to our domestic animals, as well as to each other.

DRUMMOND'S ADDRESSES. (263 pages.) Complete and Unabridged.

By HENRY DRUMMOND.

By far the loftiest expression of religious sentiment that has ever appeared in book form. Contains the celebrated essay entitled "The Greatest Thing in the World, Love."

TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM. (196 pages.) Complete and Unabridged.

By T. S. ARTHUR.

This is the masterpiece of T. S. Arthur, and has been one of the most effective means of temperance reform ever conceived. Graphic, pathetic, convincing. Every young person in the land ought to read this book.

AESOP'S FABLES. (192 pages, with 50 illustrations. Contains 300 of the choicest fables.) Translated by Rev. G. F. TOWNSEND.

For centuries this collection of fables has been the fountain of worldly wisdom. Its apt and terse comparisons are calculated to clear the mind of falsehood, vanity and folly.

All these books are printed in large, clear type, and bound in white and gold (paper covers). Size of book 4¼ x 6¼ inches, such as have been usually sold at 25 cents each.

METHODIST RECORDER.

the Harrel Institute, Muskogee, Ind. Ter. Bishop Key, Bishop Duncan, and Dr. Pritchett were named as the committee.

Bishop Wilson, just returned from Asiatic fields, spoke of the need of more money and more workers there.

The following appropriations were made: China Mission, $27,162; Korea Mission, $7,650; Japan Mission, $31,714; Central Mexico Mission, $21,137; Mexican Border Mission Conference, $13,850; Indian Mission Conference, $10,948; Northwestern Mexican Mission Conference, $12,650; Brazil Mission, $30,400; Cuban Mission, $5,000; Pacific Conference, $2,900; Los Angeles Conference, $4,092; Columbia Conference, $2,630; East Columbia Conference, $2,630; Denver Conference, $4,529; Montana Conference, $3,231; Western Conference, $1,593; New Mexico Conference, $4,176; German Mission Conference, $2,268. Total amount appropriated to the mission fields, $188,550. A permit was granted to the Bishops to raise a sum not exceeding $7,000 to supplement the work there. Bishop Candler, who is in charge of this field, was granted authority to raise $30,000 to build a Church in Havana, and to establish two additional missions.

In the afternoon the time of the Board was taken up in routine business, and in consideration of the report of the Committee on Estimates and the apportioning of the amounts to the different Conferences.

THE DEBT.

The committee appointed to report upon the missionary debt respectfully make the following statement of amounts received on the debt of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

Amounts received from April 1, 1896, to April 1, 1897—From subscriptions, $947.43; from bequests, $6,281.27; total, $7,228.70.

Amounts received from April 1, 1897, to April 1, 1898.—From subscriptions, $70,459.43; from bequests, $17,899.52; from permanent donations, $26,962.72; total, $115,321.67.

Amounts received from April 1, 1898, to Nov. 12, 1898.—From bequests, $3,461.60; from subscriptions, $6,046.88; from permanent donations, $1,825; total, $11,333.48.

Total amount received to Nov. 12, 1898, $113,834.35.

J. D. HAMILTON.

BISHOP MORRISON'S STATEMENT.

The above report shows $133,884.35 paid November 12, 1898, the date at which I had guaranteed the payment of the debt of $130,000. Hence the debt was not only paid at the time pledged, but there yet remains, in addition to its payment, in negotiable notes, good subscriptions, and one annuity yet to be given, about $17,500 still to be collected. The annuity of $5,000 given by Dr. Palmore, and said by a Nashville paper to have been given "with a string to it," was given by my urgent request in lieu of a subscription of $1,000, which he had previously made; and on this annuity of $5,000 he has never been paid one cent of interest, though he paid the money on the 12th day of October, 1887.

This matter was looked into by a committee and on a motion made to return the money ($5,000) to Dr. Palmore, who readily consented to receive it, but the motion to refund was tabled without a dissenting vote. H. C. MORRISON.

is now located in its own grand new building, n. e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

For thirty years this school has been preparing young people for practical business life. It teaches Single, Double Entry and Joint-Stock Book-keeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English, &c. GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

On the Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB. the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

TINKLING, Lunenburg Co., Va.

To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Orgain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guanos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 800 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. C.

I have used several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them on land of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co's. Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefontaine Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

Danville, Va.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, lugs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings
of All Denominations.

It is doing for others, sacrificing for others, that makes people Christlike.—Rev. James Sentry, Presbyterian, Denver.

The Husband.

According to the New Testament, the husband is the head of the house. It is the condition of unity.—Rev. C. W. Bridgeman, Episcopal, New York.

An Inestimable Service.

He does an inestimable service who clears the human mind of error, even if he does not put a truth in its place.—Dr. Minot Savage, Unitarian, New York.

Flower of Love.

The flower of love finds all soil congenial and will shed its fragrance where every other seed withers and dies.—Rev. J. T. Brushingham, Methodist, Chicago.

More to Die For.

I believe that however much there is to live for and struggle for on this side of the grave there is infinitely more to die for.—Dr. Coyle, Presbyterian, Oakland, Cal.

Our Sins.

If one come to know his sins as God sees them, it will make him humble and charitable and sweet and grateful.—Rev. C. H. Pettibone, Congregationalist, Denver.

The New Civilization.

We must face the inevitable. The new civilization is to be urban, and the problem of the twentieth century will be the city.—Rev. Dr. Samuel H. Greene, Baptist, Washington.

Christian Usefulness.

There is no form of legitimate employment that does not furnish necessary conditions for the highest development of Christian unselfishness.—Rev. J. E. Cullom, Church of the New Jerusalem, Denver.

Most Blessed House.

The most blessed house is that of our own inner self, if we have only been built up a spiritual house in the skill and might, the yearning and grace, of the Lord Jesus Christ.—Rev. Dr. E. D. Walker, Presbyterian, St. Louis.

The Christian Church.

The Christian church and Christianity itself owe their continuance in the world and their present existence to the impression that Jesus made upon the minds of his disciples.—Rev. J. T. Egbert, Congregationalist, Minneapolis.

Source of Man's Success.

The study of history and biography both reveal that a fortunate series of unexpected circumstances rather than a chain of carefully premeditated plans is the source of many a man's success.—Rev. Harry N. Wilson, Presbyterian, Idaho Springs.

An Epoch in History.

The Philippine expedition marks an epoch in history. It means that our conception of our mission to the world is to be enlarged and that in the manifest providence of God it is called upon to propagate the rights of man.—Rev.

E. Nelander, Lutheran, San Francisco.

Christ In Our Lives.

Christ will come, not to the stately edifice or to the cathedral, but to the man alone. He constantly stands at the door and knocks, and if any man wills it he will come in. He will come into your life and lift up your being.—Rev. Dr. Thomas C. Hall, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Creed of Negations.

Every man has a creed. I doubt whether there is a creedless person living in the world. If you reject all creeds, you simply believe in not believing and hold a creed of negations. Some people doubt their faith and believe in their doubts.—Rev. A. C. Dixon, Baptist, Brooklyn.

Jesus and His Truth.

In order that men may be brought to full, holy, spiritual life Jesus, as the embodiment of his truth, is necessary. The mind and heart of man are completely touched only when truth is brought to its personal relations in a perfect being.—Rev. A. A. Rice, Universalist, Los Angeles.

Sight For Scenes of Truth.

Poor, blinded men need a good, square gaze at the Christ of Galilee. No more peep through formulaary creed or Christian culture, but eye to eye, face to face. No simple doctoring of sightless sockets should satisfy. Sight for the scenes of truth is what men need.—Rev. E. R. McCauley, Lutheran, Pittsburg.

Value of Time.

Time is God's own gift to man. Time affords opportunities for getting good and doing good. These opportunities improved make the soul rich on earth and glorious through all eternity. But these opportunities not improved leave the soul to feed on the husks of vanity here and then thrust it down to waste away amid the gnawings of an everlasting want beyond the grave. Time is that little space allotted to man through which he may pass up to be the companion of angels and his Creator, God, or through which he may go down to the regions of darkness, the abode of spirits lost. Time is like an hourglass filled with golden grains of sand. As each sparkling mite falls through it may add one hour to a noble Christian life here and a glorious immortality in heaven, or it may subtract one hour from the little space that separates between a life of sin on earth and the torments of that hell "where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched."—Rev. C. H. Stocking, Methodist, St. Louis.

THE BISHOPS' ADDRESS.

TO THE PREACHERS AND MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH:

Your chief pastors call you to the observance of a Week of Prayer, beginning Sunday, June 25th, and including Sunday, July 2d; Friday to be kept as a fast-day.

The nineteenth century is far spent, the twentieth is at hand. The time summons us to serious thought. A hundred years pass before us for review. We are confronted with the problem what preparation we should make to meet the responsibilities and opportunities of the new century. We should close well the passing, that we may begin well the coming age.

CONFESSION AND GODLY SORROW.

The General Minutes of the past year show a decrease of preachers and members, 8,633, and of Sunday-school scholars, 14,939; a decrease also in ministerial support and in benevolent contributions, except for domestic missions and Church extension. Falling off in membership is a new thing to us. It was preceded by a lessened rate of increase for a few years. Any check to our steady and rapid advance demands candid and earnest consideration. May it be the occasion, not of censoriousness and prophecies of evil, but of self-searching and repentance to salvation. Let us humble ourselves before God, that His mighty hand may exalt us. Short-comings and losses should teach us wisdom, and stir us up to vigilance, zeal and diligence.

THANKSGIVING AND REJOICING.

Partial and temporary checks should not interrupt grateful praise for the ceaseless and overflowing mercies of God and joyful acknowledgement of the wonderful progress of the Church since 1800. He crowneth the century with His goodness. The love of God makes the conscience more acute and the heart more tender, deepens abhorrence of sin, intensifies desire to please Him in all things, and incites to glad, energetic, tireless obedience and service. To us belongs through grace, not doubt, but full assurance of faith; not the spirit of bondage, but the spirit of adoption; not despondency, but the inspiration of hope in the God of hope; not the torment of fear, but the triumph of love which casts out fear. Behold what great things God has wrought for and by us, and bless and magnify His name. In the name of our God we will set up our banners. The joy of the Lord is our strength. He gives us beauty for ashes, a garment of praise for heaviness. Hallelujahs fill our lips. Joy, hope, and courage are the dominant and abiding marks of His people. They march on from strength to strength, from height to height, from victory to victory. Let them that love the Lord be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might.

THE BRIGHTEST OF CENTURIES.

The nineteenth is the best century the world has ever seen, and the present generation enjoy the best part of the century. We do not shut our eyes to existing evil, nor exaggerate existing good, in declaring the present state of the earth a vast advance on all her past history in wealth, knowledge, power, culture, morals, humanity, and true religion: The darkness of the darkest spot is not so dense as it was a hundred years ago; if the dayspring from on high has not yet visited it, there are, at least, signs that the light approaches. The most favored spot is happier to day than ever before. Christendom is in advance of the rest of the world, but is fast carrying the spirit and means of progress into heathendom. Christian nations have entered all lands with their commerce, railways, schools, literature and missions. Nearly every Church is aggressive, missionary, confident of conquering the world for Christ.

OUR SHARE IN THE BLESSING.

This New World is professedly Christian from ocean to ocean and from pole to pole. The whole hemisphere acknowledges the only true God and His Son Jesus Christ. No country has greater cause for gratitude than these United States. Its population has multiplied during the century from five to six millions. Its western border has moved from the Mississippi to the Pacific. Its wealth is said to surpass that of any other country. It ranks among the foremost powers of the world. May we be as eminent in virtue, piety and good works as we are in privileges.

No form of Christianity has prospered more than Methodism. In this western soil it has specially flourished. The Minutes of 1800 report its total strength in America, from Georgia to Upper Canada, "white and colored members, 64,394." The Methodists of every name in the United States now exceed six millions.

Our own Church has been greatly blessed since its separate organization. In 1846, she had 455,217 members; in 1860, 749,068. In 1866 there were 425,404 white members; now there are 1,458,259; from both counts preachers are excluded.

These numbers are significant. They suggest, but do not express, the magnitude of our blessings. We cannot call one by one the roll, and listen as each tells the story of his own experience of grace. We cannot follow each minister in his evangelical labors, enter the happy homes of our people, mingle in the worship of every Church, look upon the many myriads of scholars in the Sunday-Schools. Heaven, too, has drawn largely from our communion during the century; they are praising God in nobler strains above.

WELCOME TO THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

With eager desire and hope we anticipate the advent of the next century. Brighter be its hundred sections of world history than the record of all preceedings times! The new century will have its own needs, burdens, dangers. Ours is the responsibility, as far as we may, to lessen its inheritance of woe and to supply it with resources for the accomplishment of a grand work to the glory of God and the welfare of our race. Generations to follow should have cause to exclaim, Thank God for the Church of the nineteenth century! Let us prepare the way of the Lord among the nations.

Brethren, we ought to equip our own beloved Church for larger and better work. We should hand down to our sons and daughters a heritage not only vaster in extent, but also richer in quality, than we received from our fathers. As the result of evangelical growth and maturing for so many years, the Christianity we transmit should be purer, wiser, more lustrous, stronger in faith, more fervent in zeal, richer in the graces of the Holy Spirit, better furnished for every good work than the Christianity of 1801. Knowing the time, it is high time to wake out of sleep, to put on strength and beauty, to be a mightier and holier factor in the civilization and regeneration of our country and of our world. A million and a half of lights, holding forth the Word of Life, should cause a brilliant and far-reaching illumination. A million of Christian citizens, leaving out all minors, should be a felt power for good in all our land. What may not be achieved by the right use of so large a capital of the sanctified brain and heart and muscle and property of a million and a half of Southern Methodists! We say that we are the Lord's; that all we have and are belongs to Him; that the end of life is to glorify God in our bodies and souls. Let us mean and live what we profess.

Preachers and pastors, stir up the gift of God that is in you; stir up the Church of which you are leaders; be examples, teachers, evangelists, flaming torches; by your faith and zeal rebuke the sluggish and encourage the timid. Laymen, fill the houses of worship, teach or learn in the Sunday-schools, help in the Epworth League, set up the family altar, consecrate your children in baptism, bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and send them to our institutions of learning, commend religion by your spirit, speech, and behavior, give your personal influence and help to every good cause. Sisters, be zealous in your Home and Foreign Mission Societies and in all good works. Backsiders, return, and God will heal all your iniquity; lukewarm professors, pray that fire from Heaven may kindle your love; half-hearted believers, make a full consecration and seek a full blessing. Save sinners singly, for there is joy in Heaven over one sinner that repents; Save them in multitudes as at Pentecost. Let these closing years witness peace, unity, holiness, and active, hopeful enthusiasm in all our connection, an auspicious augury at the dawn of the new century.

A THANK OFFERING.

No Church, no discipline can be complete without the grace of giving. Gifts must speak our gratitude. Thank offerings should bear proportion to benefits received. God has great claims on the Church He has so richly blessed and increased. He loves a cheerful giver; therefore, give without grudging, not of necessity, but of choice; not sadly, but with a glad heart; not with hesitation, but with a ready mind. Give from a sense of duty until you learn the blessedness of giving, and to give spontaneously as the spring sends forth its waters. He that sows bountifully shall reap bountifully. God is bountiful, and you are children of God. Convert your corruptible treasures into incorruptible. Glorify God with your means, and He will count Himself your debtor. Everything given for the love of God is a loan which He will repay without fail and with largest interest.

The pressing need of the day, says the General Conference, is to free from debt, improve and endow our institutions of learning. The Church cannot succeed without schools at home and in foreign fields. Education should be the handmaid of religion; it may be the foe. Culture should not be infidel, nor heretical, nor worldly, but sound, spiritual, divine. Let us see that Methodism shall offer to both sexes schools unsurpassed in mental training and wholesome influence. We want an educated ministry and an educated laity. Our schools have been of inestimable service, though clogged and restricted by debt and poverty; poor, yet making many rich. The present numbers and aggregate wealth of our Church suffice to secure adequate relief and enlargement. Within the eighteen months which remain to this century a million and a half dollars, or more, should be placed in our treasury, the free-will offering of a devout and grateful people. This can and should be done without diminishing the annual collections. It is a contribution to the twentieth century, that we may be partners in a greater work for God and humanity than our age has wrought. Let no one stand in the way or fail to do his part and get his share of blessing. Speak no word of discouragement nor keep silence, but let each cheer his neighbor. As God has prospered you, so give. The millionaire should give his draft for myriads of dollars; he will, if he has more faith and delight in God than he has in mammon; if it hurts to part with his money for the love of Christ, the pain is a sign of spiritual sickness, and he should seek at once the good Physician. Rich men, men whose estate falls far below a million should give each his thousands. Men of competence should give each his hundred or perhaps hundreds, equaling by their larger number the wealthier class. Fifties, twenties tens and fives should pour into the lap of the happy Church from her many loving children. Poverty, rich in faith, though not in gold, should give dollars or dimes. The smiling child should totter forward with his nickel. Let all give with one accord, as an expression of gratitude and consecration, as children of the same Father and heirs of the same kingdom. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich."

"Now, He that ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness."

GIVE THEM CHRIST.

(BY REV. R. H. BENNETT.)

There are many kindnesses to our fellows which the golden rule might suggest and inspire but they are all included in our giving them CHRIST. For the scriptures assure us that in possessing Him we have "all things."

The Bible exhausts the figures of human speech in attempting to tell even a little of what Christ is to a human soul, and then gives up the attempt with that exclamation of blessed despair—"It hath not entered into the heart of man to conceive the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him."

Have we like sheep gone astray? He is our Shepherd to search for us on the mountains and lead us home. Do we need a sacrifice? He is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Are our hearts polluted? He is the fountain for sin and uncleanness. Are we defenceless? He is a sword. Do we search for a foundation which shall abide when the solid earth trembles and vanishes from beneath our feet? He is the corner stone and other foundation can no man lay. Is the way dark? He is the Light of the world. Is this life a passage thro' wilderness dangers? He is our guide even unto death. Do we long for a road through this trackless forest? He is the way from our hearts to God's. Puzzled by the clamoring of creeds and the conflict of authorities, do we in despair cry out with Pilate, "What is truth?" He is the truth. If we say we see the way and perceive the truth, but have no power to walk in the one or follow the other, then He is the life, giving us ability so to do. If the vital principle itself grows weak within, He is the bread to revive and sustain it and the living water to refresh. Do we lie shivering and chilled with the miasma of worldliness and sin in our veins? He is the sun of righteousness to arise upon us with healing in His wings. If there be watchers in the sick chamber or hearts that ache in the long night, beaming through the casement window in the early dawn, He is the bright and morning star. Do we search our book of origins for the genesis of all things and question nature as to her birth and pedigree? By Him were all things made and without Him was not anything made that was made. Are we summoned to admire the pomp and pageants of the mighty monarchs of earth? He is the King of Kings. Do we hear of Gods many and Lords many among the heathen? He is the Lord of Lords, and God of Gods. Do we cry that there is one unconquerable enemy before whose insatiable thirst for blood the mightiest of earth have fallen? We hear Him cry triumphantly as the tomb opens to release Him it sought in vain to hold—"O death! I will be thy plague. O grave! I will be thy destruction." "He that believeth in me shall never die."

He is our wisdom, our righteousness, our sanctification, our redemption. He is our example, our justification, our mediator, our propitiation. He is our peace. He is our immortal hope. He is our Alpha and Omega, our all in all. "Jesus, my Shepherd, Husband and Friend, My Prophet, Priest and King, My Lord, my Life, my Way, my End, Accept the praise I bring."

Is it not worth while to give a man such an infinite gift? For God has ordained that men shall be led to Christ by our personal efforts. I never knew but one man in all my life who found Christ without personal assistance, and he was a Japanese fellow-student who was converted while reading the gospel of Luke in the original Greek as a literary exercise at his native home, far from the reach of any Christian hand or tongue.

What language can describe the awful oversight and neglect of a Christian who lets an acquaintance live year after year by his side with soul shivering day by day and his hope of Heaven steadily perishing, without ever showing him Christ and beseeching him to be reconciled to God? Mr. Spurgeon tells of an unconverted dying man who called his Christian brother to his bedside, and said: "I am dying. I know that I am lost, but I cannot help putting some of my ruin at your door. I believe you to be a Christian, but I do not recollect that you ever solemnly addressed me about my soul. You believed I was perishing, and yet you did not speak to me; therefore as I cannot conceive you to be inhuman—for you was always a kind brother—I suspect you do not believe as you say you do." His brother said; "I was afraid of offending you. I did speak to you once or twice." The brother replied: "You ought to have taken me by the shoulders. You ought not to have let me be lost. I cannot acquit you."

Ah, will men curse us in eternity because we did not well-nigh burst open the door of their hearts and let Christ in—our fellow-workmen, deskmen, business associates, family companions, servants and friends? We ought not to be able to sleep till we have done absolutely all that we can to bring our associates to Christ. Study how to pick the lock of a human heart for God. Scrutinize men's make-up for their approachable side, as we do to secure their patronage in business.

Whitfield used to look at an audience sometimes as he rose to preach and before he said a word burst out crying, because as he explained he saw before him so many strangers lost to the love of God. No wonder that men fell before such love like grain before the cradle.

No danger to ocean navigation is more treacherous than the derelict—a vessel abandoned by its crew and supposed to be sinking, but which floats just on or under the surface of the water. Lights at night tell of the approach of another ship, the thermometer falls at an iceberg's nearness, the chart shows the position of rocks and the sounding line reveals the shoal, but there is no sign nor voice to ward the greyhound of the derelict until the crash that sends them together to the bottom. So there are many persons in the Church bound for no haven, with no pilot or crew in charge, drifting at the will of the winds and tides of inclination—a dreadful menace to navigators on the high seas of life.

Canon Liddon has a striking sermon on "The Virtue of Elisha's Bones." It is founded on the incident of the corpse which was hurriedly placed in the prophet's tomb by the mourners to escape the Moabites seen coming in the distance. "When the man touched the bones of Elisha he revived and stood up on his feet." There come to some of God's people times of spiritual dearth and deadness, when they are well-nigh ready for the winding sheet. If this message shall fall under the eye of a spiritual corpse, I pray God that the dead soul may touch the memory of some blessed hour of holy delight in the Master's service, of some sick-bed resolutions, of some promise to a father or mother, now in Heaven, of some hope of a life of usefulness and of glory once cherished as priceless—and revive and live with even greater than the former ardor in the service of the Christ.

One of the generals in the Civil war, when leading a charge in the thick of battle, stepped over the body of a dead soldier and in a flash saw it was the body of his own son. With breaking heart, he had only time to throw himself beside the body and clasp it in his arms, crying, "Good-bye, my boy, good-bye." The next instant he leaped to his feet and cried to his soldiers, "Forward, I will lead you sail," and on they rushed to victory.

Oh for such devotion to the work of God among His followers today who read these lines.

THE TOWN OF BLACKSTONE, AND ITS POPULAR FEMALE SEMINARY.

Among the new towns that have sprang up all over the South since the terrible Civil war Blackstone must be included in the number.

When the writer of this sketch lived at Nottoway Courthouse, as presiding elder of the district, there was no such town as Blackstone in the county.

It is understood, that after the war, the old establishment, called Blacks and Whites, gave place to the present attractive city, called by the classic name of Blackstone.

It is surprising to read of its continual growth, its large business transactions and the success of its popular Female Seminary. The management is said to be first-rate and satisfactory to patrons and pupils, and will hold a fair comparison with the best Female schools in the country.

This writer enjoyed a delightful time at old Nottoway Courthouse before the war, and cherishes pleasant memories of loved ones long since passed away. Dr. Campbell made me an excellent neighbor, and so did Frank Fitzgerald, Dr. Jackson, Mrs. Fuqua, Wm. Scott, and many others, but the great reaper has done his work, and I must hope to meet them in the Heavenly world.

If health and strength would justify, it would give me great pleasure to revisit the same old community, see the new town and look in upon Bro. Cannon and his popular school, but my judgment tells me that the wish is father to the thought.

Thanks be to the Lord for peace and contentment in old age, cheered with the prospect of a Heavenly home in the near future. J. A. R.

LOUISVILLE LETTER.

(BY REV. J. W. MOORE.)

DEAR RECORDER:—I have been intending to write you a letter for some time. My delay is due to that old thief, Procrastination. He has stolen a great amount from me in the past, and I have been threatening to put him on trial for some years. My loss has been the public's gain.

What about Louisville? Louisville is all right. This is a fine field for work. You can find all you want here. I thought the devil was strong in Richmond and that he was especially strong in Norfolk, but he is here even more firmly entrenched. The Christians are a loyal and royal lot, and the Devil's forces are equally as loyal. We have the open saloon and not even the semblance of closing on the Sabbath. Back door, front door, side door, and cellar door all open. We have the open Sunday theatre. Of course all this is against the laws of the Commonwealth, but the saloon-keeper says "hang the Commonwealth, there is a nickel in sight." This state of things will not last forever. Something will turn loose after while.

Louisville is having a great time this month. First we had the Board of Church Extension, which sat for two days and dispatched the usual amount of business. The Board is discussing the feasibility of a Church Insurance Company. The idea seems not only feasible to this writer but absolutely necessary. The Insurance Interests are practically a Trust. In some States so vigorously has the fight been waged against these combines that the Insurance Companies are withdrawing from the State. That they will stay away I do not believe, but it furnishes an excellent opportunity for our Church to take up such work and protect our property. Bishop Keener was too feeble to be present. Bishop Candler delivered an address on Cuba at the Broadway Church that was Candleresque in style. Bishop Haygood and Bishop Candler and Sam Jones are all of the same tree. Sam Jones is only a little more so. They possess that rich Georgia humor, that don't-care-what-you-think style, that freedom from conventionalism, that strength in expression that gives a charm to all that they say. Bishop Candler will be a tonic to hesitating saints and fearful preachers.

Then we have just had the May Music Festival. Sam Jones says that it was too rich for Louisville blood, and that you could not find five hundred in the city who could appreciate it. Whether they enjoyed it or not, Louisville people turned out in large crowds to hear the talent. Financially, it was a great success.

The Baptist Convention is now in session in this city. I would judge that the attendance is larger than it was last year in Norfolk. The Whitsitt case came up as usual, and perhaps was settled this time by the Board of Trustees. I do not see how the Baptists can get along without a Whitsitt case. It has been a feature of their gatherings and doubtless has drawn together the large attendances. Here in Louisville the sentiment is overwhelmingly for Whitsitt.

The regret is great that the Board should have accepted his resignation. Peace at any price was the sentiment that brought about the acceptance of his resignation. Liberty of thought and of investigation was again denied by the boasted defenders of liberty. I

Trusts and Combines in many lines of production, and controlling the output of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

Capitalized at Millions

WE HAVE ENTERED A COMBINATION

HERE IS THE PLAN

A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideals are: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price." —Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing." —Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine." —Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work." —Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

"A periodical absolutely solitary in the field it occupies. It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart. It ought to find a place at once in every family circle in the land." —Bishop W. A. Candler.

"A gem among the monthlies of our land." —T. Berry Smith, Central College, Fayette, Mo.

W. T. Harris, of Washington, D. C., United States Commissioner of Education, has this to say of a recent number: "It is one of the most remarkable magazine numbers that I have seen for a long time, and I beg leave to enclose two dollars for two regular subscriptions. I congratulate you."

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it." —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none." —Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate." —Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus." —The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Naphtali Leacock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West." —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning." —Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

"We most heartily commend it to our people as a high-grade periodical, worthy to take its place in every Methodist home." —New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"It will aim to advocate and magnify the things which world-wide Methodism holds in common, and especially to be a factor in the cultivation of fraternal relations between the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." —Central Christian Advocate.

"The letter press is superb, the illustrations first-class and the reading matter thoroughly instructive, entertaining and edifying." —Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art." —St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"We welcome it, relish it and recommend it." —Western Christian Advocate.

"It takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day." —Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"We cannot but give to the Magazine our best wishes, and hope for its great success." —Texas Christian Advocate.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

DEATH OF COL. COLE.

Col. E. W. Cole, the President of our Board of Missions, and one of the leading citizens of Tennessee, dropped dead in New York City a day or so ago. He was perhaps the wealthiest man in Tennessee, and had been prominent in Church circles for many years. The death of the President, and of Dr. Sledd, the Vice-President of the Board of Missions, within ten days of each other, is a noteworthy occurrence.

FOR ONE YEAR FOR 50 CENTS.

A BEAUTIFUL CHARACTER.

Dr. R. N. Sledd, whose death we briefly noticed last week, was a man upon whose character noble minds delight to dwell. There were elements about him that attracted, pleased and inspired confidence. His gentleness of manner was such as to invite hearty communion of thought and feeling, while his strong, vigorous intellect, his clear conception of truth, and his ready and eloquent expression of great principles, combined to make him one of the strongest and most lovable men in our connection. We loved him when first we saw him, and we admired him more and more as we became acquainted with his strong traits of character and rich store of knowledge.

Many years ago he visited our conference in Augusta and preached at St. James Church. His sermon on that occasion impressed us as being emphatically the gospel. Two years ago he preached the baccalaureate sermon at Emory College. That sermon excelled in strong orthodox expression, in sweet spirited and divine unction, in pathos and beauty of diction, and in the broad and eloquent presentation of the great theme in hand. He said to us a few weeks ago, in Nashville, that these sermons with others had been, at the request of many friends, embodied in a book for the use of the public. We are satisfied that whoever gets that book will secure a treasure.

Dr. Sledd, with all his greatness, was a very modest man; but his modesty did not deprive the church of any of his efficiency in service, and that service constitutes a rich legacy to his loved Zion. His going has left a wide gap in our ranks and a sad aching in our hearts.—Wesleyan Advocate.

ON DEATH OF DR. SLEDD.

At the Danville Methodist Preachers' meeting the following resolutions were read and adopted:

Whereas it has pleased the Great Head of the Church to remove our dear brother and co-laborer, Robert Newton Sledd, D. D., president of this body, and pastor of Main-Street M. E. Church, South, from the labors and battles of the Church militant to the rest and joys of Heaven, therefore be it RESOLVED, 1: That we put on record our testimony to the purity and broadness of his character as he impressed us in this association of pastors, and in the fellowship of our long friendship, and hereby express our deep sense of our personal affliction in his death.

RESOLVED, 2: That we emulate his devotion to duty and steadfastness in purpose to serve God, and aim to follow in his footsteps, and will count it as a privilege to fall as he fell in the quick pursuit of the work of our Master and Saviour, and rejoice that the sunset with him was cloudless and bright.

RESOLVED, 3: That we tender to his bereaved children our sincere sympathies, and assure them of our prayers for their peace and comfort, and that the mantle of his noble character may fall on them.

RESOLVED, 4: That we assure the Main-Street congregation of our deepest sympathy in this time of their great bereavement, and will do all we can to serve them in pastoral work until they can secure a successor to their shepherd whose staff is broken; and that we mourn with them a man, pastor, and preacher who "being dead yet speaketh"—by his purity of character, his exalted charity, his distinguished erudition, and, above all, his faith in God—a loss to our Church in Virginia and the South, as a scholar, a writer, and one of our most distinguished preachers.

RESOLVED, 5: That the Secretary of this Preachers' meeting be requested to forward a copy of this paper to the family of our dead brother and to the prints.

THE ORPHANAGE LOCATION.

As was stated in The News yesterday, the industrial orphanage that is proposed to be erected by the Virginia Conference of the Methodist Church, will be built either in this city or Richmond. At the committee meeting at Danville Monday night the selection was narrowed down to a choice between these two cities. The committee will visit Richmond June 6th for the purpose of examining the site there, and it is expected that the choice will be made in that city on that evening.

The Danville meeting was held at the residence of Mr. E. G. Moseley, in that city, and lasted until midnight. There were present Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith, Mr. P. T. Barrow and Mr. Moseley, constituting the committee, and Rev. Dr. J. Wylie Bledsoe, of the Miller Manual School. A number of gentlemen were present advocating the claims of various cities for the institution.

Richmond was represented by Mr. J. Thompson Brown, who tendered a choice of three large tracts of land of not less than 50 acres each, within the corporate limits of the city.

Messrs. J. Gordon Payne, Camillus Christian and L. G. Bell, as a committee from the City Council of Lynchburg, attended the meeting. These gentlemen made a tender of two large tracts of land from which the committee might select a site, and an alternative proposition of $5,000 in cash as a fund for the purchase of a site in Lynchburg. Each of the Hill City men made a forceful and earnest talk advocating the claim of the city.

Mr. E. D. Gregory was present from Bedford and offered liberal propositions.

Mrs. J. A. Maskinimie offered a valuable location at Norfolk and situations were offered at Buena Vista and Warrenton.

After hearing all the claims the committee decided to accept the offer by either Lynchburg or Richmond.—News

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The committee appointed at the First Quarterly Conference of the South Brunswick Circuit to draft resolutions on the death of Rev. W. R. Smithey, respectfully submit the following.

Whereas our beloved friend and brother, and former pastor of seven years' service, departed this life on the 17th day of January, 1899,

RESOLVED, 1: That while we bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, the death of our beloved brother after his departure from our Circuit, has caused us sincere sorrow and regret.

RESOLVED, 2: That we will cherish the memory of his noble Christian character, his godly life, and faithful and able ministry as a precious heritage and inspiration to noble living.

RESOLVED, 3: That we assure the bereaved family of our tender sympathy with them in their great sorrow and loss, and pray each of them may have the consolation and support, the safe care and sure guidance of their Heavenly Father.

RESOLVED, 4: That these resolutions be published in our Conference papers, and a copy of them be sent to the bereaved family.

doubt whether any of the denominations have a right to throw rocks. The Christian scholar had better mind what he finds out about the past, for if he should chance to happen on anything that is unpalatable to the present, his head is likely to adorn a basket and his carcass cast into an Ecclesiastical charnel house. When will we learn some sense and respect Truth more than we respect our "ologies." If Jesus were here on earth I imagine his first sermon would be on the reverence that men should have for the truth, and a ringing condemnation of the traditions of the elders. (To all whom it may concern: Greetings—Be it hereby known that no reference is made to our presiding elders in the term just used, since dating from such ancient times, there ecclesiastical life everything is history and not tradition with them.) Freedom to think is what is needed in all our denominations. THEN WE NEED MEN WHO WILL THINK. One of our distinguished divines said to a man who was talking to him about the questions of our times "that he had not troubled over these things as he had determined to leave those things alone and to simply believe in the standards of the Church." He was an intellectual and moral coward, and had no more the spirit of Wesley and of Fletcher than the disgraced officers of the New York regiment are like Teddy Roosevelt. It is to be earnestly hoped that this Whittitt case will be the last to be recorded in our time of narrowness and bigotry vs. freedom.

Sam Jones and George Stuart are here. They are here by a great majority. Jones's sword is sharper than ever. Age has improved its temper, as well the temper of the wielder. Sam has run no side-show. Buffalo Bill never drew any from his crowd. The May Festival was a dwarf attraction and the Baptist convention may be in town but they do not know it at the tent. The races have been snowed under. Jones is needed here. This is a whiskey town. Wholesale distillers are big men in many of the Churches. GREAT BIG MEN. They are in the ruling and governing bodies of the Church. This is true of the most influential Churches in the city, except the Methodist. Some of the preachers—not Methodists—were opposed to Dr. Jones' coming, and well might they be. The liquor traffic holds itself to be really respectable in Louisville. That Sam has used some plain language in regard to it may well be believed. Jones's spirit is excellent. Age has sweetened it, but age has added to his power to open up the human heart and show its sin. That the press has not done him justice goes without saying. The ethics of the modern

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON X, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 4.

Text of the Lesson, John xix, 17, 30. Memory Verses, 28-30—Golden Text, Gal. ii, 20—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

17. "And He, bearing His cross, went forth." The previous verse says that they led Him, and outwardly so it seemed, but the reality of it was that He went willingly, of His own accord. It was on His part all voluntarily done, and this was typified in the burnt offering which a man offered "of his own voluntary will" (Lev. i, 3). One has said that His being crucified at the place of a skull suggests that apart from Christ crucified all the world is as empty as a skull and as good for nothing.

18. "They crucified Him." They had scourged Him, and upon that torn and bleeding back they laid the cruel cross. Perhaps He stumbled; perhaps He fainted. If so, was it any wonder? Who can tell the agony? What wonder that the daughters of Jerusalem wept for Him as they beheld Him? Perhaps Simon the Cyrenian did not appreciate the honor conferred upon him as he was compelled to turn about and bear the cross after Jesus (Luke xxiii, 26-29), but we may hope that he has been thankful for it ever since.

19. "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." Yes, it is all true—as such was He born, as such crucified and as such will He come again in power and great glory (Math. ii, 2; Jer. xxiii, 5, 6). Then there shall be a truly righteous King who will reign over a righteous people, and the capital city of their nation shall be called a city of truth, the throne of the Lord (Isa. xxxii, 1; lx, 21; Zech. viii, 3; Jer. iii, 17).

20. "It was written in Hebrew and Greek and Latin." It was for all the world, and the King of the Jews shall yet be seen to be King of Kings and Lord of Lords (Rev. xvii, 14; xix, 16). Let Hebrew stand for religion, Greek for wisdom and Latin (or Rome) for power, and we have the great truth that apart from the King of the Jews, in His death and resurrection, there is no true religion or wisdom or power. Salvation is of the Jews, and Christ is the wisdom and power of God (John iv, 22; I Cor. i, 24).

21, 22. "What I have written I have written." Thus said Pilate to the chief priests when they urged him to alter the title on the cross. As Herod and Pilate and the Jews and Judas and the devil only performed, all unintentionally and ignorantly, that which the hand and counsel of God had determined before to be done (Acts iv, 28), we may see in Pilate's firmness in this matter an assurance that "Every purpose of the Lord shall be performed" (Jer. li, 29; Isa. xiv, 24).

23. "Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took His garments and made four parts, to every soldier a part." These soldiers had no voice or will in the matter; they must obey orders. For these Jesus prayed, saying, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do" (Luke xxiii, 34). It seems incredibly awful that literal nails should be driven through the hands and feet of the Lord Jesus! But what shall we say of the love that could thus pray for those who did it?

24. "They parted My raiment among them and for My vesture they did cast lots." For the coat that was without seam they cast lots, and thus was literally fulfilled Ps. xxii, 18. The soldiers clothed with His clothing because of His death, help us to remember that all believers are clothed with the garments of salvation, the robe of righteousness, by His death and resurrection (Isa. lxi, 10; I Cor. v, 21). The five parts of His clothing suggest the abundance of the provision He has made for us, "exceeding abundant" (I Tim. i, 14; Eph. iii, 20).

25. "Now there stood by the cross of Jesus His mother." By comparing Math. xxvii, 56, and Mark xv, 40, with this verse we conclude that His mother's sister was Salome, wife of Zebedee, mother of James and John. So there were at least four women who were suffering with Him as they watched His sufferings. How could they stand it? How could His mother bear it? Was this a part of the piercing of her heart of which Simeon had spoken in Luke ii, 35?

26. "Woman, behold thy son!" This said Jesus to Mary as He saw her and the disciple whom He loved standing by. The three sayings before the three hours' darkness were "Father, forgive them," "Today shalt thou be with Me in paradise" and this to His mother and John. They tell us of the forgiveness of sins or present salvation, of the glory that awaits us and of provision for all our need while we sojourn here. He who spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all—how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?

27. "Then saith He to the disciple, Behold thy mother." And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home." What an honor conferred upon John! And thus Mary has a home with a loving heart to care for her. But why not let one of His brothers, her own children, care for her? We will some day know this also if it is best that we should. Meanwhile we rest in the assurance that He does nothing without a cause.

28. "After this Jesus, knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst." This was after the three hours' darkness, after all the mocking and jeering of His cruel enemies. It was all nearly over now, but Ps. lxix, 21, remained to be fulfilled. The previous verse in that psalm says that reproach had broken His heart, that those to take pity and comforters He found none.

29. "They filled a sponge with vinegar and put it upon hyssop, and put it to His mouth." How very fully and liberally every word of Scripture concerning His humiliation was fulfilled! So may we expect all concerning His second coming and His glory and His kingdom to be as literally fulfilled. Let us consider every item of His sufferings for us until we are humiliated and wholly devoted to Him. Let us consider every item of the glory to be revealed and our partnership with Him in it until we can make the words of Rom. viii, 18, our very own. May we cry in very deed, "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God" (Ps. xlii, 2; lxiii, 1).

30. "When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished, and He bowed His head and gave up the ghost." His very last words seem to have been "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit" (Luke xxiii, 46; Ps. xxxi, 5). Luke says that He cried this with a loud voice, so that He died in His strength. He suffered the full time appointed Him, and the blood and water from His side would seem to indicate the broken heart (John xix, 34).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

People For the Week Beginning June 4, "Wheat and Tares"—Text, Math. xiii, 24-30.

"Let both grow together until the harvest."

No fact is more apparent than that good and evil are closely mingled in this world. Fault is often found with the church and reflections cast on religion because there are unworthy people in the church membership. It is undeniable that many who have at some time made a profession of religion have fallen far away from their first faith, and are living sinful lives. They do much harm to the cause of Christ. In many cases they should be firmly dealt with. The same is true of some League members. After kind care has been given them and all proper means of persuading them to correct the evil course has failed such persons should be asked to withdraw and, if necessary, should be expelled from membership. This is not in any sense or degree assuming the position of judge of their future and eternal condition. Nor does it in any manner free us from the obligation to do all we can to save such ones from their sins. It simply cuts them off from the participating in the privileges of membership which are allowable only to those who desire them sufficiently to maintain their obligations. No good end is secured in permitting the openly and notoriously wicked to remain members of the church or League, but much harm is done.

To persecute and injure those who are evil is contrary to the spirit of Christ. The promise of a world where there is no sin is given us, but we have no commission or warrant to try to make this world the place by exterminating those whom we disagree with and think in error. God is still the ruler and lets them grow. Inquisitions have committed many murders, but they never benefited the church nor the world. We have not the wisdom sufficient to always discriminate wheat from tares. Doubtless, if we were to try to rid the world of all evil persons, we would in our zeal and ignorance sacrifice some of the purest and best because of our lack of understanding of their motives and work.

It is also quite probable that the presence of the evil and sin of men helps us by spurring us to resist in our own lives the temptations under which we see others fall and also develops our virtues by calling out our energies to reform our fallen friends. This is not paradise, but preparation for it, and however we may weep over sinners and hope for the day of salvation, we may still thank God that we have been allowed to live in a sinful world, since it brought, through the Father's love, a Saviour from sin. Use more effort in trying to be good wheat yourself, and you will have less inclination to spend time

LIFE IN LITTLE NUTSHELLS.

BY CHARLES FREDERIC GOSS.

"THE WIRE WOUND ITSELF AROUND POOR OLD SHIVERER'S NECK."

XII. TWO KINDS OF FEAR.

SOME MEN are scared at nothing, and some men are scared at everything, and it is hard to tell which is the bigger fool.

There is a queer, nervous, shaky little body around here, by the name of Shiverer. He has heard so much about the danger of touching a "live wire" that he hardly dares venture out upon the street, ne'er rides upon a trolley car, and would not use a telephone for a thousand dollars.

If you were to see him creeping slowly and timidly along, looking up at the electric car wires and the spider web of copper filaments strung from pole to pole (over which, as along the nerves in a human brain, though it flies incessantly)—blinking, starting, dodging—you would think that he was an escaped lunatic.

He would go round the world to get to his office, before he would step over a "down wire!"

One day he was walking past a "feed store", in front of which an old farmer was unloading a wagon of baled hay. His hold slipped, just as he tried to lift one from the very top of his load and it tumbled to the ground. The jar wrenched it so that a poorly twisted ligament gave way, and the wire thus loosened, wound itself around poor old Shiverer's neck!

He gave a wild yell and fell down in a fit, as suddenly as if he had been electrocuted.

Now, the scriptural injunction to "pass the time of our sojourning in fear," does not, it seems to me, call for just that kind of timidity. I am afraid of a "live wire" myself, and for that matter am shy of even a barbed wire; but I would hate to fall down dead every time I touched a baled wire.

Some men are too timid. Shiverer was. And yet, it is a good thing for a man to keep his eyes wide open for "live wires", for the streets are full of them.

Every now and then you see a man who has run up against one, and a pitiful sight he is! There is a saloon not far from here, out of which you can see a string of them coming any time. The symptoms of the shock are always the same—knees that shake as they walk, tongues that tangle as they talk, bleary eyes, red nose, poverty, disgrace and too often crime.

"What do you suppose is the matter with that poor fellow?" said I to a friend of mine, as we saw a man coming out of a gambling hall, his hat pulled down over his eyes, his face pale as a ghost and his hands thrust deep into his empty pockets.

"Touched a 'live wire'," said he sententiously.

There is such a wire running out of the "stock exchange" into almost every saloon in every city of the country, and there is another one more dangerous still, one end of which is over on the race track.

I know plenty of young fellows that have been burned on that one.

It makes no mark on their faces—at first; but it surely leaves a scar on their consciences, which it scars as if with a red-hot iron.

"If I had a fine, bright boy, I would rather see him take a stroke of lightning full upon his forehead than to get into the habit of touching that race track wire!"

I can find you a thousand fathers and mothers in this city who will say the same.

Did you ever see them stand wringing their hands over a boy that has been brought home drunk from a pool-room, and hear them cry: "We had rather see him in his coffin."

For one, I am not afraid of everything, but I am afraid of some things, I am scared to death of some "live wires."

REPARTEE!

"Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

BY EMMA B. DUNHAM.

HE tripped along a wooded path,
A maiden, young and gay;
Quite free from any self-reproach,
She hummed a roundelay.

A little boy comes running by,
With heart that's just as light,
A bird's nest held within his hand,
With eggs of purest white.

"You cruel, naughty boy!" she cried,
And caught him by the sleeve;
"How could you pain the mother bird?
How could you make her grieve?"

"Now, Miss, to tell the honest truth,
I do not cause her pain.
The nest the mother bird has left;
She will not come again."

"How do you know, you wicked boy, Why do you tell me that?"
"Because—because—," the lad replied,
"You've got her on your hat!"

The Canadian Superintendent.

One of the most noted, if not the most prominent, men in Canadian Methodism is Dr. Carman. Since the union of all the various branches of the Methodist church in the Dominion there have been no bishops, but he has been general superintendent, which means the same thing, practically, under a different title. He is one of the ablest men in the denomination and deservedly held in high esteem. He was born in Ontario, in 1833. He is a graduate of Victoria university. He has been chancellor of Albert university and bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church of Canada before the consolidations. He is deeply interested in the League and during the past season made many addresses to chapters in California during a trip to that state, where flowers were blooming while his own land was white with snow.

Help a Little.

A kind word will often reach a heart seemingly closed to all good influences. It is impossible to tell by outward appearances all a person's feelings. The most hopeless and hardened, as we think them, may, after all, be accessible. Our carelessness and disregard are often as much in fault as their hardness. A touch of sympathy shows a brotherly heart, and this will thaw and warm a soul disheartened and almost discouraged. It costs you some effort to break through your reserve and approach another. It is hard to "talk religion," but if you will try it a little you will find your own interest growing and heart becoming enlisted in the work. For your own sake, for the next one's sake, help a little. Not the big things at first, but the little things of kind greeting and helpful service, are your task.

Sow an act and reap a habit; sow a habit and reap a character; sow a character and reap a destiny.—Thackeray.

Learning without good sense only helps a man to expose his own shallowness more clearly.

TEMPERANCE EDUCATION.

A Test of Its Efficiency in the Army at Santiago.

Fourteen years ago a certain state in the United States enacted a rather loose temperance education law, giving much latitude to school boards and teachers. In one city in that state the teachers said: "We will teach this subject from the positive side, the ideal. We will not tell the children what they should not do, nor much about beer or any other alcoholic drink. We will fill their minds so full of good and beautiful things that there will be no room for the bad." Nine-tenths of those children came from homes where beer is as common as water and saloons abound.

Last April 600 young men from the public schools of that city enlisted in our army. Although not in battle, they returned home to die in great numbers in spite of the best medical skill and care. Investigation shows that these 600 young men, whom the schools had taught nothing of its true nature, landed in Santiago each with a bottle of whisky in his pocket. More than three glasses each was their daily habit.

"Poisoned with alcohol," said the surgeon, "they did not respond to remedies, and had no recuperative power with which to throw off the malaria." They had the legal right to a sound education in the public schools in laws of hygiene, but they died victims of that fatal sophistry which, under the guise of teaching "only the ideal," does not teach all that the law demands and the exigencies call for.

In the same regiment were two companies of young men from other sections of the state, where the temperance education law had been enforced in an honest, straightforward way, with indorsed, well graded textbooks in the hands of the pupils above the primary and with good oral instruction in the lower grades. These young men, abstainers almost to a man, on returning to their native climate quickly threw off the malaria and returned to useful private life.—New Voice.

BEWARE THE ENEMY.

Let No Man Invite Disaster by Indulging in Strong Drink.

Cases of hereditary desire for alcoholic drink exist, but are they as prevalent as we in an excess of charity are prone to count them? This shifting of the responsibility of one's sins on to parents is cowardice, for, even if there are such cases, to each is given a mind. It was not intended to be left dormant by its Giver. It was intended that man should know himself, his limitations and his weaknesses.

Knowing the latter, it is his duty to guard against them. No general would invite the enemy in battle to strike him on his weakest line. Yet he who feels that he has an appetite for strong drink does this when, a young man, he indulges in strong drink. He invites the enemy, knowing that he will be defeated. It is the duty of the mind, then, to resist the fiend. To keep him dormant by following the course of the abstainer and never swerving therefrom—this is his duty.

The place of eternal punishment is paved, we are told, with good intentions, while that of eternal bliss has streets of shining gold. To reach the latter we must follow the roadway of good deeds. But as charity begins at home, the first deed for the young man who in any way feels himself inclined to love drink is to totally abstain therefrom. In considering this let him remember that tomorrow never comes. We are all here upon this earth, with responsibilities beyond ourselves and our day here. One of the first of these, is that the stream of life remain clear. If, then, there are appetites for strong drink, it is not for us to increase them or to run the risk of doing so by becoming slaves to the habit, or even to try to find out if we have a "hereditary" weakness for intoxicants.—Father Matthew Herald.

Men and Women Drunkards.

Some interesting deductions are drawn in a work just published by Dr. Lawson Tait, a famous English specialist. Among other things he says: "My social experience among men and my professional experience among women draw a most emphatic distinction between drunkards in the two sexes. Men sit down openly with one another and get drunk socially. Women never do this. I never in my life saw a woman get perceptibly the worse for liquor at a dinner table, whereas I have seen scores, if not hundreds, of men do it. I never saw but one woman in my life the worse for a drink at a social dinner party, but then she came the worse for drink perceptibly. A woman, after a certain point, is always a secret drunkard and cunning beyond all description." He also thinks that mental or physical misery is the cause of the "peculiar drunkenness" among women of the middle and upper classes.

Alcohol as a Stimulant.

Dr. Herbert Cuff says regarding the action of alcohol on the heart and pulse: "But, though the pulse is strengthened, the heart is not. That organ is being forced to work harder by the alcohol, and therefore it fills the arteries better than it previously did, and consequently you have a stronger pulse. Alcohol affects the heart in the same way as the whip or spur does a tired horse. Now, just as a too liberal use of the whip or spur, by compelling a horse to work its hardest, finally wears the animal out so a too prolonged stimulation of the heart by alcohol may end in that organ collapsing."

Several military Good Templar lodges went into the Sudan campaign, and on the Monday following the capture of Omdurman a new Good Templar lodge was instituted at Khartum in the Royal Warwickshire regiment. It is called "Pride of the Sudan" lodge.—Exchange.

newspaper, especially of the sensational variety, is the lowest of any profession. There are many notable and honorable exceptions. They do not care about giving a true account about any event, but are concerned first of all about giving a readable account. The meeting will close on the 21st.

You see that Louisville is not stagnating. At least I hope that Fourth-Avenue is not. We are now taking our subscriptions for the new Church and hope to begin this summer. We are worshipping now in the lecture-room that cost some $40,000, and the new Church will cost about $60,000, which will give us a magnificent plant, as building material, owing to the proximity to the stone quarries, is cheap.

I need not tell you, dear RECORDER, that sometimes my heart gives me a little twinge and a few salt-drops gather in my eyes as I think of the loved ones back in old Virginia. Did ever any pastor serve a nobler people, or did ever any man have more loveable friends than your scribe? God bless them! I live in hope of meeting them again on earth, and then living with them forever in Heaven.

STATEMENT OF BOOK COMMITTEE.

To the Methodist Episcopal Church South—The Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, published in July, 1898, a statement setting forth the facts in connection with the collection of the claim against the United States Government for the use, consumption, injury and destruction of the Publishing House by the army of the United States during the war between the States. That statement containing all the pertinent facts in the case gave assurance to the church that the Book Committee in discharge of the obligation imposed upon it by the church had made a careful and exhaustive investigation into the acts of the Book Agents in the collection of said claim, and also declared it to be the unanimous opinion of the thirteen members composing the Book Committee that the Book Agents in the communications addressed to Senators and complained of as deceptive and misleading had not intended to mislead the Senate of the United States.

Since the publication last July of said statement no new facts bearing on the collection of this claim have come to the knowledge of the Book Committee.

It is true, as we learn from the public press, though not from any communications sent to us, for no such communications have been received, that some Annual conferences have passed resolutions in connection with one or more features of this claim. These resolutions cover three demands or suggestions:

First—The return to the United States Government of the money appropriated in satisfaction of the claim of the church.

Second—The resignation of the Book Committee.

Third—The displacement or resignation of the Book Agents.

The action of any of our Annual Conferences deserves and receives from this committee careful and respectful consideration. At the same time it will be recognized and admitted that in matters with which the church has charged the Book Committee, that committee must in conscience and in discharge of responsibility reach such conclusions as convince the judgment of the individual members of the committee.

In reference to the return of the money appropriated to satisfy the claim of the church we believe that the resolution adopted by the United States Senate February 21, 1899, in which resolution it is declared that no injury was done the United States, so definitely settles that question as would make any further agitation of it improper. In addition to the fact the Book Committee, even if so disposed, has never had the power to return this money, being precluded from taking such a step by the express terms of the sixth restrictive rule.

Touching the suggestion or request of some that the Book Committee should resign we have only this to say, that having been charged by the general church, whose servants we are, with very responsible duties, we do not deem a difference of opinion between ourselves and others, who have not been charged with our responsibilities, a sufficient ground for such a step; and indeed the resignation of the Book Committee is impossible under the law of our church, for there is during the intervals of the General Conference no one authorized to accept such resignation, nor any authority to appoint a new committee. It seems, on the contrary, to be our duty to continue hereafter, as hitherto, in the conscientious discharge of the duties of the office to the best of our ability. The General Conference, to which alone we owe our official existence, laid certain responsibilities on its Book Committee and committed certain functions to it. The committee has shirked no responsibilities; has assumed no functions not committed to it.

Some Annual Conferences, less than one third of the whole number, asked for the removal of the Book Agents. About thirty communications have been received by us some requesting, others demanding the removal of the agents. Some of these communications were from District Conferences, stewards' meetings and preachers' meetings, though most of them were from individuals. It should be noted that two thirds of these communications came from one State, more than three fourths from two States, and but three came from individuals outside of three States. It should be noted further than many of these communications largely agree in form and language, showing that they are the results of a printed circular extensively distributed for the declared purpose of influencing the judgment of this committee, and of thus effecting the removal of the Book Agents. A copy of this circular is in possession of the Book Committee. Only two of these communications and those from individuals, came from the bounds of annual conferences that are not reported to have asked for the removal of the Book Agents. Consequently it will be sufficient to reply to the resolutions of these conferences as being the larger and more representative bodies, and inclusive of district conferences, stewards' meetings, preachers' meetings, and individual members.

After this committee had published in July of last year its deliberate and unanimous judgement that the Book Agents had not intended to deceive or mislead United States Senators, the responsible Presiding Elder legally appointed an Investigating Committee to inquire into the moral conduct of Dr. Barbee. This Investigating Committee, after long and careful inquiry, unanimously reported that no trial was necessary. The Tennessee Conference, of which Dr. Barbee is a member, after a discussion extending over more than two days, passed his character without a dissenting vote.

It has been stated to the Book Committee that Dr. Barbee's character was passed with the expressed implied agreement or understanding on his part that he would resign his position as Book Agent. Dr. Barbee denies that he was in person or otherwise a party to such agreement or understanding, or had any knowledge of such agreement or understanding. This denial was scarcely necessary, for the very intimation that the Tennessee Conference was capable of being a party to such an agreement or understanding would be a most unjust reflection on the integrity of that conference.

It will not be claimed by any well informed member of our church that annual conferences have any jurisdiction over the Book Committee. Requests from such conferences can be only advisory, not mandatory. This committee has an open ear for advice from conferences or from individual members of any church, and gives it patient, careful and respectful consideration. But the responsibility for the determination of such questions as have, by the supreme power of the church, been laid on this committee, and alone on this committee, must be left to the conscience and judgment of the individual members of the committee. This responsibility could not be shared with others even if the committee were so inclined.

As no charge of immorality is pending against either of the agents which would authorize this committee to proceed under paragraph 431 of the Discipline, if this committee has authority to remove the agents it must be under paragraph 427, giving power to the Book Committee "to suspend the Book Agents in the intervals of the general Conference for misconduct or inefficiency in office." This committee has long since deliberately and unanimously declared its judgment on this point. No less than four regularly constituted church tribunals, being all the tribunals to which the church has given jurisdiction, either over the acts or the moral character of Dr. Barbee, have unanimously held that he was not guilty of misconduct in office.

Recognizing the binding authority of the judgment of our regularly constituted church tribunals in matters over which they have jurisdiction, and that the agents have already answered to every such tribunal in the church, and have been acquitted of any intention to do wrong in connection with the prosecution of the Publishing House claim, the Book Committee regards this question as settled, and feels bound by this settlement. It could not, therefore, if it would, remove the agents for misconduct. To do this would be not only to go behind our law and overturn it, but would also be an unlawful impeachment of the verdicts of those alone qualified to determine responsibilities committed to them by the General Conferences.

We do not understand the charge of inefficiency in office to have been made by any one against the Book Agents.

The sole legitimate conclusion we can reach, or that in our opinion can be reached by those subject to the Discipline of the church, is that the charge against the agents is res adjudicata.

To go outside the law of the church for any purpose would be to break down all protection given to our preachers and members, and this committee respectfully but firmly declines to do what it believes to be unauthorized and unlawful.

The Senate of the United States adopted, February 21, 1899, a report in which it is stated that many Senators regarded the fee paid to the attorney employed by the Book Committee to collect the aforeaid claim as "excessive and unreasonable," and "a waste and improper use of the fund" appropriated by the Government in discharge of its obligation to the church.

The report further implies that the aforesaid contract, so far from guarding the interests of the beneficiaries of the Publishing House, for the safe guarding of which interest the church has appointed the Book Committee, had wrought an injury to these beneficiaries.

The following facts will probably be sufficient to convince the church that the contract was legal, customary, and reasonable; and that the Book Committee in a conscientious and just manner has cared for the interests committed to its trust.

Three times, viz: 1870, 1874 and 1878, the General Conference authorized the necessary steps to be taken to remedy, as far as possible, the great wrong done the beneficiaries of the Publishing House by the unjust seizure, retention and use of its property, and the General Conference also approved the steps taken to collect such a sum of money from the Government of the United States as would in some measure reimburse the church.

In addition to the payment of more than $11,000 to one of our preachers to cover his expenses for years while he worked to induce Congress to do us justice, different Book Committees entered into contracts with attorneys to collect this claim. The contract under which we were at last, and after many years, successful in securing partial remedy for the wrong inflicted on the beneficiaries of the Publishing House by the authority of the United States was, except as to the amount of the contingent fee to be paid the attorney, an exact copy of a previous contract had been approved by Judge E. H. East, of Nashville, Tenn., at that time the Chairman of the Book Committee, and recognized as one of the leading and ablest lawyers in the States of Tennessee, and, indeed, in our church. The Hon. A. H. Garland, of Arkansas, formerly Attorney General of the United States, pronounced the contract with the attorney who succeeded in collecting the claim to be legal, customary and reasonable. That this is a correct opinion, so far as concerns the legality of the contract, is further attested by the fact that the Senate Committee did not even utter a hint against that legality.

STATEMENT OF BOOK COMMITTEE.

The report of the Senate Committee made July 8, 1898, shows that effort was made to induce evidence to prove that the contract with our attorney was legal, and the fee paid neither unusual nor exorbitant. This evidence was rejected, the point being raised that the investigation should be confined to the question of misrepresentation. Mr. Clay said: "I thought the sole question was in reference to misrepresentation."

The Chairman, Mr. T. Her, said: "That is what I announced—the misrepresentations which have been made by anybody with reference to securing the passage of the bill—not as to the merits of the bill or as to the value of the services rendered."

Mr. Pasco said: "If any outrage were perpetrated by the contract it was upon the church, and that is a matter which the church itself must investigate. The only matter for the committee to investigate is whether the committee was misrepresented on the Senate by the willful misrepresentations of the parties engaged in this matter. If there was an outrage perpetrated upon the church the church is capable of following that up and acting upon it, but the Senate has not intrusted it (that is the Senate Committee) with that investigation."

On such ground the proffered evidence as to the reasonableness of the fee was rejected. Yet, in its report the committee does not undertake to pass judgment upon the fee as "excessive and unreasonable," and the implication is plainly made that the Book Committee was unfaithful to its trust in that it failed "to protect the beneficiaries from what many Senators regard as a waste and improper use of the fund" and from what the Senate Committee characterized as "excessive charges and extortion."

The Investigation Committee thus passes judgment upon a matter into which it refused to inquire, which was not submitted to it for investigation and on which it declined to receive evidence when proffered.

Thus it is shown by its own action that the amount of the attorney's fee was a matter in which the Government had no interest or concern; was not a proper subject of inquiry by the Senate; was not in fact submitted for investigation, and the attempted decision of that question was ultra vires, and without any force or authority.

When the Senate on February 21, 1899, adopted its resolution approving the report of its Investigation Committee it said: "The injury resulting therefrom affected only the beneficiaries of the fund and not the United States, and the Senate should take no further action in the matter."

This final action was taken without debate and without any reference to the proof taken, the resolution being passed after the statement of Senator Pasco that the matter had "been carefully considered before the committee." The reasonable inference is that the Senate, as a body, was not familiar with the facts in the case, and was not cognizant of the fact that evidence on the point involved had been rejected by the committee.

The Senate has, therefore, itself passed judgment on a matter which was never investigated and which, by the action of its own committee, was excluded from consideration.

Evidently, according to the view of the Senate itself, the church is the only body having authority to investigate the question, and the church has investigated and decided it.

At the last General Conference the Committee on Publishing Interests, after a careful investigation, declared that the contract with the attorney "was, under all the circumstances of the case, a reasonable and proper one and in accordance with the usual business methods in like cases, and is approved."

The Book Committee, after investigation unanimously held in its report of July, 1898, that the fee was not only reasonable, but was for a less sum than is customary in such cases. As the church is capable of determining this matter, and has done so, it might be taken as conclusively settled.

But we will go further and show by the action of the Senate itself in similar cases that the contract fee was not only reasonable, but below the customary amounts allowed and paid by the Senate.

By Section 9 of an act approved June 29, 1888, an appropriation of $2,858,798.62 was made by Congress in favor of the Choctaw Nation of Indians. Congress fixed the fees of the attorneys, and the report of Mr. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury, shows that the sum of $913,703.75 was paid to the attorneys.

By an act of Congress approved August 23, 1894, approximately $3,000,000 was appropriated for the benefit of the Western Cherokee Indians and other tribes, wards of the Government. Thirty-five per cent. was reserved to pay the fees of attorneys. The Court of Claims decreed 25 per cent. to attorneys. Not satisfied with the amount decreed by the court, the attorneys appealed to Congress, and by an act approved June 7, 1897, the amount was increased to 35 per cent. of the whole paid to the attorneys. This, too, by the same Senators who one year later concluded that 35 per cent. of a much smaller claim, which probably required more time, toil and expense, was "excessive and unreasonable."

As to private claims granted by Congress in which attorneys, as stated by Senator Morgan on the floor of the Senate, which statement was uncontradicted, even unchallenged, received 50 per cent. of the amount collected, we cite the John Roach claims for $358,311.67, allowed by acts of Congress approved April 9 and June 3, 1898.

On June 9, 1898, within one hour after the debate closed on the Lodge resolution to investigate the circumstances connected with the passage of the Publishing House claim, an omnibus bill to appropriate about $10,000,000 passed the Senate without a division, and included in that sum were claims adjudicated by the court of claims amounting to $1,897,000, composed of private claims in which attorneys are reported to have had fees ranging from 25 to 50 per cent. of the whole.

The same bill appropriated $1,055,473.04 to pay what is known as the "French spoliation claims," where the attorneys' fees are reported a 50 per cent. on the whole.

Numerous other cases might be cited to show that the usual fees paid for getting claims through Congress, not so old or so stale as was the Publishing House claim, were 50 per cent. of the whole. But enough instances have been given to show that the same Senators who found our fee of 35 per cent. to be unreasonable had themselves set the precedent of 35 per cent. in the case of larger and less difficult claims.

But an attorney or agent living in Washington during the session of Congress and constantly pressing, by all legitimate means, our claim upon the attention of members indispensable to success is palpable to all persons who have had experience in such matters before Congress; and in this case was emphasized by the great loss we had suffered of money vainly expended and by the great loss to so much as a report upon the claim, which fact had discouraged the agents and some of the attorneys. There were few persons familiar with the history of the effort to secure compensation, who had the least faith that it would ever be obtained.

If it be thought that the contingent fee agreed to be paid was so large that the attorney received substantially and relatively more than the beneficiaries, it is only necessary to remember that the same committee of the Senate, which at last reported in favor of the payment of $288,000, had previously proposed and urged that we should be content to receive $150,000 in full satisfaction of our claim. By the contract made by the Book Committee and successfully fulfilled $37,200 in excess of that sum was, in the end, secured as the net result, clear of all expenses and charges, to the beneficiaries of this claim.

How, then, can it be truthfully said that the beneficiaries of the fund have been wronged by any action of the Book Committee?

The report adopted by the Senate implies that the contract made by the Book Committee was an injury to the beneficiaries of the fund. That the beneficiaries were greatly injured is not only shown by the affidavits contained in our petition for relief, but is also confessed by Congress in granting the sum of $288,000 to reimburse the church. But this injury to the beneficiaries was not an injury done those beneficiaries by the Book Committee in its efforts to collect this amount, but was an injury done by the Government of the United States. A further injury to those beneficiaries was in the long delay to pay this claim, and again, after this long delay in the payment of a sum, but little more than half of the amount shown to be due by the affidavits in the hands of the Senate Committee that recommended the payment of the amount finally granted. Had Congress thirty years ago, or even at a later date, manifested desire to protect these beneficiaries, there would have been no necessity to employ an attorney, but unfortunately for the beneficiaries this desire was not manifested in time for practical purposes. The Book Committee, so far from injuring the beneficiaries of the fund, took the steps by which those beneficiaries have recovered the portion of the fund which they have finally received.

The Senate Investigating Committee, in its report of July 8, 1898, makes an assertion which the Book Committee feels is bound to controvert, believing that this assertion, if successfully maintained, is subversive of most important rights of ecclesiastical bodies such as our church, and its General Conference and subordinate standing boards and committee.

This assertion is as follows:

The committee do not agree with the contention that the Senate has no right to inquire into the subject of compensation for services rendered by their attorney to the Book Agents. The Senate was passing upon the question of a claim against the United States made by trustees, not for their personal use, but for the benefit of certain beneficiaries, and there was the same jurisdiction and right to protect the beneficiaries from excessive charges and extortion that constantly exercised by the court of the land when cases are being tried which affect the estates of infants and trust funds."

We venture to say, with all due appreciation of the committee's desire to protect our beneficiaries, that no more fallacious position has ever been put forth in a public document.

The Congress of the United States in passing on this claim was in no view a court trying a case and protecting the interests of all parties concerned, plaintiff defendant, adult and infant, fiduciaries and cestuis que trust; but a legislative agent of the United States, ascertaining and settling by honest payment a claim of debt against the United States. As the Government is honest, so its agents are presumed to be honest, and therefore willing to pay a properly ascertained debt. With questions as to what the creditor may do with his money or may have contracted to do with his money, not fraudulent in itself, or contrary to public policy," according to well-settled law, such a body has nothing whatever to do.

The Senate Investigating Committee was evidently acting under a misapprehension as to who the creditors are to whom this claim was due. The corporate name of the publishing concern is "The Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." The church was thus, under its own corporate name as a publishing concern, claiming the payment of an amount due for the damage done to the substance of the Publishing House; that is, to the capital or producing investment of the concern. This being the case, the fund when obtained would of necessity take its place with the other capital of the Publishing House. Thus it clearly appears that the creditors to whom this claim was due were neither infants nor helpless objects of eleemosynary provision. They are ultimately the whole membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, clerical and lay, by whose means and for whose benefit their Publishing House was established and is conducted, its object being defined in the Discipline, paragraph 488, as follows: "To advance the cause of Christianity by disseminating religious knowledge and useful literary and scientific information in the form of books, tracts and periodicals." The eleemosynary feature was from the beginning an incidental one, both in the provisions of the law of the Church and in its custom in applying that law to the distribution of the products of the house.

These "beneficiaries" have an interest in the profits of the funds used in the business of the house, and, since the vast majority of them are not "infants," and those who are have competent legally appointed guardians, the beneficiaries are well able to protect what ever interests they have, and to present, through the proper ecclesiastical tribunals of the Church and the court of justice, the waste of their property without conceding to the Congress of the United States, or either house thereof, the dangerous power of inquiring into the disposition of money by an honest creditor before making payment of his debt, and thus exercising the powers of the judicial as well as the legislative department of the government.

Having submitted to our Church and the public the foregoing statement, the Book Committee respectfully and earnestly suggests to all persons interested in these matters and in the welfare of our Church, that until the next session of the General Conference, when it is deemed desirable these affairs may be passed under review by the legislative body of our Church, the chief source of power and influence among us, all agitation of the subject, especially in an acrimonious and bitter spirit, shall come to an end.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Life Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Life is but death's fair offspring.—
Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, Presbyterian, Milwaukee.

Destiny and Life.

The prince of destiny is he who controls life. Destiny is the ultima thule of life—is life's evolution, climax or anticlimax.—Dr. John W. Hancher, Methodist, Kansas City.

Spiritual Life.

A spiritual life consists not only in meditation and prayer, but in bringing spiritual principles to bear upon the community and state.—Rev. F. W. Hilar, Universalist, Chicago.

Self Sacrifice.

It is self sacrifice that makes life beautiful, and he who does what he can for the welfare and the happiness of his fellow man is sure of his reward.—
Rev. C. T. Bridewell, Presbyterian, Atlanta.

Happiness.

All happiness must rest on a solid foundation if it is to be real and lasting. Those who tie themselves to the things of this world forget that earthly honors are fleeting and perishable.—
Cardinal Gibbons, Catholic, Baltimore.

Intellectual Progress.

Our intellectual progress is to be without limit. We retain all the knowledge of the past, and as we add to it we gain hope that we are finally to solve the fierce enigmas of existence.—
Ev. B. Fay Mills, Evangelist, Boston.

Church Methods.

When the church adapts its methods to the people about it, they will give it meaning, and if the baptism of power upon the minister and people those who come to be entertained will remain to pray.—Rev. J. A. B. Wilson, Methodist, San Francisco.

Contributors to Man's Happiness.

The universe was not fashioned on utilitarian lines only. The song of birds, the beauty and perfume of flowers, the glad sunshine—all these, as well as serving economic ends, contribute to man's true pleasure and delight.—
Rev. Dr. George C. Lorimer, Baptist, Boston.

Faith.

Faith gives fairness and frankness in a business dealing. It guarantees honesty. The man of faith in business makes his busy life a religious discipline by subjecting each act to the standard of divine law and the gospel.—
Rev. E. Trumbull Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

Knowledge and Stability.

Let the words of God be more deeply engraven still on the portals of the nation. "Knowledge shall be the stability of thy times," and the larger the mixture of purely religious knowledge with the knowledge that is purely mental the greater would be the stability of thy nation.—Rev. John Sinclair, Presbyterian, St. Paul.

True Mission of the Jew.

Let the Jew live and prove that the power of the great principles and ideals of which he is the custodian and which have created civilization is real and vital to him, and from their inspiring force let him give the highest and noblest service to man. This is manly; this is his true mission.—Rabbi Henry Berkowitz, Hebrew, Philadelphia.

New Christian Philanthropy.

The new Christian philanthropy recognizes that salvation takes in the whole of life and aims to make the most and best of it. It is a foe to everything that lowers, degrades and lessens manhood. It aims to help people help themselves, rather than to lower self respect by almsgiving. It recognizes that the present relations of human society are the result of a long evolution.—
Rev. Dr. B. F. Woodburn, Baptist, Alleghany, Pa.

Party Platforms.

Let party platforms rise to the grand level of sublime worship and cease the petty bickerings of jealous partisans. In prayer the pilgrim fathers baptized this nation, and their moral conflict inspires the prayer we are urged to make. Let our motives be pure. Let it not be said, "This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." Do we acknowledge God directly or indirectly, as a blind, mysterious force, a supernatural engineer only or as our eternal Father?—Rev. S. H. Cox, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Good In All Churches.

I believe that there is something good in all churches. It makes little difference to what church a man belongs so long as he imitates the character of Christ. There is no reason why a Catholic should not stand in this pulpit and preach to you. There is no reason why a Protestant should not be permitted in a Catholic pulpit and preach the truth which he sincerely believes. We are still too suspicious of one another. It would be glorious to have one Christian federation. Perhaps in the days that are to come such a Christian federation will be made possible. God speed the day!—Dr. Charles H. Eaton, Universalist, New York.

Bismarck's Religious Life.

Let us look at the religious life of Bismarck. Bismarck was a Christian. A personal believer in Jesus Christ as his Lord and Saviour, a regular attendant and communicant of the Evangelical church of Germany. His parents before him also were Christian people. Perhaps the strongest spiritual force brought to bear upon his life was that of his wife, Jennie von Puttkamer, a noble woman, whose parents were known for their deep piety and strong leaning toward the Moravian brethren. Her father at first objected to the union on the ground that Bismarck, who was rather wild in his college days, was not as deeply religious a man as he wished for his daughter's husband. But after a long conversation with him, in which he discovered the depths of his religious convictions, he unhesitatingly gave his daughter to him in marriage. Bismarck's reliance upon God was most profound.—Dr. George B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS.

We give in this issue, immediately following, a most interesting discussion of the question of entertainments for the benefit of the Church by six young ladies, three opposing and three defending them. They will repay reading.

"RESOLVED: That all money to be used to carry on the work of the Church of God should be raised by voluntary offerings."

First.—MISS ADELAIDE HARDWAY.

Voluntary offering.—What do we mean by this? Is it that we will gladly attend a Church festival, bazaar, lawn party, lecture, and there spend our money liberally because the Church will receive the money. No; assuredly not; for this is not a gift, but simply buying in hopes of getting value received. It must be an offering and not a payment for goods.

Before condemning Church entertainments we will notice their purpose and the way in which it is carried out. Their purpose is to raise money for the benefit of that special congregation in the interest of their work. Legitimate means are sometimes used, but oftener illegitimate.

1. Illegitimate means are frequently used to extort money from the general public, such as plays and rafflings. (a) one is a species of theatrical reformance and the other a Church gambling. This is contrary to sound morality and should not be tolerated by civil law much less by Church men. (b) Such means bring contempt for Church life in the minds of the sinners. Hence the world loses its respect for the Church. The Church that permits such things has little regard for the real purpose of a Church and pays but little attention to cause and effect. (c) If Church entertainments, the cause produces a bad effect then the cause should be abandoned. Take for an example raising money to pay a Church debt, to build a new Church or even to repair the old one. These are all worthy causes. But notice the way in which the money is to be raised and its effect on the world, and also on the Church members. An entertainment of some kind is proposed.

They agree to have a lawn party. What could be a more innocent amusement? Nothing, if it were carried out in a fair, business-like way. To begin with, they are afraid they are not going to have a crowd, a string band is engaged and, of course, this insures a large crowd, and also a sale of their goods. Sure enough their refreshments are sold more rapidly than they expected; in fact, they are nearly all sold, and over half the crowd has to be served yet. What must they do? It is decided not to give good measure, also sell the fruits and flowers for twice as much as they are worth. And they will never allow themselves to feel remorse; because "it is for the Church." Along with this cheating they also bring lottery into it by having a "fish pond," "grab bag," a cake to raffle off, and several young ladies begging for a silk quilt, or something else of as little value. All of this appeals to chance. It may possibly make good beggars. But this is a misfortune both for the beggar and for the community, because everybody avoids the beggar. Not only this, but the young lady brings reproach to her sex by parading the streets asking money from men whom she would not think of meeting on social equality.

We will now consider them admitting that they are legitimate.

As worldly support is appealed to in the plea "for the benefit of a special Church." This is contrary to the spirit of the Gospel, for it makes an appeal to the world to help and support that in which they have no part and, in a certain sense, put the Church and the world on the same level. "Lay by in store as the Lord has prospered you" is the spirit and plan of the Gospel. Church entertainments supplant this spirit and plan.

(2) In supplanting this spirit and plan they foster indolence in giving by the Church members, and not them of the enjoyment of this beautiful precept,—
"It is more blessed to give than to receive." To rob a Christian of his joy in the full support of his own cause is to lessen his interest in that cause and dwarf his spirituality.

(c) It makes the sinner a partner in the government of the kingdom of Christ, while he is an alien to that government. Thus the Church and the world are merged and the lines of distinction are destroyed in direct violation of the plain injunction, "Come out from among them and be ye separate."

(d) It fosters in the minds of the sinner a contempt for the Church and an excuse for not becoming a Christian. In all the ways mentioned lottery has been used and selfish motives appealed to. This way of giving has been bitterly denounced by the celebrated man Dr. Mark Hopkins, who wrote the wonderful books "Outline Study of Man," and "The Law of Love." He says: "No form of charity should be tolerated for a moment that in the actual state of a community will foster a spirit of gambling." And again he says with great power: "Any attempt to promote a benevolent object by an appeal to selfish motives is wrong."

Benevolent giving is a means of Christian culture, but selfish giving in the form of benevolence is a deception and a snare. If the cause of benevolence cannot be supported benevolently it had better not be supported at all.

But how can a benevolent cause be supported benevolently? By voluntary offering. There is no one poorer than the widow who cast into the treasury her two mites while the rich were casting out of their abundance unto the offerings of God. Christ commended her. Do you think he commended Church entertainments?

Why could we not have our rich giving of their abundance and the poor casting in their mites? Because of these abominable church entertainments. They have taken away everything that is like a free-will offering and substituted for it a payment for goods that are not always what they are claimed to be.

We forget that we are God's stewards and all that we have is His. We are robbing God when we refuse to give Him His own.

We have considered Church entertainments as illegitimate and as legitimate. And why do I claim that they are wrong? Because if they are illegitimate this excludes them from the Church of God. And even though the means used be legitimate their effect is harmful and not beneficial. Worldly respect is appealed to. The Church member becomes indifferent to all charitable giving. He is robbed of the full support of his own cause and thus dwarfs his own spirituality. The sinner is made a partner in the kingdom of Christ, which makes him have a contempt for the Church, and an excuse for not becoming a Christian. On the other hand, if we give voluntarily we are becoming more like Christ and can realize the full meaning of the blessedness of giving. Besides this we ought to do it because it is a means of Christian culture.

2d—MISS KATHERINE M'ENERY.

My sister debaters, who have assayed the more popular side of this question, will so beguile you by their beauty of thought and expression that I fear my feeble powers are not sufficient to disabuse your minds of their fallacious arguments, and I am the more impressed with the old adage, "It is easier to say 'Yes' than 'No,'" and that this facility to say "Yea" leads often into error, while the less pleasing but often more dutious "No" is the path of truth and, in this instance, it is the path of duty, in which I must walk.

Fain would I court the mantle of Minerva to fall upon me and clothe me with the wisdom necessary to present in an attractive and forceful garb the truth as I believe it, "That the work of the Lord should not be restricted to those who give as of voluntary offering," basing my ideas not only on God's working in the great economy of nature, but in all the phases of human life with which I am conversant, the only ways except Revelation in which we can understand God's will concerning us.

I look around me in nature and from nature up to nature's God—the author and giver of all things, the great ruler of the universe—and remember that He uses all things, animate and inanimate, to fulfill the purpose of His will.

Does He inquire of the wind if its pleasure be with gentle zephyr to fan the burning brow of a sufferer? Or to direct the clouds which are to fall upon the earth in refreshing showers—making it to bloom and blossom as a rose? Or with fierce tornado to devastate and lay waste fertile fields and busy mart, causing suffering and loss of human life?

NO! God uses the icy winds or the arctic or the burning simoons of the desert to fulfill His will—by His will—not at their pleasure.

Does he ask the mighty Mississippi of our own land, the Danube of Europe, the Yangtze Kiang of Asia, the Nile of Egypt, if it be their will to bear upon their bosoms the commerce that enriches a world? Or if they will take back to their mother ocean the water she gave them that they may again fulfil their part in the great economy of nature? Does he ask the sun if it will shed warmth and light to gladden and brighten His universe? And so I might go on ad infinitum in the inanimate world, but I would not to tire you.

Why, how many of us could Mr. Cannon have graduated had our parents waited for us to make a voluntary offering of the years of our young life to the duty of the cultivation of our minds?

Have our parents not required a child's duty of us except when it was a voluntary offering?

Think what we should have been had all the discipline of heart and mind and will to which we have been subjected been left to our voluntary offering.

I fear few of us today would have reached the primary department of the Blackstone Female Institute, and alas! few of us still have attained to even the kindergarten of God's circle of King's Daughters.

What would have been accomplished in science, in art, in literature, in civilization, in government, if genius had not used instruments incapable even of appreciating the work required of them.

Give freely—but do not think that is all. Influence and persuade others. If their eyes are so blinded and their senses so dulled that they cannot make voluntary offering induce them to help you to offer and the time may come when it will be their one great pleasure.

The Lord's work must go on, voluntarily if we will, but it must whether we say yea or nay.

Third—MISS GERTRUDE KENNEDY.

Before entering into this discussion we would call your attention to the fact that one of the distinctive features of the Church of God is self-sacrifice. You all agree to this, we are sure. Then, just think for one moment what that meant to our Saviour and to the old Christians and what it ought to mean to us, and you will find that self-sacrifice is always voluntary. "But," you say, "we agree with you in this, yet to apply this principle in a matter of giving is a very different thing, and if you do so you will find no success. You can make almost anyone give if he expects something in return, although it may not be the real value of his gift, but there are few whom you can persuade to give a free-will offering—something for which they expect nothing in return. Hence you see the need of Church entertainments, in which pleasure, if nothing else, is received in return for what is given. Our reply to this argument would be:—You speak of receiving a reward for what is given, but surely you esteem the reward that those who are faithful receive—of far more value than pleasure or wealth—and we who are faithful, who do everything within our power to support God's cause in the world, are promised a crown of life. Oh! what is fleeting pleasure compared with that!

Then you say we will have no success. But think of the beautiful tabernacle we read of in the Old Testament. We hear of no entertainments gotten up to obtain the materials with which it was made, but we are told that the people gave willingly and freely.

Then we have learned that when the temple was repaired under Jehosiah's reign it was by voluntary offerings, and in these and many other instances that we might call your attention to there was perfect success. One of the greatest proofs of the fact that voluntary offerings are the most acceptable in God's sight is found in the case of the poor widow whom Christ commended because she gave her all to His cause. It was her self-sacrificing spirit that our Saviour praised. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart so let him give: not grudgingly nor of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver." So says the apostle Paul. Again he says: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Ah! is it to the glory of God to sell things for much more than they are worth, as is often done at Church entertainments. Is it not cheating?

Perhaps you will say that a Church in which there are no entertainments will be dull and lacking in helpfulness for its members will not mingle with each other as much as they would in these entertainments, and the Church which cultivates the spiritual nature of its members entirely, paying not the slightest attention to their sociable nature, will have no real life. While we are fully convinced that there is a real need for sociability in the Church, (for we have seen that in many Churches the poorer members are held in disdain by the more wealthy members, and we know this to be in direct opposition to the spirit of Christ, who thought no one too poor or too low for Him to mingle with if He could do him good), yet we think that by a visit or by having an evening at home, at which time the poor are invited to share the pleasure that wealth affords, more good will be done to the poor, and the wealthy will be brought much nearer to them and will be more in sympathy with them than would ever be possible as the result of any number of Church entertainments. Better not have the Church appear interesting than to obtain this interest by some method of which God does not approve. Perhaps there are some who will say that to children and all young people the Church will be uninviting and gloomy if we are so mathematical as not to have entertainment, but to all such our reply would be that the Church does not need those young people who are thinking more about pleasure than they are about Christ, while it is perfectly right to join harmless pleasures, that was not the purpose of Christ, and never will be any of His true followers. As one has well said, "The purpose of the Church of God is to spread the blessed light of the Gospel, which is without price." "Think," he says, "of some one asking Christ for a silver offer to be admitted into His house, and he were to go into some of His Churches to-day He would not be admitted, and thus many of His followers, poor like He was when on earth, are refused admission into His house."

Again we would ask you to weigh for a moment the awful influence of child's character a Church entertainment may have. Let a child be married when quite young to such an entertainment, then very often the idea it gets of the Church of God is that it is a place of worldly amusement. Think of the darkness in which a child's after life must be spent and will see that in your thoughtless you have blighted a soul for which Christ died. We have in mind several gay young faces we remember seeing a lecture given near our home several years ago. They needed the love of Christ to sweeten and deepen their lives, but alas! they did not get it from the lecture of the well-known man. Think of Paul lecturing at a Church on a secular subject and having refreshments served after his lecture over! Verily the baneful influence of Church entertainments over the lives of the young is worse than that of dance or of gambling, for it is to the Church they look for help to a better and nobler life, and they do not find it at lectures and entertainments given for the benefit of the Church. From the same spring does not flow both bitter water and sweet," no more can Church draw men to the world and Christ.

That there would be more Christ in the Church if we raised the means for carrying on its works by voluntary offering is evident. We know even the heathen's gift to his god is always voluntary, and that in India women often drown their children even if they love them, to appease the wrath of their false gods. Surely we will give our money willingly and gladly to our true God. Self-sacrifice and humility make our gifts more acceptable in God's sight. "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them; otherwise ye have no reward of your Father who is in Heaven." So says our Saviour. In conclusion, we would call your attention to the thought which some have suggested in the following words: "Christ says to those who sell in their house to-day, as He did when on earth, 'Take these things hence; make not my Father's house a house of merchandise.'"

Fourth—MISS MARY LIZZIE H.

RELL.

My opponent has said that all men to carry on the work of God should be moved by voluntary offering. Why do those who believe that way not carry out their belief. They go to church and hear the preachers preach about the hithen and the need of money. How many are there who give voluntarily? I would indeed. They give only when they are begged for it for money; this they call a voluntary offering. I can not see where the offering comes in.

And do you find every one willing to go at these collections? Certainly not. Well we want all to give something without being begged for it; for people go to Church where they continually hear sermons on giving, the congregation will soon begin decreasing instead of increasing, and we want to add to the number of church members. I have often heard some one say "that preachers talk nothing but money." And so stop going to Church because of these collections.

We believe in raising all money we honestly can to carry on the work of God both by voluntary offering and by having outside of the Church, Church entertainment, festivals, musicals, and lectures with admission fees.

What is the harm in having some public entertainment in the Church for the Church? None at all. For if we do not have Church entertainment for our young members they will seek pleasure elsewhere, perhaps in questionable places. All Christians want to bring the spiritually poor and needy into the Church and the best way to do this is by having some entertainment, such as Children's day exercises, some lecture, or some festival and write all. In this way the people are brought together, people perhaps who could be brought no other way. After coming to the entertainments and being kindly received by our Christian people they have a desire to come again and to learn the purpose and the work of the Church. Then after coming they will see good done, learn the word of God, and probably become followers of God. And how did this come about? By having outside of the Church, entertainments gotten up by our good Christian women whose hearts are full of the love of God and the desire to carry on his work. These entertainments necessarily create some expenses; who would say that it is wrong to charge a small fee so that those who enjoy them might help to pay for the enjoyment. It is not wrong to charge a small fee for expenses, is it wrong to make it a little more in order to meet incidental expenses connected with the work of the Church?

How would you furnish the parsonage, the library, carpet the Church, furnish organs, support missions, support the pastor if you did not raise money in any other way than by voluntary offering? You would not do it. These things would probably be neglected or the preacher would have to resort to the usual collection.

When many and many a person ceases to go to God's house because of these voluntary collections and would lose the little love he did have for God. Now can we not collect our money in such a way as to raise more of it and at the same time make God's house agreeable and inviting to all and thus increase our church member's faith instead of causing him to lose it.

What is the harm in having a musical given by our Christian women? Let us take an Oratorio for instance, "Esther the Beautiful Queen." Where can we learn so well this beautiful story? We certainly can not get the vivid impression from reading it that we can from seeing it well acted as a whole. Such themes as this ought not to be handled except by Christian people. Now is it not better to have things of this kind and teach God's word; and at the same time raise money to carry on his work than to let our young people go to theatres, balls and other places of amusement and spend their money to carry on the work of the evil one.

What is a Church festival? It is a Church in business. If I ask you if it is wrong for a Christian to keep groceries, confectionaries, or a restaurant, you will unhesitatingly say—no. Well then why is it wrong for a number of Christians to come together for a few hours and run a restaurant in the name of the Church? If not wrong for an individual, certainly it is not wrong for individuals. You say it is right to come together and sell cream and such things and give the money to the Church just so we do not say we are doing it for the Church. Should a Christian be ashamed to own that he is doing a thing for Christ?

What is the work of the Ladies Aid Society if it is not to raise money to carry on God's work? Must this then be given up and leave all the work for the preachers to do? You know of people in your own Church, who willingly give towards some entertainment, festival, or lecture when you would not by any means get them to give otherwise. Is money gotten this way improperly gained? If you think so tell us what your reasons are.

Entertainments add vigor and unity to the Church for the people taking part and helping in the entertainments feel as if they belong more to the Church and are a part of it.

Then, too, some people can do more good by getting up entertainments than by any other way. They seem to have a talent in that direction, and shall not that God given talent be used for the promotion of his kingdom? A Church with life and vigor has a large congregation and all its members are filled with enthusiasm to carry on God's work, while if there should be a Church that depends entirely upon raising its money by voluntary offering the members of that Church would fail to realize their obligations. As a consequence the burden would fall on a few generous members or to the preacher's already numerous duties would be added this one more, of visiting each member, of reminding him of his neglected obligations, and collecting the money.

I leave this question with you with these points to be considered.

1. Notably few give voluntarily.
2. Continual begging at Church prevents the attendance of many who would otherwise be regular attendants.
3. If young people do not have amusements in Church work they will find it elsewhere.
4. If not wrong for an individual to work for the Church, why wrong for several persons to do the same work for the same object?

5. A social feature gives vitality to the congregation and unites its members.

6. Many people have nothing to give but time and talent.

Fifth.—MISS S. AUGUSTA HARRIS.
RELL.

In closing the argument for the affirmative side of the question, I say most emphatically that all money to carry on the work of the Church of God should be raised by voluntary offerings. If we do not raise it in this way how are we going to raise it? My opponents say by entertainments, ice-cream festi-

A Great Combine Capitalized at Millions

Trusts and Combinations in many lines of production, and controlling the output of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

HERE IS THE PLAN

A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideals are: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price."
—Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."
—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine."
—Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work."
—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

"A periodical absolutely solitary in the field it occupies. It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart. It ought to find a place at once in every family circle in the land."
—Bishop W. A. Candler.

"A gem among the monthlies of our land."
—T. Berry Smith,
Central College, Fayette, Mo.

W. T. Harris, of Washington, D. C., United States Commissioner of Education, has this to say of a recent number: "It is one of the most remarkable magazine numbers that I have seen for a long time, and I beg leave to enclose two dollars for two regular subscriptions. I congratulate you."

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it."
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none."
—Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate."
—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus."
—The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Nathaniel Luccock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning."
—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

"We most heartily commend it to our people as a high-grade periodical, worthy to take its place in every Methodist home."
—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"It will aim to advocate and magnify the things which world-wide Methodism holds in common, and especially to be a factor in the cultivation of fraternal relations between the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."
—Central Christian Advocate.

"The letter press is superb, the illustrations first-class and the reading matter thoroughly instructive, entertaining and edifying."
—Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."
—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"We welcome it, relish it and recommend it."
—Western Christian Advocate.

"It takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."
—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"We cannot but give to the Magazine our best wishes, and hope for its great success."
—Texas Christian Advocate.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

BIRTHDAY PRESENT.

The RECORDER will celebrate its 7th Birthday by offering the paper from now till Sept. 1st for FIFTY CENTS PER YEAR. A 12 page illustrated weekly paper for one year for only FIFTY CENTS. Send in a club.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

On the third page of this issue a statement is published concerning the "American Illustrated Monthly Magazine." This is a monthly magazine, of which Dr. J. W. Lee is one of the editors. It is fully described on the third page. THE EXTRAORDINARY OFFER is to furnish this excellent magazine, coming once every month, and the METHODIST RECORDER, coming once every week, for $1.00 for a whole year!

Dr. A. G. Brown has returned from Clifton Springs to his home in Ashland and is reported to have been very greatly benefited.

ANOTHER THANK OFFERING.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Blackstone Female Institute the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering was brought up and discussed of some length by the brethren. The sum of $750 was subscribed at the time, which, added to what had already been subscribed, made $1750, as the total subscription up to this time of members of the Board of Trustees. As this amount has been subscribed by about one-half of the Trustees, it is thought that when all the members of the Board have subscribed, $1750 will be considered.

When it is remembered that this subscription has been by farmers and preachers, none of whom could be called wealthy, it shows that our people will give the full amount apportioned to us and more. The Randolph-Macon Board meets next week and great things are hoped for.

B. F. I. COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement exercises of the fifth annual session of the Blackstone Female Institute brought to a close the most prosperous session in the history of the school. Starting with 76 pupils five years ago, it closed the fifth session with an enrollment for the year of 1898-'9 of 194.

The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Dr. W. V. Tudor, pastor of Centenary Church, Richmond, Va., his subject being "The Ornament of a Meek and Quiet Spirit." The sermon was not only practical and helpful, but had in it many passages of unusual beauty and force.

The annual address was delivered by Dr. John Matthews, of Nashville, Tenn. His subject was "The Superiority of Christian Education to State Education." Dr. Matthews is, as he himself said, a unique speaker. He delivered one of the most entertaining and yet one of the most sensible addresses which the writer has ever heard, and few who were present on that occasion will ever forget it.

The annual concert was held in the Music Hall of Blackstone, and was very much enjoyed by a large and cultured audience from Blackstone and the counties round about. The special feature of the music work of the Institute was the excellent chorus singing. The entire school is trained in chorus work and participated in the commencement exercises. Immediately following the concert a summary of the work of the school for the year was given by the Principal, distinctions and promotions being read out, and medals awarded. The medals were as follows:

Silver medals—Primary Department:—Miss Lura Lee Cannon, of Blackstone. Introductory Department—Miss N. Maxey Epes, of Blackstone. English Bible, First Grade—Misses Bettie Bragg, of Dinwiddie county; and Ella Settle, of Kentucky. English Bible, Second Grade—Miss Mary Armstrong, of Cumberland county. Vocal Music—Misses Lena Mae Robins, of Northumberland county; and N. Verna O'Brien, of Lynchburg. General Improvement—Miss Minnie V. White, of Accomac county.

Gold Medals.—Junior Scholarship—Miss Lucy D. Rodgers, of Northampton county. Intermediate Scholarship—Miss Elizabeth Gertrude Manson, of Lunenburg. English Bible, Third Grade—Miss Adelaide P. Hardaway, of Crewe. Instrumental Music—Misses Bessie L. Blanton, of Blackstone; and Mary H. Robertson, of Nottoway. General Department—Miss Mary E. McClelland, of Isles of Wight.

The Class Night exercises were very interesting. The crowd was so great that many were unable to secure seats. The numbers on the program, in addition to music, were Salutatory, Miss Carrie Emily Elsey; History, Miss Louise Bernard Crowder, of Powhatan; Rescution, Miss Marie Byrd, of Accomac; Prophecy, Miss Mary E. McClelland, of Isles of Wight; Recommendation, Miss Lucy Mason Overby, of Lunenburg; Will and Testament, Miss Lottie Louise Cralle, of Nottoway; Valedictory, Miss Mary E. Binford, of Appomattox. Debate: Resolved that all money to carry on the work of the Church of God should be raised by voluntary offerings. Affirmative—Miss Adelaide P. Hardaway, Miss L. Gertrude Kennedy, Miss S. Agusta Harrell. Negative—Miss Katharine McEnery, Miss M. L. Harrell, Miss Clara Virginia Miles.

After the Class Night exercises, the Principal delivered the diplomas to the class, numbering twenty. They are as follows: English Graduates—Miss Bessie Lee Blanton, of Nottoway; Miss Mamie Ruth Beville, of Nottoway; Miss Mary Lizzie Harrell, of North Carolina; Miss P. Agusta Harrell, of North Carolina; Miss Mary E. McClelland, of Isles of Wight; Miss Lucy Mason Overby, of Lunenburg; Miss Adelaide P. Hardaway, of Nottoway; Miss Clara Virginia Miles, of Mathews; Miss Carrie Byerley, of Mississippi; Miss Eva Byerley, of Cumberland; Miss Mary Alma French, of Cumberland; Miss Mary H. Robertson, of Nottoway. Full Graduates—Miss Elizabeth M. Binford, of Appomattox; Miss Carrie E. Elzey, of Northampton; Miss Katharine G. McEnery, of Nottoway; Miss Lottie L. Cralle, of Nottoway; Miss L. Gertrude Kennedy, of Lunenburg; Miss L. Bernard Crowder, of Powhatan; Miss Marie Byrd, of Accomac; Miss Maude McCulloch, of Newport News.

At the meeting of the Board of Trustees the report of the school for the year was received and discussed, and resolutions were passed stating their gratification at the great success which had attended the labors of the Principal and the Faculty during the session, and on the continued growth of the school during the five years of its history. The Principal, Rev. James Cannon, Jr., had already been elected for another term of five years, beginning with September, 1899. The Trustees also expressed great pleasure at the fact that the Faculty and students of the Blackstone Institute had made the finest movement in Virginia toward the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering. The Trustees themselves in their meeting started a subscription. Counting what had already been pledged by members of the Board in attendance the total amounted to $1750. A one-half of the Board were not present when the subscription was made this amount will be largely increased. The Blackstone Institute has therefore already by its Faculty, students, alumni and trustees made an offering of about $5,000, the graduating class, composed of twenty young ladies, having contributed $625 toward the establishment of a Loan Fund. Thus closed the most prosperous session of this young and flourishing school.

vals, oyster suppers, raffling off such things as silk quilts or pictures.

Take for instance an ice-cream festival. All the members of the Church will agree to have it for the benefit of the Church. O, yes, they are willing to have it for that purpose, but when the time comes to do the work it will be about a dozen or perhaps a dozen who will have all the work to do. All the rest will have some excuse. Then very many will not go at all. They will say: well, I gave a gallon of milk, or a dozen eggs, or a cake, (yes, it was a cake, so hard, though you could hardly eat it), I cannot afford to spend any money, it will not look well for me, a member of the Church, to go and not spend money, so I will stay at home. As many who do go will say that they do it for the benefit of the Church, so I spend more than I otherwise would, the more they spend the more they get in return. Is such giving this done for saving souls or spreading the Gospel? No; it is simply to satisfy the appetite. "It is more blessed to give than to receive," are the words of our blessed Master.

How many, especially our young men, if you ask them to give you money, will refuse, but will go to an ice-cream festival or an oyster supper and spend two or three dollars. Why this? Simply because they have brought up thinking it was the way to raise the money. Is this the way the young people of our Church ought to be trained?

Think of raffling off a silk quilt or picture to carry on the work of the Church of God! It fosters a spirit of gambling, for although it is on a small scale, it is nevertheless gambling. Then, a great part of the money raised by any of these methods is gotten by outsiders—people who do not claim to be Christians. There are no prayers with such gifts as these. It is sanctified money." Is this what we want to give to God? The Bible says: "Let every man give according to his purposed in his heart, not grudging or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."

When we speak of carrying on the work of the Church of God, it includes pastors' salaries as well as Church missionary collections and building funds. Is not the pastor a hired man in the vineyard of the Lord? Would he be just as reasonable for us to have an oyster supper to raise money to pay his laborers or cook as to have one to pay his pastor? Is it, then, more reasonable to raise money for missionary purposes in this way? Christ has commanded that every man give as he is able. Jacob gave a tenth of all he had. The poor widow gave her two mites, all her living. Jews are spoken of as robbing God because they did not give a tenth.

How were the tabernacle and temple built and all enterprises of Jewish Church carried on? In accordance with the commandment of Himself. What was the commandment? To hold feasts, fairs and theatrical performances? The very question carries its own answer. Certainly His commandment was that the work should be carried on by voluntary offerings. The Jews did not expect a return for what they gave. Live in a more enlightened age than Jews, our obligations have not lessened and we should still adhere to the same plan of filling the Lord's treasury with voluntary offerings, and not the price of pies and cakes.

The work of the ministry, in addition to saving souls, is to educate the people to give freely and liberally from principle. Anything, therefore, that comes in the way of this is detrimental to a successful ministry and the growth of the Church. Any other method puts us on a plane far below the Jews. Ought this to be in an enlightened Christian nation like ours? Christ's command is: "Give, and it shall be given you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." If we do not give to the Lord He will not give to us, and the more we give Him the more will He give us.

But even were it right to raise money for God's work by entertainments of a proper kind, the difficulty arises that when they are resorted to it is hard to draw the line between the innocent and doubtful methods used. Before we are aware we have crossed the line, and the good derived from the money is more than over-balanced by the harm?

My opponents say that if we do not have some kind of amusement in the Church for the young people they will go elsewhere to find it. I agree that it is right and proper to have social gatherings for the young, but not to have them to raise money to carry on God's cause. The question under consideration is not how we shall entertain the young, but how shall we get them to give liberally and joyfully of their means to help carry on the work of the Church.

Are we not expected to meet our own Church obligations? The collections go out to meet the demands of the Church, as having been raised by the Church. If gotten by entertainments, it is gotten mostly from outsiders, and often from the very worldly class of people who do not even know for what purpose it is to be used. How can we expect God's blessing to go with money gotten in this way? We may succeed in getting the amount desired, but neither the giver nor receiver has been blessed. Giving brings a blessing to both giver and receiver.

Entertainments nearly always end in some disagreement among those who have charge of them, doing more harm to the spiritual condition of the Church than good done with the money raised. We are commanded to "abstain from all appearances of evil."

Thus any form of giving that will foster a spirit of gambling, or that will in any way be a snare to any one, or that will encourage a selfish spirit, should not be tolerated. Benevolent giving is a means of Christian culture and, as Dr. Hopkins says, "if the cause of benevolence cannot be supported benevolently it had better not be supported at all."

In conclusion, I will say that money to carry on the work of the Church of God should be raised by voluntary offerings because it encourages us to give freely and liberally. It is the means of Christian culture and it is God's plan and commandment. The use of other means is apt to become a snare, to encourage selfishness and harden our hearts instead of filling them with love to God and His cause by teaching us to expect something in return for what we give.

Sixth.—MISS CLARA MILES.

My deluded friend argues that all money for the use of the Church of God should be raised by voluntary offering. We are forever hearing people talk about this, but we notice that they do not "practice what they preach." Why do they not go to work and build a Church and support it by voluntary offering? From what they say one would think it was as easy to do it as to talk about it. I like to see people do more work and less talking. I believe in facts, not dreams; in realities, not fancies.

Mention if you will a Church that exists without entertainments. I do not know of one. But I do know of one in which the members became a little cranky and put a stop to entertainments, fairs, and so forth, for the Church. Before then the Church was in a flourishing condition. They had an interesting Sunday-school and a good pastor. But now they have no Sunday-school, a part of the time they have no pastor. They can't keep a sexton, as there is never any money in the treasury to pay him. The members are continually fussing and quarreling because they haven't money to carry on their work. And several of the members have left and gone to other Churches where they can enjoy their religion. What caused all of this? Your voluntary offering failed here, did it not?

By having entertainments, fairs and bazaars the younger members can help to do the work. Then, again, if the Church does not have some social entertainments for its younger members, naturally they will seek enjoyment in places where their morals will probably be corrupted. Is it not our duty to keep them from going astray?

There are many members who are willing to work in entertainments, but who are unable to give anything but their services. They are willing to work for God when they have an opportunity. Should we take this opportunity from them? Would it not be robbing God?

I believe we can consecrate our services to Christ as well in Church entertainments as in any other way. Are not worldly-minded people induced to associate with Church workers in this way? By picnics, bazaars, etc., we DO NOT MEAN worldly fairs, but pleasant evenings, full of sweet intercourse. If we remove this pleasure—which we believe innocent—will we not make the young people think our religion stern and solemn rather than joyful and happy? The work that people are willing to spend on these fairs and entertainments draws the attention of the non-members of the Church to the great end for which they are working. In this way our simple means may work another reward besides the gaining of the much-needed dimes and dollars.

Fairs and entertainments should not be held in the house of God. Neither do we believe that the house of God should be used as a hall for entertainments. There are halls, also lawns, that can be rented. These can be gotten without any trouble. Why did Christ overthrow the money changers? Was it because they were making money for the Church? NO. They had no such an object, but they were working for self aggrandizement. THIS ARGUMENT IS AN EXPLODED IDEA.

If this work is wrong, why is it that the leading society in the Methodist Church—the Epworth League—should place one-third of its members on the social department? By so doing is it that they consecrate one-third of their work to Satan?

How is the Church going to be carpeted, the parsonage furnished, if not by entertainments? If the ladies of the Church are anxious to work for God, and want to show their zeal, you say they are working for Satan. FAR FROM IT. Satan never enters into it. Their zeal is purely for the cause of Christ. Some people are gifted in this way, and they offer to their Master the best they have to offer—their talent, their time and their industries. I think the people who show that they are interested in God's cause by working for Him will receive as rich a reward AS THOSE WHO ARE CONSTANTLY TALKING ONLY OF THE VOLUNTARY OFFERING.

Why is it any more harm for a Church as a whole to make money than for an individual? Does not a man have to work for the money that he gives to the Church? Would you say he was working for the evil one?

How are we going to keep money in the treasury? You will say the societies of the Church will do this work. But all of the Churches do not have these societies, as they should; what are they going to do? And these societies which you say that do this work have entertainments to help to carry on their work. I believe in having work in which all of the members can take a part. Can't we be sociable? Where there are no entertainments the members become drowsy; they need waking up and pushing forward.

Why is it that so many of our "big" city Churches have entertainments. Is it because they are poor? Is it because their members are dead? Is it because their pastors have no views of right and wrong? By no means. Have not these Churches men of wealth and intellect? Men who are wide awake in Church work? Men who are doing their duty in every respect? Would entertainments be allowed for any other reason than because they are right in the sight of God? If they are wrong I cannot believe that the Christian men and women of this land would encourage them as they do.

Judging from what my opponent has said, the Church which she attends raises its money by voluntary offering. Will she tell us what is to be done when there are a "set" of members who will not make voluntary offerings? If voluntary offerings are depended upon you will find that about one-third of the members are the only ones who will make the offerings.

If the people of your Church today raise their money by voluntary offering, why don't they respond to the Twentieth Century Fund? Why do they not do away with the committee and let the people MAKE their voluntary offering? This would save both time and trouble. As yet few seem to be responding to this cause. We have many men in the Church of both wealth and intellect; why do not they respond to this cause? Perhaps they need a little begging.

If it is true that when Solomon built the temple to the Lord, the Jews brought gifts to build it, it is also true that it was built "without the sound of the hammer." Can you imagine a temple being built in that way in this age? Yet one could be built as easily "without sound of the hammer" as by voluntary offering. We live under a new dispensation. Man has now an intelligent and inquiring to give to do good, they do not wish to give blindly as formerly. Now, if one of you pastors present tries to build a temple to the Lord, and depends on the voluntary offerings of the people, what would be the result? Why the offerings would not be sufficient to put the sills under the floor or to haul the sand to make the mortar.

In my short life an instance has occurred which shows that no dependence can be put in voluntary offering at the present age. There was a debt to be paid off which had been in hand some time. The Church was then in need of more money. A good voluntary offering brother came to me and said: "Can't you ladies get up an entertainment and help us out. We will never raise the money in this way."

I have also known of a few instances when collections were taken up for foreign and home missions, worn-out preachers, widows and orphans in which the voluntary offerings were few and far between. The preacher stood up, wiped the perspiration off his face, and a whew——! (My friends, the most tiresome work I ever had to do was to take up collection). This was the time for those who advocate voluntary offerings to "show their colors." If they had done this the preacher could have left his handkerchief at home. These collections end up in a "begging," yet you call them a FREE-WILL offering.

The Blackstone Female Institute is an institution of the Church. If the people "practiced what they preached" we would have a Students' Loan Fund, a large endowment, and a new wing to accommodate our patronage.

When all of the money needed for the work of the Church is supplied by voluntary offerings we will no longer encourage Church entertainments. But as long as the people preach and refuse to practice what they are so energetic in preaching their duties and responsibilities have to be undertaken by others; their deficiencies made up by means of harmless and helpful entertainments, fairs and the like.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian School for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

No man is a man until he has given himself up to serve. The greatest are those who serve.—Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Christianity.

Christianity as a system of truth can have no effective existence without the personal Christ.—Rev. A. A. Rice, Universalist, Los Angeles.

How to Lessen Poverty.

Christianize men and fill them with the practical ethics of the gospel, and poverty will largely disappear.—Rev. T. J. Villers, Baptist, Indianapolis.

Christ's Example.

Just so far as men try to emulate the example of Christ and to follow his teachings, just so far does Christianity advance.—Rev. F. M. Bristol, Methodist, Washington.

Fasting.

Fasting means not alone the abstinence from food, but from our desires and passions, from our sins and our willfulness.—Rev. John T. Cottle, Catholic, San Francisco.

Inspiration.

Inspiration is truth, and the inspiration of the great author is to be measured by the degree of the moral truth he tells.—Rev. William Rader, Congregationalist, San Francisco.

The Soldier's Stainless Crest.

The stainless crest is that which belongs to the soldier of ideas, the warrior for truth, the hero of life, and his triumph is the triumph of the cross, the conquest of Calvary.—Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Episcopal, Chicago.

Acceptance of Christianity.

Without the acceptance of Christianity no man can reciprocate the love of God to that degree of which he is capable in this world nor in the world to come; neither can he attain to the fullness of his true mission in this world.—W. W. Hopkins, Christian Evangelist, St. Louis.

Power of Christian Science.

A heart touched and hallowed by one chord of Christian science can accomplish the full scale, but this heart must be honest and in earnest and never weary in struggling to be perfect—to reflect the divine life, truth and love.—Rev. Mary Baker G. Eddy, Christian Scientist, Concord, N. H.

Evolution of the Bible.

The new inspiration that will proceed from the Bible as a natural growth will be better than the old fear it inspired as the awful work of God. The new thought of God that is coming to possess all thoughtful minds in our time makes all the world seem divine with his indwelling, makes all truth sacred, each truth a work of God and all pure love holy. And so not in one book, but in all, we find divine and holy works and see God's laws written in the stars of heaven and in the blossoms on the hillside, the crystals of the snow and in the souls of men.—Rev. David Utter, Denver.

GERMANS OR SERMONS—STATE OR CHURCH SCHOOLS?

This is the commencement season, and the schools and colleges are pouring out their students to go as streams of influence to the different sections of the State. What will they carry back with them? What new thought, what lofty purpose, what inspiration have they received from their stay at college for the last nine months? This is the important question, and the value of a college to a community depends upon the answer given to it. Perhaps nothing shows more clearly the purpose of an institution than its closing exercises. The speeches of the students, the short talks of the Faculty, and the character of the pleasures indulged in tell with no uncertain sound what will be the general influence of the students upon the life of their own home neighborhoods. What they delight in at college they will delight in at home, and they will strive to do at home what they enjoyed at school. I have been noticing with much interest the programmes of several of our colleges, and give a few, upon which some comments are made further on.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.

Sunday, June 11—11 a. m.—Baccalaureate sermon; 8 p. m.—Address before Young Men's Christian Association.

Monday, June 12—9 a. m.—Annual meeting of the Board of Visitors; 10 a. m.—Address before the Washington and Jefferson literary societies; 11 a. m.—MORNING GERMAN OF THE UNIVERSITY GERMAN CLUB; 8 p. m.—Joint final celebration of the literary societies; 11 p. m.—T. I. L. K. A. GERMAN.

Tuesday, June 13—10 a. m.—Address before the faculty; 12 m.—Annual meeting of the Society of Alumni; 8 p. m.—Reception to the Alumni; 11 p. m.—EVENING GERMAN OF THE UNIVERSITY GERMAN CLUB.

Wednesday, June 14—10 a. m.—Address before the Society of Alumni; 8 p. m.—Awarding diplomas, conferring degrees, closing exercises of the session; 11 p. m.—FINAL BALL OF THE UNIVERSITY GERMAN CLUB.

VIRGINIA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

The programme of this institution shows a German on Friday, preceding the Baccalaureate Sermon, a German on Monday morning at 8:30, as soon after Sunday as possible, a German on Tuesday night, and Final Balls on Wednesday night. (At this school there is a German on every day of the commencement except Sundays and as if to make up for the necessity of suspending that day, the one on Monday begun at 8:30 in the morning.)

VIRGINIA MILITARY INSTITUTE.

From the Richmond Times of Friday June 16th, the following is taken:

The regular programme for the finals of the Virginia Military Institute has not as yet been announced, but the cadets have already arranged for their usual dances and gayeties.

The following is a brief list of the dances: Friday evening, 9:30 p. m., Minstrel hop; Saturday evening, 9:30 p. m., Literary societies celebration; Monday evening, 8:30 p. m., Gymnasium exhibition (at Opera House); 10 p. m., Hop; Tuesday evening, 10 p. m., Final german; Wednesday evening, 10 p. m., Alumni banquet; Thursday evening, 11 p. m., Final Ball.

RANDOLPH-MACON.

June 11th.—Annual sermon before the College by Rev. J. T. Mastin, of Richmond, Va.

June 13th.—9 A. M. Annual meeting of the Board of Trustees.

June 14th.—12 M.—Address before the Alumni Society by Rev. G. W. Dyer, of Chicago, Ill.

Contest for the Sutherlin prize for oratory.

8 P. M.—Class-Day.

June 15th.—11 A. M.—Address by Rev. F. M. Bristol, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

Degrees conferred on A. B. and A. M. graduates.

8 P. M.—Joint celebration by the Washington and Franklin Societies.

RICHMOND COLLEGE.

Sunday June 11th—Baccalaureate Sermon.

Monday, June 12th, 8 p. m.—Celebration of Literary Societies.

Tuesday, June 13th, 8 p. m.—Class Night.

Wednesday, June 14th—Alumni Banquet.

Thursday, June 15th—Address.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

Sunday, June 11th—Baccalaureate Sermon.

Monday, June 12th, 8 p. m.—Celebration of Union Literary Society.

Tuesday, June 13th—Address before Society of Alumni.

Tuesday Night—Address before Philanthropic Society.

Wednesday, June 13th—Commencement Day.

Wednesday Night—Senior Celebration.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

Friday, June 16th, 8 p. m.—Contest for the R. A. Young medal in oratory.

Saturday, 17th, 10 p. m.—Students entertainment on the lawn of the Vanderbilt Woman's Club.

Sunday, 18th, 11 a. m.—Annual Baccalaureate Sermon by Rev. James W. Lee, D. D., of St. Louis.

Monday, 19th, 9 a. m.—Board of Trust meets in annual session; 10 a. m.—Alumni Association meets; and at 8 p. m., the annual alumni address by Prof. Mims, of Trinity College, N. C.; poem by Mr. Allen G. Hall, of Nashville.

Tuesday, 20th, 8 p. m.—Annual Literary Address by Hon. J. P. Dolliver, of Iowa.

Wednesday, 21st, 10 a. m.—Final Commencement Exercises.

Why the great difference in these programmes. How is it that the first three differ so widely from the others? It is because the first three of the above programmes are all those of State schools. They are given large appropriations year after year by the Legislature. These appropriations are raised by taxes. The taxes are mostly paid by the Christian people of the State, a large proportion of whom are members of churches which declare that Germans, Balls, etc., belong to the world, the flesh, and the devil, and not to the children of God. But to judge from these programmes the Germans and Balls are the most important things connected with the Commencements. Surely these things must be made much of in the college life, or they would not have such a prominent place given to them in the closing exercises.

The other four institutions do not belong to the State, but are Christian schools, and in the programmes no Germans or Balls are found. The exercises are of a character befitting the ideals of lofty young manhood. The students are not sent home with the idea that to know how to execute the figures of the german is one of the important things of life.

Parents must look carefully at these facts. Do they want their children to come home to lead germans? If so they can learn how to do so at the State schools. If, however, they believe in the Discipline of the Methodist Church, and, above all, if they believe that "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eye, and the pride of life," which "are not of the Father, but of the world" are all cultivated by the fleshly embraces of the german, then they will prefer to keep their children at home rather than to send them to State institutions where such programmes as given above are officially advertised. Will they choose the school where the german is placed side by side or even ahead of the sermon, or will they send where the german is banished and the sermon is honored? The decision of this question will settle the eternal destiny of many lives.

Send your children to your own Church schools. Do not send them to worldly State institutions.

All persons who owe back subscriptions can pay up all back dues, and have the RECORDER till January 1st, 1900, by sending $1.00 Now.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FOR TROUBLED HEARTS.

(BY REV. R. H. BENNETT.)

Many a faint heart craves to see the wisdom and love of delayed answers to prayers. "Hope deferred makes the heart sick," but God is the cure for sick hearts. No fervent prayer of faith from an honest heart is ever unanswered, "but before they call I will answer and while they are yet speaking I will hear." God answers then every such prayer instantaneously, but He does not always reveal to us at once that the prayer is answered, and sometimes we must wait and trust many years for the coming of the answer.

Waiting outside the door is bitter. There is anguish of soul that knows no description in a heaven of brass overhead and an earth of iron underneath. Continued silence on our Father's part to our cries wrings the heart with an agony untold. But blessed the man whom the Lord sends through such a furnace, and thrice blessed he who trusts and rejoices and still prays and labors on. He that has not uttered such cries as these knows little of life in the fullness of its bitter-sweet:

"How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord? Forever? How long wilt thou hide thy face from me? How long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? How long shall mine enemy be exalted over me? I am weary of my crying; my throat is dried; mine eyes fail while I wait for my God." "Will the Lord cast off forever? And will he be favorable no more? Is His mercy clean gone forever? Doth His promise fail forever? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath He in anger shut up His tender mercies? O, Lord, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! Even cry out unto thee of violence and thou wilt not save!"

But how this delicious honey from the rock destroys the gall:

"And I said this in my infirmity: but I will remember the years of the right hand of the most High. I will remember the works of the Lord; surely I will remember thy wonders as of old. I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings. Thy way, O Lord, is in the sanctuary. Who is so great a God as our God. But Zion said: The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold! I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me. For this is as the waters of Noah unto me; for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee. For the mountains shall depart and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that has mercy on thee. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come; it will not be too late. Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are His. And let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity."

Joseph's prayers met with only a withering silence through many years of treachery, slavery, devilish slander and false imprisonment. No doubt the tempter often tried his faith and sifted his soul by asking what had become of the visions of the bowing sheaves and the obseant luminaries. But vindication and honor came at last, and more than repaid him for the years of disgrace and sorrow.

A long interval elapsed between David's anointing as king by the Lord God and his coronation by the nation. They were bitter years to him, when, though consciously the Lord's anointed, he fled before his enemies like a partridge hunted on the mountains. But preferment and honor and deliverance came at last, and all the sweeter was the crown for the cross which had preceded.

All night long, we are told, Jesus, unseen, watched his disciples from the mountain as they toiled and cried to Him in that furious and inky tempest on the lake, they expecting no doubt that every moment would be their last. But although he heard their cries it was not until nearly daybreak that He came unto them. But what a deliverance and a peace it was when He did appear!

When that broken-hearted message from His dearest earthly friends came to Him to come quickly and save him whom He loved, Jesus purposely waited two whole days and let Lazarus die and left the sisters to weep in their despair and loneliness. But neither had Mary nor Martha, nor have our aching hearts any feeling but one of delight for that delay, since it gives us those blessed words from the Master's lips,—"I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me shall never die."

Let us recall the strange instance where the mother of Canaan came to the compassionate Saviour and in an agony of tears besought Him to heal her daughter, grievously vexed with a devil. "He answered her not a word." And at last when He did speak, after her repeated cries, likened her to a dog, and said He was sent to help the house of Israel and not her people. But that blessed heart was overflowing with the tenderest sympathy to her all the while and His delay was only to try her faith and sound its depths.

As has been said, no answer from God is an answer and it speaks thus: "Pray on, go on, cry on, for the Lord holdeth His door fast bolted, not to keep you out but that you may knock and it shall be opened."

We are not ready to receive many blessings for which we pray, and which our Father intends to give us whenever He sees we can bear them with humility. James Caughy, the great revivalist, to whom God revealed an impression at prayer that He would send him to England and give him many, many souls, resolved that he would be as humble and as broken-hearted before God when thousands were saved as when none were converted.

Rev. P. B. Power says: "Let us remember that God gives liberal interest for every year that He keeps our prayers unanswered, and that what becomes us is to wait at His footstool and not to hurry His arrangements. The most luscious fruits are those which are longest in maturing; the richest blessings are often those which take longest in coming. An unripe blessing may prove sour to the teeth and unhealthful when partaken of. Impatience is almost always accompanied by loss."

David was speaking out of the depth of a heart that had "tasted and seen" when he said: "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thy heart; wait, I say, on the Lord."

THE CONFERENCE COLLECTIONS.

(BY REV. G. E. B. SMITH.)

Perhaps the most trying and difficult duty imposed upon the pastor is one which is least appreciated by his charge. His people can sympathize with him in his revival meetings and sometimes lend their prayers to his support in many other relations of Church effort, but when it comes to taking the benevolent collections, ordered by the Annual Conference, he stands almost entirely alone so far as human sympathy is concerned. The ambition of a great many Church people seems to be thoroughly satisfied when the pastor's salary and other expenses incident to home are paid, while the obligation assumed by each person consequent upon his admission into the Church, to support the institutions abroad in the land, as well as those at home, is shamefully and almost totally disregarded. The most illiterate and uninformed citizen of the Commonwealth seems to appreciate the necessity for a tax from the State in order that the numberless institutions for the general interest of the people shall be maintained, and yet these Christians, elevated to the prominent and pious seat of stewardship in the Church, surrounded by the manifold blessings and comforts of life, fail to justify the liberty which the Annual Conference takes in requiring them to aid in spreading the Gospel throughout the world.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS AGAIN.

DEAR RECORDER:—Apropos of the very creditable debate of the young ladies of the Blackstone Female Institute on the raising of all money by voluntary gifts, published in your last week's issue, I send the following extracts from a tract, "The Church," by Rev. F. W. Sandford, Shiloh, Me. They are collected as you notice from secular as well as from religious papers. A poem from the same tract is added.

Yours truly,

R. H. BENNETT.

SKIRT DANCE AT CHURCH.

The "Christian World" of Dec. 3rd, as an illustration showing the lengths to which the modern Church will sometimes go in "Raising the Wind," tells its readers of "A flaming poster, which is now adorning the walls of Gateshead, announcing a Grand Fancy Market and Carnival in connection with the Holy Trinity Church. The entertainments are to include 'Skirt dancing,' 'Side-splitting competition for ladies and gentlemen,' and a 'Grand Comic Operetta.' One wonders what the opening ceremony, to be conducted by a Reverend vicar, will be like. The suggested combination of music hall and prayer book will surely be the funniest part of this very funny experience."—"Toronto Telegram."

On the same day the above paragraph appeared, the Toronto "Globe" published a leading article on CHURCH AMUSEMENTS.

"The place of cold ham in the Christian system seems to have been completely and unfortunately overlooked by New Testament writers. The omission, however, is being remedied by the modern Church in a thorough and practical manner. We venture this assertion on the authority of Dr. W. B. Hale, who has for some time made a study of the subject.

"He gives selections from a year's record of more than 500 of these occasions. ALL DENOMINATIONS, PROTESTANT and Catholic, are included and the facts are presented without the slightest reserve. It appears that some of the Christian Churches of the United States, in their effort to advance the cause of pure and undefiled religion, have made use of the following blessed and apostolic agencies. Among comedies: Aunt Jemima's Album, The Mystic Midgets, Mrs. Jarely's Waxworks, rejuvenescent with Trilby characters, The Man Who Tickled His Wife to Death, Woodcock's Little Game, Poor Pillicaddy, A Shakespearian carnival, in which the reverend priest appeared as Hamlet, and Julius Caesar led the march in the closing dance: Down by the Sea, a baby rattle and spoon drill; Just Us Girls; the Peak Sisters, who sang "Do You Know the Mouth of Man?" in which kissing is referred to ninety times. For general entertainment we select: A wish-bone party, new woman's social, progressive whist party, a grand barbecue, New Year's Dance, mock trials, poker parties, fancy dress drills, tambourine drills, dude drill, moral dime show, Mother Goose market, athletic exhibitions, (with a real prize fighter fresh from court, for brutal assault, as chief drawing card), Chew Glew sisters in song and dance specialties, eight silver dollars offered of an evening to the discerning mind able to unravel the pastor's text, printed into choicest "Pi;" and last but not least, an historic Trilby party, in which YOUNG LADIES DISPLAYED FROM BEHIND A CURTAIN RAISED TO A SUFFICIENT HEIGHT, THEIR BARE FEET, AND MEN IN FRONT BID FOR THE PRIVILEGE OF TAKING THE ANKLES THAT PARTICULARLY STRUCK THEIR FANCY OUT TO SUPPER.

"By simply cataloguing this puerile and disgusting list for the calm contemplation of the public, Dr. Hale has rendered a great service to the Church. No man of the slightest moral earnest ness or regard for the decencies of life can read this recital with other than feelings of deepest shame and sorrow. When we remember the part played by the Christian Church in history—her martyrdom, her learning, her leadership, her uplifting and divine influence upon society; when we think of the solemn and dread tragedy that is unfolding in the world today, when we call to mind the fact that in the principles and forces and life that have made the Church, and given her a meaning and message, is revealed the secret of all human progress, and then put over against all this the inanities and imbecilities revealed in Dr. Hale's record, it is almost enough to turn men into pessimists and atheists."

When editors of the secular newspapers become thus disgusted it is about time that DECENT Christians separate themselves from such shocking profanity even if they have to worship God in "the Church that is in their house."

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

The Church and the World walked far apart

On the changing shore of time;
The world was singing a giddy song,
And the Church a hymn sublime.

"Come give me your hand," cried the Merry World,

"And walk with me this way,"
But the good Church hid her snowy hand,
And solemnly answered, "Nay,

"I will not give you my hand at all,
And I will not walk with you;
Your way is the way of eternal death,
And your words are all untrue."

"Nay, walk with me but a little space,"
Said the World with a kindly air;
"The road I walk is a pleasant road;
And the sun shines always there;

"Your way is narrow, and thorny, and rough,
While mine is flowery and smooth;
Your lot is sad with reproach and toil,
But in circles of joy I move.

"My way, you can see, is a broad, fair one,
And my gate is high and wide;
There is room enough for you and for me,
To travel side by side."

Half shyly the Church approached the World,
And gave him her hand of snow;
And the false World gasped it, and walked along,
Saying in accents low:

"Your dress is too simple to please my taste,
I have gold and pearls to wear;
Rich velvets and silks for your graceful form,
And diamonds to deck your hair."

The Church looked down at her plain, white robes,
And then at the dazzling World,
And blushed as she saw his handsome lip,
With a smile contemptuous curled.

"I will change my dress for a costlier one,"
Said the Church with a smile of grace;
Then the pure white garments drifted away,
And the World gave in their place,

Satins, and silks, and seal skins rare,
And roses and gems and pearls;

hair,
Crisped in a thousand curls.
"Your house is too plain," said the proud old World,
"I'll build you one like mine,
With kitchen for feasting, and parlor for play,
And furniture never so fine."

So he built her a costly and beautiful house—

Splendid it was to behold;
Her sons and her daughters met frequently there,
Shining in purple and gold.

And fair and festival—frolics untold,
Were held in the place of prayer.
And maidens, bewitching as sirens of old,
With worldly graces rare,

Invented the very cunningest tricks,
Untrammelled by gospel or laws,
To beguile, and amuse and win from the World,
Some help for the righteous cause.

The Angel of Mercy flew over the Church,
And whispered, "I know thy sin;"
Then the Church looked sad and anxiously longed
To gather the children in;

But some were off at the midnight ball
And some at the euchre, or play;
And some were drinking in gay saloons,
As she quietly went her way,

Then the sly World gallantly said to her
"Your children mean no harm, Merely indulging in innocent sports;"
So she leaned on his proffered arm,

And smiled, and chatted, and gathered flowers,
As she walked along with the World;
While millions and millions of precious souls,
To the horrible pit were hurled!

"Your preachers were all too old and plain,"
Said the gay World with a sneer;
"They frighten my children with dreadful tales,
Which I do not like them to hear.

"They talk of Judgment, a coming Lord,
And the horrors of endless night:
They warn of a place that should not be mentioned to ears polite!

I will send you some of a better stamp,
Modern, and brilliant, and fast,
Who will show how men may live as they list,
And go to heaven at last.

"The Father is merciful, just, and good,
Loving, and tender, and kind;
Do you think He would take one child to heaven,
And leave another behind?

"Go train your teachers up to the times,
Adopt the stylish way!
We all want entertainment fine,
And only that will pay."

So she called for pleasing and gay divines,
Gifted, and great, and learned,
And the plain old men, that preached the Cross,
Were out of her pulpits turned.

Then Mammon came in and supported the Church,
Renting a prominent pew;
And preaching, and singing, and floral display,
Proclaimed a period new.

Then Mammon came in and supported the Church,
Renting a prominent pew;
And preaching, and singing, and floral display,
Proclaimed a period new.

Then Mammon came in and supported the Church,
Renting a prominent pew;
And preaching, and singing, and floral display,
Proclaimed a period new.

the World,
"Far more than you ought to do;
Though the poor need shelter, food and clothes,
Why should it trouble you?
"And afar to the heathen in foreign lands,
Your thoughts need never roam;
The Father of Mercies will care for them.

Let charity begin at home.
"Go take your money and buy rich robes,
And horses and carriages fine;
And pearls, and jewels, and dainty food,
And the rarest and costliest wine.

A Great Combine Capitalized at Millions

put of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

HERE IS THE PLAN A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideals are: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price."
—Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."
—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine."
—Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work."
—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it."
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none."
—Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate."
—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus."
—The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Naphtali Lucecock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning."
—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone. The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long. Address orders and make remittances payable to

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

DR. MATTHEWS' ADDRESS.

Dr. Mathews selected for his text II Corinthians 4:6 and said in part:

"Young ladies of the graduating class, you are now about to face the problem of human life, a problem difficult to solve. You should face this life with three facts to guide you. First, life is a thing to be revered; second, as a kingdom to be ruled; third, as a training school for eternity. Ignorance confines the soul to very imperfect guides in life. The purpose of Christianity is twofold, to develop growth in knowledge, and skill in using it. Mental and spiritual expansion is God's idea for the accomplishment of highest achievement. A merely literary and scientific education do not meet the needs of the soul; a Christian education does, and that guarantees the nation's purity.

"Action is thought unfolding itself. You will need moral courage in the new century upon which you will soon enter. Only Christianity can bridge the chasms between man and God. This is a theme with which you must deal if you would secure the best things of life. The Latins had a word of large import—"apprehendo"—which means to lay hold of with the understanding. We must have a clear view of God's method of saving our race. We are here today to take a glimpse of this vast plan. God loves vastness—dwells amidst vastness, but does not demand of us more than we can master.

"He has given us a revelation, the word means the rolling back of a veil or curtain. The text is a revelation under the figure of light. The Saviour claims to be the light of the world. They thought him a madman and a blasphemer.

"There is a simple method with which we may deal with the perplexing enigmas which spring up in our paths. When I meet one of these I lay it aside as I do a bone when eating fish. Why choke on a bone when there is an abundance of meat?

"Many things will be easily accounted for when science discovers new laws. Man is said to possess about forty-three faculties, but has only risen to the use of a few. Wise men have never gone beyond eighteen. The masses from five to eight. When men grow until they can use other faculties, then our minds will sweep far beyond any present attainment. Many persons begin to study Christianity by grappling knotty problems at once. A boy just entering school is not put into algebra the first day, but rather on the multiplication table. In the text, to make the action and revelation of God more forceful, the apostle refers to the chaotic condition of the world anterior to its present organized form. The world, science says, was in a state of confusion and terror—a time when a thunderstorm lasted for a hundred years. Christ became the medium through whom God revealed His mercy and saving knowledge to the race. This through a person—God incarnate—in flesh! This is the enigma of all enigmas. While I may not fathom it, nothing else so inspires hope in the human soul. If you put Christ aside, then all my conceptions of God frighten me. To the intellect, He is so clothed with majesty and so environed with power, and so spotless in His purity as to overwhelm my mind with awe. The holy book tells me "God out of Christ is a consuming fire." But when one looks into the face of Christ we behold the love of God. He who lingers for a time over this expression "to give the light," will find a vast realm of facts opening up before the mind. He will emigrate out of some of his old ideas and fears into regions of untold possibility. We stand related to truth as the Pilgrim Fathers stood related to North America when they touched Plymouth Rock. They stood only on the margin of a continent. The old philosopher who stood on the shore of the Indian Ocean, saw it stretching, as he thought, into space, unfathomable and immeasurable, and called it the sea! The sea! Soul and sea mean the same. We look into God's plans and find them too deep for human measurement, but God has given us to see far enough to understand His love and mercy. This carries us into the region of dogmatics. Therefore, I am bold to say, that I take my religion as I take my science, my alphabet, or as I take my mother's milk—dogmatically.

"Let it be understood clearly that Christianity is a system of supernatural communication. God comes down to the level of the lowest. Why cannot an infinite being communicate with man, even without articulation? We can communicate with creatures below us. A horse cannot understand your articulation, but can understand your tones. Your pet dog will come with passionate joy in response to your tender tones. But you say you can only reach truths through the five senses. They are valuable, but they do not reveal thought—love; they do not reveal to us the chemistry of a tear.

"In the text we learn that most valuable fact that Christ is the revealer of God. All we know of salvation comes through Jesus Christ. What emanates from Christ is the knowledge of the glory of God. One of the most difficult things is to convey to men's minds all that God proposes to do for humanity. There is one word which carries with it a wealth of meaning to the believing heart. It speaks volumes to such, it is the word atonement. The old way of syllabing it gives us its truer meaning, "at-one-ment." The part taken by Christ brought about the reunion of man and God. But no one word could express the meaning of this work of Christ in our behalf. When the vocabulary of earth contained but few words, figures and customs were resorted to for the purpose of enlightening the mind. There was one custom which antedated the coming of the Saviour, and one to which he alluded in His great anguish of soul in Gethsemane. Jesus prayed, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." When we understand his allusion how it stirs human hearts! In the ancient times they had a somewhat peculiar way of disposing of criminals. These wrongdoers were kept in confinement until a day of general execution was appointed. These men were brought out and placed in line before the executioner. The most guilty man was placed at the head of the line. The officer carried the cup of poison to the man at the head of the line, who took the vessel and drank until ordered to pass it down. If the first one drank the contents all below him went free. Jesus Christ, the second Adam, placed Himself at the head of the human race; took man's place, as our elder brother; and, standing there, a cup was placed to His lips, and while drinking, the anguish was so great that He prayed, "Father, if it be possible to save man without drinking it to the dregs, let the cup pass from me. Nevertheless, thy will be done! "All below Him may go free on condition of repentance and faith. He who fastens his faith on Christ's tragedy is forever safe."

While Dr. Mathews had his notes before him, he scarcely referred to them, and held the attention of his audience throughout the entire sermon, which was enriched with a number of anecdotes, used as illustrations. At times his love of humor would bring a smile upon the faces of his hearers, who were one moment deeply touched with the pathos of his remarks, and the next entertained with the brightness of his speedy wit.—"News."

THE ALUMNAE.

Miss Emma Edith Cheatham, A. M. of '96, made the opening address, setting forth the nature of the organization and its high ideals for usefulness, particularly in connection with the cause of education.

Miss Eloise Richardson, A. B. '98, read a paper on the "Ethical Teachings of Komola," which proved to be a scholarly analysis of the great philosophical novelist's masterpiece.

The address of the evening was made by Miss Martha McGavock, A. B. '97, professor of Mathematics in the Blackstone Institute. Her subject was "Women and the Twentieth Century." Under the guise of a light and playful style, she handled in a masterly manner the problems of womanhood from the trivial cares of the school girl to the dignified duties of the home maker and the world reformer. She held the undivided attention of her critical audience for forty minutes.

Miss Lily Egbert, A. B. '98, read a charming poem, entitled "The Three Angels," and Miss Blanche Messick and the Glee Club furnished the music for the occasion.

COMMENCEMENT DAY.

The address was delivered by Mr. Walter Page, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, and an alumnus of Randolph-Macon College. The "News" says this was one of the most scholarly and masterly efforts ever made in Lynchburg.

After the address the following diplomas were conferred:

English—Meta Glass, Francis Shelton Hundley.

Latin—Daisy Bell, Mary S. Eell, Salie O. Blackwell, Ethel Hudson, Sadie Jernigan, Eliza N. Poyner.

Mathematics—Cornelia Poindexter.

History—Ethel Howell, Scott Ogden.

French—Mary Randolph Gibbs, Alice Littleton.

German—Blanch Cheatham, Helen Latane.

Psychology and Pedagogy—Alice Littleton.

THE JUNIOR RECORDER.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., JUNE 15, 1899.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XIII, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 25.

Text of the Lesson, a Comprehensive Quarterly Review—Golden Text, I Tim. i, 15—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

LESSON I.—The Raising of Lazarus (John xi, 32-45). Golden text, John xi, 25, "I am the resurrection and the life." All that is done to or through the people of God is for the glory of God. Even sickness and death may be for His glory and for the good of His children. When He seems not to hear, we must believe that He has heard and will see to it in His time and way, which are always the very best. Though He seems utterly to neglect us and even to allow great sorrows to come to us, we must believe that He loves us just the same.

LESSON II.—The Anointing in Bethany (John xii, 1-11). Golden Text, Mark xiv, 8, "She hath done what she could." True worship is costly. David would not offer burnt offerings unto the Lord of that which cost Him nothing (II Sam xxiv, 24). There is no worship in what we can give without feeling it. It is possible to serve without being cumbered, to be rid of care and anxiety (Phil. iv, 6).

LESSON III.—Jesus Teaching Humility (John xiii, 1-17). Golden Text, John xiii, 15, "I have given you an example." The people of this world are here for themselves, the people of God are here for Him that He may be glorified in them. While by the work of Christ we have eternal redemption, His life is to us an example of how we should live here to the glory of God. He made Himself of no reputation, took upon Him the form of a servant and humbled Himself unto death.

LESSON IV.—Jesus, the Way, and the Truth, and the Life (John xiv, 1-14). Golden Text, John xiv, 6, "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth and the life." The words and works of Christ were all spoken and wrought by the Father through Him. The Father dwelling in Him did it all. Both Father, Son and Spirit will dwell in us, make these bodies their mansions and accomplish all their pleasure in words and works in us to the glory of God (verses 17, 23, 26). It is the Lord's pleasure that in all our daily life, while troubles may assail, we should not have troubled hearts, but have His peace ever possessing us (verses 1, 27, with chapters 16-33).

LESSON V.—The Comforter Promised (John xiv, 15-27). Golden Text, John xiv, 16, "I will pray the Father and He shall give you another comforter." What Jesus was to His disciples, when personally present with them, He desires the Holy Spirit to be to every believer, our Teacher, our Guide, our Remembrancer, our Comforter, our ever present friend, ever telling us of Jesus, and showing us things to come, and through us convincing the world of sin and righteousness and judgment.

LESSON VI.—The Vine and the Branches (John xv, 1-11). Golden Text, John xv, 5, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." The great object in all our union with Christ is that we should bear much fruit to the glory of God. The fruit is mentioned in Gal. v, 22, as love, joy, peace, etc. There may be much work and little fruit, for the work may be our work and not His. There may also be seemingly little work, but a great deal of love. Faith and meekness and patience may not be manifest in great works as much as in the ordinary routine of life. It does not become us to be ever longing to do some great thing, but cheerfully to do or bear what comes to us. The vine bears the fruit through the branches, so Christ in us will quietly do all. It is for us just to abide in His love.

LESSON VII.—Christ Betrayed and Arrested (John xviii, 1-14). Golden Text, Isa. liii, 3, "He is despised and rejected of men." He came unto His own and His own received Him not; all His disciples, even the innermost circle, forsook Him and fled; and one of their number sold Him for 30 pieces of silver. Of Him it seems to be written, "Mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me" (Ps. xli, 9).

LESSON VIII.—Christ Before the High Priest (John xviii, 15-27). Golden Text, John i, 11, "He came unto His own and His own received Him not." Our great High Priest of the order of Melchisedec stood before the high priest of the house of Aaron and submitted to be questioned by him, and mocked by him, and rudely and cruelly treated, bound as a criminal, treated worse than a criminal, oppressed and afflicted, yet He opened not His mouth (Isa. liii, 7).

LESSON IX.—Christ Before Pilate (John xviii, 28-40). Golden Text, John xix, 4, "I find no fault in Him." Pilate repeatedly testified that he found no fault in Him. Pilate's wife entreated her husband to do nothing against that just man. Judas Iscariot said He was innocent, and yet Pilate scourged Him and ordered Him to be crucified. How can a follower of Christ expect just treatment in a world that so ill treated Him?

LESSON X.—Christ Crucified (John xix, 17-30). Golden Text, Gal. ii, 20, "The Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." The Lamb of God, who was seen by faith in the coats of skins (Gen. iii, 21), in the Passover of Ex. xii, and in every offering, whether burnt, meat, peace, sin or trespass offering, fulfilled every type and every word that was ever written concerning His sufferings, and died, the just for the unjust, bearing our sins in His own body on the cross. The sacrifice by which Abel and all after him entered heaven was now offered. How much those in heaven were interested in it we may imagine from the fact that it was the one thing Moses and Elijah talked of when with Him on the mount of transfiguration.

LESSON XI.—Christ Risen (John xx, 11-20). Golden Text, I Cor. xv, 15-20, "Now is Christ risen from the dead." Without this all else would have been in vain. His life, His sufferings, His death could have brought eternal life to no one. Preaching, faith, baptism, ordinances are all in vain if Christ is not risen. This is fully set forth in I Cor. xv. But He is risen. He is alive forevermore. He has all power. He is gathering out of the world a company of redeemed people who will reign with Him when He returns to subdue all things unto Himself and set up His kingdom here.

LESSON XII.—The New Life in Christ (Col. iii, 1-15). Golden Text, Col. iii, 15, "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts." The benefits of His death and resurrection and all the blessings which come to the believer in Christ are fully set forth in the Scriptures, but few people read the Scriptures, therefore the necessity of living epistles which can be easily read by all men (II Cor. iii, 2, 3).

'EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning June 25, "Spiritual Growth"—Text, Mark iv, 26-32.

"As if a man should cast seed into the ground and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how."

The old miracle of seed time and harvest is being again performed before our open eyes. We see the transformation of bare hillsides into verdant billows of beauty. Bare seeds are sown, and we watch the breaking ground of soil heaved with mysterious life beneath until the blade, the bloom, the fruit appear. We watch the whole process we have watched it all the year with keen eyed wonder; and we discover the power that works in all the process nor to detect the hidden worker who produces the open wonder before our sight.

Last night in a prayer meeting a young lady arose—shall we call her a girl or woman? She was on that boundary line so fascinating between the girlhood merging into sweeter mysteries of womanhood, eyes shining with new visions, lips parted with speech, ears alert for new music, heart beating with expectancy, feet pressing new thresholds of opportunity. She arose without invitation and modestly, bravely, "I wish to do all I possibly can for Jesus the coming year." That was all. But how much it meant! The seed of years of prayer, watered with prayerful tears by father and mother, watched with heart-breaking unutterable for long months, had brought to life. The springtime had come. In that life there had been no lapse into sinful dissipation and agonizing repentance, no special altar service, no opportunity, hesitancy and final clinging of will. All these are good things which need them. In her case there was no such need. In babyhood she was dedicated to God in baptism and daily prayed over, and from earliest memory the spirit life cared for as tenderly, patiently, skillfully, as the little baby was nourished and nursed. From spiritual weakness she had been developed to robust, young, healthy womanhood. In spirit she had been as carefully reared. The Bible was to her God's truth as she known, believed and practiced. Jesus was her Saviour. She belonged to Him, was an object of His constant care and assured of His protection, love and direction. Her duty and privilege were to love, trust and help Him. A process of expanding intellect and increasing powers of body and soul, until now she had the husk and showed the blade of a new existence in upper air, ready to shine.

So grows the kingdom of God in the human soul. Plant with patience, water and cultivate with diligence. Trust God that good seed in good soil shall spring by His unseen power.

HOW THE LORD WENT TO CHURCH

By JOHN FRANKLIN COWAN.

THE people went to the house of God and sat in their cushioned pews. They sat and looked each other o'er as if to confirm their views. Mis' Jenkins clad in a satin gown with point lace at the throat, Cast a critical glance at Widow Smith, her lack of style to note. "Her dress is the fashion of years gone by; her bonnet a perfect fright. Her wrap is horribly out of date, and nothing she wears sets right." Young Doctor Brown, in a nobby suit, his moustache curled at the ends, A supercilious, freezing glance on carpenter Stubbins bends. He felt disgust at his coarse red hands, despised his suit of jeans. He wished the church were more select—people of style and means. Florinda Bishop sat upright in her honored father's pew, And shot cold-blooded, freezing stares at a female comer new.

She more than half suspected that, connected with her name There'd been such talk and whispers as should bow her head with shame. How dared so vulgar an upstart profane the sacred place; Pollute her purer sisters' prayers before the throne of grace? The millionaire of the city filled his old accustomed seat, In a sense that no one else could fill—swelled with importance great. Tom Jones, one of his saw mill hands, sat just across the aisle, And with his sullen, coal-black eyes glowered askance the while. His fellows Tom had led to strike; shown base ingratitude. How could he with such impudence his presence here intrude? And Tom read his employer's glance, and clenched his brawny hand, And muttered that this soulless greed was blighting all the land. And the creature with unblushing front defied the pious prude, And thought, "how small the charity in hearts of those called good!" And the carpenter looked daggers fierce the stylish doctor's way: And vowed he'd no more come to be looked down on in that way. And Widow Smith hardened her lips and pressed her toil worn hands And murmured low, "How long, O God, shall this injustice stand?" But there was One within that church whom none of these people saw, Because to the pure in heart alone anear does the Master draw. His eye ran o'er the gathered host—but saw not what they wore; His ear inclined for prayer or praise, but heard heart mutterings sore. Within their hearts, so proud and cold He saw some spark of good, And breathed upon the feeble flame and fanned the smouldering wood. And when they prayed "Our Father, God," and sung "Glory on high," Their hearts toward each other warmed, their hate began to die. "Though out of fashion are her clothes, her heart may yet shame mine," Mis' Jenkins whispered as she saw the face with careworn lines. "Ben Stubbins' hands indeed are coarse," something to young Brown said; "They're hardened by the selfsame tools that earned the Master's bread." "Her cheeks with rouge may painted be, or flushed with guilty shame Christ cast no stone at a guiltier one, I'll pity her in His name." "Tom Jones is but a demagogue; but the strong must help the weak. We'll join our hands in Jesus' name, and together wisdom seek." "The boss knelt down by my very side at the table of Christ to-day; I haven't the heart to hate him more when he comes at me that way." "She smiled at me so lovingly, it roused my hope anew. O God! if You should welcome me would my sisters do it, too?" "I reckon 'twas only a notion of mine that the doctor had no heart; If he means to treat me like a man, I'll certainly do my part." "With all her pride and social rank, I believe there's love in her soul. May God forgive my judgment harsh: I'd forgotten the story old." And thus the spirit of Christian love across their heart-strings played, And out of the harsh discords of strife a heavenly harmony made.

BUT THERE WAS ONE WITHIN THAT CHURCH WHOM NONE OF THESE PEOPLE SAW — and withal a most energetic woman, took her stand in front, and the pastor a stand at the door, by which no man or woman was allowed to go away without being personally requested to sign.

Mrs. Selvege declared that, "were a dozen names hers, she would sign them, twice over."

But what was Mrs. Gray's surprise, upon reaching home and looking over the list, to find that neither the pastor nor his wife had signed it! So that, inasmuch as pastor Selvege's home was several miles away at a point where he had charge of another church, the paper had to be sent by mail to him, in order to get his and his wife's names, and it was several days before the precious document returned to Mrs. Gray. When it came, it was still minus Mrs. Selvege's name!

No, it was merely forgotten, which goes to show that a person may be very full of zeal for a cause, and fairly boil over with enthusiasm, and yet fail in accomplishing any definite purpose. It teaches, also, that we must never mistake enthusiasm for work or declarations for deeds.

Well, when Court convened, Mrs. Gray and a few friends were on hand, armed with an exceptionally strong remonstrance. It contained a long list of women and children's names, a somewhat briefer list of men's names, and a separate list of voters' names. There was an exhibit showing that a majority of the inhabitants of Melburne objected to the saloon; that a majority of the voters opposed it; that seven-eighths of the business men opposed it; that at least eight-tenths of the real estate of the borough was owned by anti-license men and women, and so, with this formidable showing, no doubt of its effectiveness should have prevailed. But when the judge had scrutinized the paper, he remarked, sarcastically, that that Court was not an election board, to be led by an array of voters' names, nor was it customary to attach weight to women's and children's names on a remonstrance, and as for the reasons given for a non-issuance of Patton's license, they were general, and even if specific, the charges were not properly brought, the quarter sessions being the place for that. Twelve reputable citizens of Melburne having testified that a licensed eating house was a necessity in that borough, and the court having granted a license then, it saw nothing in present developments to cause a reversal of their decision of last year. So that Jonas Patton was granted his license.

The little anti-license contingent were stupefied. They had not expected so merciless a turning down. They had expected justice, and they had not obtained it. Mrs. Gray stood in the centre of the little anxious-faced group, pale as death. Her eyes were closed and her hands were clasped. Suddenly, raising her eyes heavenward, she began to pray. And such a beautiful, such a pleading, heart-felt prayer mortal lips have seldom uttered, or ears heard. Used to strange scenes in that great room as the judges were, they were awed by the strangeness of this. They were silent and breathless; the lawyers looked on in silent astonishment; the people moved not a muscle; and the silence, broken only by the soft, pleading tones of the little woman who prayed, was awful in its impressive solemnity. The prayer was that of a Christian who had fought a good fight and had been worsted. A prayer for continued patience, greater courage, broader charity, and final victory over the hosts of sin.

No wonder Judge Blundell winced. He, a Christian, a member of Christ's church on earth, had judged unjustly. For the sake of earthly honors and emoluments he had trodden under foot the petition of these godly people, and had confirmed the right of another petitioner to deal out death and damnation to a community. But there is such a thing as retributive justice—before another twelve months, Judge Blundell lay in his grave.

By the side of Judge Blundell, that day, sat his brother judge, a man who could look across the street and see men going into a saloon, and coming out beasts; kind fathers and husbands walking in, brutal fathers and husbands staggering out; men going in with character, coming out with none they might be proud of. The judge owned the building where all this transforming process was going on. Perhaps he had a twinge or two of conscience as he listened, on the one hand, to the woman's prayer, and saw, on the other hand, men going to everlasting ruin. I do not know, and only God could tell, for his face was stolid and gave no sign.

My story (which is scarcely that at all) is nearly done. Mrs. Gray's praying did not cease in court, but was joined in by other women, and in the end the little praying band did what the remonstrance failed to do, prayed Jonas Patton out of business, and prayed him into honest work.

Milburne has no saloon at present, and is not likely soon to have one.

TALES TWICE TOLD

HOW DR. MILBURN STUDIED.

Dr. Milburn, the blind chaplain of Congress, is a wonderful example of pluck under terrible difficulties. At 5 years of age the sight of one eye went out; with the other he could still see partially. How he managed to spell his way through school and college is told by the Union Gospel News.

When he made up his mind to enter the ministry, he was clerk in an Illinois store, with small means, and small opportunities.

"Time was," he says, "when, after a fashion, I could read, but never with that flashing glance which instantly transfers a word, a line, a sentence, from a page to the mind. It was perpetuation of the child's process, a letter at a time, always spelling, never reading, truly. Thus, for more than twenty years, with the shade upon the brow, the hand upon the cheek, the finger beneath the eye to make an artificial pupil, and with the beaded sweat joining with the hot tears trickled from the weak and painful organ, was my reading done."

Then what little sight he had, steadily faded, until at last he was—as he has now been for more than half a century—totally blind, yet a man of great ability and a power in the church.

AN ACTED PARABLE.

While the late Dr. Alexander Proudfit was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Springfield, O., he told the following story at a social gathering of the teachers of his Sunday School:

"A good old Scotch elder, who was deeply concerned because his pastor persistently refused to allow children to be admitted to church fellowship, invited him to his house. After tea, the elder took the pastor out to see his large flock of sheep put into the fold. Taking his stand at the entrance to the sheepfold, the elder allowed the sheep to enter, but as the little lambs came up, he roughly pushed them back with a heavy stick.

"The pastor became very indignant, and exclaimed: 'What are you doing to the lambs? They need the shelter far more than the sheep!'

" 'Just what you are doing to the children of the church,' was the prompt reply.

"The object-lesson did its work. Never again did the pastor attempt to shut out from the fold of the church one of Christ's little ones."

Whenever the devil is about to strike to kill, he puts on his Sunday coat and tries to look religious.

FAITH IS THE VICTORY.

O, Christian! Faint not in the fight,
The Prayer of Faith shall meet reward.
The vict'ry cometh not by might,
But by My Spirit, saith the Lord.

time in blade and ear and harvest. The power is unseen, the Life Giver still invisible, but the growth reveals Him near, and the old miracle of life continues with unabated attractiveness in the lives of His people.

Blossoms must bloom of themselves. To force open the calyx and hasten the flowering is to ruin all. If it blooms at all, it must be by inner impulse and not from outward force. Pick open the bud, and you spoil the rose.

A dozen seeds share the same home in a handful of soil, and spring into leaf under the same sun rays and breezes. The same dewdrops and showers water them, yet no two are alike in leaf or root or flower. What mysteriousness lies here! Who dreamed that each of these brown seeds held such power of thought and will and feeling as to select from soil and sun and air and moisture just the elements adapted to develop its own plan? What wisdom in planning and executing the design! Surely a seed is a wonderful thinker and a most skillful worker. Do seeds think and feel and choose?

How seeds grow, who can tell? How souls grow each one can know somewhat if his own soul grows and he watches its development. What can a lily know of the thoughts and feelings of a rose except as it watches itself and supposes the other to be like it? Seeds have impulses; so have souls. Roots meet stones they cannot penetrate and find also soil with elements they can take and in their inner structure change from mineral to vegetable. How they do it, we don't know and don't believe they know. But they do it.

Souls have impulses, meet obstacles, find also material for making manhood and womanhood. But with these there is a consciousness not found in the seed. Souls know good and bad, feel the glow of approval and pang of self scorn, realize the duty of right doing, have power in themselves to make plans of growth and to carry them out. They can't make the soil, the sunshine, the showers of moral and spirit life, but they can determine how they will grow in them and what they will make from them. Oh, a soul is a wonderful thing!

Sorrows may crush you if you let them fall on you wrongly, but if you bend a little they fall on the earth and pack the soil more firmly about your roots, give you a better hold on earth and a firmer lifting of being toward the upper heavens. If a branch is lopped off, perhaps it will help you grow more symmetrical. Pruning and thinning of fruit make the rest of the yield larger and more luscious.

FOR PUBLIC SAFETY.

RAILROAD EMPLOYEES SHOULD BE TOTAL ABSTAINERS.

Alcohol Dulls the Brain and Makes Its Action Slow — Many Accidents Due to the Drink Habit — Whisky Obscures Color Sense.

It is a matter of vital interest to all who travel on railroads that managers and trainmen should be practical prohibitionists, says Dr. T. D. Crathers in Union Signal. Few people realize that the danger from the breaking of the track, bridges and cars, also from the changes of the roadbed and the action of fire and water, is comparatively small. The greatest number of accidents and the most serious losses come from the failures of management. Bad judgment, failures of the senses, miscalculation and want of attention and accuracy of act and thought are the most serious causes of accidents. All the great roads are trying to eliminate this danger from mental failure of their operatives. From the manager and superintendent down to the switchman and gatekeeper everything depends on accuracy and quickness of thought and act, with exact attention to every duty. Neglect, mental dullness, sense failures, absentmindedness, confusion of thought, are fatal to train service. Overwork and neglect of food and sleep, with exposure, are most active causes of these conditions, and yet all combined do not compare with the danger from alcohol.

This is the teaching of experience. Last year 44 per cent of all the accidents on a trunk road were traceable to men who were using spirits in some form. In one of these cases the train dispatcher, after wine at dinner, gave a confused order, and ten lives were lost. In another a brakeman, after a glass of whisky, neglected to flag a train, and six lives were lost. Engineers have in innumerable instances failed to see the danger signals and rushed on to death with many others. After the accident an inquiry seldom brings out the private habits of the dead. The engineer may have taken spirits secretly, and suddenly his good judgment fails, and he dies at his post.

Saloons along the line of a railroad are startling danger signals to the traveling public. The nervous tension of trainmen and their exposure, with exhaustion, are strong temptations to ask relief in the narcotic of alcohol. No other substance known will so quickly obscure the accurate working of the brain and nervous system as alcohol.

Over half of all the railroads in the country try to eliminate the danger from moderate drinking operatives, by laws and restrictions. A few trunk lines demand total abstinence in all their service; others only require abstinence when on duty. Responsible, practical trainmen soon find that only by total abstinence are they safe in their daily duties, and even off duty they recognize the injury which comes from alcohol to their nervous system.

The time is coming when the public will demand that all railroad men shall be total abstainers and shall give unusual care to their health and vigor. The companies will recognize that no alcohol can be sold along their lines and on their property or to their men without the most serious loss. The mortality on railroads among employees and passengers is small comparatively, and yet when a recent expert on railroads asserts that over 50 per cent of accidents are preventable it becomes a matter of personal interest to every traveler to agitate and call for better service.

In two recent accidents in which many lives were lost both brakemen and engineers had drunk spirits a short time before. The mistaken idea that small quantities of alcohol are harmless permits men to drink beer and stronger drink without question, yet practically a scientific study and measurement of the senses and functional activities of the body show that 20 drops of alcohol interferes with the normal activity and is manifest in the diminution of the sense acuteness and brain activity.

Science shows that alcohol obscures the color sense, and that the use of a small quantity of spirits destroys the power of distinguishing red danger signals. An engineer who failed to see the red lights on a drawbridge and was killed with many others had drunk a glass of spirits an hour before. His color sense was palsied. An operator set the wrong signal, and a fearful loss of life followed. He, too, had drunk spirits a short time before, and his color sense and judgment were impaired. Alcohol in small quantities diminishes the rapidity of thought. This can be measured in seconds and parts of seconds. The process of realizing and knowing the fact and of acting from this knowledge is measurable, and the difference in time in health and after the use of alcohol is often several seconds and more, and this is time enough to avert or to precipitate an accident.

A signalman saw the possibility of an accident, and was dazed. Before he could realize and act on this fact the possibility of preventing it had passed. His mind was clouded by alcohol; he could not think quickly; he knew what to do, but failed to act in time. A train dispatcher hesitated on the report of an accident to stop all trains promptly, and this slowness resulted in another accident. He, too, had used spirits, and his mind was unable to act promptly. These are not uncommon facts, only the public seldom knows of them. Personally I have seen this singular confusion of judgment and failure to act and think promptly in a railroad conductor. Later I saw him using spirits at a lunch table, and his previous mental state was explained.

The special personal fact I wish to make prominent is that railroad men of all grades must be total abstainers. A drinking man in this service is as dangerous as a smoking man in a powder mill.

METHODIST RECORDER

FIFTY CENTS

YEAR.

Music—Lizzie W. Courtney, Mary Himmilberger, Francis S. Hundley, Henrietta Pettyjohn, Julia Ogden.

The following degrees were conferred by President Smith:

Degree of A. B.—Francis Compton, Mabel Davis, Jonnet McGavock, Sallie Moss.

Degree of A. M.—Blanche Cheatham, Meta Glass, Alice Littleton, Cornelia Poindexter, Nannie Rowland Nowlin.

The sixth session of the Woman's College was a notably successful one in every respect. Although it has been only about two years since the College was enlarged by the addition of a wing, all the rooms were occupied during the past session, and steps have already been taken looking to a further increase of the accommodations. The high standard maintained from the very beginning, and the efficiency with which the College fills the requirements of such an institution, have given it an enviable place among the great institutions of the country for the higher education of women. The prospects for next session are even brighter than they have ever been.

RANDOLPH-MACON ACADEMY.

The prelude to the commencement exercises of Randolph Macon Academy was the baccalaureate sermon, delivered on Sunday evening by Rev. R. W. Patton, of Roanoke, in the chapel of the Academy, in the presence of a large and appreciative audience. The discourse was based upon Gen. II-7. In graphic, eloquent terms the speaker portrayed the elements of man's nature from the animal and physical to the spiritual nature, and exhorted the young men of Randolph Macon Academy to develop all the high possibilities and opportunities for becoming men in the most exalted sense of the word. The address was both an able and polished production, receiving close attention throughout, and will doubtless prove an inspiration to many a youth who listened to the utterances of the talented young divine.

At 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon of Sunday, Rev. Dr. H. H. Hawes delivered an admirable farewell address before the Young Men's Christian Association of the Academy. There is a fine hall for the association connected with the Academy, which proves a great factor for good among the youths who attend this school.

At 10:30 o'clock this morning, the finals took place, and honors that were awarded gave token of the faithful work that had been performed by both the instructors and the instructed.

The annual address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Paul Whitehead, the presiding elder of the Lynchburg District. Prof. E. Sumter Smith, principal of the Academy, presented the medals and distinctions as follows:

ROLLS OF HONOR.

Department—Barrow, Barton, Callahan, Eggleston, Gove, Green, Jameson, Kelam, Lewis, Mann, Parsons, Petree, Poindexter, Powell, J., Powell, R., Price, S., Price, E., Russell, Savage, Sawyer, Shackford, Smithey, E., Smithey, W., Smithey, F., Turner, J., Turner, V., Tufts, Wall, Wood, Woodhouse, C., Woodhouse, E., Aargrans, Bernard, Seaward.

Study—Barrow, Barton, Connelly, Eggleston, Gove, Green, Jameson, Kelam, Miller, McNeal, Parsons, Petree, Poindexter, Powell, J., Powell, R., Price, S., Price, E., Russell, Savage, Sawyer, Shackford, Smithey, E., Smithey, W., Smithey, F., Turner, J., Turner, V., Tufts, Wall, Wood, Woodhouse, C., Woodhouse, E., Aargrans, Bernard, Seaward.

Poindexter, Price, S., Price, E., Riley, Russell, Savage, Sawyer, Shackford, Smithey, W., Stuart, F., Wall, Wood, Wyehr, Woodhouse, E., Dewey, Hargraves, Smith, E., Turner, V.

Special mention for students making over 95 per cent—Barrow, Barton, Cove, Green, Kellam, Poindexter, Price, S., Russell, Savage, Smithey, W., Wall, Wood, Wyche, Woodhouse, E., Smith, E., Hargraves.

The Junior Scholarship medal, (awarded by the principal), was received by Arthur Barrow, of Brunswick county, Va.

The Senior Scholarship medal, (awarded by Mr. John W. Bradbury, of Petersburg, Va.,) was conferred upon Charles Parkinson Wood, of Fauquier county, Va.

LITERARY HONORS.

In the Washington Literary Society the declaimer's medal was awarded H. Wirt Holloway, of Virginia. The debater's medal was received by Raymond H. Lewis, of Maryland. The writer's medal, awarded for the best article in the Randolph-Macon Academy Journal, was conferred upon Edward Charlton Graves, of Washington, D. C.

Thus closes the ninth successful session of this excellent educational institution. There were thirteen States represented in its present session. The large number of its students who have attained marked distinction in the universities and colleges of this and other States, bears excellent testimony to the thoroughness and of its curriculum. —"News."

REV. JOHN McCLELLAND.

And still again we have to write the word, Departed, opposite the name of one of our preachers. The year 1899 will stand out as a year memorable for its afflictions in the parsonages of the Virginia Conference. A note from his son informs the editor that Bro. John McClelland has entered into the rest that remaineth to the people of God. He was fully ripe and ready. The editor first met him ten years ago, and was then impressed with his gentlemanly bearing, his purity of thought and his uprightness of character. He met him last about a year ago. He had not been able to take regular work for many years, and he was then frail, but was able on a very hot summer Sunday to drive to Smithfield and attend evening service without much exhaustion. He loved the cause of God. The great work of his life was done in the Methodist Protestant Church, and he was already an old man when the brethren of that Church in Virginia united with us, and he was therefore very slightly known to our preachers.

He died in the full assurance of faith. His devoted wife survives him, herself in age and feebleness extreme.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, God has, in His wisdom, taken to Himself Rev. R. N. Sledd, D.D., a distinguished member of the Virginia Conference, and, for four years, the pastor of this congregation,

Resolved, That we hereby record our testimony that, while serving our Church, he was in all things faithful to his trust, ministering with wisdom in the pastoral office, and preaching with unusual acceptability, the simple gospel of our Lord.

Resolved, That we extend to his family our sincere sympathy and pledge them our prayers.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the Minutes, and that copies of them be sent to the family and to the Church papers for publication.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

The Woman's Home Mission Society of the Virginia Conference met in its ninth annual session in the Farmville M. E. Church, South, May 23, 1899, at 8 p. m.

The Society was called to order by the president, Mrs. W. J. Young, and after the regular devotional exercises, addresses of welcome were made by Miss Fannie T. Littleton on behalf of the Farmville Auxiliary Home Missionary Societies, and Rev. T. McN. Simpson, the pastor, on behalf of the Farmville Church, and an appropriate response was made by Mrs. L. B. Betty, of the Monumental Auxiliary, Portsmouth, Va. Badges of silk, tastefully gotten up, were then distributed to the delegates and an informal social meeting was held, during which the members freely exchanged greetings, renewed acquaintances, and sought introduction to those in attendance for the first time.

On Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, the Society met according to announcement, with the president in the chair. Devotional services were conducted by Rev. A. B. Sharpe, of Charlotte Circuit. The roll was called by Mrs. H. E. Wall, the Conference Secretary, and a fairly good per cent of members answered to their names. The hours of meeting and adjournment were fixed at 10 a. m. and 3:30 p. m. for meeting, and 12:30 p. m. and 5 p. m. for adjournment. The president then delivered her annual address, which she preferred should be called a "talk," and which briefly named the work, and earnestly called the organization to its best endeavors in the undertakings begun, and urged a larger attention to missionary work among our servants, and some specific object in Virginia as a monument of the Society's zeal and intelligence.

Reports were then read by the conference corresponding secretary and the conference treasurer, showing the receipts during the year, the number of auxiliaries, members, papers taken, etc. The exercises at this point were varied by a solo, most touchingly rendered by Mrs. R. E. Michaels, of Richmond.

The call for reports from auxiliaries was then made, and the following responded:

Mrs. E. S. Moorman, Lynchburg District Secretary; Mrs. J. L. Armstrong, Court-Street Church; Mrs. Robert Winfree, Memorial Church; Mrs. T. B. Moorman, White's Church; Mrs. E. S. Moorman, Mt. Zion.

Mrs. Cheins in place of Mrs. J. D. Lumsden—Petersburg District Secretary; Mrs. Cheins, Washington Street.

Mrs. W. J. Young in place of Mrs. J. C. Norsworthy—Norfolk District Secretary; Mrs. Spruill, Epworth Church; Mrs. N. B. Johnson by letter, Cumberland St. Church; Mrs. T. H. Cross, Trinity Church; Mrs. L. B. Betty, Monumental Church, Portsmouth.

Miss Hardwicke—Richmond District Secretary; Mrs. Davis, Trinity Church.

Mrs. Michaels—West Richmond District Secretary; Mrs. Schatzell, Centenary Church; Mrs. Tyree, Park Place Church; Miss ———, Park Place, (Young Ladies).

Officers and delegates present were: President—Mrs. W. J. Young, Norfolk; Vice President—Mrs. T. McN. Simpson, Farmville; Treasurer—Mrs. C. V. Winfree, Lynchburg; Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. M. N. Moorman, Lynchburg; Recording Secretary—Mrs. H. E. Wall, Farmville.

Richmond; Mrs. M'chaels, West Richmond; Mrs. E. S. Moorman, Lynchburg; Mrs. J. R. Martin, Farmville.

Delegates—Mrs. W. J. Davis, Mrs. Anton Schatzell, Mrs. A. W. Tyree, Miss Maggie Curley, Richmond; Mrs. J. L. Armstrong, Mrs. Robert Winfree, Mrs. T. B. Moorman, Lynchburg.

Mrs. M. E. Spruill, Mrs. T. H. Cross, Mrs. L. B. Betty, Norfolk.

Mrs. H. C. Paulett, Miss Blanche Baldwin, Miss Ella Burger, Farmville; Tabernacle Church, Petersburg—Mrs. T. B. Rodgers, Mrs. Shelton Cheaves.

The annual sermon before the Society was preached Wednesday night by Rev. Jas. Cannon, Jr. It was one of the ablest and most practical sermons on the subject of fruit bearing for the Master's Kingdom we have ever heard.

The meeting adjourned sine die yesterday evening—"Farmville Herald."

SMITHDEAL COLLEGE PRACTICAL BUSINESS COLLEGE
RICHMOND, VA.

THIS COLLEGE

is now located in its grand new building, e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond Va. Constructed of iron granite, and gray brick 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. It is the oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

For thirty years this school has been preparing young people for practical business life. It teaches Single, Double Entry and Joint-Stock Book-keeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English, &c. Send for catalogue, showing its splendid methods in preparing its students for business, and its success in securing positions for them, and for new building discounts.

GRATUITOUS AND UNSOLICITED COMMENDATIONS.

Leading Business College South of the Potomac river.—Philadelphia Stenographer.

The great success of the Smithdeal College is due to honest work and the deep interest the instructors take in the pupils.—Richmond Dispatch.

Prof. Smithdeal is a deadly enemy of educational shams and superficial methods of teaching.—Practical Age, Moline, Ill.

We do not hesitate to single it out as an example for all such institutions.—Western Trade Journal, Chicago, Ill.

The results accomplished speak for themselves, and will bear comparison with those accomplished by any similar institution in any part of the country.—Mercantile and Financial Times, New York City.

This school has long been recognized as a leading one, and we are glad to see that it is winning from the press and people the praise it so richly merits.—Progressive Farmer, Raleigh, N. C.

This college is well-known and stands high in business circles.—Portsmouth Star.

Everybody has heard of Smithdeal Business College, but comparatively few know its great value in fitting young people for successful business life.—Richmond Times.

Your institution has been chosen as the one best representing its class in your State.—Register Publishing Company, Ann Arbor, Mich.

It is a first-class school in every respect.—South Boston Times.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS A-GAIN.

"My children they dote on all such things,
And if you their love will win,
You must do as they do, and walk in the ways
That they are walking in."

Then the Church her purse-strings tightly held,
And gracefully lowered her head,
And simpered, "I've given too much away,
I will do, sir, as you have said."

So the poor were turned from her door in scorn,
And she heard not the orphan's cry,
And she drew her beautiful robes aside,
As the widows went sweeping by.

Her mission treasures beggarly plead,
And Jesus' commands were in vain:
While half of the millions for whom He died,

Had never heard His name,
And they of the Church and they of the World,
Walked closely hand and heart,
And none but the Master, who knoweth all,
Could tell the two apart.

Then the Church sat down at her ease,
and said,
"I am rich, and in goods increased;
I have need of nothing and nought to do
But to laugh and dance and feast."

And the sly World heard her, and laughed within,
And mockingly said aside,
"The Church has fallen, the beautiful Church,
And her shame is her boast and pride."

Thus her witnessing power, alas! was lost;
And her perilous times came in;
The times of the end, so oft foretold,
Of form and pleasure and sin.

Then the angel drew near the mercy seat,

And whispered in sighs her name;
And the saints their anthems of rapture hushed,
And covered their heads in shame.

And a voice came down from the hush of Heaven,
From Him that sat on the throne:

"I know thy works, and what thou hast said,
And how thou hast not known
That thou art poor, and naked, and blind,

With pride and ruin enthralled,
The expectant Bride of a Heavenly Groom,
Now the harlot of the World!

"Thou hast ceased to watch for that Blessed Hope,
And thou hast fallen from zeal and grace;
So now, alas! I must cast thee out,
And blot thy name from its place."

O Church of Christ, he loves thee still,
Who bought thee on the tree;
Renounce the world, the flesh, the foe,
"The truth shall make you free."

No longer soil thy robes of snow,
Nor fear the world's cold frown,
Arise and shine, thy light is come,
Let no man take thy crown.

Then midst yon shining bridal throng,
Thy Lover, with love's own pride,
Shall see of thee travail of his soul,
And say, "I am satisfied."

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY
ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted a face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Home life is a grand legacy left to man and should not be lightly valued.—Rev. O. H. Denny, Congregationalist, Cincinnati

Religion.

Religion is not a preparation for a dreaded unknown. It is present manliness and womanliness.—Rev. George A. Thayer, Unitarian, Cincinnati.

Vast Treasures.

A simple thing it is to say, "God is spirit," but the phrase holds vast treasures in the knowledge of God.—Rev. Dr. Behrends, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Compass of the Religious World.

The church of Christ is to the religious world what the compass is to the storm tossed mariner.—Rev. William O'Brien Pardow, S. J., Catholic, Philadelphia.

If the Past Were Annihilated.

Try to imagine in what condition we should be and what we would do if all the past could be annihilated and we should start afresh.—Rev. B. F. Mills, Evangelist, Boston.

Society.

Society is not the result of a compact freely entered into and freely broken. It is a natural state, a necessary state and the effect of divine will.—Rev. Dr. Conaty, Catholic, Washington.

God's Purpose.

Christ came into the world to make known the purpose of God and to furnish the means by which this purpose should be accomplished.—Rev. I. T. Coddington, Universalist, Rochester.

Man Studied by Materialists.

The materialist studies man from the side of his physical organization, his relation to other living creatures and the brief duration of his physical existence.—Rev. C. W. Wendte, Unitarian, Los Angeles.

Crown of Creation.

Man is the crown of creation, and science and theology join hands over the statement that on earth there will never be a higher creature than man.—Rev. Artemas J. Haynes, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Our Thoughts.

We can choose to think noble or ignoble thoughts. We can turn the current of our thoughts into any channel. Character is the result of thoughts. Our thinking molds our conduct. The mind is like a loom, it can weave beautiful tapestries or shoddy goods.—Rev. Warren G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati.

Don't Grumble, but Work.

The right kind of a man does not grumble over the things in the world that do not suit him. He goes to work to straighten things out and arrange and adapt till they do suit. He doesn't cry, "Oh, Lord, how long shall I wait!" but tries to share God's difficulties and help him out.—Rev. David Utter, Denver.

A Christian Life.

The Christian life is not only a narrow race track and goal or personal salvation, but a general kingdom, taking up into itself men of every varying condition of color, custom, language and religious opinion, a kingdom destined to permeate all other interests until it brings about a new heaven and a new earth.—Rev. Dr. Robert Mackenzie, Presbyterian, San Francisco.

A Free Country.

Humanity has cause for thankfulness that the social and political conditions which now exist offer little, if any, real obstruction to the progress of truth. This is especially true of our own land. Whatever remains that can be properly described as persecution is too feeble and inconsequential to deter any courageous man from engaging in the ascertainment and study of new truths.—Rev. George W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City.

The Church and Modern Life.

The church is not needed as an exclusive bureau of imparting information. The church is not needed as the sole instrumentality for fitting men for heaven. The need is not so much to get men into heaven as to get heavenly influences into men. The church is the hospital for the morally sick, not a refuge for the strong or the convalescent. The church ought to be the dynamo of modern life.—Rev. R. A. White, Universalist, Chicago.

Memories of the Past.

Did it ever occur to you how much time is given to make the past live again? We are not satisfied till we have found out whether Rome's first kings were real and what is the actual truth behind the fable of the Golden Fleece. We shall never be satisfied until we know more about the mysterious Jewish sect, the Essenes, who hold perhaps the secret of the origin of the Christian faith, and we dive yet again into the sea of the Talmud to live again in its rabbinic world.—Rabbi M. H. Harris, Hebrew, Boston.

The Law of Compensation.

Rostand in his drama never gets what he wants. His life is a triumphant success. It is the incarnation of failure. He dies, leaving everything he wished for ungained, and enters the presence of God without a stain. It is a sublime lesson. Many a human being finds himself without these things. He fails, yet he succeeds. He fails, not in the very effort, for he sees the ideals, yet he does not realize what he had wished and hoped for. Here the law of compensation comes in. Emerson says that "the law of compensation is the law of God." Somehow, even here, the men who have failed in accomplishing what they had hoped for and yet have been true have known the peace of Christ. They have striven and failed from an earthly standpoint. But were their lives failures? Men, noble and true—true to him who can order failure a success and success a failure—will receive at last the divine approval: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Dr. Joseph K. Mason, Universalist, Philadelphia.

WOUNDED.

(BY ALBERT ENGLEBERT.)

God knows I fought; yet vainly fought.
I sometimes fain would die
And sleep, as only dead men sleep,
Beneath His pitying eye.
Yet rather would I live to fight
And, fighting grandly, win;
I do not ask for wealth and ease,
But this—O God! O sin!

And it is but the fools and weak
Who yield, and wounded lie?
Nay, but the noblest souls sometimes
Fight, lose, lie down to die;
For with the higher sense of life—
Of beauty, bliss, and all—
Come armed temptations never known
To lives that creep and crawl.
Then, great Physician, guiding still
The crying weak along,
Forget not, but be merciful
Unto Thy wounded strong.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WITH THY MIGHT.

(BY REV. R. H. BENNETT.)

One of Wesley's favorite mottos was "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." The human secret of his success was found in one word, WORK. No man ever toiled harder or more incessantly than he. Once when kept waiting by a tardy man with whom he had an engagement he exclaimed: "I have lost ten minutes forever." Joseph Benson, himself a great worker, said of Wesley: "His indefatigable industry really amazes me. I admire but I wish in vain to imitate his diligent improvement of every moment of time."

The brilliant men and those with a "silver spoon" and a "chance" are not the successes of the world. The worker is crowned. Carlisle's definition of genius is "an infinite capacity for taking pains." A young preacher asked our saintly and now glorified Dr. Sledd for the secret of his success and spoke of his genius. The answer is said to have been, "I have no genius or secret except this, HARD WORK." When asked when he prepared a certain eloquent paper, which had just been read, he said: "I finished it at 3 o'clock this morning." Whitfield used sometimes to say to his congregations: "I got this sermon while you were asleep." Many a man looks at his work and says like the great artist, when after years of labor he stood contemplating his finished masterpiece: "May God forgive me that I did not do it better."

The lost note of authority in many present-day pulpits has been noticed by many. Alas, that an ambassador of the mighty God should cringe and seem "to apologize for his very existence." The description of a certain preacher's sermon-work would seem to apply in more than one case. "You must repent as it were, and be converted in a measure, or you will be damned to a certain extent." "Ah, Berry," said old Dr. Dale, of England, in his last days to Dr. Berry, "nobody is afraid of God now." How many a pastor has felt like the Catholic priest in New England who, when asked how he governed his people, said: "Alas, sir, a few of them by fear, but most of them by flattery." Our Lord "taught as one having authority and not as the scribes." His ambassadors are clothed with His authority and must speak with the full consciousness of a "thus saith the Lord," and under the unction of the Holy Ghost sent down from Heaven. Let us preach with our might, as though, says Dr. Cuyler, we "heard the surges of eternity beating on the outside of our Church walls."

Let us pray with our might. Of Luther's prayers it was said they were as reverent as though he was fully aware of his talking to omnipotence, and as familiar as tho' conversing face to face with a friend. Whitfield would not preach without from one to two hours private prayer before the public service. Wesley's rules for his preachers called for a full hour of private devotion each morning and another each evening, and the spending of at least two or three minutes of each hour through the day in private prayer. And he himself more than kept his rules for others.

Chas. G. Finney tells of many a night spent in prayer, of many a time when he arose in the middle of the night and labored with tears before God. Jonathan Edwards and a few friends spent the whole night in prayer before that memorable sermon of his on "Their feet shall slide in due time," preached at Enfield, Mass., July 8th, 1841.

When they went into the meeting-house the appearance of the assembly was thoughtless and vain; the people scarcely conducted themselves with common decency. But as the sermon proceeded the audience became so overwhelmed with distress and weeping that the preacher was obliged to speak to the people and desire silence that he might be heard. The excitement soon became intense, and it is said that a minister who sat in the pulpit with Mr. Edwards, in the agitation of his feelings, caught the preacher by the skirt of his dress and said: "Mr. Edwards, Mr. Edwards, is not God a God of mercy?" Many of the hearers were seen unconsciously holding themselves up against the pillars and the sides of the pews as they already felt themselves sliding into the pit.

And this sermon was read without gestures. It was the prayer in its preparation and for days and weeks before that brought the outpouring of the Spirit of God.

We hear it said nowadays that the day of great revivals is gone. PERISH SUCH A THOUGHT FOREVER. WHENEVER WE ARE WILLING TO PAY THE PRICE OUR FATHERS PAID FOR THEM WE WILL HAVE AS GREAT AND EVEN GREATER REVIVALS THAN THEY TOILED FOR AND REJOICED IN.

There were times in the life of the Son of God himself when He needed to pray all night, a time when His agony in prayer turned His sweat into blood. In view of such a thought how can many so-called Christians get along with five minutes, one minute, spent in prayer a day, year in and year out? Such an one must be spiritually stronger than the Lord Jesus Christ—or else so consider himself.

ONLY A REGULAR.

(BY M. C. FAVILLE.)

"I'm not a hero; only a regular," was Gen. Lawton's reply to the remarks of a recent admirer. It is a commentary upon the value of popular praise. Such a man can say such a thing without bitterness, but there is a perceptible element of pucker in it for those who provoke him to say it. The regular soldier has done what we had a right to expect of him, done it uncomplainingly, and received only his pay in return. It is possible for a man to still be in love with his country after serving in her army for three years, but the praise meted out to the soldier during this past year seems to have been inversely to the fuss he made about eating bacon and crackers.

Regulars of all sorts share the fate of the regular soldier. The raw recruit in any movement usually is able to make the public view his sorrows through his own particular magnifying glass. A common experience quickens our sympathy. Is it true that most of us have much of the raw recruit in us. It is a fact that the American who, of all others, has heard most hurrahs in his praise, is he who had the assurance to repeat practically the same speech more than three hundred times in less than five months. He got an Associated Press report every time, and the hero-worshippers were unailing in their adulation. The regulars who day by day have taught us new lessons are not many of them even known to us by name. The evangelist comes to your town for fifty or one hundred dollars a week. The crowd rushes to hear the weekly (weekly?) course of sermons he repeats at every stand, without regard for the "regular," the faithful pastor who has a wholesome lesson at each service, and who spends his days visiting and managing, and binding up the broken-hearted. Faithfulness is not rewarded by popular praise.

There are regulars everywhere, the rocks upon which progress is built. They are not "tin soldiers;" they follow the flag, and are enlisted for the whole war. They don't cry to come home before the work is done. They are like the sailors of Sampson's fleet; every man of them ready to follow the Merrimac to the bottom of Santiago channel. They don't flaunt their courage but it is always ready. Much that savors of adventure to the beginner is their daily habit, hence they are calm in any storm. Their courage seems a matter of course. It is the fruit of heroic discipline, such as the raw volunteer cannot endure.

Don't forsake the faithful regulars for the heroes of an hour. It is the regular who wins the lasting victory, who vanquishes the great enemy. We shall always need more regulars. We should make Gen. Lawton's comment untrue of men in any kind of honest work.

NORFOLK, VA.

JUDGE SPEER'S VIEWS ON THE NEGRO AND LYNCHING.

Macon, Ga., June 8.—The brief abstract of the remarkable address delivered by Judge Emory Speer before the graduating law class of Mercer University inadvertently did him an injustice. The distinguished jurist to-day, in a statement which will attract wide attention, made clear his position regarding his attitude toward the negroes as a race in connection with the outrageous crimes committed by some of their number. After referring to the brighter auspices of the graduates of the class of '99 as compared with his own during the Civil War period, he said:

"There is, however one dark cloud on the bright morning of our hopes. I speak as a Georgian, as I have the right. I speak of that condition of the public mind because of which thousands of husbands, brothers and fathers go to their daily labors with a frightful dread, akin to that which assailed the pilgrim of New England, who, with his savage foeman hard by, stalked to church with firelock on his shoulder and sword at his side, or the backwoodsman of the South and West, who tilled his new ground with his rifle ever in reach; of that danger to the peace and happiness of our rural homes as agonizing and infuriating as any which ever afflicted the human race.

Let me say in the outset that it is a destructive error to charge the negro race with the atrocities of its own outcasts and pariahs. And let me next declare, what is even more important.

The negroes, if they wish to continue to remain in peace in these Southern States, must by their own conduct and assistance as citizens, to the officers of the law in bringing the cruel and cowardly Apaches of their race to the bar of public justice, acquit themselves of the charge now widely made of racial sympathy with the criminal, no matter how atrocious his crime. The plainest instinct of self-preservation, aside from the dictates of right and duty, demand this at their hands.

"Nor is the demand incompatible with the character and history of the upright men of their race. We Southern people know that there is a wonderful difference among the negroes. There is doubtless as much difference in tribal descent among them as there is in nationality of ancestry among the white people. While some of our negro population are descended from degraded tribes and yet preserve in exasperating perfection their ancestral vices, others spring from those gentle and manly races who kindly ministered to the helpless Livingstone in his long wanderings across the continent. These men have the confidence and good will of the Southern gentlemen. Indeed, the negro is largely the peasantry of the Southern States and his labors add enormously to aggregate the wealth. I feel that, after all has been said, this colored farmer is no mean friend of the State, with all of its advancing civilization. There are visionaries who talk about the colonization of the negro, but unless he chooses to go himself this is utterly impracticable. My word for it, he will not choose to go. No race has stronger local attachments than the negro. Besides, way down in our hearts we do not want him to go.

"There will ever be, as there has ever been, crimes committed by individuals, many of them so atrocious that the story will stir a fever in the blood of age or make the infant sinews strong as steel. It is due, however, when we consider our vast territory and large population, to say that they are comparatively infrequent.

"Certain it is that these crimes when committed must be dealt with according to the methods of civilized people. The constitutions of the United States and of the State of Georgia provide that no person shall be deprived of life or property without due process of law. This is a fundamental principle of civilization, and however terrible the provocation, no people can shatter the basic principles of the social system in order to wreak a lawless vengeance on a vicious individual without entailing on everybody of every class the inevitable return of all those calamities which civilization has labored for centuries to avoid.

"In those courts where I have presided for many years, I have often witnessed negroes do their whole duty to the government and to non-residents against every power of advocacy and every prejudice of the past. These things I know, and I here and now do declare, understanding the full significance of what I say, that all these tragic events, as they have been spread before the country of late in all their sickening and fearsome details, are utterly foreign and abnormal to the character of this people as I have known and loved it from childhood's days and I shall know and love it until my eyes are closed in death."

OBITUARY.

"From the group of little faces
One is gone:
In the old familiar places,
Sad and lone,
Father, mother, neek-eyed brother,
grandma, sister,
Sit and moan;
Weep not when ye tell the story
Of the dead,
'Tis a sunbeam joined the glory
Overhead!
'For of such sweet babes is heaven,' Jesus Said."

Robert Lee Holdrun, the beautiful little sunbeam of Levi Floyd and Eliza Holdrun, joined the Sun of Righteousness, November 8th, 1898. He did a long brighten this dark world, for he was born December 11th, 1895, and spent less than three years here. God called him to Heaven without warning for he was playing about as usual that day and before the sun rose on the next he had gone to be with Jesus, his spiritual Sun. He was buried in Star Valley, Wyoming, but his star will never set. The beams that travel from his little soul will never fade in the memory of those he loved.

The most precious treasures often come in the smallest bundles, but we know our little treasure is safe with Jesus and nothing can harm nor harm him till we shall join him and be with Jesus too.

"BLESSED ARE THE DEAD THAT DIE IN THE LORD."

Robert S. Farmer was born February 10th, 1823, at Farmville, Prince Edward county, Virginia. He publicly confessed Jesus as his Saviour at Salem, Roanoke county, before he was thirty years of age, uniting with the M. E. Church, North. When he moved to Steuartsville, some years later, he joined the Southern M. E. Church of which he was a most faithful member until the day of his death. When he moved to Bedford his letter was transferred to the M. E. Church there, where his earnestness and activity, until weakness overtook him, were well known to every one. He was always prominent in the Church he loved so much, and was for many years a class leader and Bible class teacher. But it was simply in his public life that he gained universal respect and reverence, for his Christian character was plain in private also. His own home and circle of intimate friends and acquaintances all rise up and call him blessed. Every one, white and colored, will agree with the words of one of their number: "Never there was a Christian on earth like Mr. Farmer was one." He was universally beloved and respected.

And this is more to his credit, for he was largely a self-made man. His mother died when he was an infant and when but a youth he left his home to earn an honest living for himself in the world. Not always easy; he persevered and was honored for his uprightness and honesty in all his dealings.

On April 15th, 1898, he died, aged years, two months and five days. Death was a blessed release for his days were full of intense suffering.

which he bore with wonderful patience and fortitude.

On January 27th, 1853, he was married to Martha E. Farmer, who after forty-five years of happy married life, survives him, and also three children. They are Mrs. Ella Holdrun, Montpelier, Idaho; James C. Farmer, Vinton, Virginia, and Thomas P. Farmer, Star Valley, Wyoming. Thus has passed away another noble man.

Only voices we hear no more,

But the echoes haunt our ears;

Only dreams which are passed and o'er
That we mourn through the lonely years.

Only to find that the sunny gleam

Of earth's love fades, like a passing dream,

Only to wait for the glorious beam

Where the glory light is shining.

Only the slip of a parting hand,

By the silent river's shore,
Where a dear one sails for the unseen land,

Whence souls shall return no more.

Only to gaze o'er the waters drear,

Only to wait, till the call we hear,

"Come over now, for rest is near,

Where the true, life-light is shining."

Only the burden all must bear,

Only earth's night of woe;

Only to learn from each weary care,

The patience the pure must know.

Only this, and what welcomes wait.

To hail us Home, at the pearly gate!

Only to toil till night is late,

And awake, when the morn is shining.

CEDAR GROVE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

DEAR BROTHER CANNON:—Since I began taking your paper I have been a little surprised, as well as disappointed, in not seeing letters from any of the numerous Leagues of Virginia, and before writing, I hesitated, thinking you did not, perhaps, have space in your valuable paper for such reports. If my letter is an intrusion, however, I most humbly beg pardon. Come forward Epworth Leaguers and let's crowd in! I am so deeply interested in the League work that invariably when I take one of our Church papers to peruse I turn to the Epworth League department first to read the news of this grand work with its much meaning motto.

"Look up! Lift up! All for Christ!" When we organized about twelve months ago only a few of our official members had ever attended a League meeting of any kind and naturally felt a little embarrassed becoming initiated in the new work, but now we would not be ashamed to have any of our experienced city (?) Leaguers to attend one of our services. We have a strong band of persevering workers, steadily increasing in number, and progress in other ways is encouraging. Backward members are taking an active part. A few weeks ago one of our youngest members (a little girl of 12 years) conducted the devotional service and filled the place well for one so young.

During the last severe winter the interest abated very little, and we missed but few appointments which I think speaks well for a country League. The charity and help department is doing a good work in the community, visiting the sick, helping the poor, &c. We have a very neat library of good, wholesome literature. Our meetings are frequently brightened by the presence of our beloved pastor, Brother Carson, whose words of encouragement and advice are always appreciated. He is with us as often as he can conveniently do so.

Sunday, June 4th, we celebrated the anniversary of our League. Your humble scribe presided over the meeting which was deeply interesting and spiritual,—consisting mainly of a song and prayer service and brief addresses upon the advancement of the work at Cedar Grove since the organization, were delivered by Rev. A. L. Carson, Mr. Saml. L. Adams, and Brother Clarke, and the services were closed with the Lord's Supper.

I will give below names of our officers: President, Mr. Henry Link; First Vice President, Miss Eloise M. Crawley; Second Vice-President, Mr. Richard A. Bradshaw; Third Vice-President, Miss Lee F. Gravitt; Secretary, Miss N. Annie Pingleton; Treasurer, Mr. James Clarke; Organist, Miss Eloise M. Crawley.

Hoping my suggestions may prove beneficial, with kindest regards for all the sister Leaguers, and may we remember each and all in our public and secret devotions to God,

Yours "All for Christ,"

A Great Combine Capitalized at Millions

Trusts and Combines in many lines of production, and controlling the output of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

HERE IS THE PLAN A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideals are: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price."
—Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."
—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine."
—Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work."
—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it."
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none."
—Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate."
—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus."
—The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Nathl. Lucecock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning."
—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

"We most heartily commend it to our people as a high-grade periodical, worthy to take its place in every Methodist home."
—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"It will aim to advocate and magnify the things which world-wide Methodism holds in common, and especially to be a factor in the cultivation of fraternal relations between the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."
—Central Christian Advocate.

"The letter press is superb, the illustrations first-class and the reading matter thoroughly instructive, entertaining and edifying."
—Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."
—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"We welcome it, relish it and recommend it."
—Western Christian Advocate.

"It takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."
—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"We cannot but give to the Magazine our best wishes, and hope for it great success."
—Texas Christian Advocate.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

DR. SLEDD'S SERMONS.

It will be a source of great gratification to Dr. Sledd's friends to know that the volume of sermons which he was preparing had reached such a stage that his son, Prof. Andrew Sledd, will soon publish the book. Bishop J. C. Granbery has written the introductory sketch.

THE ORPHANAGE.

The Committee have selected Richmond as the location for the Conference Orphanage. It is greatly to be hoped that our Richmond brethren will turn their pockets inside out to advance this worthy cause. The suggestion that a home for superannuates be run in connection with the orphanage is of very doubtful utility.

RANDOLPH-MACON COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement sermon was preached by Rev. J. T. Mastin on "The Trials of Abraham's Faith, Leading to Higher Development." It is said to have been "strong, suggestive and eloquent."

Dr. W. W. Wadsworth, of the North Georgia Conference, an alumnus of nearly thirty years standing, preached an able sermon at night.

The trustees met on Tuesday morning and at once took up the business of the board. Several prominent figures were missing. Dr. R. N. Sledd, the First Vice-President has been called away to the better country and would meet with his brethren no more. Dr. Whisner has been elected Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, and feeling that he could not attend the meetings of the board, sent in his resignation. He also sent his check for $500 as his Thank-Offering. Dr. A. G. Brown had returned to his home in Ashland, but his condition was such that it was not thought prudent for him to attend the session of the board. Dr. S. S. Lambeth, the secretary of the Board was absent also.

Ex-Gov. E. J. Jackson sent in his resignation, stating that the condition of his health would not allow him to attend. These brethren were all greatly missed.

The board elected Rev. J. T. Mastin in the place of Dr. Sledd, Dr. B. W. Bond in the place of Dr. Whisner and W. W. Vicar in the place of Ex-Gov. Jackson. Dr. S. K. Cox was elected as First Vice-President and Dr. Paul Whitehead as Second Vice-President of the board. The board conferred the degree of LL. D., upon Mr. Walter Page, editor of the "Atlantic Monthly," and an alumnus of the college.

It was decided to add another wing to the Woman's College at a cost of about $16,000, provided the indications were favorable on Aug. 1. Two new professors were elected for the Woman's College—Professor Nathan A. Patillo, of Alabama, as professor of Mathematics, and Professor John Herbert Davis, of Jacksonville, Ill., as professor of Instrumental Music. The board also confirmed the selection of Prof. Latane for the chair of History at the Woman's College, made last summer by the executive committee.

Chancellor Smith reported to the board the donation of $2,000 by Dr. Ralph Millar, of Front Royal, to found two scholarships in honor of his mother, Mrs. Susan Randolph Millar. This is said to be the first donation ever received by the college from any member of the Randolph family, for whom the college was named.

The reports from the various institutions of the system showed that all of them had made their expenses for the year and but few changes were made in the faculties of instruction. Dr. Smith was relieved of the Principalship of the Front Royal Academy and Mr. C. L. Melton placed in charge.

The board adopted a resolution authorizing the election of a professor of History at the college at Ashland as soon as sufficient funds had been received to increase the endowment to $25,000. There is a fund in hand of $10,000, contributed by Mrs. I. N. Vaughan for this chair.

The board also appropriated $425 toward the refitting of the upper room of the college chapel. The interior of the building has been greatly beautified, as well as rendered more comfortable by the addition of stained glass windows, oak pews, new carpet and ornamented ceiling.

Dr. Smith reported that the faculties and students of the system had contributed to the Twentieth Century Fund the sum of $9,000 which, added to the $5,000 contributed by the Blackstone Institute, made $14,000. He also announced that Bishop Granbery, Dr. Whisner and Mr. Geo. R. Hill, of Alexandria, all members of the board of trustees, had made offerings of $500 each, and called upon the board for its support in the movement. Mr. C. V. Winfree, of Lynchburg, responded with an offering of $1,000, and several other members of the board handed in cards ranging from $50 to $350, making nearly another $1,000 from about seven members. Of course this amount will be largely increased by the contributions of the other members of the board. This makes about $16,000 already subscribed by those connected with our Church schools, or nearly one-sixth of the total amount assessed upon our Conference.

The literary exercises of the commencement were very enjoyable. The first Class Day programme was carried out with a great deal of interest.

On Wednesday night the annual contest for the Sutherlin medal occurred. There were three contestants, two from the "Wash," and one from the "Frank." All three orations were unusually good, the thought and diction reflecting great credit upon the college training. The medal was won by Leslie Godlee, of Tennessee, whose subject was "The Anglo-Saxon Friendship and the Progress of Man." He is a "Wash."

This contest was followed by the address before the Society of Alumni, by Rev. G. W. Dyer. Bro. Dyer discussed with great vigor the responsibilities resting upon the college, and although the hour was late when he began, his bright and pointed way of putting his views held the unabated interest of his audience for an hour.

On Thursday morning the commencement address was delivered by Dr. Frank M. Bristol, pastor of the Metropolitan Church, of Washington, D. C.

The subject was "Brains." It was one of the greatest, if not the greatest, ever delivered at the college. Dr. Bristol spoke about one hour and forty minutes, but so rapid was his utterance that two hours and one-half would have been required for its delivery by the average speaker. The thought was of the highest order of platform addresses, and the delivery suited to the thought. It would be an injustice to the address to attempt to give the meager outline possible. If it could be delivered at our District Conferences this summer it would be of great value in the Twentieth Century movement.

After this address the college honors were announced as follows:

Following is a list of those receiving degrees:

Ph. B.—R. H. Sheppe.
A. M.—A. A. Kern, M. P. Rucker, R. H. Shippe, G. L. Meville and C. H. Davis.

A. B.—E. K. Odell, J. W. Jordan, J. F. Messich, Harry Burruss, A. McGill, Roger Tyler, A. C. Southall, J. H. Walker, J. C. Vickers, J. R. Tucker, G. B. Lawson and J. D. Hughlett.

Sutherlin Prize Medal for Oratory—Leslie Goodloe, of Tennessee.

Bennett Medal for Best Essay on Some Aistorical Subject.—A. A. Kern, of Virginia.

Murray Scholarship Medal—A. A. Kern.

Murray Medal for Proficiency—D. R. Anderson, of Virginia.

Walton Greek Prize—T. Moody Campbell.

Athletic Medal—G. B. Lawson, of Virginia.

The commencement exercises were concluded with the joint celebration of Washington and Franklin Literary Societies.

The orators were J. D. Hughlett, Virginia, subject, "Growth and Development;" J. J. Bradford, Virginia, subject, "Disadvantages of Isolation."

Rev. F. J. Prettyman, of Staunon, president-elect, made the address. He also presented the following medals:

Franklin Society—For improvement in debate, J. R. Kilby; debaters', Earle Riley; declaimers', J. L. Humphrey.

Washington Society—Orator's, Leslie Goodloe; debater's, S. O. Wright; declaimers', G. W. M. Taylor.

DR. KERN WILL LEAVE.

ASHLAND, Va., June 20.—Dr. J. A. Kern received a call by wire this evening from the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University to the Chair of Practical Theology in that institution. Dr. Kern immediately wired his acceptance. He will tender his resignation as President of Randolph Macon College to take effect September 1st.

Dr. Kern has been connected with the college here for the past thirteen years, the last two of which he has been its president. Feeling that his duty was principally that of a teacher he takes this step with the hope that he may accomplish greater good in his new field. It is with the profoundest regret that the faculty and the citizens of the town learn of the contemplated departure of Dr. Kern and his estimable family but wish for them greater success and happiness in their new home. Among those mentioned for the vacancy here are Dr. W. J. Young, Dr. A. Coke Smith, Rev. James A. Duncan and Rev. James Cannon, Jr.—Richmond "Times."

THE TWO NEW PROFESSORS.

A special telegram to The News from Ashland last night says that at a meeting held there yesterday of the Board of Trustees of the Randolph-Macon system of schools and colleges, Professor Nathan Allen Patillo, of Alabama, was elected to the chair of Mathematics, and Professor John H. Davis, of Illinois, was elected to the chair of Music, for the Randolph-Macon Woman's College at Lynchburg.

Ever since it was announced that the work heretofore so ably done by Miss Parrish at the Woman's College was to be divided and that a new professor would be elected for the chair of Mathematics, Lynchburg educators have been interested in the outcome of the election. Overall competitors the Board of Trustees on yesterday elected Professor Nathan Allen Patillo, of Alabama.

Professor Patillo took his A. B. degree at the Southern University of Alabama, in 1887, the A. M. degree in 1890; was assistant professor in his alma mater for two years, was elected full professor of Mathematics in Millsaps College, Mississippi; resigned to pursue higher courses in John Hopkins University, where he received the Ph. D. degree in 1897. He was immediately elected professor of Mathematics in the Alabama State Normal College, which position he resigned to come to the Woman's College.

Dr. Patillo was strongly backed in his contest by the Southern University; Millsaps College and Johns Hopkins University, besides a host of other judges who commended his ability as a scholar, his aptitude as a teacher, and his great worth as a man. He is a man of medium height, modest and unassuming in manner and of prepossessing appearance.

Mrs. Patillo is said to be a very accomplished lady from Baltimore.

PROF. LONDON'S SUCCESSOR.

Mr. John Herbert Davis, who has been elected to fill the position of head of the piano department, was chosen, after an exhaustive search of the country for the right man for that responsible position. Besides a large amount of correspondence, Dr. Smith made personal investigation of six or seven of the most promising applicants, and Prof. Davis himself was invited to come to Lynchburg, where he spent several days in full conference with the faculty of the College and the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees. As a result, all are satisfied that they have found the man for the place.

As a small part of his preparation he graduated years ago from the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, since which time he has studied with some of the best masters in this country and abroad. He is a finished pianist, giving numerous recitals, and is much sought as a performer on public occasions. For fourteen years he has been director of a large musical department at Jacksonville, Ill., and has built it up to a high degree of success. "No predecessor approached his success here," says a testimonial.

From a mass of enthusiastic testimonials two private letters to Dr. Smith from very eminent sources will suffice.

Prof. E. B. Clapp, now of the University of California, formerly of Yale University, writes in a personal letter to Chancellor Smith:

"I have known Mr. Davis for seventeen years. He is peculiarly fitted for the position in your institution. I have known a great many musicians, brilliant performers and charming men, but on the whole I have never known his equal among them all, as a cultivated gentleman and a sane, well balanced man. He would fit eminently in a college faculty. Six years ago, when I was connected with the faculty at Yale University, I presented him to President Dwight as the man best qualified to assist the venerable Dr. Stockel in the work at Yale. Dr. Dwight was very favorably impressed, and, if circumstances had not suddenly changed, would probably have offered him the position."

The head of the music department at Vassar College writes:

"As a musician he is enthusiastic and able. He is a most enjoyable pianist, but beyond the mere question of musical attainments, which I should regard as adequate in every way, is the broad general culture and refined Christian character of Mr. Davis. It seems to me that there are few men who would be more likely to win the respect and warm friendship of his colleagues and the admiring support of his students than Mr. Davis. I have been for a number of years wishing that our work here at Vassar would enlarge enough so that I might offer Mr. Davis an adequate position as head of the piano department. I shall feel like congratulating you if the college is able to secure Mr. Davis."

Mrs. Davis is a relative of Senator Wolcott, and is socially highly connected. Mr. Davis is a man of middle height, graceful figure, unusually polished manners, dresses in good taste and is without eccentricities. He is familiar with the best society of Boston and New York and has frequently been abroad for study and travel.—"News."

FIVE BOOKS

That help make BETTER AND WISER.

BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH. (182 pages.) Complete and Unabridged from original edition. By IAN MACLAREN.

A collection of beautiful stories, full of pathos and Christian spirit. One of the most helpful and successful books of the age.

BLACK BEAUTY. (245 pages.) Complete and Unabridged. By ANNA SEWELL.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Horse. Adopted by the Boston Grammar Schools as supplementary reading, to instil into their pupils the principles of kindness and justice to our domestic animals, as well as to each other.

DRUMMOND'S ADDRESSES. (263 pages.) Complete and Unabridged.

By HENRY DRUMMOND.

By far the loftiest expression of religious sentiment that has ever appeared in book form. Contains the celebrated essay entitled "The Greatest Thing in the World, Love."

TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM. (196 pages.) Complete and Unabridged.

By T. S. ARTHUR.

This is the masterpiece of T. S. Arthur, and has been one of the most effective means of temperance reform ever conceived. Graphic, pathetic, convincing. Every young person in the land ought to read this book.

AESOP'S FABLES. (192 pages, with 50 illustrations. Contains 300 of the choicest fables.) Translated by Rev. G. F. TOWNSEND.

For centuries this collection of fables has been the fountain of worldly wisdom. Its apt and terse comparisons are calculated to clear the mind of falsehood, vanity and folly.

All these books are printed in large, clear type, and bound in white and gold (paper covers). Size of book 4¼x6¼ inches, such as have been usually sold at 25 cents each.

LESSON I, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 2.

Text of the Lesson, Hos. xiv, 1-9.
Memory Verses, 4-7—Golden Text.
Hos. vi, 1—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God, for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." Our lesson is entitled "Gracious Invitations," but all prophecy is full of such, and so is all Scripture from "Come thou and all thy house into the ark" to "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Gen. vii, 1; Rev. xxii, 17). Hosea was contemporary with Isaiah and Micah, as we learn by comparing the first verse of each book, and this chapter which we are about to study gives a fair sample of the gracious invitations which abound in these books and in all Scripture.

2. "Take with you words and turn to the Lord; say unto Him, Take away all iniquity and receive us graciously; so will we render the calves of our lips." So gracious is our God that He puts the very words in our mouths which we may approach Him with, and while words of themselves amount to nothing He never fails to hear and answer words which come from the heart. These words imply on the part of those who utter them a conviction of sin and of utter unworthiness before God, and a determination, by His grace, when He has forgiven us, to serve Him, but on our part there must be sincerity, even as it is written, "Thou shalt be sincere with the Lord thy God" (Deut. xlviii, 13, margin).

3. "Asshur shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses; neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods, for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy." When we turn to God, there must be a turning away from every arm of flesh and from all that is of man or of self. Israel had been redeemed by the mighty hand and power of God; God Himself was their deliverer and their king, but they turned their backs upon Him, leaned upon Egypt and Assyria and worshiped idols, thus bringing bondage and oppression upon themselves and dishonor upon God. If now they would turn to the Lord, it must be as Joshua said, to fear the Lord and serve Him in sincerity and truth, putting away all idols (Joshua xxiv, 14). Or as Samuel said, "Only fear the Lord and serve Him in truth with all your heart, for consider how great things He hath done for you" (1 Sam. xii, 24).

4. "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely, for mine anger is turned away from him." The Lord God of Israel is merciful and gracious, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin (Ex. xxxiv, 6, 7). He is not willing that any should perish, but has provided life and life abundant for all who will come to Him, assuring that none shall in any wise be cast out (II Pet. iii, 9; John x, 10; vi, 37). In Rom. iii, 24, the word "freely" means "without a cause," as in John xv, 25. We can give God no cause to forgive us or love us, the cause is all in Himself. He is rich in mercy and loved us when we were dead in sins (Eph. ii, 4, 5). In Jer. iii, 13, 14, He says, "Only acknowledge thine iniquity; turn, O backsliding children, for I am married unto you."

5. "I will be as the dew unto Israel; he shall grow as the lily and cast forth his roots as Lebanon." Rooted and grounded in the love of God, rooted and built up in Christ (Eph. iii, 17; Col. ii, 7), not only Israel, but all believers shall grow as the lilies, which neither toil nor spin, yet are more beautifully clothed than Solomon in all his glory. Not by struggling or effort do we grow, but by abiding in His love which is everlasting and unchanging. When Israel as a people shall turn to the Lord at His second coming in glory, and shall receive Him as their Messiah, then shall the Lord be as the dew unto Israel, and Israel shall be in many lands as a dew from the Lord (Mic. v, 7).

6. "His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon." She shall then be a good vine, bearing fruit unto God, as seen (chapter x, 1). No longer shall she bear wild grapes, but will be indeed a pleasant plant unto the Lord (Isa. v, 2, 7). They shall be trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord that He may be glorified (Isa. lxi, 3). It shall be true again of Israel and to a greater degree than ever that she shall be beautiful with the beauty which the Lord God shall put upon her (Ezek. xvi, 14). Fruitful, beautiful and fragrant to God shall she be by His grace. It may be so with us now.

7. "They that dwell under His shadow shall return, they shall revive as the corn and grow as the vine; the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon." He of whom Pilate said, "Behold the man" (John xix, 5) shall be as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land (Isa. xxxii, 2). Multitudes will sit under His shadow with great delight, and His fruit shall be sweet to their taste (Canticles ii, 3). He who spread a cloud for a covering in the wilderness will spread His glory over Israel (Isa. lv, 5, 6), and many nations will flow to Israel because of the glory of the Lord upon her. If believers learn to rejoice in Eph. i, 3, and make it manifest in their lives that they are possessing and enjoying Him in whom is all blessing, God will be glorified and sinners won to Christ.

8. "Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard him and observed him; I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found." Being occupied with Christ causes us to be changed into His image from day to day (II Cor. iii, 18). We grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (II Pet. iii, 18) and are able to say, "My meditation of Him is sweet. I am glad in the Lord (Ps. civ, 34). Beholding the beauty of the Lord and inquiring in His temple (Ps. xxvii, 4), we cease from idols, and find such fullness of joy in Him that we want none of earth's vanities to satisfy our souls. The last clause of the verse suggests John xv, 5, "Without Me ye can do nothing."

9. "Who is wise, and he shall understand these things; prudent, and he shall know them? For the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk therein, but the transgressors shall fall therein." Our Lord Jesus said, "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes" (Math. xi, 25). Those who are wise in their own eyes cannot understand, for the things of God can only be understood by those who are taught by the Spirit of God. These closing words of Hosea remind us of Rev. xv, 3—"Just and true are Thy ways, Thou King of Nations," and many similar words, such as Ps. xviii, 30. "As for God, His way is perfect."

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 2, "Our Country For Christ."
Text, Ps. xxxiii, 10-22.

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."

That God has regard for nations as really as He has for individuals is the teaching of the Bible from beginning to end. He finds the Hebrews in Egypt and leads them by Moses from bondage, through the wilderness to Canaan, and under Joshua gives them the land long promised their fathers. Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Tyre, Edom and all the great powers of the ancient world are subjects of prophecy, and their fate depended upon the attitude they held toward God and righteousness. This is the unique distinction of Hebrew prophecy over all other ancient literature. It declared for the rights of men, regardless of race peculiarities or national boundaries. All men are created of God, and their rights are grounded in their relation to Him, is the declaration repeated through ages. By the test of right dealing shall all kings and nations stand or fall.

The nation that will not worship Jehovah is doomed. It cannot stand. This is more than any external form of service. It is broader than any state religion, deeper than the recognition of God by a clause in the national constitution. It is the embodiment of divine law in the constitution and nature of the people, the establishment of worship in all the dealings of the state by doing justice and protecting the defenseless. Idolatry caused the overthrow of all the great nations of antiquity. It was denounced as the most heinous sin. The Babylonish captivity was caused by Sabbath desecration, so Jeremiah declares, and idol worship is destructive of all national life.

There are two ways at least of viewing these declarations. A narrow traditional interpretation leads either to Phariseism or infidelity. A deep study of the prophetic literature of the Hebrew Scriptures under the light of modern historic science, with a devout recognition of spiritual truth as influential among men, leads to intelligent patriotism and Christian citizenship.

"If they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the Lord," is the truth as Jeremiah voices it. It is true today. It has ever been true. It must ever remain truth so long as God is God and man is man.

The Fourth of July means more than independence from British rule for the American colonies. It began to acquire meaning in that, but it signifies freedom from oppression of every kind as the foundation principle of the national life. It is a new departure in human government. It is clear eyed recognition of the foundation of human rights, not on the will of a king or an aristocracy, not even on the consent of the government, but on divine creation. Men are born with rights—rights of which they cannot be robbed nor divest themselves, rights to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness.

These can be actualized and fulfilled only by right doing. Right doing is worship, the highest devotion; wrong-doing is idolatry and is destructive of the individual and the state. Patriotism is enthusiasm for right in national affairs. Christian citizenship is personal right doing of duty in all that belongs to public interests.

Our Present Perils.

They are many and varied and from many causes. Never was the temptation to expensive living so great as now. Our life is under high pressure. Our machinery is speeded high and all our social, industrial and political movements catch the motion. Haste to be rich, to attain influential positions, and to get all the enjoyment possible, has infected us. Our church life feels the impulse. Large membership lists, elegant buildings, talented musicians, eloquent orators for pulpit and platform, immense conventions—all make for success. But under it all lies grave peril. The danger is not in wealth or in numbers, not in culture or eloquence, but it lies in the temptation to make these the end and not merely the aids to something better. It is not in any of these that success lies, but far beyond them. Is the membership devoted to service of God and man? If not, then it were better it were smaller. Does the music aid devotion, is the oratory powerful for righteousness? If not, then it were better the instruments were without sound and the lips dumb. Godliness is our need, worldly show our peril.

Courtesy is the outward shell of which friendship is the kernel. It has many grades, from the lowest and least valuable fruit of hypocrisy to the rich product of Christly love.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY ESTABLISHED?
It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING PRINCIPLE.
The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted as face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings
 of All Denominations.

Reformation of life will clarify our moral and spiritual sky.—Dr. Warren G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati.

Love and Force.

Only through the weal and woe of human existence do we prove God to be love.—Mrs. Gestfeld, Scientist, Chicago.

Trust and Distrust.

Trust is a positive, helpful virtue or grace. Distrust, in its very nature, is negative and destructive.—Rev. T. Jefferson Denver, Episcopalian, Pittsburg.

Cure For Many Pains.

One-third of all our physical misery could be prevented or cured by discreet and regular physical labor.—Rev. Dr. Camden M. Coburn, Methodist, Denver Protestantism.

The world waits not for the perfect church, but for the perfect life, and Protestantism has done more for the perfect life than any other form of faith.—Rev. Dr. Charles H. Eaton, Universalist, New York.

A Liberal Man.

The only liberal man is he who is free from himself, who is not fettered by his own perceptions, but is ever open to the reception of truth, working for others, working with others, and so working for himself.—Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, Congregationalist, Chicago.

A Good Conscience.

There is no sweeter joy than the testimony of a good conscience. The thorns in the pillow would be fewer, obstacles in the pathway more easily overcome and the joy in life the sweeter with a good conscience.—Rev. Dr. M. Burnham, Congregationalist, St. Louis.

God's Answer to Prayer.

There is nothing nobler or more sublime than to know that the God who holds the stars in his hands and regulates their courses through the skies will speak to men at their supplication and to feel that favors asked will be granted.—Dr. D. V. Lucas, Presbyterian, Denver.

Manifest Destiny.

All men are feeling that there is a power higher than man's in whose grasp America has been borne beyond her own plans and beyond the dreams of even the most daring of her sons. This feeling that we are in the grasp of "manifest destiny" makes this the most religious question of the hour, as fit a topic for pulpit as for press.—Rev. L. Sprague, Independent, Grand Rapids.

Creed Is Necessary to Worth.

The church must have a creed. But that creed will be other than the creeds now held. There must either be a cutting loose from existing standards or wreck. It is either divorce or death. If the churches cannot and will not revitalize their forms of faith, their doom is sealed. Between these symbols of faith and the best thought of today there is a great gulf fixed. And it cannot be crossed.—Rev. George H. Combes,

Christian Church, Kansas City.

Life Likened to a Game of Cards.

Life is like a game of cards. The cards are not always shuffled to suit us, but we have hope. We like the game, and we keep playing it because we don't know what the next hand will bring us, and we hope on and on. It is the grasping for the invisible in life that stimulates us to do our best. There is a veil that hides our tragedies and perplexities and hides the lights of life, but we look at it and say, "Lead on."—Rev. Thomas R. Slicer, Congregationalist, New York.

True Religion.

The churches are still pursuing the fatuous course of constantly exhibiting too much of the shadow to the detriment of the substance. There is too much cleaving to obsolete and meaningless forms and ceremonies; too great insistence upon an unquestioned acceptance of doctrines and dogma that are out of joint with the time and inconsistent with the state of civilization and culture at this period. People have advanced sufficiently to understand that true religion is a question of correct conduct and has absolutely nothing to do with pomp or ceremony.—Rabbi J. Nieto, Hebrew, San Francisco.

Church and State.

Church and state are organically, though not sympathetically, distinct and separate. Government property should on no account be turned over to the church. The state should aid no creed nor sect by gift or loan. From the days of Constantine the unholy alliance of church and state has been the cause of nations corrupting the church by making it dependent on the state and paralyzing the state by making it subservient to ecclesiastical authority. Between the two let there be no organic connection; render to Cæsar Cæsar's things, no more, no less, and to God God's things, no more, no less.—Dr. Kerr Boyce Tupper, Baptist, Philadelphia.

The Law of Nature.

The law is that what is in your soul will find its way into your countenance. This law acts as the chisel of the sculptor on the marble; it makes lines, removes them and changes them. If you were a magician and could place a man or woman amid adverse surroundings, where tears and struggles were the only company kept, you would find the personal history after awhile in the face, and should you remove that man or woman to a happy environment, without care or anxiety, a corresponding change in the physical lines of the face would occur. Again, if a person indulges in base thoughts, is fretful, selfish and mean, nature advertises that fact in the countenance. And if, on the contrary, the heart is pure, the faith strong, the resignation under suffering what it should be, there is a distinct and palpable transfiguration, a difference in the magnetic atmosphere, or what some call the aura, of that person. That law is creative and inexorable.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

CLOSE AT HAND.

The day is long and the day is hard,
We are tired of the march and of keeping guard;

Tired of a sense of a fight to be won,
Of days to live through and of work to be done;

Tired of ourselves and of being alone.

And all the while did we only see,
We walk in the Lord's own company;
We fight, but 'tis He who nerves our arm;

He turns the arrows which else might harm,

And out of the storm He brings a calm.

The work which we count so hard to do,
He makes it easy, for He works, too;
The days that are long to live are His,
A bit of His bright eternities,
And close to our need His helping is.

O eyes that were holden and blinded quite,

And caught no glimpse of the guiding light!

O deaf, deaf ears, which did not hear
The heavenly garment trailing near!

O faithless heart, which dared to fear!

REAL OR UNREAL?

God—God's love—God's will—Are these things real or unreal? We talk about them in sermons, in prayers, in conversation, but are they really part of the life? In hours of pain, anxiety and suffering does the anchor hold? When deep calleth unto deep at the noise of God's water-spouts, and all His waves and billows have gone over us, does the foundation of our faith stand unmoved? "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee. Trust ye in the Lord forever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." If indeed such things are worth talking about at all, they must be real to us in every experience of life. God's love is not simply a name, an empty sound, or form of words with which to beguile ourselves in hours of pleasure and prosperity. God's love is the most precious thing in life. It is not a flickering firefly that eludes our grasp, and gives us darkness when we long for light, but it shines before us as the brightest star in all the night about us. And God's will—surely the greatest concern of life—should be to find out His will and perform it. Every day the truth grows clearer. Life must be either a blessing or a curse. To spend it in trying to gratify our selfish appetites and desires will bring no blessing upon us from others and will bring us at last to the end of life with sobs, and tears, and anguish, and with "Vanity of Vanities, all is vanity" as the bitter refrain of our souls. But to spend it in trying to help others, in willing service, in helpful conduct, this will not only bring a blessing upon us from others, but will bring us to the end of life with comfort and peace and joy in our hearts. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." That is the key to it all. The world, with all it means, "The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life," soon passes away, but the man or woman who does the will of the great eternal God will forever abide. This, then is our only care—TO DO GOD'S WILL. What do we mean by that? So often we think of it simply as meaning submission in times of sorrow and trouble. But it means vastly more than that. It means to do God's will EVERY day. It means to do God's will in all the little details of our home life, social life, and Church life. "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" is the natural cry of the Christian's heart daily. If we are doing His will the home will be brighter to the rest of the family, our social circle will be purer, and the thought nobler and more uplifting, and the Church gatherings will be more stimulating and helpful, and if we are doing His will our own hearts will be happy and peaceful, even though there be many temptations, and hindrances, and burdens and pains. If only we do the will of God we shall abide in Him forever. What rapture to be at last one of that great multitude whom no man can number, and having washed our robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, to come at last to the city, which hath the foundations whose builder and maker is God. Let nothing keep us out of the Father's house of many mansions. Be the cares, and burdens, and fret, and worry, and disappointments what they may, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life," is the sure promise of His word. We can, like Moses, if need be, suffer affliction with the people of God, rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, if only in the end we dwell with God in Heaven forever. But to do this we must, like Moses, endure as seeing Him who is invisible. The spiritual must be real to us. The eternal must be present with us. We must live in eternity now. The things which are seen are temporal. The things which are not seen are eternal. But in the every-day life of the Christian God—God's love and God's will—the eternal things are real, and very near.

EXPLANATION.

The resolutions published in the issue of June 15, signed L. Clay Kilby, should have been signed by the Secretary of the Official Board of Epworth Church. It was simply an oversight on the part of the Secretary. The resolutions were offered by Brother Kilby and passed by the Board.—(Ed.)

NOTICE.

Farmville District W. F. M. meeting will be held in Farmville, beginning Friday evening, July 7th. Let every auxiliary send a delegate with a written report. Visitors are cordially invited to meet with us. Send name to Mrs. T. J. Davis, Farmville, Va.

Sec. Farmville District W. F. M. S.

CORRECTION.

DEAR RECORDER:—In an article of mine in your last week's issue a paragraph, descriptive of the effect of Jonathan Edward's great sermon, should have been in quotation marks. It was taken from Dr. Belcher's Life of Geo. Whitfield. The quotation marks were in my manuscript. The date, of course, should have been set up 1741, instead of 1841.

Yours truly,
R. H. BENNETT.

REGRET.

It is a source of much regret that we go to press again without the JUNIOR RECORDER. The illustrated portion is on the road or lying at the wrong depot somewhere. We have waited until Saturday morning before going to press.

A MEMORIAL INDEED.

The papers report that Mr. E. M. Tilley, of Berkeley, has announced his intention of building, at a cost of $20,000, a stone Church, which he will present to the congregation of our Chestnut-Street Church, Berkeley. It is said that it will be erected as a memorial of his wife.

Rev. G. W. Dyer has been called to a Chair at the Vanderbilt University, and has decided to return to the University of Chicago for the summer to continue his studies in Sociology.

Rev. John C. Granbery, Jr., who has recently graduated at the Vanderbilt, is planning to take the summer course in Sociology at the University of Chicago.

Rev. E. H. Rawling has been given a vacation of five weeks by his congregation, and he is planning to spend it in study at the University of Chicago.

INTERNATIONAL EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION.

A special train will leave Richmond for Indianapolis, via the Norfolk & Western railroad, the day before the opening of the Convention, reaching there in time for the opening. The fare for the round trip will be about $15 from Richmond. This will be a delightful trip in good company.

NO PRESIDENT ELECTED.

The Board of Trustees of the Randolph-Macon met at Centenary Church on Thursday morning, but there was no election of anyone to fill the office of President. A committee was appointed to take into consideration the question of dividing the work, and electing a President for the administrative work and a Professor to fill the Chair of Moral Philosophy and Biblical Literature. This committee is to report to the Board of Trustees on the 31st of July. The following account is taken from the "Times."

A meeting of the Trustees of Randolph-Macon was held at ten o'clock Thursday morning in Centenary Church to consider the question of electing a President of Randolph-Macon to succeed Dr. J. A. Kern, resigned.

Bishop John C. Granbery presided; and the following members were in attendance: The President of the Board, Drs. Paul Whitehead, J. J. Lafferty, J. P. Garland, W. G. Starr, Revs. J. S. Hutchinson, J. C. Reed, J. T. Mastin, B. F. Lipscomb, and Messrs. R. B. Davis, J. P. Branch, E. S. Conrad, P. V. D. Conway, A. S. Buford, G. B. Finch, G. L. Neville, W. W. Vicar, W. J. Kilby and R. Irby.

The President of the Board laid before the Board the resignation of Dr. J. A. Kern, President of Randolph-Macon College and Professor of Moral Philosophy and English Bible. On motion of

Rev. Dr. J. P. Garland, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved: That the resignation of Rev. J. A. Kern, D. D., President of Randolph-Macon College, be and the same is hereby accepted to take effect on the first of September next, or upon the election of his successor.

"That we hereby express our high appreciation of the services of Dr. Kern, both as president and professor, and our regret to part with him."

The following resolution was also adopted:

"That when this Board adjourns, it adjourns to meet again at Centenary Church, Richmond, July 31st, at which time a Professor and President shall be elected, and that a committee of five be appointed to take into consideration the whole matter of supplying the places made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Kern, and make such recommendations to the Board as they may see fit to fill said vacancies."

The Chair asked for time to make the appointments to fill the committee.

It is reported that the following committee has been appointed to act in conjunction with Bishop Granbery, the President of the Board: Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, Dr. Paul Whitehead, Rev. J. S. Hutchinson, Col. J. P. Branch, and Hon. E. S. Conrad.

PAY THEIR OWN WAY.

It is astonishing how great a hold upon the Methodist mind throughout the world the Twentieth Century fund has taken. An illustration of this comes from the Transvaal, where the District Synod has pledged itself to raise a sum of 10,000 guineas. The Methodists in this famous District are enterprising to a degree, and they like to pay their own way. The Committee of the Twentieth Century Fund has invited Mr. R. W. Perks to visit the Republic this autumn and speak at Johannesburg in support of the Fund.—London "Methodist Recorder."

NO WHISKEY HERE.

Bishop McCabe says: "Within fifty-eight miles of Pittsburg, Pa., is the little town of Bolivar. The principal business is brick-making. This is controlled by the Reese Hammond Fire Brick Company. They have had no saloons for thirty years. There are 250 men in the employ of the company. They nearly all own their own homes. There is no poverty, no suffering, very little crime, no strife between labor and capital. The Golden Rule is lived up to by both sides. Poverty is abolished; it goes with the saloon. There would be many towns and cities like Bolivar, if the press and public speakers would tell the truth about the infernal business which fills the land with sorrow and despair."

FACTS FOR BOYS.

A successful physician, writing for "Harper's Young People," made these startling statements which ought to interest every boy, and every boy's father and mother:

Suppose a boy has a lot of cigarettes and smokes a few of them every day. Is there any injury in this? I can tell you, for I have had such boys for patients. Such smoking, even in so-called moderation (as if there was any such thing as moderation in stimulants for the young!) will do three things for him: 1. It will run his pulse up to 100 or more per minute. 2. It will reduce his weight below the healthy standard. 3. It will reduce his strength and general vitality, as will appear in his pale complexion and his diminished appetite. Cigarette smoking is one of the worst habits physically that a boy can form. It injures the heart and digestion, and it tends to check the growth. It gives a lad false and silly notions, and it does not bring him into good company.

SUMMER CHRISTIAN WORK.

The movement for summer Christian work in this city has taken shape in the securing of a vacant plot of land 200 feet square at the corner of Fifty-sixth street and Broadway, where a tent capable of seating 1,200 people is to be erected. It is to have side walls which can be opened out, enabling 3,000 or 4,000 persons to see and hear. An organization has been effected including representatives of several Churches: Calvary Baptist, Amity Baptist, the Church of the Strangers, and others. Mr. Moody has been invited to inaugurate the work by preaching the first sermon next Sunday. Other prominent ministers are to share in it, including Drs. J. W. Chapman, R. S. MacArthur, Wilton Merle Smith, David Gregg, A. J. F. Behrends, Geo. C. Lorimer, C. E. Jefferson, W. H. P. Faunce, and others from this country; while the Rev. F. B. Meyer, and the Rev. Campbell Morgan, of England, are to take part. Prominent laymen are also to share in the work, including Mr. Robert E. Speer, Major D. W. Whittle, Mr. John R. Mott, and General O. O. Howard. The general purpose is to give as good services as those at Northfield, and if possible even better.—N. Y. Advocate.

THIRD ECUMENICAL CONFERENCE.

A conference of the western section of the Methodist world, which comprises the United States and Canada, North and South America, having in view a meeting of the Methodist Ecumenical council to be held in London in the fall of 1900, held a meeting in New York on June 15.

Commissioners representing 13 denominations of the American Methodist Churches were present. Bishop C. B. Galloway, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was chosen temporary chairman.

Bishop John F. Hurst, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Washington, D. C. was elected permanent chairman of the Western section, and Rev. Dr. John J. Tigert, of Nashville, Tenn, was elected permanent secretary.

The following executive committee was appointed: Bishop Hurst, Washington; Bishop D. A. Godsell, Chattanooga; Rev. J. W. Hamilton, Cincinnati; Rev. H. K. Carroll, Plainfield, N. J.; Rev. W. R. Haven, New York; Rev. D. H. Carroll, Baltimore; Rev. Luther B. Wilson, Washington, D. C.; Rev. Dr. J. W. VanVleet, Middletown, Conn.; Bishop Galloway, Rev. Dr. Tigert, Rev. F. H. Whisner, Louisville; Rev. J. W. Lee, St. Louis; Rev. A. Carman, Toronto; Bishop Abraham Grant, Philadelphia; Bishop Walters, Jersey City; Rev. F. T. Tagg, Baltimore; Bishop R. S. Williams, Washington, D. C., and Rev. J. Mason, New York.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON II, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 9.

Text of the Lesson, Dan. i. 8-21—Memory Verses, 17-20—Golden Text, Dan. i. 8—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

8. "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself." The verse selected for the golden text does not always seem to reach the heart of the lesson, but in this case I think it does. Daniel may truly be said to have been a man of holy purposes and desires. In chapter x, 11, 19, he is called a man greatly beloved, and the margin says a man of desires. In chapter ix, 3, he says, "I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting and sackcloth and ashes." He purposed at all cost to know the God of Israel and live only for Him.

9. "Now God had brought Daniel into favor and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs." It is most profitable to note in this prophecy and in all Scripture the working of God, and to yield ourselves fully to Him that He may work in us the secret of the best possible Christian life. In verse 2 it is said that the Lord gave Jehoiakim and the holy vessels into the hand of the king of Babylon, and in verse 17 God gave Daniel and his friends knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom. We learned last quarter in John's gospel that all circumstances are intended to give God an opportunity to be glorified (John ix, 3; xi, 4).

10. "And the prince of the eunuchs said unto Daniel, I fear my lord the king." The fear of man bringeth a snare, but whose trusteth in the Lord happy is he. The prince feared man, for he did not know God. Daniel knew God and feared no man. We may hope that through Daniel the prince came to know the God of Daniel. Unless through us those who know not God are learning to know Him, our testimony is not as good as it might be.

11, 12. "Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days, and let them give us pulse to eat and water to drink." The blessing of the Lord upon very plain food will do more for our health than the richest food without His blessing. Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word of God (Math. iv, 4). Daniel did not live to eat. He would not bow down to idols and probably refrained from the wine and meat from the king's table because it was dedicated to idols. In chapter x, 3, it is implied that he did both eat meat and drink wine, except when specially waiting upon God.

13, 14. "So he consented to them in this matter, and proved them ten days." Daniel was willing that he and his friends should be judged by the outward evidences. Our Lord said that His works bore witness of Him (John v, 36). We are His workmanship that we may glorify Him by good works which men can see (Eph. ii, 10; Titus iii, 8; Math. v, 16), and although there may be no sin in eating meat or drinking wine, yet to cause another to stumble by doing either, or by attending the opera or the theater, indulging in the dance or the card table, is wrong before God (Rom. xiv, 21). The child of God does not need the things of this world to satisfy his soul. He becomes abundantly satisfied with Him who is all together lovely.

15. "Fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children." This was the condition of Daniel and his friends at the end of ten days as compared with the others who were chosen with them to stand in the king's palace. It was manifest in their case that the blessing of the Lord made rich even in the matter of flesh and blood (Prov. x, 22). The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show Himself strong on behalf of those whose hearts are whole toward Him (II Chron. xvi, 9).

16. "Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat and the wine that they should drink and gave them pulse." And some would say that they were altogether too narrow minded, and should have eaten what was set before them, asking no questions, but it was to honor the God of Israel that they did it. Some Christians are now considered very odd indeed because they have adopted as a life motto "What would Jesus do?"

17. "As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom, and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams." Why he should have the latter we shall see as we go on. In a strange land, where the true God was not known, they desired to make Him known by their lives and testimony, and God honored them by giving them that which would most glorify Him. Wherever He sees a heart willing to be wholly His He will see to it that the heart is filled with Himself and with His Spirit for His service. He knows all the circumstances in which we will ever be placed, and He will not fail to meet all our need that He may be glorified (Phil. iv, 19). The first "behold" in the Bible is in connection with giving, and God said, "Behold, I have given" (Gen. i, 29).

18, 19. "Among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah; therefore stood they before the king." As they had excelled before in body, so now they excelled in learning and wisdom, and it was all the Lord's doing, because they trusted in Him and desired to glorify Him. While outwardly they stood before the king of Babylon they could truly say with Elijah, "The Lord God of Israel liveth before whom I stand" (I Kings xvii, 1), and with Paul, "God whose I am and whom I serve" (Acts xxvii, 23). They stood before the king of Babylon in the name of the Lord God of Israel, believing that therefore they were there.

20. "Ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm." Thus the king of Babylon found them upon examination, because their wisdom was of God. The wisdom of this world is a vain thing and wholly unable to understand the things of God. That is one of the great truths taught repeatedly in this book, and perhaps is one reason why the religious wisdom of this world in certain so-called higher critics would, if it could, set aside this book, as well as some others. But it is written, "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven" (Ps. cxix, 89), so that not only is Daniel there, but his book too.

21. "And Daniel continued even unto the first year of King Cyrus." Thus he lived all through the 70 years of the captivity, and we find him also in the third year of Cyrus and in the first year of Darius the Mede (Dan. x, 1, xi, 1). Not only did he live, but he continued a faithful witness for God. Patient continuance in well doing (Rom. ii, 7) is a good evidence of growth in grace. Our Lord said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye My disciples indeed" (John viii, 31).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 9, "A Good Vacation"—Text, Mark vi, 7-12-13-30-32.

"Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile."

It is an old saying that "the devil never takes a vacation." This is sometimes quoted against pastors and other Christian workers who do take an occasional rest. It has no pertinence in this connection. We are not to take our orders from him nor to imitate his example. Our Master in His earthly life did rest, and told His apostles to do so. We are not wrong in following His example. No labor is so exhausting to nerve force as work of mind and soul in caring for men's spiritual needs. The manual laborer tires muscles; food and sleep repair the waste. The manager of affairs of business has a heavier task and more exhausting service in brain care and nervous strain. He needs relaxation from thought problems. Sleep and exercise and change of scene become necessary. But he who carries sorrows of heart, burdens of men's sins, anxieties of soul for the eternal well being of his fellows, taxes all powers of body, mind and spirit. He needs to escape from the sight of men to the

CLAIMS AND PROOFS.

(A DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARENT AND TEACHER.)

PARENT:—What school do you represent, sir?

TEACHER:—The Blackstone Female Institute.

PARENT:—Well, what do you claim for your school? I suppose you are like all the rest. You claim that it is better than any other school to be found.

TEACHER:—No, I do not claim that. The claim of the Blackstone Female Institute can be put in one sentence. We give the rough instruction, and a positive Christian influence, at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the welfare of both teacher and pupil.

PARENT:—That is a sweeping claim. It is an easy matter to make claims, but it is not so easy to prove them. If you can prove that you measure up to your claim, parents should be entirely willing to place their daughters at the Blackstone school.

TEACHER:—What you say is true. It is easy to make great claims, but we do not ask you to accept our claims simply because we say so or upon our own testimony. I will prove to you by impartial, well-informed witnesses that our claim is a just one. First,

As to the Character of our Instruction

We offer as a witness the leading educator in the State of Virginia, the Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of Schools and Colleges. Read the following letters:

BLACKSTONE, VA., June 23, 1899.
DR. W. W. SMITH,
WOMAN'S COLLEGE,
LYNCHBURG, VA.

DEAR DR:—You had with you at the Woman's College the last session three graduates of the Blackstone Institute. I write to ask you what the Faculty thought of the preparation which they had received at the Institute before coming to you. Also I will be obliged to you if you will state your opinion of the Institute as a training school for the College, as your frequent visits to the Institute and your acquaintance with the members of the Faculty and their qualifications for their work renders your opinion of special worth.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

LYNCHBURG, VA., JUNE 24, 1899.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
PRINCIPAL, BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

MY DEAR BRO:—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered College classes and showed themselves well qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and nine of your Faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates. To render correlation effective I consider two things necessary, an adjusted course of instruction and a Faculty familiar with the courses of the Woman's College and in sympathy with its methods. These you have. I hope, in my turn, that you find the graduates of our College whom you have taken into your Faculty, superior as teachers and worthy as Christian women.

Yours truly,
WM. W. SMITH

These letters show that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Second, We offer at least

Two Hundred Testimonials of Parents

whose daughters have attended the Blackstone Institute, which testimonials declare with no uncertain sound that the claim which we make is amply proven, if the parents of our pupils are trustworthy witnesses. We are willing to rest our case on this kind of testimony. It is easy for the Principal and Faculty of any school to make strong claims. These claims are worthless without proof. We do not make claims for the Blackstone Institute and then offer our own statements as proof of the claims, but we leave it to parents to weigh the testimony in their own minds.

PARENT:—Well, I must say that the testimony of the Faculty of the Woman's College is equal to expert testimony in a case at court. But where are your testimonials from parents?

TEACHER:—Here they are, as many as you can wish for, printed in the back of this catalogue. There are testimonials here from all over the Virginia Conference, from many of the preachers and leading citizens in various counties. You also find in this catalogue a full statement of the purpose and aim of the institution, the course of study, the schedule of charges, and other necessary information. I have presented my claim. I have also presented my proofs, which are not merely my words, but the opinions of others. If you wish any more definite information write to—hills and woods and sea. He needs to replace the babel of voices with the songs of birds, the murmur of breezes in the tree tops and thunder of surges on the sand. Here God speaks to him, and angels strengthen him for renewed service. Moses talked with God in the wilderness. He left the crowded camp and in the mountain top saw visions of the heavenly sanctuary which he copied for earthly service. He there learned laws which have molded the legislation of all later ages. Elijah in the same mountain height received messages from God and went back among men to anoint a prophet and two kings who should change the fate of nations.

Jesus in the mountain mapped the whole of His life course and overcame the power of the tempter. He often sought rest and recovery of strength in solitary communings by day and by night in the wilderness with Him who is the source of all strength.

But it is a great mistake to use a vacation just for pleasure. Mere enjoyment is unworthy the seeking of any one. Nor has a person the right to a vacation who has not earned it by hard toil or found the need of it in some sickness or infirmity. As digestion waits on appetite, so does benefit in vacation depend on the sense of need. These resting times should be so used as not to tax the powers already tried, but to bring to them recuperation and new vigor. Summer schools and exhausting travel may be serious mistakes in one's experience. Idleness is not always best, but change of surroundings and occupation and opening of new fields of thought and experience are valuable. Let the city worker seek the country. The country toiler may well visit the city and find new life and energy and uplift for his part in the work of the world. Whoever we are, and wherever we go, we should always get closer to God.

confined to England, with short trips to parts of Scotland and Ireland. His travels, so extensive as to astonish the world by his ceaseless activity, were small in comparison of miles traversed with those of his helper, Francis Asbury, in America. But Asbury's journeys were short compared with those of one of our present bishops, who literally traverse the earth in their episcopal tours. Bishop Henry W. Warren was elected to the episcopacy in 1880. He was a pastor at the time. He entered the ministry in the New England conference, but filled some of the most important pulpits in other conferences before he was made bishop. He is one of the best balanced, "all round men" in the land. As preacher, administrator, writer, counselor, he is eminent. During the past year he has been visiting our South American missions. Peru and Chile on the west coast were first seen; then he crossed the Andes to Buenos Ayres, Uruguay and the east coast missions. He has supervision for two years. His next foreign field may be Europe or Japan and China. So our bishops keep oversight of the worldwide field of Methodism.

The unhappy Christian doesn't have much oil in his lamp and so the wick smokes. He has to turn it low to save oil and so it doesn't give much light. Fill up, brother, and turn up the light; plenty of oil, if you will only use it!

METHODIST RECORDER

is now located in its own grand new building, n. e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

For thirty years this school has been preparing young people for practical business life. It teaches Single, Double Entry and Joint-Stock Book-keeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English, &c. Send for catalogue, showing its splendid methods in preparing its students for business, and its success in securing positions for them, and for new building discounts.

GRATUITOUS AND UNSOLICITED COMMENDATIONS.

Leading Business College South of the Potomac river.—Philadelphia Stenographer.

The great success of the Smithdeal College is due to honest work and the deep interest the instructors take in the pupils.—Richmond Dispatch.

Prof. Smithdeal is a deadly enemy of educational shams and superficial methods of teaching.—Practical Age, Moline, Ill.

We do not hesitate to single it out as an example for all such institutions.—Western Trade Journal, Chicago, Ill.

The results accomplished speak for themselves, and will bear comparison with those accomplished by any similar institution in any part of the country.—Mercantile and Financial Times, New York City.

This school has long been recognized as a leading one, and we are glad to see that it is winning from the press and people the praise it so richly merits.—Progressive Farmer, Raleigh, N. C.

This college is well-known and stands high in business circles.—Portsmouth Star.

Everybody has heard of Smithdeal Business College, but comparatively few know of its great value in fitting young people for successful business life.—Richmond Times.

Your institution has been chosen as the one best representing its class in your State.—Register Publishing Company, Ann Arbor, Mich.

It is a first-class school in every respect.—South Boston Times.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted as a value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School! This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Biblical teaching is bringing spiritual forces into operation which eventually will render war impossible.—Rev. Dr. G. W. Davis, Presbyterian, St. Paul.

Real Freedom of the Soul.

The soul that lives and moves in the invisible spiritual kingdom is alone really and truly free.—Rev. T. M. Hartman, Presbyterian, McKeesport.

Influence.

Like produces like, and all influence, good or bad, makes an eternal imprint on thought and character.—Rev. Benjamin F. Fritz, United Brethren, Columbus, O.

Power of the Golden Rule.

If the golden rule were but brought into universal play, nine-tenths of human misery would vanish in a day.—Rev. Dr. W. A. Robinson, Methodist, Cincinnati.

Test of Christianity.

The test of your Christianity is this: Do you want what the world has or do you want most of all to give the world what you have?—Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Personality.

Personality is that thing in men by which they think and will and love, and these three attributes make up the personality of God.—Archdeacon Cyrus Brady, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Aspirations.

Aspirations must be planted from the outside, and when they are in bloom the wisest offer of self help will assure their elevation in life.—Rev. Dr. Henry C. McCook, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Success and Manhood.

Mere money making is not success. A man is rich or poor not according to what he has, but what he is. 'Tis only noble to be good. Manhood overtops all titles.—Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, Reformed, New York.

Liberty of Opinion.

Liberty of opinion should be more sacredly guarded than even soundness of opinion, for liberty is the indispensable condition of progress in the apprehension of truth.—Rev. Henry W. Pinkham, Baptist, Denver.

God's Glory.

The glory of God is like unto a gigantic spring which emanates from an unseen and inexhaustible fountain and purls silently into the sea of humanity. There it mingles with the mellow light of the sun and is a balm to every one.—Rev. Dr. A. C. Garrett, Episcopalian, Dallas.

Real Home Longed For by Human Hearts.

The seashell never forgets its ocean home, even if you carry it far away inland. It still sings the song of the ocean. So the heart of humanity is homesick and longs for its real home, nestled in the loving heart of God.—Rev. A. M. Harvot, Christian Church, Cincinnati.

Power of Christ's Spirit.

As long as men are governed by selfishness and unworthy ambition so long will trouble exist as a natural result of this disposition, but when the spirit of Christ pervades human life all these miseries will disappear like the mist before the rising sun.—Rev. Richard E. Sykes, Universalist, Denver.

The Church Necessary.

The church is necessary for the preservation of the institutions of the country. What is to prevent humanity becoming corrupt again as it did in the days of old, about which we have just been hearing? It is faith, the converted, consecrated home. As I said, every temple like this is a preservative of the institutions of this land, and, as beautiful music harmonizes and has a softening, soothing influence, so like the god of harmony this church will stand and create harmony among the people; faith will sanctify the home and the heart, and with sanctification the heart of God will be drawn nearer to all who love him.—Archbishop Ryan, Catholic, Philadelphia.

Journalism.

There was a time when journalism was seriously regarded as an opportunity for public education, and those at the head of it held fast by that ideal. That time, alas, is past. I know many young men on newspapers in this city and several of the chief editors. I know I am not guilty of any uncharitable criticism when I declare that there is not one single paper in this city with any considerable circulation that cares a fig for any moral thing but making money. There are some that loudly declare that they are in the educational business and that they feel responsibility to the public, but an extended experience makes me very certain that the louder their protests the more hypocritical are they. Those that make the greatest parade are the worst of the lot. In them it is most difficult to get a plain contradiction even when they have slanderously lied.—Dr. William S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York.

Three Classes of Christians.

Church people are divided into three classes—workers, shirkers and jerkers. We despise driving horses who run because they know they have to, and we admire those which, when in harness, are all eagerness. So some Christians are always eager to perform their duty. A horse will sometimes reach a puddle in the road and will shy from it, but the crack of the whip will urge him on. There are some Christians who are continually scratching their heads to find the minimum of Christian duties. A soldier at the battle of San Juan hill had fallen mortally wounded and some of his comrades rushed to him and offered to slake his thirst with water from the canteen. But he refused it, uttering: "Save the water for the battle line. They need you yonder in the fight. I'm undone." So let us transform our actions and words into brave deeds, not only in the interest of ourselves, but to others of our brethren who need the strength and grace sufficient for salvation.—Rev. Grant K. Lewis, Christian Church, Denver.

'TIS NEVER QUITE THE SAME AGAIN.

An humble cottage 'neath the hill
Where children laugh and romp at will —With parents' tender love and care,
How could their lives be else than fair?
O, let them all be glad to-day,
For swift the years will pass away,
And when they're women, grown and men,
'Twill never be the same again.

Together all their tasks are done,
Their interests are all as one;
The selfsame board they gather 'round,
And at one altar all are found;
The same dear song, the same dear prayer,
The same old Bible all may share;
But when they leave the home—O, then
'Tis never quite the same again.

The wedding bells may sweetly ring,
And glory be on everything,
But when one leaves the dear home nest,
'Tis lonelier for all the rest.
And if they one by one shall leave
How can the parents help but grieve?
All come and go, and love—but then
'Tis never quite the same again.

In other homes as dear and sweet
Will be the sound of childish feet;
In many homes, instead of one,
There will be frolic, laughter fun.
The old love will be true and deep
But sometimes it may sigh and weep
For something gone, somewhere, some when,
And 'tis not quite the same again.

Ah, well, perhaps 'tis better so,
That deeper meanings we may know;
There is no loss, no grief no pain,
That may not bring its own sweet gain;
And in the blessed land above
There'll be again one home, one love.
There one in heart and one in name,
At last 'twill ever be the same.

—Mrs. Frank A. Breck, in "The Youth's Companion."

SPEECH AT AN ENGLISH TWENTIETH CENTURY THANK OFFERING MEETING.

Then came what, with all deference to the other speakers, was unmistakably THE speech of the evening, that of the Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, who was introduced by the Chairman as "the Superintendent of the Royal Albert Hall Circuit."

The Rev. Dinsdale T. Young said that he honestly felt that his presence there was a superfluity—he hoped not a superfluity of naughtiness. He had hoped that all he had to do was to say Amen to everything that had been said that evening. But he could not refrain from saying that Mr. Perks—his honored steward—must be one of the proudest men in England at this hour to have been the founder and originator of a Fund that had filled the Albert Hall that night in such an unprecedented fashion Methodistically. (Applause.) Mr. Perks' name, he was sure, must be covered with fadeless glory, and they must all hope that he would be spared long to see the results that would accrue to Methodism from this Fund. (Hear, hear.) How proper it was that the Twentieth Century Fund should make an appeal to the young people of Methodism! It was historically proper. Jesus Christ was himself a young man, a young man in His ministry—

"And not a golden hair was grey Upon His crucifixion day."

It was a Young Man, he might say that "ever liveth to make intercession for us." Some of the finest martyrs were young men and young women. Some of the chief Apostles of our faith in every age had been young men and women. And in this London what glorious things had been wrought for Christ by men while they were yet in their youth. William Morley Punshon moved London as a young man. Charles Haddon Spurgeon did the same. Some of the greatest achievements in this land had been wrought, under God, by young manhood and young womanhood. So that we were in the right succession by appealing to young men and women in the sacred cause of Jesus Christ as represented by this Twentieth Century Fund. He often thought that there was a wonderfully close parallel between the early days of Christianity and the early days of Methodism—in this respect conspicuously. John Wesley began his deathless work when he was a young man. His early associates were young men. He liked to think sometimes about that Holy Unb in Oxford. It was an embryo that had developed into the greatest Protestant organization on God's earth today. (Hear, hear.) A very powerful contrast might be drawn between the Methodism of those young men and the young Methodism of England today, and the present day Methodism of youth would have an enormous advantage. But he ventured to point out, as a young man, that it was a most instructive fact that Methodism began among young people. All the earliest Methodists—all the Holy Club—were young folk, and highly cultivated young folk. He had heard people say, "You Methodists have greatly improved socially!" and they told us, "You were a very ignorant company in your beginnings, but now you are quite culchawed." (Laughter.) He did not know whether the President of the Conference would agree with him or not, but he ventured to suggest that the reverse was true—that we had intellectually come down in the world. He would prove it. All those Holy Club Methodists could read their Greek Testaments. They were scholars in the technical sense. Methodism was born in a University. We had no right to be ashamed of the intellectual heredity in which we stood. John Wesley was one of the greatest scholars of his century. The earliest Methodists were all scholars, and there was no need to hearken to the siren and snobbish voices that said it was unworthy of cultured young people to belong to the Methodist Church. All those young Methodists of Oxford were Bible readers—that was a heredity for which we might thank God. They were all men of prayer, philanthropic and earnest. It was from such sires that by God's grace the Methodists of these modern days had descended. There was no worse snobbery than that which turned its back when it became rich or of social prestige upon the Methodist Church. He submitted, therefore, that it was historically right to appeal to young Methodism in this great behoof. (Applause.) Further, it was not only historically but immediately right. Methodism had an irresistible claim upon them, the young men and women of Methodism. He rejoiced to be a hereditary Methodist, whose father suffered by reason of his faith. And if he might be allowed a personal reference, it was one of the crowning honours of the Chairman of that assembly that his own example was such a royal rebuke to all those who forgot their Methodist heritage and the loyalty that was demanded of them by it. (Applause.) He would venture to appeal, before he sat down, to the young men and women and the boys and girls who were present, to be loyal to the Methodist Church, and express their loyalty not only by their efforts for that Fund, but by their adhesion to our creed. Let them be loyal to the Methodist Church, and that loyalty would be a noble expression of the Christianity of Christ. (Applause.) We believed that we were a Church. There were some who called us a "religious body." He objected to that carnal symbolism. (Laughter.) We were an established Church. Charles Haddon Spurgeon came to the words in Irish, as he was reading to his congregation: "Israel, I will establish her," "I believe in an established Church," said he; and when his congregation look astonished, he added, "but I want to know who established it." (Applause.) So did he. We believed ours had been established on the Rock of Ages, and that the gates of hell should not prevail against it. (Applause.) We were a Church in the noblest sense of the term. It was immediately right to plead with the young people in that behalf when one considered the necessities of the youth of England today. He could take them to many a village on the Yorkshire Wolds and on the banks of the Tyne, and show them villages where young men and women were persecuted and our boys and girls persecuted, because of their loyalty to Nonconformity and the Methodist Church. Mr. Perks had said that by this Fund—and Methodism supported him—"We will abolish such persecution as far as possible." (Applause.) In behalf of the youth of our villages, who were often menaced by parsondom and squirearchy he pleaded that this Fund might go to the villages as an evangelising force. Let them look at the Mammonism of the age. Let them look at our drink bill, which would be a disgrace to a pagan country. Let them look at the uncleanness that permeated society, and the terrible indifference which prevailed—and let them save the England of the morrow by saving the boys and girls of today. Might they go into the lists and fight the fight bravely as their fathers did before them, and win the crown of glory that now glittered on their fathers' triumphant brow. Let the young men and young women go out, play their parts well, and win their spurs of knight-hood in the Methodist Church. (Great Applause.)—London "Methodist Recorder."

JOSEPH RABINOWITZ.

Probably no one has held a more unique position among the ranks of Christian Jews than Joseph Rabinowitz. A lawyer in Kischineff, Russia, a scholar and philanthropist, he had secured a commanding influence among the Jews of that empire, and about twenty-five years ago, a time of much persecution in Russia, visited Palestine to consider a colonization scheme. Among the other books which he took to study up the situation was a New Testament, recommended to him as furnishing an admirable directory of the sacred places of Jerusalem and its vicinity. During that visit he gave careful study to the whole question and, as the story is told, while on the Mount of Olives, looking over the city and calling to mind its long desolation, there came to him the conviction that it was because the Messiah had been rejected. This resulted in his conversion to Christianity and his conviction that the only hope of his people was in accepting the Redeemer they had rejected. Returning to Russia, he announced his change of view and proclaimed his opinion fearlessly, meeting, as was to have been expected, with much opposition and persecution. To the surprise of many, he secured permission from the Government for the erection of a Christian synagogue, and there he preached to regular audiences which have grown continuously during the succeeding years. In 1884 he was baptized in Berlin, and from that time has exerted a strong, altho quiet influence until his death, which took place quite recently.—"Independent."

Prepares boys for College, Ministry or Business. Complete in its equipment, thorough in its instruction, and moderate in its charges.

The health, order, and high character of the work last session evidenced by the following:

1. Only one case of serious sickness (pneumonia), and that yielded promptly to treatment.
2. Forty-three (43) per cent. of the students received no demerits during the entire session.
3. Thirty-nine (39) per cent. passed with distinction on all their classes.

The fact that nineteen (19) degrees, professional and classical, were conferred this year on students prepared at the Academy by the Colleges and Universities of this and other States shows the thorough character of the work we are doing.

JOINING THE CHURCH IN YOUTH.

The following prominent leaders in the Church united with the Church when eighteen years of age: Dr. Buckley, Dr. Smith, editor of the Pittsburg "Christian Advocate"; President Bashford, of Ohio Wesleyan University; President Reed, of Dickinson College; Dr. Terry, of Garrett Biblical Institute; and Dr. Burt, representing the missions in Italy.

The following when seventeen years of age: President Warren, of Boston University; Ex-President Fiske, of Albion College; Dr. Gobin, President of De Pauw University; Dr. Moore, editor of the "Western Christian Advocate"; Dr. Curtis, of the Western Book Concern, and Dr. Bowen, of the Gammon Theological Seminary.

Dr. Nast, editor of the "Christian Apolgete," the honored son of his illustrious father; and the lamented Dr. Swindells, of Philadelphia, united with the Church when sixteen years old.

The following joined the Church when fifteen years of age: Dr. Berry, editor of the "Epworth Herald"; Dr. Butler of the Missions in Mexico; and Dr. Monroe, Secretary of the General Conference.

Dr. Kelley, editor of the "Methodist Review," and Dr. Eaton, agent of the Methodist Book Concern, united with the Church when fourteen years of age.

The following joined the Church when thirteen years of age: Dr. Palmer, Missionary Secretary; President Moore, of Moore's Hill College; and Drs. Graw, Chaffee, Coleman, Chadwick, and Albert.

Dr. Upham, of Drew Seminary, and Dr. Baldwin, Recording Missionary

Secretary, joined when twelve years old.

The following joined when eleven years of age: Dr. Jesse Bowman Young, editor of the "Central Christian Advocate;" Dr. Drees, of the South America Conference; and Bishop Cranston.

President King, of Cornell College, Iowa; Ex-President Sweet, of Baker University; and Dr. Wing, of New York East Conference, united with the Church when ten years old.

Dr. J. W. Hamilton, of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society, joined the Church when nine years old; and Dr. Manley S. Hard, of the Board of Church Extension, when only eight years of age.

Dr. Lanahan, of the Baltimore Conference, answers: "I joined the Church when a boy." And Bishop Hartzell says: "I began preparing for the ministry when fifteen years old."

These names, and the character and career for which they severally stand, may well arrest the attention of the Church and arouse every soul to earnest prayer and utmost endeavor.

"I revere the young," said Wesley "for what they may become." The surest, swiftest way to the world's regeneration and salvation is through the sanctification of childhood and the consecration of youth by the power of the Holy Ghost.—N. Y. "Advocate."

BIBLE STUDY.

(Tennis S. Hamlin, D. D., in "The Independent.")

We are dependent upon the Bible for that knowledge of Jesus Christ which makes trust in Him, love for Him and union with him possible, vital and enduring. The spiritual life, in its source and essence, is the divine life of the Redeemer imparted to us. In its manifestation it is conformity to His example, the same purpose of obedience and self-sacrifice being in us that was in Him. We must know Him as our perfect example; and those as proximate examples whose lives are recorded in the Holy Scripture, and whom we are to follow to the extent that they followed the Christ. As the whole Bible is the record, under various literary forms, of God's dealing with men to make them spiritual, whoever would become spiritual must study the whole Bible. He must learn what God can do, and will do, with him, from what He has done with others. He must contemplate in history the certain final punishment of sin, and the certain final reward of righteousness. He must see in biography, temptations yielded to or resisted; motives gradually sullied or purified; character undermined or solidly built. He must catch inspiration from poetry, proverb, parable and romance. He must get enthusiasm, courage and hope from prophecy and promise. He must learn prayer from Moses, David, Daniel, Paul, Jesus; praise from Miriam, Deborah, all the Psalmists and all the Apostles. He must educate emotions, affections, conscience and will in the school of Jesus. He must train himself to think, and to do in company with Peter and John and their fellow-disciples in daily, intimate companionship with their Master and his own.

Not only must the Bible study which is to issue in spiritual life be thus comprehensive, but it must also be thorough, sane, unprejudiced, devout. It must not be prosecuted for the purpose of upholding some system of theology, or ecclesiastical polity, or philosophy of life present and future, but with an eye single and a mind open to the truth. The student must be as willing to unlearn as to learn; as hospitable to new ideas and views as to the confirmation of the oldest and most cherished. He must be neither a partisan nor an advocate; neither insular nor provincial; not a man in the fullest sense a cosmopolitan; a man of all lands, all times, all customs, all languages, all races of mankind. He must recognize the universality of the Bible and not interpret it in the light of his narrow experience of life, denying as veritable whatever does not correspond with that experience. He must see the perspective of the Bible, and not try to force into its earliest words the truth that belongs only to its latest, after God had been for long centuries speaking "by divers portions and in divers manners." He must have, as far as in him lies, and he must sedulously cultivate, the historic sense, the poetic inspiration, the romantic imagination. He must learn to discriminate the plain statement of fact from the rhetorical figure; prose from poetry; history from parable. He must understand that the profoundest truths can be communicated through fiction, and often in no other way, so that our Lord's supreme revelation, in words, of divine love comes to us in the story of the lost son found again. He must thus everywhere abjure literalism; boldly break the shell to reach the kernel; and never forget that "the letter killeth" while only "the spirit giveth life."

TAXES ON PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Believing that the law imposing taxes upon personal property is a just one and that it is the duty of the rich to meet its requirements conscientiously, Mrs. Emmons Blaine, of Chicago, has reported to the assessors in that city all her property of this character, the amount being $1,563,000. This is the largest individual list which the assessors have received. Mrs. Blaine, the widow of the son of the late James G. Blaine, inherited her fortune from her father, the late Cyrus H. McCormick. She has recently given a large sum to be used in establishing a school for the instruction of teachers.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

Central M. E. Church, Portsmouth, expects to build a new Church on Washington street to cost about $30,000. A subscription of $7,500 was made in a few days.

The papers report that the committee of Chestnut-Street Church, Berkeley, have selected a site on Berkeley avenue for the new Church. The Church will add about $10,000 to the $20,000 given by Mr. Tilley.

Prof. A. C. Wightman, of Randolph-Macon College, has been offered the Chair of Biology in the University of Arkansas. He is holding it under consideration.

It is reported that Bishop Wilson has suggested the appointment of Dr. J. Wightman to supply the pulpit of Main-Street Church, Danville, until Conference.

The friends of Dr. A. G. Brown are very solicitous about his condition, which shows no improvement.

Rev. W. H. Dunkley has been engaged to assist Rev. B. F. Lipscomb. He will have special care of the new Church in the north end of the city.

The salary of Rev. L. W. Guyer, pastor of the West Street M. E. Church, has been increased from $300 to $500 per annum. The Church will pay out in full all of its Conference collections. Mr. Guyer is doing a grand work in his Church.—"Times."

Bishop John N. Newman, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of San Francisco, died at 2:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Bishop Newman had been in failing health for a year past, but it was only a week ago that his condition really alarmed his friends. The immediate cause of his death was pneumonia and myelitis.

RELIGION A REASONABLE SERVICE.

(Sam Jones, in "Zion's Outlook.")

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Rom. xiii:1.

There is nothing more reasonable than religion and the conditions upon which we may become Christians. It is reasonable, right, and wise to become a Christian, and we are besought to do so by the mercies of God. The great question in this nineteenth century is not whether a man ought to be religious, but how can he be? We have in our text a lesson: "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." That's it.

What do you mean by that? I mean simply this: There is but one road in the moral universe of God; heaven's at one end and hell at the other, and this text simply says: "Keep your back on hell and your face on heaven." In this road, and there's only one, if you turn your back on heaven, hell would be before you. A man doesn't have to take a week's journey through the wilderness, across the mountains of God, to be in the road to heaven; all he has got to do is just to turn around, and he is just as much on the road to heaven as anybody. There's only one road. Which direction are you taking? Up or down? Hellward or heavenward? This text turns a man around, and turns his face toward heaven, and turns his back upon all that's bad. If I turn my back on the good, then I'm bound to go to the bad. If the train I am on is going forty miles an hour southward to Chattanooga, I can't come to Cincinnati. Its momentum, its speed, its power all carry me in the other direction.

"Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." No man ever was or ever will be religious until he settles the question somewhere along the line of life that he will have religion. The Spirit of God, the Gospel of Christ, the Sabbath-school, with its training, a mother with her prayers, never made any man religious. When a man once decides the question of his destination all the resources of God help him along. How are you going to make a farmer out of a boy when he doesn't want to farm? How are you going to make a lawyer out of your boy when he doesn't want to study law? If you want to help him how are you going to help him? How can God Almighty help a man to be religious when a man hasn't made up his mind to be religious. That's the question. This text involves the idea of choice. Do you know what choice means? It means I'll take this in preference to that. It means I'll give up that and take this.

There is a great difference between a desire to be religious and a choice to be religious. A man may die desiring to be a Christian and yet he may go to hell, for he dies without religion; but no man ever did make a choice to be a Christian and die without religion. Choice means, I'll give this up and take that. Choice means, I will sell out all I have and invest in this. I will be religious. A man must come to an agreement with his Maker. O, happy man that has reached this point in his experience, where he can look into the face of his Maker and say, "Father, God, from this moment I will be loyal to thee; I will do right, I will quit wrong!"

"Fear God and keep His commandments." Let a man come to the point in his understanding with his Maker and say, "In thy name and with thy blessing I will quit all that's wrong and do all that's right," he is a happy man. There's no doubt about that; there's something sensible in that. It's astonishing how we know right from wrong and wrong from right. It's astonishing how many people know all about these two things! There's something practical about all this. Quit what's wrong and get to doing what's right. That's it! Just as certainly as any railroad loads into or out of this city, just so certainly a man who will quit wrong and take to doing right will find his way to God.

If man has assumed a right attitude towards God, then the next question comes, "What are you going to do about this world?" This world is a multitudinous affair, and the apostolic injunction is, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind."

Do you know what's the matter in this city? Is it the drunkenness, lying, thieving, licentiousness and outbreaking wickedness of the Church members? No, sir! But, if you want to know what's paralyzing the Church and destroying its heart power, I'll tell you: It's the tide of worldliness that's sweeping over your homes and dragging families down to hell. It's dancing with this world, and drinking with this world, and going to theatres with this world, until we have only about one more thing to do, and that's to go to hell with this world!

A great many of us are doing that very same thing, too. I like to see a Christian put himself in a right attitude toward the world. This world has no right to furnish a fashion for us to be governed by. Fashion! Custom! I declare it has reached that point now where some of our Churches increase their membership by dragging the Church to see new families moving into the neighborhood, and saying to them: "If you want to get into society you'll have to join our Church." I am glad of every social feature in this universe, but you know what I mean by "society." These dinners, where you're considered stingy, may be impolite, if you don't have wine on your table, and cards in your home, and Germans in your house; that's the society I mean. It is a heartless cannibal, feeding upon soul and body. "But every one has cards, or social dances and Germans!" Everybody! It's a lie! They don't, and I'm glad of it.

My house is consecrated to God, just like this Church, and nobody comes there to dance or to engage in a wine supper, or a ball, or a game of sports.

They all know that house is God's house. I will protect my home. I never shall let this tide of worldliness sweep over my children. I see what it has done for others. I see how others are cursed and blighted. A Catholic priest in New York said that nineteen women out of twenty who had lost their character, and come to the confessional, told him they got their downfall in a ball-room.

I know a man who opposes the world is called a fanatic, and worse things than that. You Christians need to be looked after. If these sinners want to dance and drink and carouse about you I can safely plead with them; but, when a man professing to be a Christian, goes into these things, I will denounce him as Jesus Christ denounced whited sepulchers eighteen hundred years ago. What's the use talking to sinners when the deacons and leaders of the Churches, and stewards, rent their houses to women of ill-fame, and their property for bar-rooms and whiskey shops? You will have to sweep before your door: before you can reach Jesus' heart.

Lord Jesus, give us men who say, "I have settled some questions with God. I am going to settle it now that I won't drink, nor play cards, nor run with this world, nor do anything for or have anything to do with it any further, if Jesus Christ will be with me."

One of the Governors of Georgia removed to the capital of our State. His wife, a good woman, accompanied him. After they had moved into the city of Milledgeville she sent her children to school, and one afternoon they came home and said to their mother, "Mamma, if you don't take these red flannels off of us we'll quit school." "What's the matter?" said the mother. "Well," said the children, "all the other children laugh about wearing red flannels, as they're out of fashion." The Governor's wife said: "Now, look here, children, you musn't come here and complain about the fashions, because I set the fashions here, myself, for the other folks." Let's look this old world in the face, and set the fashion of what is right and keep it.

"Be not conformed to this world." Do right under all circumstances, and everywhere. Suppose you starve to death, do right anyhow. Come to a good understanding with the world, but do not follow or love it. I do not know that I have been any more lucky than other people, but I tell you this brethren, when I gave my heart to God, and my life to the service of God, this old world, somehow or another, thought I was in earnest. From that day to this no man has ever asked me to take a drink of whiskey; no man has ever invited me to a ball; no one has ever invited me to a German, or to play a game of cards. I heard a trifling old Methodist in my town say once, "Our candidates are grand boys; they've asked me seven times to drink this morning." A candidate knows whom to offer drinks to. God help me so to keep my life ever before people that they may never dare ask me to do an unholy thing. It is an insult to a good man to be asked to do anything a Christian should not do.

MUCH BUT NOT ENOUGH.

The "Pacific Methodist Advocate" says in a recent issue:

From a trustworthy source we learn that there are in the Southern Methodist Church forty-eight colleges and universities, valued at approximately $3,700,000, with an income of $583,000; an attendance of 7,517 students. In addition to the above there are nineteen separate academies, estimated value $561,850, with an annual income of about $66,500, with an enrollment of nearly 2,500 students. The above gives some idea of what our Church is doing for Christian education. This showing is truly inspiring when it is considered that the Methodist Church was not organized in America till 1784—one hundred and fifteen years ago. Methodism was born in a university, and she has ever been inspired by the spirit of her immortal founder and with the environment of her birth; so that she has ever sought and striven for the highest and noblest things, spiritual and intellectual. Methodism stands for the very highest ideals in all that goes to fit man for service and for the evangelization of the world.

This is much but not enough. If these figures be correct Harvard University, near Boston, Mass., is worth about four times as much as all Southern Methodist Institutions combined, and Leland Stanford University in California is worth five times as much. Harvard University is shot through and through with Unitarianism, and the president of the Leland Stanford University derides revivals. With irreligion thus entrenched in the East and thus fortified in the West, Methodism must equip her colleges in the centre for victorious warfare. The twentieth century must not close as does the nineteenth in this regard. When the twentieth century closes Methodism must own colleges and universities second to none in the world.

It is a shame that having begun in a university Methodism should have done no better in its first century. It is a shame that Leland Stanford, a California speculator and politician, gave more to one university in one gift than all Southern Methodists have ever given to all their institutions of learning combined.—"Wesleyan Advocate."

DR. BILLINGS' BEQUESTS.

The late Dr. Robert C. Billings, of Boston, bequeathed nearly $1,000,000 to educational or charitable institutions. Harvard University, the Museum of Fine Arts and the Institute of Technology receive $100,000 each; $50,000 is given to each of three hospitals; there are seven bequests of $25,000, one of which goes to Hampton Institute, and seventeen of $10,000, this list including Tuskegee Normal School and Atlanta. To the Institute of Technology's $100,000 is added $50,000 for the assistance of students who do not use liquor or tobacco. By the will of Mrs. Catherine M. White, of Evanston, Ill., the Art Institute of Chicago receives $200,000 and a fund for three scholarships.

Virginia's Attractions.

It is astonishing what a vast amount of rational enjoyment may be extracted from a ten days' visit to Virginia; how it may be made to compensate for the untold miseries of months of labor, and, in fact, obliterate the remembrance of the "ticker" or of "trial balances," which one must endure while tossing among the breakers of modern business.

In the Chesapeake & Ohio sections of the Old Dominion are bits of scenery, each bearing an indelible impress of Creation's hands, and each preserving memories of Nature's might. The Natural Bridge, the Grottoes of the Shenandoah, the Caverns of Luray, the New River canyons, tell stories widely different from Nature's structures of continental Europe; and Old Point Comfort, Williamsburg, Richmond and the Lower James disclose fragments of history of far greater interest to us of American birth than the treasures of the Old World. Pictures of delicious and magic beauty abound. In the heart of the Alleghenies health and pleasure seekers find life-giving waters and social enjoyment at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia Hot Springs, and a host of other resorts of world-wide fame. If one is an enthusiastic lover of military history, with an admiration for war-like deeds of war-like men, he may stand on almost any mountain in Virginia and gaze upon fields where men's hopes have been destroyed and upon plains which have wept bloody dew. The lover of Nature will see valleys of peace, and rich, fertile dells, through which silver rivers wind their graceful lines. The student of the utilitarian school may feast his eyes on mines of iron and zinc and coal, and while to the sentimental there are nooks fitted only to the intermingling of the lover's speech.

New Equipment on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway.

To accommodate the increasing travel over the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway the Pullman Company have just completed and placed in service on the "F. F. V." Limited four new twelve-section and drawing-room sleepers of the latest pattern and most magnificent furnishings. They are named after four of the picturesque and historic rivers crossed by the C. & O., viz: "Rappahannock," "Greenbrier," "Rapidan," and "Kanawha." They are fitted with the newest pattern wide vestibules and painted the regulation C. & O. color—a bright orange with brown and gold trimmings. The interior wood work is highly polished vermilion, the upholstery dark blue plush, except in the gentlemen's smoking rooms, which are large and commodious and upholstered in leather. The ladies toilet rooms are much larger than in sleepers heretofore built, a point much appreciated by the fair sex. The construction of the cars is such that when the berths are up there is more room over head, permitting better ventilation and freeing the cars from the low, stuffy appearance generally noticeable. They are lighted by electricity, and, in addition to the regular clusters in the ceiling, each berth is fitted with a small globe for the convenience of occupants.—"Evening Star," Washington, D. C.

CLAIMS AND PROOFS.

(A DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARENT AND TEACHER.)

PARENT:—What school do you represent, sir?

TEACHER:—The Blackstone Female Institute.

PARENT:—Well, what do you claim for your school? I suppose you are like all the rest. You claim that it is better than any other school to be found.

TEACHER:—No, I do not claim that. The claim of the Blackstone Female Institute can be put in one sentence. We give thorough Instruction, under positive Christian Influences, at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the welfare of both teacher and pupil.

PARENT:—That is a sweeping claim. It is an easy matter to make claims, but it is not so easy to prove them. If you can prove that you measure up to your claim, parents should be entirely willing to place their daughters at the Blackstone school.

TEACHER:—What you say is true. It is easy to make great claims, but we do not ask you to accept our claims simply because we say so or upon our own testimony. I will prove to you by impartial, well-informed witnesses that our claim is a just one. First,

As to the Character of our Instruction

We offer as a witness the leading educator in the State of Virginia, the Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of Schools and Colleges. Read the following letters:

BLACKSTONE, VA., June 23, 1899.
DR. W. W. SMITH,
WOMAN'S COLLEGE,
Lynchburg, Va.

DEAR DR:—You had with you at the Woman's College the last session three graduates of the Blackstone Institute. I write to ask you what the Faculty thought of the preparation which they had received at the Institute before coming to you. Also I will be obliged to you if you will state your opinion of the Institute as a training school for the College, as your frequent visits to the Institute and your acquaintance with the members of the Faculty and their qualifications for their work renders your opinion of special worth.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

LYNCHBURG, VA., JUNE 24, 1899.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
PRINCIPAL, BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

MY DEAR BRO:—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered College classes and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and nine of your Faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates. To render correlation effective I consider two things necessary, an adjusted course of instruction and a Faculty familiar with the course of the Woman's College and in sympathy with its methods. These you have. I hope, in my turn that you find the graduates of our College whom you have taken into your Faculty, superior as teachers and worthy as Christian women.

Yours truly,
W. W. SMITH

These letters show that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Second, We offer at least

Two Hundred Testimonials of Parents

whose daughters have attended the Blackstone Institute, which testimonials declare with no uncertain sound that the claim which we make is amply proven, if the parents of our pupils are trustworthy witnesses. We are willing to rest our case on this kind of testimony. It is easy for the Principal and Faculty of any school to make strong claims. These claims are worthless without proof. We do not make claims for the Blackstone Institute and then offer our own statements as proof of the claims, but we leave it to parents to weigh the testimony in their own minds.

PARENT:—Well, I must say that the testimony of the Faculty of the Woman's College is equal to expert testimony in a case at court. But where are your testimonials from parents?

TEACHER:—Here they are, as many as you can wish for, printed in the back of this catalogue. There are testimonials here from all over the Virginia Conference, from many of the preachers and leading citizens in various counties. You also find in this catalogue a full statement of the purpose and aim of the institution, the course of study, the schedule of charges, and other necessary information. I have presented my claim. I have also presented my proofs, which are not merely my words, but the opinions of others. If you wish any more definite information write to—

GENERAL PRACTICE.

Teeth and Health.

In late years more and more attention has been paid to the condition of the teeth of candidates for life insurance, and now the report of the dentist is considered of proportional value with that of the physician in determining the value of the "life." So important are the indications afforded by the teeth of the general health and strength of the constitution of candidates for the United States navy that unless a would-be cadet can pass a creditable examination at the hands of the dentist he must make up his mind to look for another calling. It is argued that if the teeth are not in good trim the digestion, and eventually, of course, the general health, and consequently the professional efficiency of the candidate must be impaired. These restrictions are now likely to extend to the army. One of the first signs of this movement is the announcement that a bill is to be passed to establish a dental corps in the United States army. It is proposed to make the army dentist a part of the medical corps, assigning one surgeon dentist, with the rank of major, to each brigade, and one surgeon dentist, with the rank of captain, to each regiment. The army dentists are to be graduates of reputable dental colleges. The teeth of the rank and file of the army are to be inspected periodically and kept in order, and the soldier himself is to be instructed how to second the efforts of the dentist.—Chicago Record.

Pharmaceutical Soaps.

The medical journals of Germany make mention of a new sulphur soap—thio-savonol—soluble in water. For the production of soaps of this character sulfurized oils are used. The thick liquid thio oil is made fluid with alcohol, and gradually mixed while being continually stirred with an equivalent volume of potash lye, which is likewise thinned with alcohol. The addition of large quantities of potash lye at one time produces separation of sulphur, but this danger becomes less toward the end of the saponification, and at last a small excess of potash lye is used. The fact that all the thio-savonol acid has saponified is indicated by the liquid appearing clear as a whole and a sample taken being clearly soluble in water as well as in alcohol. The excess of alkali is neutralized by volatile fatty acid. The soap solution thus obtained is freed from the alcohol in a steam bath and boiled down to the consistency of soft salve, being occasionally tested for neutrality. Eighty-five parts of this soap are mixed with 15 parts of glycerin. The percentage of water in this mixture is 12 and that of thio-savonol of potassium is 5.

New Stanch For Blood Flowing.

An original and efficacious device for stopping the flow of blood has for some time been used by the Chinese—a method, it is stated, still entirely unknown to the medical fraternity of this country and Europe. The plan is to use sachets filled with charcoal powder obtained from straw, the application of these fine bags showing considerable advantage over the ordinary medicated gauze. The bags shape themselves perfectly over wounds and have a considerable absorbing power, while the cost is almost nothing. They can be made also wherever they are to be used and in a shape to suit each particular case, which is a fact of no little importance in using for field hospitals and surgical cases. In preparation clean straw is taken, placed in a large vat, put on fire and a cover which closes hermetically is placed on top. The combustion of the straw is slow and the product is, of course, aseptic—that is, devoid of microbes.

THIS COLLEGE

is now located in its own grand new building, n. e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

For thirty years this school has been preparing young people for practical business life. It teaches Single, Double Entry and Joint-Stock Book-keeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English, &c. Send for catalogue, showing its splendid methods in preparing its students for business, and its success in securing positions for them, and for new building discounts.

GRATUITOUS AND UNSOLICITED COMMENDATIONS.

Leading Business College South of the Potomac river.—Philadelphia Stenographer.

The great success of the Smithdeal College is due to honest work and the deep interest the instructors take in the pupils.—Richmond Dispatch.

Prof. Smithdeal is a deadly enemy of educational shams and superficial methods of teaching.—Practical Age, Moline, Ill.

We do not hesitate to single it out as an example for all such institutions.—Western Trade Journal, Chicago, Ill.

The results accomplished speak for themselves, and will bear comparison with those accomplished by any similar institution in any part of the country.—Mercantile and Financial Times, New York City.

This school has long been recognized as a leading one, and we are glad to see that it is winning from the press and people the praise it so richly merits.—Progressive Farmer, Raleigh, N. C.

This college is well-known and stands high in business circles.—Portsmouth Star.

Everybody has heard of Smithdeal Business College, but comparatively few know of its great value in fitting young people for successful business life.—Richmond Times.

Your institution has been chosen as the one best representing its class in your State.—Register Publishing Company, Ann Arbor, Mich.

It is a first-class school in every respect.—South Boston Times.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted as a fair value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Find the secret of the lily, and you will be in the library of heaven.—Rev. Dr. Myers, Denver.

Sympathy.

Sympathy is the cement that binds together individual men and women into association.—Rabbi David Philipson, Hebrew, Cincinnati.

Worth of One Word From Heaven.

One sure word from heaven is worth more than the cattle on a thousand hills or the gold in them.—Rev. R. E. Bennett, Episcopalian, Cincinnati.

Test of Faith.

Your faith is tested by your attitude to God in his relation of help to you in every circumstance of life that affects body and soul.—Dr. Trumbull Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

God's Plans.

God's plans and providences may seem zigzag, but they are speeding like arrows to that one faroff event to which the whole creation moves.—Rev. Dr. G. R. Robbins, Baptist, Cincinnati.

Benefit of Predictions.

Those who best serve their fellows are those who most clearly see and most truly declare what the future will bring, good or evil, as outcome of present activities.—Rev. David Utter, Unitarian, Denver.

Childhood Faith.

It is not an easy thing in this world, as we find it, to retain the sweet and simple faith of childhood. But he who does is a victor over doubt and a victor worthy of heaven's fete.—Rev. Dr. Harmon D. Jenkins, Kansas City, Mo.

Eternal Godlikeness.

Heaven is more than streets of gold, and walls of jasper, and gates of pearl and choirs of angels, and reunion with loved ones lost awhile—it is eternal godlikeness.—Rev. W. A. Ferguson, Methodist, Philadelphia.

Word of God.

The word of God is in the love of man for man, the love of woman for her children, the acts and words of all the good and brave and holy of all the ages.—Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford, Episcopal, New York City.

Riches of Christ's Fullness.

The light of the sun may fail, the waters of the ocean may be dried up, but the riches of Christ's fullness are the same yesterday, today, and forever. "Giving doth not impoverish him, nor withholding enrich him."—Rev. E. Duckworth, Episcopal, St. Louis.

Only True Man.

The only true man is the one who looks out of our eyes, the one of whom we have taken so little account, the one whose highest aspirations we have sacrificed in order to acquire a lesser, an inferior, satisfaction.—Rev. George Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York City.

Simpler Church Dress.

I believe that if the rich in the United States would adopt simpler church dress it would certainly not diminish their piety and would in all probability increase the disposition for religious observance on the part of the poor.—Rev. Madison C. Peters, Reformed, New York.

Truest Happiness.

The truest happiness comes when, in addition to those motives that center in self, there is the motive to render a great service to the time and generation in which we live, starting a stream of influence that will bless the world after our names are forgotten.—Rev. Richard E. Sykes, Universalist, Denver.

Life of the Bible.

The Bible will live as does its divine author. It will go on conquering and to conquer in all the ages to come. "The grass" of infidel eloquence withereth, "the flower" of agnostic philosophy "fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever."—Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur, Baptist, New York.

Wise Men Have Faith In Their Work.

The wise man is he who has faith in his work, whatever it may be, humble or high, conspicuous or obscure, and who believes that since worlds began to be, great destiny was waiting to have just that work done for him. I hate the superficial distinctions that call some professions honorable and others menial and base. Everything that is toil at all, honestly and conscientiously done, is necessary and honorable. But a man must have faith in himself to look at it that way. In the surroundings and environments there may be little romance, less beauty, no inspiration. It may all be dull and monotonous to the flesh, but let a man irradiate that common toil with the light of his faith in it and in himself and the place upon which he stands is holy ground.—Rev. Dr. J. E. Robers, Church of This World, Kansas City.

How Truth Must Be Won.

Truth is God's daughter, and she must be wooed with all one's soul in order to be won. It is not sufficient to listen to men's talk about her, to look at her from afar, to learn by tradition about her and to accept and retail all men's stories and opinions concerning her. The divine wisdom is the fairest of women, according to the conception of the Book of Proverbs. Think you that God's daughter will manifest herself to the idle, the careless, the indifferent or to those that think they know her sufficiently well already; who are content to know of her at second or third hand, or do you think that she will disclose her beautiful face and glorious form and speak her all conquering words to a mere traditionalist, who is content to know about her through the transmitted formulas of a throng of generations? No, a thousand times, no! God's daughter will give herself only to him who will search for her above all things else, who will follow her wherever she goes, who will show by every motion that he cannot live without her, who will live for her alone, will fight for her, will suffer for her, will die for her.—Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs, Episcopalian, New York.

The Warrior's Prayer.

Long since in sore distress I heard one pray,
"Lord, who prevaileth with resistless might,
Ever from war and strife keep me away;
My battles fight."

I know not if I play the Pharisee
And if my brother, after all, is right,
But mine shall be the warrior's plea to Thee—
Strength for the fight.

I do not ask that Thou shalt front the fray
And drive the warring foemen from my sight.
I only ask, O Lord, by night, by day,
Strength for the fight.

When foes upon me press, let me not quail,
Nor think to turn me into coward flight.
I only ask, to make mine arms prevail,
Strength for the fight.

Still let mine eyes look ever on the foe,
Still let mine armor case me, strong and bright,
And grant me as I deal each righteous blow
Strength for the fight.

And when at eventide the fray is done
My soul to death's bedchamber do Thou light
And give me, be the field or lost or won,
Rest from the fight.

—Paul Laurence Dunbar.

EMPTY SEATS.

"Are you going to Church this morning, Susie?" asked Dr. Clark, lying back in his easy chair, with the morning paper. "A doctor who is out day and night can't be expected."

"No. I made jelly yesterday, and I am tired. I am faithful enough to stay at home this cloudy morning," and Mrs. Clark curled up on the couch with the Bible she had not opened for a week, but it soon dropped from her hand. She was aroused by a strange voice, saying:

"Now, my good imps, what have you done today to weaken the kingdom of God?"

The voice came from a suspicious-looking personage seated on a throne of human skulls. Around him was gathered a crowd of terrible beings, each with a crown of fire, in which gleamed some name, such as malice, envy, pride, hatred, and kindred passions.

"We must have been busy today, making empty seats in Churches," began one.

"Nothing could please me better," answered their king.

"I persuaded one man that he had a headache and kept him from a sermon that might have changed his whole life," said one.

"I induced one good man to slip to his store and fix up his books," said another with a horrid grin.

"Good!" said the king, "he'll soon give up Sunday altogether."

"I was able to get one devoted young man to visit some old friends," said one imp.

"I worried a good sister about her old bonnet until she decided to stay at home until she got a new one," spoke up the imp labeled "Pride."

"And I made several poor women who were hungry for God's word stay at home to repine over their trials. I just said to them: 'Oh, these rich people don't care for you; you can't wear fine clothes, so I wouldn't go where I was looked down upon.' That way I kept many poor people home whom the rich would have been very glad to see."

"That is one of the best ways to cheat poor people out of heaven that I know of," answered the king with approval.

"I induced a great many men and women to think they were not strong enough to go out," said one called "Indifference." "Of course, all these men will be at their business tomorrow, even if they feel worse. But they could not go to Church where they would have no mental or physical strain. And the ladies would have been able to clean house or go calling, but I made them think they couldn't walk to Church unless they were perfectly well."

"Very good," said the king, with a sulphurous grin. "Sunday headaches might often be cured by getting out in the air, and backaches forgotten by thoughts drawn to higher things. But you lying imps must make use of every weakness of the flesh to help make empty seats."

They all smiled, for in their kingdom "lying" was a great compliment.

"To make ladies think that their servants need no Sunday privilege is good," suggested one.

"Very true," said his superior. "As long as we can get Christian men and women to cause or allow men and women to work during Church hours, we can keep many empty seats in Churches, and men and women away from God."

"I am the weather imp," said one gloomy fellow; "I go around persuading people it is going to rain, or it is too cold, too damp or too hot to venture out to Church. It is enough to make even your gloomy majesty laugh to see these same people start out the next day in the wind and weather. One would think it a sin to carry umbrellas and wear gum coats to Church."

"Confidentially," answered the king, when I find a Christian who has no more concern about the weather Sunday than Monday—determined to make as much effort for spiritual gain as he would for worldly profit—I just give him up. It's no use to try to drag back the man or woman who goes to God's house in all kinds of weather."

"I am able to do a good deal with some of the ladies of the congregation," spoke up the imp labeled "Fashion of this world." "I can make some people stay at home because the new hat didn't come, or their clothes are out of style, or they have not gotten a new cloak."

"I have a better scheme than that," said another. "These people you keep away are indifferent—generally, good—for-nothing folks, who are hardly worth getting into the kingdom of his Satanic majesty, but I have a plan that empties seats of the workers in the Church."

"That is just what we want," said the king.

"I make these people overwork on Saturdays. For instance, I cause some good man that the preacher depends upon, or some devout Sunday-school teacher, to make Saturday the busiest day of the week. I just keep him rushed with neglected things till late at night, and then he oversleeps or is sick the next day and can't get out."

"Splendid plan," cried Satan.

"Yes, it works well with delicate women. A Church party late Saturday night helps with empty seats."

"You are doing finely my imps," his majesty said warmly—for his breath was a flame of fire. "Preachers may work and pray over their sermons all the week but there will be no results in preaching to empty seats. One of the most important things we have to consider is how to keep people away from Churches on Sunday. Your plans are excellent, but I might suggest another good point. All preachers have human imperfections—some fault of manner or speech. Get Christians to criticise their pastor, especially before their children. If you can stir up a spirit of fault finding against the preacher, or among the members, it will help empty seats. People who get mad at each other do not care to go to Church together. If the seats are empty, the minister may be a saint and preach like an angel to no purpose. See the result of your labor on High Street Church today. Not only did the two hundred people who stayed at home lose a blessing, but each empty seat did its work against the Lord's kingdom. The preacher made unusual preparations, and went with his heart on fire, but the empty seats chilled him and he did poorly. There was a special collection, but the best givers were away, so it was a failure. It isn't a smart preacher, nor a rich congregation, nor a good location, nor a paid choir, that makes a successful Church. It is the Church members always being there that draws in the unconverted, and makes an eloquent preacher. As soon as a Christian begins to say at home, from one excuse or another, I know I have a mortgage on his soul, which, if he does not shake off, I will foreclose on the judgment day."

"You have none of mine," cried Mrs. Clark, who had been listening with bated breath. "I'll go to Church, if only to defeat you."

"What's the matter, dear, have you been dreaming?"

"Perhaps so; but I am going to Church if I get to my seat just in time for the benediction. I'll cheat Satan from this day out of one empty seat."

She has kept her word and influenced many others to let nothing keep them away from God's house; and one "down town" Church has begun to grow, and will soon be a great power for God, because of no "empty seats."—"International Evangel."

THE ELASTICITY OF CONSCIENCE

"Why, good morning, Mrs. Clay, I am just delighted to see you. When did you get back? I hope I didn't keep you waiting too long."

All this was said in a breath by dainty Mrs. Adams as she came into the parlor twenty-five minutes after her guest arrived.

"Why, no indeed; it's awfully good of you to dress and come down in this heat at all. I know it's a perfectly barbarous time of day for a call, but I was so anxious to see you. Don't you know I had such a perfectly lovely time at the springs that I simply hated to leave, and things have seemed so flat some how since I came back, that I have decided to give a little dance, just to make things more interesting, you know."

"Delightful!"

"And you'll come and bring the girls, won't you? Now, don't hatch up any of those silly prejudices of yours about dancing."

"Yow-yo-o-ow-yow."

"Mercy! what's that?"

"O, that's just Nip, he howls continually. It's getting to be rather a nuisance."

"But the dance, you'll come won't you?"

"Well, I guess not, dear."

"But why? You surely don't think it's any harm to dance, do you?"

"Well, not exactly, but—er—some how I feel better if I don't."

"Oh, you are so—Yow-wow-ow-ooo-yow—what IS the matter with that dog?"

"He just has scratches."

"Can't he be cured?"

"Oh, I don't know, he may get well."

"But why don't you do something for him, or kill him, anything to keep him from suffering so?"

"Why, Mrs. Clay, kill our dog? How can you say such a cruel thing?"

"Well, but he'll die anyhow, so what's the difference?"

"I suppose he will some time, but that won't be our killing him."

"Yow-yo-o-o-w-o-o-wow."

"Poor thing; its awfully warm isn't it? Well, you'll come Friday night then, won't you, and bring Minnie and the rest?"

"Don't press me, dear; I'm afraid my conscience won't let me."

"Well, I am dreadfully sorry, but I really must be going. Give my love to the girls, and do come to see me. I'm going to count this as a visit. Good morning."

"God-bye. I'm awfully glad you came, and I'm going to return this real soon," and with a meaningless hand pressure Mrs. Adams closed the door and yawned.

Mrs. Clay walked to the gate talking softly to herself. "Well, I do think it amounts to an open rebuke to me—and she feels better when she don't dance—and that pitiful creature going through death itself every day—to say nothing of what the neighbors have to stand. She feels better indeed! I wonder which of us is worse! How we women can stretch our consciences! I wish I could do something for that poor dog!"

Prepares boys for College, Ministry or Business. Complete in its equipment, thorough in its instruction, and moderate in its charges.

The health, order, and high character of the work last session evidenced by the following:

1. Only one case of serious sickness (pneumonia), and that yielded promptly to treatment.
2. Forty three (43) per cent. of the students received no demerits during the entire session.
3. Thirty-nine (39) per cent. passed with distinction on all their classes.

The fact that nineteen (19) degrees, professional and classical, were conferred this year on students prepared at the Academy by the Colleges and Universities of this and other States shows the thorough character of the work we are doing.

and four letters are laid upon his table. One is uninteresting, one is tiresome, one is vexatious, and the disheartened man opens the fourth letter with a sigh. Another complaint from some querulous person; another detail laid on a weary man! What's this?

"MY DEAR PASTOR:—For some time I have wished to write and tell you what a help you have been to those who are very dear to me. Again and again my husband has been cheered and encouraged in his fight to do what is right in business by your brave words. He told me one Sunday night that nothing had done so much to keep him straight as your sermons. You know that Jack made us rather anxious for some time because he seemed careless and indifferent to home. Well, he has quite changed of late, and is so attentive to me and nice with his father. And on my birthday he brought me such a lovely present, for which he must have been saving during months. When I told him how grateful I was he only said: 'It was that sermon on sons and mothers did it.' And now last Sunday your sermon on care seemed written for me, for I have so little faith and am so anxious. So I must tell you that you have inspired the life of one household, and that we bless God for you."

"Yours most gratefully,

"MAX HARRISON."

It may not seem a long letter, nor one difficult to understand, but the minister was not satisfied till he read it six times. And although it may not seem a learned letter, it shed such a light on the text that the minister's pen flew. He locked that letter up in his desk, but found that he had forgotten a sentence, so it was more convenient to carry it in his pocket. On Sunday he found it necessary to read that letter before going to Church, and he had a last peep at it in the vestry. And the minister preached that morning with such power and hope that even the grumblers were satisfied, and the congregation went home on wings.—IAN MCLAREN, in the "Ladies' Home Journal."

WESLEY'S THANKSGIVING.

When his followers numbered no more than 30,000, John Wesley sang the lines below. What fervent thanksgiving would break forth from his lips were he now in the earth and saw the mighty hosts of Methodism advancing to the culmination of the Twentieth Century movement.

O the fathomless love that hath deigned to approve
And prosper the work of thy hands!
With my pastoral crook, I went over the brook
And behold I am spared into bands.

Who I ask in amaze, hath gotten me these.

And inquire from what quarter they came,

My full heart replies, they were born from the skies

And gives glory to God and the Lamb.

WESLEYAN GIRLS LEAD THE PROCESSION.

The first contribution to the Twentieth Century Educational Fund in Georgia was made by the Wesleyan girls about the middle of last May. As soon as they heard of the movement they called a meeting of the student body, and voluntarily contributed four hundred dollars to the Fund. So it appears that the girls are ahead of our two brethren whose gifts we have previously reported, and they head the procession in Georgia.

All the daughters of the "old Wesleyan" should fall into line. Now is the time for them to help their dear and illustrious alma mater. Let us hear from them.—"Wesleyan Advocate."

OVER ONE-SIXTH SECURED.

We are glad to be able to state that our Church is rallying to the Twentieth Century movement. Over $250,000 has already been secured. Missouri and North Carolina lead the list with Tennessee and Virginia not far behind. Georgia must quicken her step. The densest block of Methodists in the United States cannot fail to bear a full part in this work. Georgians must move and move grandly.—"Wesleyan Advocate."

A STARTLING RECORD OF SIX YEARS.

In 1897 gifts to higher education in the United States aggregated over $20,000,000. In 1896 they were $27,000,000. In 1895 $32,800,000. In 1894 $32,000,000. In 1893 $29,000,000. Here is a grand aggregate in five years of $140,000,000, but less than $5,000,000 came to the South, and of that which came, the most of it was for negro colleges.

The gifts for 1899 already exceed $40,000,000, and less than $1,000,000 has been given to Southern colleges, negro colleges coming in for the lion's share.

Can our men of means understand these great figures? Have they no duty in the premises? Are they too dull to see or too indifferent to care for the welfare of our section?—Exchange.

LEAGUERS TO MEET.

The International Convention of Epworth leaguers—young people of the Methodist Church—will be held at Indianapolis, Ind., next week.

The leaguers number many thousands in every State and Territory, and the convention will be one of the greatest ever held by a religious body in America.

All the railroads to Indianapolis have given reduced rates. The city of Indianapolis itself is a delightful place to visit. It has beautiful residential sections, and is beautified by many parks and monuments. Former President Harrison has his home there.

The convention will be held in a mammoth tent, seating 10,000 people, erected in the park surrounding the State capitol. The first service begins at 2:30 o'clock, Thursday, July 20.

Addresses will be delivered in behalf of the State of Indiana, the city of Indianapolis, and Indiana Methodism. The responses for the league of the Methodist Episcopal Church will be made by Bishop W. X. Ninde, LL. D.; for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Bishop W. A. Candler, D. D., LL. D., Oxford, Ga.; for Canadian Methodism, Rev. A. Carman, D. D., Toronto, Ont.

At the same hour the second meeting will be held at Tamilton Hall. This is a spacious hall, something like Massey Hall, of Toronto, and will hold nearly 4,000. It is centrally located, is admirably adapted to convention purposes, and has been used for some of the greatest religious and political gatherings of recent years. Welcome addresses will be made here also. The responses will be: for Canadian Methodism, Rev. G. J. Bond, B. A., Halifax, Nova Scotia; for the Methodist Episcopal Church, Bishop John J. Hurst, D. D.,

RANDOLPH-MACON WOMAN'S COLLEGE, LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

This College is named by the United States Commissioner of Education as one of the fourteen Colleges for women in the United States entitled to be classed in "Division A." (See Official Report, page 1732.)

1. LOCATION: Virginia.

Near the foot of the Blue Ridge, in the residence suburbs of Lynchburg—beautiful scenery, health-giving climate, railroad, telegraph, telephone, street cars, modern facilities.

2. PLANT: $134,000.

Campus 20 acres. Building new, modern; steam heat, gas, hot and cold water, etc. Front 365 feet. Four separate laboratories; excellent library; sky-lit art studios; large gymnasium, chapel, lecture rooms, music rooms, etc.

3. ENDOWMENT: $102,000.

The annual income from the endowment of $102,000 is applied toward current expenses. The plant is exempt from charges for rent or taxes, thus patrons get thousands of dollars free every year. The purpose of the college is not to make money, but to make noble, cultured women.

4. COURSES: Elective.

Nine distinct elective courses lead to the A. B. degree, enabling the student, after the fundamental discipline has been secured, to follow the bent of her natural talent. A. M. course entirely elective. Full courses in music and art.

5. FACULTY.

Full faculty of college grade. Twenty-three instructors and two hundred and twenty-five students last session. Professors selected for special ability in their departments, and for personal worth as men.

6. PHYSICAL CULTURE.

Large gymnasium, well equipped. Regular training for vigor and grace by competent directress. Out-door sports arranged for—tennis, basket ball, cycling, etc.

7. HOME LIFE.

Officers and teachers and their families live with the students, and help make their home life elevating and happy. Noble character is the ultimate end of our culture, and intimate association one of the chief means.

Special arrangements to aid teachers who wish to improve their preparation.

New Equipment on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway.

To accommodate the increasing travel over the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway the Pullman Company have just completed and placed in service on the "F. F. V." Limited four new twelve-section and drawing-room sleepers of the latest pattern and most magnificent furnishings. They are named after four of the picturesque and historic rivers crossed by the C. & O., viz: "Rappahannock," "Greenbrier," "Rapidan," and "Kanawha." They are fitted with the newest pattern wide vestibules and painted the regulation C. & O. color—a bright orange with brown and gold trimmings. The interior wood work is highly polished vermilion, the upholstery dark blue plush, except in the gentlemen's smoking rooms, which are large and commodious and upholstered in leather. The ladies toilet rooms are much larger than in sleepers heretofore built, a point much appreciated by the fair sex. The construction of the cars is such that when the berths are up there is more room over head, permitting better ventilation and freeing the cars from the low, stuffy appearance generally noticeable. They are lighted by electricity, and, in addition to the regular clusters in the ceiling, each berth is fitted with a small globe for the convenience of occupants.—"Evening Star," Washington, D. C.

THURSDAY, - - - - JULY 13, 1899.

WILL GO TO NEWPORT NEWS.

Rev. H. W. Dunkley, of Randolph-Macon College, is spending a few days at his mother's, near Virgilina. He leaves Friday to take charge of the Third Methodist Church at Newport News.

SALARY RAISED.

The salary of Rev. L. W. Guyer, pastor of West-Street, has been increased from $300 to $600 per annum. The Church will pay out in full all of its Conference collections. Mr. Guyer is doing a grand work in his Church.

PULPIT STILL VACANT.

The pulpit of Main Street, Danville, has remained vacant ever since the death of Dr. Sledd. Efforts have been made to secure two ministers to serve the unexpired Conference year, without success. Correspondence is now being conducted between the official body of the Church and Bishop A. W. Wilson relative to the vacancy. The name of Rev. Clarke W. Leftwich, of Campbell county, is now under consideration.

NOBLE WORDS.

I will stomp the State in the dog-days rather than have the Twentieth Century Movement defeated in Georgia. I would rather die than see it fail.—Bishop Candler, at Macon Conference.

Put me down for $500 as my personal subscription, and call on me when I can serve the cause.—Bishop Granbery, at Board meeting.

When our leaders feel and act this way there is no possibility of failure.

Twentieth Century Movement at the Rappahannock District Conference.

Bishop Granbery will speak for it at the Norfolk and Portsmouth District Conferences.

Other announcements later.

TWO MONTHS' VACATION.

Rev. Mr. Jones, who since last November has been pastor of Asbury Methodist Church, Manchester, has asked to be relieved of his work for two months. Mr. Jones is forced to this action on account of failing health. He feels that the work of a pastorate is too much for him now, and he needs rest to get back his strength. The stewards of the Church met and released him. He will leave the city on Friday. Mr. Jones succeeded Rev. Harry Burruss, and has pleased the congregation of Asbury very much, and they regret exceedingly that he feels he must leave them even so short a time. It is his intention not to preach any more at this time, but go to his home in Gloucester and try to win his health back. Rev. L. C. Moore, of Appomattox, will succeed Mr. Jones, and will fill the pulpit Sunday.—Richmond "Dispatch."

METHODIST PASTORS.

The Methodist preachers convened in their usual weekly session Monday morning, with a large attendance. Rev. W. H. Edwards, president, called the meeting to order, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. H. Kabler, of the East Suffolk and Magnolia Churches. The following reports were heard.

Chestnut Street, Berkley—In the absence of the pastor Rev. J. W. Crider preached Sunday morning and night.

Cumberland Street—Rev. H. E. Johnson, D. D., pastor, received one on profession of faith, and reported $59 raised in the Sunday-school for missions, due in great measure to the special efforts of Mr. J. E. Fentress' class.

Rev. J. H. Cabler, of East Suffolk and Magnolia, reported that his people had been instrumental in closing several bar-rooms in his section.

Park View, Portsmouth—Rev. W. R. Proctor reported that he had raised about $1,300 for the enlargement and improvement of his Church, and expects to secure the full amount, $2,000. The work of improvement will begin at once.

Queen Street—Rev. S. C. Hatcher reported a good day. Rev. Charles I. Stengle preached for him in the morning, and raised $95 for the Union Mission; received one new member by letter at night.

Rev. J. W. Baker, of Oaklette Church, Norfolk county, preached to large congregations at Trinity Church both morning and night.

Epworth—Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., had the usual large congregations, and received two new members by letter.

Rev. R. M. Chandler was with Rev. J. W. Nicholson, of South Princess Anne circuit, Sunday, and preached to the edification of large congregations.

Monumental, Portsmouth—Rev. L. B. Betty reported that he had recently paid off the debt on the Sunday-school building.

the congregation had secured a lot on First Street, Berkley, 85 feet front and 128 feet in depth, for $4,800, to erect a new Church on, and that the entire $20,000 contributed by Mr. E. M. Tilley was to be expended in building the walls and windows, the lot and interior furnishings to be paid for by the Church. He said the plans to be drawn were already in the hands of the architect and as soon as they are received and approved by the committee the work of erection will commence. The total cost of the building will be $30,000.

Owen's Memorial, Portsmouth—Rev. R. T. Waterfield reported that Rev. W. F. Fisher, of the Baptist Church, preached for him in the morning, and Rev. Dr. Wm. Edwin Hall, of New York, at night. He received one new member by letter and one on profession.

AMONG THE VIRGINIA HILLS.

Two weeks in old Virginia! What memories they will awaken to touch the heart, and brighten the life in the years to come! Twenty-eight years ago, Mr. Editor, I graduated at Randolph-Macon, the oldest Methodist College in America. I consider it the highest privilege of my life to have sat at the feet of Dr. James A. Duncan, the brilliant scholar and peerless preacher of Southern Methodism, under whose guiding hand the old institution came forth into newness of life. Many were the tender ties formed during that closing year in my college career. For the last twenty years at least I have purposed to return and enjoy a commencement season among my old friends. The duties of life, however, seemed to increase as the years came on, and each opening summer has brought disappointment to my plans. It was therefore with a peculiar thrill of pleasure that I found myself, as May was making the last bow of spring to rosy June, before the hills and glades of old Virginia.

My first destination was Lynchburg, and the Randolph-Macon Woman's College commencement. In the old days Dr. W. W. Smith, the president and chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system, was my classmate. I shall never forget his cordial welcome, and the delightful week I spent in the classic halls of this splendid institution. It has an endowment in its location. Only two miles from the city, and reached by the street cars, with the ranges of the Blue Ridge in the near distance, billowing away like the sea, and the sun-crowned Peaks of Otter standing like majestic sentinels in the center.

The buildings are extensive, elegant, and well adapted to the work for which they were constructed. I confess that I was surprised at the completeness of its facilities for the higher education of women. The chemical laboratory is large and well-furnished. Each pupil has her section and instruments and makes her own experiments. The department of psychology has also a laboratory, fitted up after the very latest methods of instruction.

The young women who received on graduation day their A. B. and A. M. degrees had covered the same course required of men at Randolph-Macon or the University of Virginia, and these institutions represent the highest curriculum in the South. The United States Commissioner of Education gives in his last report thirteen colleges engaged in the work of the higher education of women. The Randolph-Macon is the only one in the South, and in its highest work is graded with Vassar, Wellesley, and the Woman's College at Baltimore. In the nature of the case, having only one hundred thousand dollars endowment, it is compelled to do some introductory work. It was to me a matter of great gratification to know that every year the class of degree graduates grows larger. The men and women who fill the professional chairs are so thoroughly equipped by training and experience for their work as to make their education in any institution in the country. But best of all, the college is a religious home to every girl under its roof. It has its Sunday-school, regular evening service by its chaplain, its prayer-meetings, Christian Association meetings, and Missionary meetings. The present year ninety-two per cent. of the boarding pupils were members of some evangelical Church, and ninety-five per cent. members of the Y. M. C. A. I do not hesitate to commend the Woman's College at Lynchburg, Va., to parents who desire to give their daughters the highest culture, and who are contemplating sending them North. Their diplomas will mean as much in the literary world, while the atmosphere is both Southern and religious.

The man out of whose broad mind and arduous toil this splendid institution was born, and the Methodist educational institutions in Virginia brought into one system, under one Board of Trustees, deservedly stands at the head of educators in the South. Often as I looked into the face of my versatile and gifted classmate, I felt my eyes moisten, as I asked myself the question, "what may not a layman accomplish for the cause of God and the uplifting of the world?" Several of our number have for nearly thirty years past given ourselves to the work of the Christian ministry, but in that great day it may be revealed that W. W. Smith, the tireless champion of higher Christian education for men and women, has exceeded the combined efforts of us all.

What a change at Ashland in twenty-eight years! The old campus is lovely. The saplings have grown into giant oaks, the old landmarks are all gone, and large and elegant brick buildings and rows of neat dormitories, made up indeed a glad sight for my eyes. The country for miles around has been transformed and the slashes through which Henry Clay rode to mill are dotted with beautiful farm settlements, with fields of golden grain and waving corn. My old schoolmates, Blackwell and Smithey, I found to be the favorite professors in the old college. The delightful reunion with old friends, the charming hospitality such as only Virginia can give, the constant thoughtfulness of everything that could add to my pleasure, not only made the days pass quickly, but brought a wrench to my heart when the time came for me to turn my face toward the South. To Bishop and Mrs. Granbery I am under special obligations. It was indeed a privilege to spend a few days in their home. How honored has our Church been in the wise administration, splendid preaching gifts, and beautiful life of this and of her chief pastors. His latter years have been crowned with a dispensation of suffering, but it has simply been to him the occasion for the demonstration to his brethren of how the sweetness and gentleness of the Master can be blended with an unfaltering courage—the equal of that which has fired the hearts of the world's greatest heroes. No man in this generation has endeared himself more to the Church and whose closing years will receive a larger share of her love and prayers.

After two weeks with the friends and Methodists of Virginia, I take up the work in old Virginia with new vigor and enthusiasm. W. W. Smith, Lynchburg, Va.

FACTS FOR THINKING CHRISTIANS.

There are 1,000,000,000 heathen.

There are 80,000 ministers and other Christian workers in America.

Out of every 100,000 Church members in America only 21 go to the foreign field.

Christians are giving at the rate of one-tenth of a cent a day.

world." "Go" does not mean "stay;" "all" does not mean a "part."

Virginia's Attractions.

It is astonishing what a vast amount of rational enjoyment may be extracted from a ten days' visit to Virginia; how it may be made to compensate for the untold miseries of months of labor, and, in fact, obliterate the remembrance of the "ticker" or of "trial balances," which one must endure while tossing among the breakers of modern business.

In the Chesapeake & Ohio sections of the Old Dominion are bits of scenery, each bearing an indelible impress of Creation's hands, and each preserving memories of Nature's might. The Natural Bridge, the Grottoes of the Shenandoah, the Caverns of Luray, the New River canyons, tell stories widely different from Nature's structures of continental Europe; and Old Point Comfort, Williamsburg, Richmond and the Lower James disclose fragments of history of far greater interest to us of American birth than the treasures of the Old World. Pictures of delicious and magic beauty abound. In the heart of the Alleghenies health and pleasure seekers find life-giving waters and social enjoyment at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia Hot Springs, and a host of other resorts of world-wide fame. If one is an enthusiastic lover of military history, with an admiration for war-like deeds of war-like men, he may stand on almost any mountain in Virginia and gaze upon fields where men's hopes have been destroyed and upon plains which have wept bloody dew. The lover of Nature will see valleys of peace, and rich, fertile dells, through which silver rivers wind their graceful lines. The student of the utilitarian school may feast his eyes on mines of iron and zinc and coal, and while to the sentimental there are nooks fitted only to the intermingling of the lover's speech.

CLAIMS AND PROOFS.

(A DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARENT AND TEACHER.)

PARENT:—What school do you represent, sir?

TEACHER:—The Blackstone Female Institute.

PARENT:—Well, what do you claim for your school? I suppose you are like all the rest. You claim that it is better than any other school to be found.

TEACHER:—No, I do not claim that. The claim of the Blackstone Female Institute can be put in one sentence. We give thorough instruction, under positive Christian Influences, at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the welfare of both teacher and pupil.

PARENT:—That is a sweeping claim. It is an easy matter to make claims, but it is not so easy to prove them. If you can prove that you are up to your claim, parents should be entirely willing to place their daughters at the Blackstone school.

TEACHER:—What you say is true. It is easy to make great claims, but we do not ask you to accept our claims simply because we say so or upon our own testimony. I will prove to you by impartial, well-informed witnesses that our claim is a just one. First,

As to the Character of our Instruction

We offer as a witness the leading educator in the State of Virginia, the Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of Schools and Colleges. Read the following letters:

BLACKSTONE, VA., June 23, 1899.
DR. W. W. SMITH,
WOMAN'S COLLEGE,
Lynchburg, Va.

DEAR DR:—You had with you at the Woman's College the last session three graduates of the Blackstone Institute. I write to ask you what the Faculty thought of the preparation which they had received at the Institute before coming to you. Also I will be obliged to you if you will state your opinion of the Institute as a training school for the College, as your frequent visits to the Institute and your acquaintance with the members of the Faculty and their qualifications for their work renders your opinion of special worth.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

LYNCHBURG, VA., JUNE 24, 1899.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
PRINCIPAL BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

MY DEAR BRO:—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered College classes and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and nine of your Faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates. To render correlation effective I consider two things necessary, an adjusted course of instruction and a Faculty familiar with the courses of the Woman's College and in sympathy with its methods. These you have. I hope, in my turn, that you find the graduates of our College whom you have taken into your Faculty, superior as teachers and worthy as Christian women.

Yours truly,
W. W. SMITH.

These letters show that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Second, We offer at least

One Hundred Testimonials of Parents

whose daughters have attended the Blackstone Institute, which testimonials declare with no uncertain sound that the claim which we make is amply proven, if the parents of our pupils are trustworthy witnesses. We are willing to rest our case on this kind of testimony. It is easy for the Principal and Faculty of any school to make strong claims. These claims are worthless without proof. We do not make claims for the Blackstone Institute and then offer our own statements as proof of the claims, but we leave it to parents to weigh the testimony in their own minds.

PARENT:—Well, I must say that the testimony of the Faculty of the Woman's College is equal to expert testimony in a case at court. But where are your testimonials from parents?

TEACHER:—Here they are, as many as you can wish for, printed in the back of this catalogue. There are testimonials here from all over the Virginia Conference, from many of the preachers and leading citizens in various counties. You also find in this catalogue a full statement of the purpose and aim of the institution, the course of study, the schedule of charges, and other necessary information. I have presented my claim. I have also presented my proofs, which are not merely my words, but the opinions of others. If you wish any more definite information write to—

ELEPHANTS IN THE ARMY.

Some Points as to Their Employment by the British in India.

One of the most interesting features of the English army life presented to the layman in India is furnished by the remarkable efficiency of the elephant brigade, most highly developed through the skill of the Burmese in handling the giant animals. Their usefulness in India can scarcely be imagined by one not familiar with the amount and variety of work which they accomplish, but it would be a serious mistake to imagine that this degree of usefulness is attained through any aptitude of the unwieldy animals or natural tendency toward it. It is due solely and entirely to the wonderful ability of the natives in training the huge animals and overcoming their natural inclinations. This cannot be too highly praised. Neither must it be imagined that the use of elephants in army life is not attended by great disadvantages, not the least of which is the difficulty with which they are transported.

Naturally the elephant is not an intelligent animal. He can be taught remarkable things, in which his strength and endurance play an important part. He can never, however, perform these feats without continual attendance and direction. Abstractly his power of work is unappreciable. When directed by skillful hands, however, it is remarkable.

The transportation facilities which are provided for the sole use of the elephant are quite as remarkable. I witnessed recently the loading and detraining of a lot of elephants on the Madras railway. Both were remarkable processes. In loading a rope is fastened to his fore leg and a lot of natives haul and pull at it to induce the animal to take the first steps into the car. This is only accomplished, however, by admonishing him in the haunch by means of a tusk. The first step taken is rapidly followed by the others until he stands safely on the car.

This portion of the task is accomplished comparatively easily, however, when compared with the next. At first he is timid and slightly frightened, but when the car starts his fear is wonderful to behold. Though he may ride a hundred times he never overcomes this fear, though it is much more pronounced when he takes his initial ride after, say, two months' acquaintance with civilization. He rears the air with wild trumpetings, endeavors fruitlessly to escape, and only ceases his efforts when the car has again come to a standstill.

Of course wonderfully strong cars are necessary to hold him. They are made completely of iron, with huge iron bars rising to a height of 10 or 12 feet above the platform. Often these cars are rendered useless by the twisting of the bars due to the application of the occupant's remarkable strength.

In transporting the elephant by sea the difficulties are almost as great. They are raised by means of a canvas sling from the wharf to the ship, struggling to escape and rending the air with their cries. Once aboard ship they are easily managed, the motion not affecting them, because they do not see the moving panorama before them. Unloading them is easy. They are lowered to a raft beside the ship and allowed to swim ashore. They take to the water easily and are excellent swimmers, being able to swim eight or ten miles at a stretch without tiring.

The size of the Indian elephant is usually about 8 feet in height and 10 feet in length. The male is a little larger, perhaps 11 feet, and weighing about 5,000 pounds. —Calcutta Chronicle.

is now located in its own grand new building, n. e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

For thirty years this school has been preparing young people for practical business life. It teaches Single, Double Entry and Joint-Stock Book-keeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English, &c. Send for catalogue, showing its splendid methods in preparing its students for business, and its success in securing positions for them, and for new building discounts.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practical school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

TRUST IN JESUS.

How sweet to trust in Jesus!

To know no trust beside;
To find in him a refuge,
Our weary soul to hide.
To learn of Love Eternal,
And in that love abide.

How sweet to follow Jesus!

To seek no other road;
Obediently and trustingly,
To walk the path He trod.
'Tis hallow'd by His footprints,
And highest unto God.

Ah! then to learn of Jesus,

This is a task most sweet;
To choose the "better portion,"
Like Mary at His feet.
With soul and body sanctified—
For His blest use made meet.

'Tis sweet to work with Jesus,

To spread abroad His fame;
To be for Him ambassadors,
Bearing His cross and shame,
That to the lost and perishing,
His love we may proclaim.

And as we work with Jesus,

We wait His face to see;
The Morning Star has risen,
The night's dark shadows flee.
A little while and we shall dwell
With Him eternally.

CONDITION OF DR. BROWN.

The latest advices from Ashland are to the effect that Dr. Brown's condition has improved.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THE PORTSMOUTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Portsmouth District Conference met at Franklin, Va., Wednesday, July 12. An account of the proceeding follows:

First Day's Session.—Morning.—The conference was called to order at 9:30 a. m. by the presiding elder.

The call of charges for reports was then taken on beginning with Monumental Church. The report from this church showed Monumental to be in its usual fine condition, with its Sunday school building paid for this year and arrangements perfected to build a handsome parsonage on its lot in Court street in the near future.

Dr. J. Wiley Bledsoe and Prof. B. W. Davis, of Danville Female College, were introduced to the conference. The call of charges being resumed, Central Church was heard from through its pastor, and lay delegates and the conference learned that Central had had a great revival this year, resulting in the conversion of 240 souls; that the collections had all been provided for; a fund of $1,000 spent in improving the Church; a lot bought on which a new Church is to be located; a lot purchased and a mission Sunday school built, and that the Church was in a fine condition spiritually and otherwise.

Wright Memorial reported the finances in a better condition than last year; collections pledged for a larger amount than last year and the Church doing a good work. A lot has been purchased and paid for in Brighton, and a Sunday school building will soon be erected.

Park View reported a fine Sunday school; the Epworth League doing a fine work; had a fine revival in the spring. An improvement in the Church building will soon be made, amounting to $2,000.

Port Norfolk was reported as in excellent condition, there having been about fifty accessions to the church and 100 to the Sunday school during the year. Finances up. The pastor is paid in full every week. The Sunday school numbers the Church.

West Norfolk was reported as doing well, with finances up and the Church prosperous.

W. L. McCloud, of Suffolk, was elected secretary in place of W. P. Wilder, resigned, on account of not being able to serve the Conference because of previous engagements.

After announcements the Conference adjourned for dinner, which was served in armory building.

Afternoon session.—The afternoon session convened as per adjournment, Rev. N. B. Foushe conducting divine service.

The following resolution was adopted: Resolved, That the greetings of this district Conference be extended to the Conference of our sister district, the Norfolk District Conference, now in session at Lamberts Point, Va., and that we express to them our sincere sympathy in the dangerous illness of their presiding elder Rev. A. G. Brown, D. D.

R. F. BEADLES,
J. T. WHITNEY,
S. J. BATTEN.

The call of the charges was resumed and Churchland was reported as being in fair condition. The pastor said he considered this Church the most liberal he had ever served.

Norfolk circuit was reported as moving along successfully. The spiritual condition was regarded by the pastor as being good; finances about as usual.

The remainder of the afternoon session was consumed in reports from the pastor to be in good condition. Several bar rooms had existed in East Suffolk for some time past, but they had been closed through an appeal to the courts.

Windsor, reported through its pastor, that the spiritual condition of the Church was good and the finances pretty well up.

Boykins was reported on by pastor and laymen. The church was regarded as being in good condition, with active missionary societies. Children's day will be observed. Finances not as good as they should be.

Benns circuit was called for and a report read from the pastor, who was not present at the conference. He reported the church in good condition.

The hour of the day having arrived the Conference adjourned to attend religious services, which were conducted by Rev. R. B. Blankenship, pastor of Wright Memorial Church.

Second Day's Session.—When this report closed Wednesday the report of the Committee on Education was still being discussed by the Conference and the discussion continued until the hour of adjournment, and was participated in by Prof. E. H. Rowe, Rev. James Cannon, Jr., and others, besides the speakers who were mentioned in yesterday's proceedings. The report was finally adopted.

The application of John F. Cutchriell for a license to preach was laid before the Conference. The committee reported that he had passed an approved examination and his pastor recommended that the license be granted. Mr. Geo. T. Townsend also recommended that the license be granted. The Conference proceeded to ballot and the license was granted.

At night, Rev. J. T. Whitley, pastor of First Church, Hampton, preached the missionary sermon before a large audience, taking as his text the 15th verse of the 16th chapter of St. Mark, viz: "And He said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." The sermon was a strong presentation of the missionary question, urging the people to increased liberality in their contributions and better acquaintance with the subject.

The Conference was called to order at 9 a. m. Thursday, by Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder.

Religious services were conducted by Rev. J. H. Cabler, of East Suffolk.

The call of charges was resumed and D. D. Austin reported the spiritual condition of his Church, Ebenezer, to be medium, the Church services well attended, missionary societies at work, and finances fairly well up.

J. T. Whitley reported the spiritual condition of First Church, Hampton, to be in a moderately good condition. The attendance on communion is good; family worship observed by about one family in ten; Sunday-school in fine condition and doing well; finances are not quite up, but will be raised. The Church expects to go to Conference with a full report.

Southampton circuit was called next, and Mr. C. H. McGhee reported the spiritual condition of his charge to be good and improving. There are several missionary societies in the church, which is composed of six Churches and nine Sunday-schools. Finances are in good condition. There are five Epworth Leagues in charge.

C. C. Wertenbaker, pastor of Isle of Wight circuit, reported the spiritual condition of his charge as excellent. Sunday-schools lack earnestness. Prospects for raising the collections are good. Several missionary societies are at work.

J. K. Joliff, pastor at Smithfield, reported his Church in first-class condition. Have recently completed and paid for a handsome Church. The spiritual condition of the Church is good. The collections will be raised.

W. D. Faulk said he regarded the Church as being in good condition and felt that the Church had been greatly helped by the recent revival.

Dr. Campbell, pastor of West End, Hampton, reported the spiritual condition of his charge to be fair; finances in good condition, Sunday-schools doing nicely.

Dr. Campbell of the Virginia Bible Society, addressed the Conference in the interest of the Bible cause.

J. K. Joliff read the report of the Committee on Missions. The report congratulates the district on the awakened interest in this subject and the gratifying prospects of raising the full assessment placed on the Churches of this district. After the report was discussed by Mr. Joliff it was adopted.

The lay delegates of the District Board of Education were re-elected, and the elder announced Revs. J. T. Whitley, R. T. Waterfield, and W. T. Greene as the clerical members.

Dr. W. W. Smith, Prof. Sumpter Smith, and Prof. E. H. Rowe were introduced.

Bishop J. C. Granbery, who had just reached the seat of the Conference, was presented to the body and delivered an able and eloquent address on the subject of the centennial educational fund.

After introducing the subject the Bishop recited the many advantages and benefits which had come down to us with the last days of the closing century in a masterly manner and reminded his audience that with all these blessings we were neglecting our opportunities for doing good and advancing the kingdom of God and the advancement of His cause.

Bishop Granbery was followed by Dr. W. W. Smith, chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system, in an able address on the same subject.

Friday's session.—Conference was called to order promptly at 9 a. m. by the presiding elder.

Religious services were conducted by Rev. J. V. Carey, pastor of Port Norfolk Church.

R. B. Blankenship, chairman of the Committee on Conference Records, reported several of the records were criticized, but the great majority of them were found to be neatly and correctly kept.

The license of W. J. Parker, a local preacher at Bennis' Church, was renewed.

C. C. Wertenbaker read the report of the Committee on Bible Cause. The report showed that only $82 was raised in the district last year. It was discussed by C. C. Wertenbaker, R. F. Beadles, and W. R. Proctor. The manner of conducting the Virginia Bible Society was criticised, but the report was adopted.

T. O. Edwards submitted the report on Sunday-schools. The report discussed the Sunday-school question and recommended that a District Sunday-School Association be organized, to meet yearly, the day before the meeting of the District Conference. After consideration, the report was amended so as to fix the time for meeting of the Sunday-school Association at the same time and place as the Epworth League Conference, and was adopted.

The hour set apart for the election of lay delegates to the Annual Conference having arrived, the lay delegates proceeded to choose from among their number four delegates and four alternates. The balloting consumed some time.

The hour set apart for preaching having arrived the Conference took a recess and listened to a strong, forceful and uplifting sermon by Rev. R. T. Waterfield, pastor of Owen's Memorial Church, Portsmouth, who preached from the following text: "But God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto the world, and I unto the world."

After the sermon the Conference decided to proceed with its business until the hour of final adjournment should arrive and to partake of the bountiful dinner supplied by the hospitable people of people of Franklin at the Armory building after the business of the Conference had been disposed of.

J. L. Laagley read the report of the Committee on Epworth League, which was an admirable paper, setting forth the aims and objects of the League, regretting the inactivity of some of the Churches along this line, urging the pastors to push the work, pledging the support of the League to Dr. Bledsoe in his efforts to build the Virginia Orphanage for Methodist orphans, endorsing the "Epworth Era" and recommending that an annual conference of representatives of Epworth Leagues and Sunday-schools be held.

The report was adopted after a brief discussion. A. B. Beadles submitted the report on the spiritual condition of the Church, which was of much interest. The paper declared that the reports coming up from the various churches were of an encouraging character, that there had been more than 400 conversions reported in the district this year, and many of the Churches had not held their revival services as yet.

The presiding elder addressed the Conference briefly on the subject of the Woman's Missionary Society.

The report of the Committee on Circuit Boundaries was submitted by Rev. L. B. Betty and adopted without discussion.

Mr. G. L. Neville stated, in the course of remarks by him, that the Portsmouth district was one of the very best, if not the leading district in the Conference; that it had been steadily improving since its organization along all lines. In the matter of ministerial support it stood at the top of the list, there being but two charges on the entire district which did not pay up in full last year, and in both of these cases the deficit was a small one.

After adopting resolutions thanking the presiding officer and others for courtesies extended, the Conference adjourned sine die.—Portsmouth "Star."

NORFOLK DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

(We are sorry to omit Wednesday's proceedings because of misplaced copy.—Ed.)

The Norfolk District Conference reconvened at Lambert's Point M. E. Church at 9 a. m., Thursday, and was called to order by Rev. H. E. Johnson, D. D. The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. R. M. Chandler, of Chesnut Street Church, Berkley.

The paper introduced by Dr. Johnson at Wednesday's session, with reference to establishing one of the homes for superannuated ministers of the Conference in this city, was read as follows:

Whereas, The Virginia Conference at its last session in Portsmouth resolved to build several homes for the superannuated members of the Conference, and referred the matter to the Joint Board of Finance with power to act; and,

Whereas, We believe it would be wise and desirable to have one of these homes located in the city of Norfolk; therefore,

Resolved, That we request the Joint Board to locate one home for superannuates in Norfolk.

Resolved, That the Methodists of the Norfolk district pledge themselves to cooperate with the Board in this matter.

An amendment was offered to the paper by Rev. R. M. Chandler, striking out the word "Norfolk" and inserting in its stead "any point along the line of the Norfolk district."

The amendment was discussed pro and con by Dr. Johnson, Rev. Chandler and Lay Delegates S. N. Brickhouse, after which the paper, as amended, was adopted.

A resolution of greeting from the Portsmouth District Conference, in session at Franklin, and extending sympathy to this body in the illness of its presiding elder, Rev. Dr. Brown, was read. On motion of Dr. Young, Rev. Chandler was requested to write a reply by telegraph to the Portsmouth Conference.

Lay Delegate B. T. Bockover, of Epworth Church, Norfolk, tendered a lot near Ghent for the building of a home for superannuated preachers in the Norfolk district, provided the Joint Board of Finance decides to locate one in this city.

Rev. Geo. H. Spooner, of Lambert's Point Church, offered the following, which was adopted by a rising vote:

"Resolved, That we have heard with pleasure the offer made by Brother B. T. Bockover, of Norfolk, of a lot near Ghent, to be used as a location for a home for our superannuated preachers, according to the proposed plan of the Joint Board of Finance."

Resolved, That the thanks of the District Conference be extended to Bro. Bockover for his generous offer."

Dr. Young made a statement concern-

Prepares boys for College, Ministry or Business. Complete in its equipment, thorough in its instruction, and moderate in its charges.

The health, order, and high character of the work last session evidenced by the following:

1. Only one case of serious sickness (pneumonia), and that yielded promptly to treatment.
2. Forty-three (43) per cent. of the students received no demerits during the entire session.
3. Thirty-nine (39) per cent. passed with distinction on all their classes.

The fact that nineteen (19) degrees, professional and classical, were conferred this year on students prepared at the Academy by the Colleges and Universities of this and other States shows the thorough character of the work we are doing.

ing the State Methodist Orphanage. He said that Richmond had been chosen as the seat of this institution, as the choice of several fine lots had been tendered the Church there. He said the prospect of making the orphanage a grand success is very promising.

Dr. Paul Bradley read the report on Church literature. The paper expresses regret that there is a lack of the religious literature of the Church in many of the homes of Methodists in the district, and great need of family worship in many instances. In closing the report commended as worthy of the patronage of Methodists the Southern Methodist Review, the Nashville Christian Advocate, the general organ of the M. E. Church, South; the Richmond Christian Advocate, the organ of the Virginia Conference, and the Southern Methodist Recorder.

Rev. Chandler moved to strike out of the paper just read on Church literature so much of the report as referred to the Southern Methodist Recorder.

The offering of this amendment provoked a warm debate, which was participated in by Revs. Chandler and Charles E. Watts, and Lay Delegate Brickhouse, who favored the amendment, and by Revs. Bradley, W. R. Crowder and W. T. Williams, who favored the passage of the original report.

Several votes were taken, and the chair being unable to satisfactorily decide the vote on the amendment to the satisfaction of all present, a ye and nay vote was ordered, and the amendment was lost—yeas, 30; nays, 25. The paper as originally offered was then adopted.

Dr. Johnson read the report on spiritual condition of the church. It says spirituality is health; a spiritual Church is a healthy Church. The means of grace will be a delight, the sanctuary will be crowded, and the desire for Christian work will be manifest. A spiritual Christian will maintain a holy separateness from the world; a family altar never crowded aside by the rush of business, and the place of secret prayer so familiar that the soul instinctively turns to it in every time of need.

Resolved, That we will by example, and by exhortation, urge each other, and recommend to all a diligent practice of family and secret prayer, a diligent study of God's word and a life holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners.

The report was adopted without discussion.

The hour of 3 o'clock was announced and the Conference proceeded to elect delegates and alternates to the Annual Conference.

Lay Delegates Keeling and Berkley were appointed tellers.

The first ballot was had, and the following was elected:

Epworth, Norfolk—Captain John L. Roper.

Lambert's Point—V. S. Backus.

Princess Anne—R. N. Woodhouse.

Liberty-Street, South Norfolk—Dr. G. N. Halstead.

Alternates: Cumberland Street, Norfolk—E. J. Whitehurst.

LeKies Memorial—J. H. Shumadine.

Centenary—James A. Rives.

East Norfolk, Denby—W. J. Land.

On motion of Dr. Young, a committee of three, composed of Dr. Young, and Revs. W. H. Edwards and C. W. Pettit, were appointed to take charge of the matter of a home for superannuated preachers.

The Conference accepted the invitation from Denby Church, East Norfolk circuit, to meet with them next year.

A vote of thanks was extended the pastor and congregation of Lambert's Point Church for the use of their edifice for the Conference sessions and for the royal reception and sumptuous entertainment of the Conference.

After singing "Footprints of Jesus" the benediction was pronounced and the Conference adjourned sine die.—Norfolk "Virginian-Pilot."

For Measuring Distances.

The telemeter is an invention the purpose of which is to measure distance in a very easy and accurate way. The construction of it is somewhat in this wise: A telescope is mounted upon an arm about three feet long, the end of the arm nearest the telescope having a graduation scale for either angles or distances. A horizon glass is firmly attached to the arm, and there is also an adjustable vernier which acts with the adjacent graduations on the arm. The reflecting surface of the index glass is set at an angle of 45 degrees to the axis of the lever. The manipulation is very simple. Looking through the telescope and horizon glass at the object the distance of which is to be measured, the lever is swung over so that the index glass receives the image and reflects it to the horizon glass at a point coincident with the line of sight. The vernier determines the angle, and the base line being known the distance of the object may be readily computed.

Japan's Great Steel Plant.

Japan is now building a great steel plant. The works will cost $10,000,000, and will be put into operation within three years. The product of the plant for the first year will be almost exclusively steel rails and probably some steel plates for ships. Boiler plates, bar steel and structural iron will follow in order. This steel plant, which will be situated at Yawatamura, a town of about 10,000 inhabitants, is on the extreme northern end of the island of Kishiu. This island, according to reports, is rich in coal.—San Francisco Chronicle.

If you intend to make a home out of a house, give it plenty of storage room and real closets, not 4 inch deep places, in which a man cannot hang up a high hat. If you intend to rent out your house, put the closets in all the same, and if the woman of the house has anything to say about which house is to be taken the one with the most closets will get the vote, other things being considered.—Exchange.

Virginia's Attractions.

It is astonishing what a vast amount of rational enjoyment may be extracted from a ten days' visit to Virginia; how it may be made to compensate for the unold miseries of months of labor, and, in fact, obliterate the remembrance of the "ticker" or of "trial balances," which one must endure while tossing among the breakers of modern business.

In the Chesapeake & Ohio sections of the Old Dominion are bits of scenery, each bearing an indelible impress of Creation's hands, and each preserving memories of Nature's might. The Natural Bridge, the Grottoes of the Shenandoah, the Caverns of Luray, the New River canyons, tell stories widely different from Nature's structures of continental Europe; and Old Point Comfort, Williamsburg, Richmond and the Lower James disclose fragments of history of far greater interest to us of American birth than the treasures of the Old World. Pictures of delicious and magic beauty abound. In the heart of the Alleghenies health and pleasure seekers find life-giving waters and social enjoyment at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia Hot Springs, and a host of other resorts of world-wide fame. If one is an enthusiastic lover of military history, with an admiration for war-like deeds of war-like men, he may stand on almost any mountain in Virginia and gaze upon fields where men's hopes have been destroyed and upon plains which have wept bloody dew. The lover of Nature will see valleys of peace, and rich, fertile dells, through which silver rivers wind their graceful lines. The student of the utilitarian school may feast his eyes on mines of iron and zinc and coal, and while to the sentimental there are nooks fitted only to the intermingling of the lover's speech.

RANDOLPH-MACON WOMAN'S COLLEGE, LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

This College is named by the United States Commissioner of Education as one of the fourteen Colleges for women in the United States entitled to be classed in "Division A." (See Official Report, page 1732.)

1. LOCATION: Virginia.

Near the foot of the Blue Ridge, in the residence suburbs of Lynchburg—beautiful scenery, health-giving climate, railroad, telegraph, telephone, street cars, modern facilities.

2. PLANT: $134,000.

Campus 20 acres. Building new, modern; steam heat, gas, hot and cold water, etc. Front 365 feet. Four separate laboratories; excellent library; sky-lit art studios; large gymnasium, chapel, lecture rooms, music rooms, etc.

3. ENDOWMENT: $102,000.

The annual income from the endowment of $102,000 is applied toward current expenses. The plant is exempt from charges for rent or taxes, thus patrons get thousands of dollars free every year. The purpose of the college is not to make money, but to make noble, cultured women.

New Equipment on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway.

To accommodate the increasing travel over the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway the Pullman Company have just completed and placed in service on the "F. V." Limited four new twelve-section and drawing-room sleepers of the latest pattern and most magnificent furnishings. They are named after four of the picturesque and historic rivers crossed by the C. & O., viz: "Rappahannock," "Greenbrier," "Rapidan," and "Kanawha." They are fitted with the newest pattern wide vestibules and painted the regulation C. & O. color—a bright orange with brown and gold trimmings. The interior wood work is highly polished vermilion, the upholstering dark blue plush, except in the gentlemen's smoking rooms, which are large and commodious and upholstered in leather. The ladies toilet rooms are much larger than in sleepers heretofore built, a point much appreciated by the fair sex. The construction of the cars is such that when the berths are up there is more room over head, permitting better ventilation and freeing the cars from the low, stuffy appearance generally noticeable. They are lighted by electricity, and, in addition to the regular clusters in the ceiling, each berth is fitted with a small globe for the convenience of occupants.—"Evening Star," Washington, D. C.

CHURCH SITE PURCHASED.

The Methodist Church to be erected in Berkley by Mr. E. M. Tilley at a cost of $20,000, as a memorial to his deceased wife, will be commenced in a short time, the trustees of Chestnut Street Church having purchased from Mrs. Mary Petherbridge for $4,850 the lot 85 by 128 feet at the intersection of Berkley avenue and First street for that purpose.

DEATH OF MRS. LEAR.

Mrs. Susan S. Lear died at her home in Petersburg Saturday at the advanced age of 70 years.
Mrs. Lear was the relict of Joseph Lear, a well-known citizen of Petersburg. She died at the home of her son, Rev. W. W. Lear, of Petersburg. Her only other child is Mr. John S. Lear, of Richmond.
Mrs. Lear's maiden name was Miss Wilkerson. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for many years. The funeral took place from the Market-Street Methodist Church.

SCORES THE UNIVERSIEY.

In a sermon on "Christian Education," Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, pastor of the Washington-Avenue Methodist Church, Newport News, said he was ashamed of the University of Virginia as an illustration of a State educational institution. While he honored and admired some members of the faculty, the influences thrown around the pupils, he said, if not positively immoral, were not conducive to spirituality. He referred to the Germans and balls abounding at the commencement season as an illustration of the point he raised.

"Better teach a boy to lead a prayer-meeting," said he "than to teach him to lead a ball."

CHURCH DEBT PAID.

The services at the Churches of the city last Sunday were very well attended, notwithstanding the excessive heat. There were but few visiting ministers here, and there were but two services of any unusual interest. One of these was held at McKendree M. E. Church, it being in the nature of a thank-offering for the purpose of clearing away the debt of the Church. $3125 was the amount needed, and at the morning service $2300 of this was contributed. At night enough was raised to cut the debt down to $400, and yesterday this amount was contributed, making the whole sum needed.—Norfolk "Landmark."

VIRGINIA'S PART.

Dr. W. W. Smith, chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system, writes "The New Century Education:" "We have not yet sought to press our canvass to the subscription point, except that we have given our Church schools an opportunity to subscribe, and are now asking the members of our boards of trustees to indicate what they propose to do: The results thus far are: Officers, students, and board of Blackstone Female Institute, $5,000; officers and students of Randolph-Macon system, $9,424, (this is but a small part of what the board will give); Mr. Rolfe Millar, Front Royal, $2,000. Total, $19,449. We hope to double this by August from special subscriptions preliminary to a general and close canvass. There is no doubt that Virginia will raise her part of the funds."

SAYINGS BY SAM JONES.

Repentance is the first conscious movement of the soul from sin toward God.

Thank God, this old world has never seen the time when it did not take its hat off and make a decent bow to a good woman.

Religion is like measles; if it goes in on you, it will kill you. The trouble with a great many Christians in this city is, religion has gone in on them. Keep it broke out on hands, feet, and tongue.

God implanted in every woman's nature an inveterate hatred of the devil; and your success for both worlds depends on how you live out that principle. Die fighting him.

We may give ourselves to the Church that is helpful; we may give ourselves to good associations—that is helpful; but there is no self dedication that is worth much in this world, except that self dedication that gives the life to God.

It is customary in Georgia to build storm-pits to protect the people from the fury of storms. I would not give the honest prayer for all the storm-pits in Georgia. I heard of a lady who, when she thought a storm was coming, started down to the storm-pit, and fell and broke her neck, and they never had any storm.

What is salvation? Every theological book I look into tells me that salvation is deliverance—first, from the guilt of sin; second, from the love of sin; and third, from the dominion of sin. That is what the books say salvation means, but if I were to answer out of the word of God, and out of Christian experience, I would say that it is the loving of everything that God loves, and the hating of everything that God hates.

This world is the fruit-bearing world. Up yonder we will eat and rejoice forever over the fruit we have matured here below. Between the bud and the blossom and the ripe fruit of love there are many difficulties. There are the cold winds of neglect, and the biting frosts of temptation; there are a thousand intervening difficulties between the blossom and the ripe fruit.

Christ always lives where there is room for him. If there is room in your heart for Christ, he lives there; if there is room in your law office for Christ, he lives there; if there is room in your store for Christ, he lives there; if there is room on a locomotive engine, he will be there; if there is room in your baggage-car, he will be there. Everywhere there is room for him he will come into our homes, and into our store, and into our shops, and on our engines, and into our cars—that is, if we will provide room for him.

GOOD FOR THE INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

The Indian Mission Conference's proportion of the $1,500,000 twentieth century fund is $12,800. Bro J. H. Pritchett writes: "I have been with the brethren of the Indian Mission Conference at three points and you may be glad to know that $10,000 is now in sight at these three points; The preachers of this Conference can easily make this amount $20,000."

CORRESPONDENCE

THE RANDOLPH-MACON ACADEMY AT BEDFORD CITY, VA.

In this school, situate in the most beautiful and healthy section of Virginia, the Methodists have an institution of high grade, which is doing a great work for both Church and State. Its buildings are massive, attractive, and admirably adapted to its purposes. Faithful training is here given to the mind and morals, while close attention is also bestowed on the health and comfort of the students. During the nine years of its existence the school has steadily grown in public favor, and the fine quality of its work is attested by the high standing of its students in the Colleges and Universities which they have entered, and from which many have graduated with honor. During the session which closed in June patronage was received from twelve States.

The highest praise of this Academy is found in its thorough work rather than in flattering words from partial friends. Its aim is not to develop by especial care a few exceptionally bright minds, but to secure from all its students, by judicious training and attention, the highest success attainable. As a legitimate result of this method of teaching each year has been marked by a steady advance, and during the last session a large percentage passed with distinction on any of their studies. Thirty-nine per cent. of the pupils passed with distinction on all their studies. Forty-three per cent. received during the entire session no demerits for tardiness or disorder.

During the scholastic year of 1899, nineteen degrees were conferred by Colleges and Universities of this and other

THE JUNIOR RECORDER

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., JULY 20, 1899.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON V, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 30.

Text of the Lesson. Dan. vi. 10-23.
Memory Verses. 21-23—Golden Text.
Ps. cxvi. 5—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

10 "He kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." A poor time to give thanks, one might say, when his enemies were seeking his life with full determination to kill him. Some would have been full of fear and would have thought it wise and a very lawful precaution to have at least closed the window during prayer time, but this man of God who lived before God and not before men simply kept on doing as he had done aforetime.

11 "Then these men assembled and found Daniel praying and making supplication before his God." A hundred and twenty-two against one, and the king on their side (unwittingly against Daniel), there seemed no hope for Daniel. His hope was in God, not in man, his mind was staid on God and therefore at peace (Isa. xxvi. 3), and he feared not to be found praying.

12 "The king answered and said, The thing is true according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not." These enemies of Daniel reminded the king that he had signed a decree that if any one should ask a petition of any god or man for 30 days, except of himself, he should be put in the den of lions, and the king had to acknowledge that it was even so. When asked to sign the decree, the king's vanity was appealed to, a point on which many are weak, and he probably had not the remotest thought of the possible consequences.

13 "That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, regardeth not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou hast signed." They would have the king think that they esteemed him very highly, but that Daniel, the Jew, despised both him and his decree. The confession in verse 4, that they could find none occasion nor fault in him, makes us think of the confession of Pilate concerning Christ (John xviii. 38; xix. 4. 6).

14 "Then the king when he heard these words was sore displeased with himself and set his heart on Daniel to deliver him." And to that end he labored till the going down of the sun. He loved Daniel and esteemed him and saw now how his enemies were seeking his ruin and how he himself had unintentionally become a partner with them. It must have been a surprise to the presidents and princes that Darius was displeased with himself rather than with Daniel, and that in seeking to kill Daniel they were grieving the king. It is well to know the mind of the king and to say II Sam. xv. 15.

15 "No decree nor statute which the king establisheth may be changed." For the third time these men assembled with determination to kill Daniel (verses 6, 11), each time pressing their cruelty more earnestly. Daniel might truly have said, "They hate me with cruel hatred," "They hated me without a cause" (Ps. lxxix. 4). How persistent are the servants of Satan to destroy life! Our blessed Lord came to give life and to give abundance of it (John x. 10).

16 "My God, whom thou servest continually, He will deliver thee." Thus did Darius, compelled by his own law to put Daniel in the lions' den, seek to comfort him. The law cannot save any one, for it is to those who break it the ministration of death (Gal. iii. 11, 21). Neither can mere love always accomplish all it desires to, for Darius loved Daniel, and as a king he had great power. If Darius had loved Daniel enough to take his place and go to the lions' den in his stead, it might have saved Daniel, this our blessed Lord did, for the Son of God loved me and gave Himself for me (Gal. ii. 20).

17 "And a stone was brought and laid upon the mouth of the den, and the king sealed it with his own signet." Jeremiah said, "They have cut off my life in the dungeon and cast a stone upon me" (Lam. iii. 53). Both Jeremiah and Daniel and every good prophet were typical of the greatest of all the prophets, the Lord Jesus Christ, who died in our stead, and, His body being placed in the tomb, the tomb was sealed (Math. xxvii. 66). In each case the sealing was to make sure the purpose of the enemy, but it was a vain purpose and wrought the doom of those who thus served the adversary.

18 "Then the king went to his palace and passed the night fasting." He slept not, nor did he allow himself to be entertained with music. His heart was sore on account of Daniel's peril, and he longed for the morning that he might know if Daniel's God had delivered him from the lions. The love that would deliver if it could, but finds itself helpless so to do, is a mighty thing and yet is but a faint shadowing of the love that gave the only begotten Son of God to die for our sins.

19 "Then the king arose very early in the morning and went in haste unto the den of lions," so anxious was he to know of his friend's welfare. But what shall we say of our Lord, who continued all night in prayer, who rose a great while before day and went out to a solitary place to pray, and who in the garden was in such an agony in prayer that He sweat, as it were, great drops of blood (Luke vi. 12 xxii. 44; Mark i. 35).

20 "O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God whom thou servest continually able to deliver thee from the lions?" Thus cried Darius with a lamentable voice, hoping to and yet wondering if he would receive an answer. Daniel's friends knew that the God whom they served was able to deliver them from the furnace, but that whether He delivered them from going into the furnace or not He certainly would deliver them from the hand of Nebuchadnezzar.

21, 22 "My God hath sent His angel and hath shut the lions' mouths that they have not hurt me." With a kind word to the king, thus replied Daniel to the glory of God, and Darius was exceedingly glad and commanded to take up Daniel out of the den. Better far to be in the lions' den or the fiery furnace with God than in the best possible circumstances of earthly comfort without Him.

23 "So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God." The helpful thoughts from this and the concluding verses of the chapter are more than space will allow us to give, but may a few suggest more to you by the Holy Spirit. The morning of resurrection will prove that no real evil has ever befallen a child of God. The enemies of God shall perish in that morning (II Thess. i. 7-10). By Daniel's faith the living God was honored in all the known world through the epistle of Darius.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 30, "That Good Part"—Text, Luke x. 38-42.

"One thing needful."

The home in Bethany was a congenial resting place for Jesus when He was in the vicinity of Jerusalem. Martha seems to have been the recognized head of the little family group. Perhaps she was the eldest. The coming of Jesus caused much extra work, and Martha was perplexed by the cares of the household.

Mary realized, perhaps more deeply than any one else, the true mission of the Master and entered most deeply into the spirit of the coming kingdom of God. To her every word of the Christ was precious, and, as the opportunities to see and hear Him were so few and short, she must be with Him every moment possible. She would not neglect needful care for food and His bodily comfort, but she entered so fully into His own spirit that those things took a second place. To hear Him talk of the things of the spirit life was the one thing most essential.

So is it ever in this life. The bodily needs, the cares of the home, the pressure of business, social duties, all the multitudinous details of living absorb so much of time and energy and thought that we grow harassed, burdened, cumbered with much serving. We almost forget that Jesus is here, as our guest, is talking, is telling of things no one ever before revealed, no one else can reveal. All our future life happiness is bound up in His teaching. What a pity we can't stop fretting about things to eat and feed on His words a little!

It is grand to do much serving for Jesus' sake. Talking, praying, giving, singing and all the rest. But it is better to stop it all, once in awhile, and sit down in quietness at His feet and listen. Other things are good, this one is needful.

Do You Go to Church?

Of course every Christian does and particularly if a member of the League or any young people's society—that is, they go to some service. Perhaps it is the young people's meeting only. Often it is to the preaching service occasionally. It is to be feared that many have no settled habit of attending public worship. The morning service has no special attraction. Hard work all the week makes a person relish the rest in bed Sunday morning. Then some out of doors recreation seems desirable, bicycle, trolley, walking or driving as one chooses or is able to afford. Occasionally some special attraction of music or unusual address may draw one out in the evening to the church, but there are multitudes who almost never enter its doors.

How many church members are gradually drifting into the same habits! Better change the programme. Stop

"BILL JONES" —BY— MRS. ALICE PARSONS.

AS he a Christian? Never heard that Bill Jones ever said a word About his soul before he died. But this I know: the people cried
And said, "His like was never seen,
From Braxton Ways to Marshall's Green."

No, I can't say where he was born, I only know one summer morn
A stranger wandered to my door, said he was hungry and foot-sore,
And, would I let him have a bit
To eat and drink? he'd pay for it.

He answered, when I asked his name, just plain Bill Jones, unknown to fame
That he was out a huntin' work, most any kind, he wouldn't shirk,
Would take it by the job or day,
And wouldn't grumble at the pay.

He found a place with Miller Brown, and soon was known to all the town,
Had kindly words for all he'd meet, would kiss the children on the street.
If there was sorrow anywhere,
Bill Jones was sure to be right there.

BILL WORKED ALL DAY AND WATCHED AT NIGHT.

When Joe Smith fell and broke his arm, Bill's nursin' him worked like a charm
When Widow Gray failed with her rent, he went and paid it, every cent.
Last fall, the chills took Father White,
Bill worked all day, an' watched at night.

Meetin'? Not often he'd attend, but then, he was the parson's friend;
And many a trip the mill cart made with flour and meal for which Bill paid.
At Christmas time no humble cot
Was ever by Bill Jones forgot.

A creed? Only one kind will do. 'Tis that which strikes a man clear through.
No matter how he prays, and talks if it ain't lived in daily walks.
An' all the people understood
That Bill Jones' creed was "doin' good."

He left us all the other night a lookin' well an' seemin' right,
But ere had closed another day we heard that Bill had passed away.
They found him kneelin' by his bed
With hands clasped tight, and bowed his head.

Was he a Christian? Never heard. About his soul he said no word.
But when we stood around the dead, "Dear Father," this the parson said,
"We know not whence the wanderer came,
Nor even if this be his name—"

"He made no choice of church or creed, but passed none by who were in need.
Love for one common brotherhood an' actin' right an' doin' good,
With kindly deeds for others wrought
Seemed but to be the man's sole thought.

"Lord, open heaven's portal wide,
We pray, and welcome him inside,
For in the good that Bill has done
We trace the teachings of Thy Son.
O, show Thy mercy, Lord, we plead—
For he helped others in their need."

Was he a Christian? Who shall say,
And what your answer, yea or nay?
Yet in a book I've read of One
Who came to earth, God's blessed Son,
An' helped mankind whene'er he could
An' spent His life in "doin' good."

THEY DOED

"DE DRAW POWER."

A STORY OF A PASTOR'S MOST IMPORTANT QUALIFICATION.

I WISH you could have known my friend, John, but he has gone to the heavenly Canaan he loved to sing about.

John was an interdenominationalist in practice, though in theory he would have denied all fellowship with anything he considered so heretical.

He served the Presbyterian Church in the important office of janitor, but continued his membership in the Baptist Church,—and honesty compels the statement he was somewhat inclined to be 'hard shell.'

The two churches were only a block apart, and John often ran down to hear the sermon in his own church.

How his black face would shine when he was interested; sometimes he would get so lost in thought as to forget his surroundings,—he would then rest his elbows on his knees, and his head on his hands, nothing but the top of his head and those great shining eyes appearing above the top of the pew. But the speaker would have no difficulty in reading John's thoughtful sympathy or earnest inquiry; and sometimes positive disapproval, for what he thought heresy was positively dealt with;—every emotion seemed to shine out through the "windows of his soul."

One morning he came in just as the text was announced; the words were these:—"There was a man sent from God, and his name was John." He was only half way over to his seat,—but he stood still and looked intently as though to assure himself that he had heard correctly, so I repeated the text—though possibly no one but John realized that I did it for his benefit. His face wore a happy smile as he hurried to his seat, and his manner seemed to say—"Other folks may get what they may—but that sermon is my very own."

Perhaps there were some lessons taught which would never have been thought of had not John's interest drawn them out,—for I know the sermon delivered was more helpful than the one prepared in the study.

We met on Monday, and his first words were of his gladness to think of God sending us to do the little common-place services of every-day life; and when I explained how he could help the good pastor of the church he served, by proper attention to temperature, ventilation, and other features of his work, he seemed delighted with the importance of his work, but somewhat serious because he had not realized his responsibility.

Several spoke of that sermon, and thanked me for it,—it was John's sermon more than mine, he kindled so readily that it set me on fire. It was his light shining through me.

One Sunday I missed him and wondered at his absence, but when I heard that the newly-appointed Methodist pastor preached that day I understood it. He always went to hear every new pastor at least once. I was sure something could be gained from an explanation of his habit, so when we next met I said,—"John I missed you last Sunday."

"Yas, sir," he said as he bashfully fumbled his hat, his expansively expressive smile showing his pleasure at being missed.

"I suppose you went over to hear the new Methodist pastor?" I ventured.

"Dat's just what I did!" he answered, bringing his hands together with force to show his amusement at my accurate guess.

"John," I said, "tell me why you go to hear every new pastor in the neighborhood? You're not a man to leave your own church without good reason."

"Well, now, pastor, I hopes you don't go thinkin' I just go gaddin round for curiosity sake?"

"No, that's not it," I answered. "I want to get the benefit of your reason, for I am sure it is a good one."

John's face wore a reverent look as he said: "I don't know how I can 'xplain how I feel 'bout preachin', it's mighty important work,—no man ought to go to preachin' if he aint qualified of the Lord."

"What do you consider the most important qualification for a minister?" I asked.

"That's just what I was goin to tell you about," said John. "I don't b'lieve any man ought to try preachin unless he's got de draw power; and I always likes to hear a new preacher soon so's to find out if he's got it."

"Perhaps I'm a little slow to understand, John, won't you explain just what you mean by 'draw power?'"

"Sho!" he answered with good-natured impatience, "you don't need no 'xplainin, you's all the time preachin that we ought to have it, only maybe you don't call it by that name. I mean that feelin what comes when you hear a man talk that cares,—it kind o' makes you glad and sorry. He gets hold of you in such a way that you get awful near to him, and you can't help thinkin' just as he does. It's cause he loves so. I can tell when a man's got it, but I can't tell what it's like."

"I understand you, John," I said, as I shook hands with him. "You have preached a good sermon to me, today."

He went away happy at the thought of preaching a sermon, and I went my way pondering the lesson.

"Draw power." Yes, I think I know what it is, for I read that "the publicans and sinners drew near" to Jesus "to hear Him." It was His loving sympathy that drew them.

John was right, it is the "caring." Then again we read, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me," that grand old doctrine—the magnetism of the Cross, is wrapped up in John's homely phrase, "de draw power."

It is not alone the preacher who needs it. It is needed by every one. There can be no real success without it. Have you the "draw power?"

FOREVER WITH THE LORD.

So shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.—1 Thess. 4: 17-18.

I CANNOT tell where those bright mansions may be,
Which Jesus my Saviour has gone to prepare—
In what favored spot of His wide universe
He'll gather His loved ones, His glory to share.

I only am sure He's preparing a place,
Somewhere, far removed from this lowland of tears,
And that He will take me, when He thinketh best,
To dwell with Him there through the infinite years.

I know not the splendors and glories divine,
Whose brightness may burst on my wakening sight—
What pleasures supernal may ravish my soul
In that holy city of perfect delight
I know only this, I care not to know more,
That where my Redeemer is I, too, shall be;
Whatever the joys and the blessings beside,
E'en this I am sure, will be Heaven to me

I know not what music will rapture my ear—
Glad psalms and hosannas the glorified sing—
What bowers of beauty may gladden my eyes
When first I shall enter the gates of the King
But oh! when I hear the sweet sound of His voice,
Repeating the long-prayed-for welcome to me,
And see all His love in the smile of His face—
What more could I wish that my Heaven should be?

I know not what may be th' employments of Heav'n,
What duties, what service, the King will assign,
What missions of mercy to far distant worlds,
Some day, from the throne of my God, may be mine.
But oh! if naught else might my spirit engage,
Methinks at His crucified feet I would fall,
And praise Him always for His wonderful love
In saving a sinner, the vilest of all.

Nor yet can I reckon what I shall be then,

What likeness my heavenly body shall wear,
What name shall be mine in the city of God,
What mem'ries of earth I shall take with me there
He tells me but this, I shall know as I'm known,
That "like unto His" my poor body shall be,
That I shall receive His own name in my brow,
And I shall be like Him—this satisfies me.

To wake with His likeness! Hail, glorious morn,
Whose dawn will proclaim that my spirit is free:
Unsullied and pure, all infirmity gone,
At last the Refiner His image can see.
To pow'rs of the soul, now enfeebled and small,
Shall then be their perfect enfranchisement giv'n,
And Knowledge and Love, plodding wearily here,
Will move with the swift intuition of Heav'n.

To be with the Lord! How transporting the thought!
To rest on His bosom, gaze up in His face,
Hold precious and perfect communion with Him,
Unclouded by sense and unhindered by space.
To learn of Him there, as I've learned of him here
New lessons of truth from his infinite store,
To fathom still deeper His fathomless love,
And love Him forever and ever still more.

Forever with Him! Blessed, bright-beaming hope
That pierces the gloom of earth's dreariest ways
That lightens the burdens and scatters the clouds
And gladdens the heart with its heavenly rays.
Forever with Him! Soul, rejoice and be glad,
Rise up and behold, what a prospect in store!
His likeness, His presence, are soon to be thine,
And thou shalt be thirsty and lonely no more.

drifting and began to live in earnest. Nothing you can do on Sunday will so rest your body, mind and spirit as to rise early and go to the church for public worship. It changes the whole tone and tenor of the life. It gives fresh impulses and new thought. It diverts care and enlarges one's world. It lifts and inspires. Better make it a rule and follow it, to go to church regularly.

Every man who is doing honest work has the right to lift up his head among men everywhere and hold himself in hand and be one of earth's noblemen. Paul was a tentmaker, Jesus a carpenter, and their fellow craftsmen have no need to be ashamed if they do their work well.

It takes more labor to raise wheat than it does to grow a crop of weeds, but, then, the wheat is worth more when harvested. It takes work to establish good habits and do good deeds; it takes self denial and care, but then it pays in the satisfaction of being right and pure. No one is good by chance. Plow the weeds under and cultivate wheat.

After the Convention—What?

The great Indianapolis gathering is over. The immense throngs, the inspiring music, the soul filling and lifting addresses and prayers; the excitement, the enthusiasm of the hour, the delightful social associations, the strange, new scenes of the trip, the new acquaintanceships, have all had their effect. Tens of thousands return home changed in many things from what they were a fortnight since. Life is larger, fuller, richer, more intense and deeper.

Reaction from fatigue will be felt both in body and mind. Beware lest it be a snare to the soul. Slow down the speed, but keep fast hold of all the good gained.

After the convention—what? Higher ideals of science, of duty, of privilege. Deeper consecration of soul and body. More watchfulness, more freedom. Deeper heart devotion and nearness to Jesus. More loyalty to the church, more love for our fellows.

"One thing is needful." Choose it. Nearness to Christ.

"No man today has a loftier pulpit than the Christian business man who so deals with his employees that their labor is an angel of joy and blessing to them, and thus making his own labor an angel, uplifting and comforting him and leading him into fellowship with God."—Christian Advocate.

What Might Be Done.

What might be done if men were wise—
What glorious deeds, my suffering brother,
Would they unite
In love and right
And cease their scorn of one another?

All slavery, warfare, lies and wrongs,
All vice and crime might die together;
And oil and corn
To each man born,
Be free as warmth in summer weather.

What might be done? This might be done,
And more than this, my suffering brother—
More than the tongue
E'er said or sung,
If men were wise and loved each other.

WHY THE ARMADA FAILED.

Captain Mahan, the Great Naval Tactician,
Discusses the Cause of the Disaster.

The armada entered the English channel on July 30 and on the 6th of August anchored off Calais, having traversed the channel successfully in a week. Three several actions had occurred. None was decisive, but all tended generally in favor of the English, who utilized their advantages of speed and artillery to hammer the foe with their long guns, while keeping out of range of his muskets and lighter cannon. The Spanish losses in battle, by a Spanish authority, were 600 killed and 800 wounded. The English loss from first to last did not reach 100. Such a discrepancy tells its own tale, but it is to be remembered, moreover, that men slain means sides pierced and frames shattered. Shots that fly wide or that cut spars, sails and rigging kill comparatively few. With hulls thus damaged the Spaniards had to confront the equinoctial gales of the Atlantic.

At Calais, a friendly town, Parma might possibly join, but there was no harbor for big ships, and it was unreasonable to expect that he, with the whole charge of the Netherlands on his hands, would be waiting there, ignorant when the fleet would appear or whether it would come at all. Medina Sidonia sent him word of his arrival, but it could not be hoped that the English would allow the fleet to occupy that unprotected position undisturbed. The wind being to the westward, they anchored at a safe distance to windward and on the night of Aug. 7 sent against the Spaniards eight fireships. The ordinary means of diverting these failing, the Spanish admiral got under way. In this operation the fleet drifted nearer the shore, and the wind next day coming out strong from the northwest and setting the ships bodily on the coast, he, under the advice of the pilots, stood into the North sea. Had Flushing been in their possession, it might, with good pilots, have afforded a refuge, but it was held by the Dutch. The enemy's ships, more weathery, drew up and engaged again, while the continuance of the wind and the clumsiness of the Spaniards threatened destruction upon the shoals off the Flemish coast. The sudden shifting of the wind to the south saved them when already in only six or seven fathoms of water. Here again was no bad luck, nor could it be considered a misfortune that the southerly breeze, which carried them to the Pentland Frith, changed to the northeast as they passed the Orkneys and entered the Atlantic, being thus fair for their homeward course.

The disasters of the armada were due to the following causes: First, the failure to prescribe the effectual crippling of the English navy as a condition precedent to any attempt at invasion; second, the neglect to secure beforehand a suitable point for making the junction with the army (combinations thus intrusted to chance have no right to expect success); third, the several actions with the English failed because the ships, which could exert their power only close to the enemy, were neither so fast nor so handy as the latter (only those who have the advantage of range can afford inferiority of speed); fourth, the disasters in the Atlantic were due either to original unseaworthiness or to damage received in action or to bad judgment in taking unweathery ships too close to the shores of Ireland, where strong westerly gales prevailed and the coast was inhospitable.—Captain Alfred T. Mahan in Century For June.

THE COLLEGE WOMAN.

A Problem Which Troubles Her Less Than
It Does the Critics.

The problem, What is to be done with the college woman? has of late been troubling critics and reviewers. Much discussion of the question has perhaps given the public a mistaken idea that she does not know what to do with herself. As a matter of fact, during her undergraduate life and after she is too busy to be seriously troubled about the uses of her existence, and nobody is less perplexed in regard to her future than she is. In college the serious undercurrent of work and the bright life out of doors and in absorb her. It is only when she is forced into it by pressure from outside that she becomes self conscious and stops to wonder if she is a "little queer."

That she is being slowly awakened to a sense of the supposed antagonism between domestic and intellectual pursuits is evinced by a few faint signs, such, for instance, as the debate held not long ago at Vassar on the problem, "Does a college education unfit men for domestic life?" The question was decided in the affirmative, a result which shows perhaps that the college woman is beginning to share the depression of the world at large in regard to this matter, but, on the whole, she realizes more clearly than does the public that the amount of learning acquired in the average college course is not likely to prove a serious obstacle in any walk in life. It is not the representatives of the so called "unquiet sex" who place undue emphasis on the college training they receive. For that emphasis the "eternal masculine" in the world at large is responsible.—"Undergraduate Life at Vassar," by Margaret Sherwood, in Scribner's For June.

What Is a Cupful?

A cupful has generally meant a different quantity to each person. Some use a teacup, others a coffee cup, others a medium sized one, so that no rule was quite the same, or rather the results were quite different when the same rule was used, just from this very variation in measurement. It has been settled, however, that in cooking a cupful shall be just half a pint. There are now on the market measuring cups of this denomination, and the cups are divided into halves, fourths and thirds, so that accurate quantities may be obtained. A set of these cups are now considered a necessary part of a kitchen furnishing.—Sallie Joy White in Woman's Home Companion For June.

A Question.

I asked the wind for word of him,
The wild west wind that scours the sea,
But all the sky with rain grew dim,
And dead leaves trembled on the tree.

I asked the sea, so still and gray,
Sighing strange secrets o'er and o'er,
But, with a moan, it stole away
And left me on the wide, wet shore.

I asked the sea bird, proud and shy,
The plaintive bird that never sings.
He swooped toward me, with a cry,
And on a far wave furled his wings.

I asked the moon, the harvest moon,
Hanging so still in heaven's high place,
But while I spoke she paled and soon
Gathered the clouds about her face.

And, with a sudden throb, I knew
That my poor hope had been in vain,
And round me wept the heavy dew,
And the leaves fell and sobbed like rain.

States on students prepared at this Academy.

During the entire session there was but one serious case of illness (pneumonia) and that readily yielded to treatment.

We can safely challenge any institution of equal grade and numbers to exhibit a better record.

Mr. E. Sumpter Smith, the Principal, is a graduate of the University of Virginia, and fills well his high and responsible position. He is a gentleman by birth and training, has had long and successful experience in his vocation, and is thorough and conscientious in his work. He is ably supported by a corps of Christian gentlemen who appreciate their responsibilities and devote themselves faithfully to the discharge of their duties. The gymnasium of the Academy is under the skillful supervision of Prof. Chas. G. Evans, a trained athlete. Mr. Evans is the senior instructor of the school, and, without reflection upon any other teacher, may truthfully be called the right hand of the Principal.

This excellent institution has for its matron a noble Christian woman who is loved and respected by every inmate, from the Principal to the humblest colored waiter. We had almost written that she has no peer in her department; we may soberly write that she has no superior anywhere. This position is of great importance when we remember that the health, comfort and happiness of all the students depend largely, if not chiefly, not only upon her fidelity, but especially upon her adaptation to the place. Mrs. M. A. Luckett "fills the bill."

The students have good fare and enough of it. The caterer (who is also Treasurer and Business Manager of the Academy), is Mr. J. Gordon Smith,—and that name alone is equal to a volume of praise. We do not believe that a better, more faithful man can be found; whom to know is to love.

In June last, we had a pleasant commencement occasion. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered by Rev. R. W. Patton, and the annual address by Rev. Paul Whitehead, D. D. Prizes were awarded as follows:

The Junior Scholarship medal (given by the Principal) to Mr. Arthur Barrow, of Brunswick county. And it will please the RECORDER to know that this is the fourth consecutive year that old Brunswick has won one of the medals.

The Senior Scholarship medal to Mr. Charles P. Wood, of Fauquier county. This medal is given annually through the liberality of that sterling man, John W. Bradbury, of Petersburg, Va., than whom it would be hard to find a better model of high Christian character.

The gentlemen whose names follow won the literary honors:

Best debator, Washington Society—Raymond H. Lewis, of Maryland.

Best declaimer, Washington Society—H. Wirt Holloway, of Virginia.

Best article in "R. M. A. Journal," (medal)—E. Charlton Graves, of Washington, D. C.

Best all-round athlete (medal)—E. Charlton Graves, of Washington, D. C. Grateful to the past we look to the future for yet higher success.

IRREVERENCE.

Irreverence is peculiarly an American fault. "Young America is famed the world around. He never fakes off his shoes, for no ground to him is sacred. If a Bismark were our President, the small boy would call him "Old Bis;" and if Victoria were our ruler, she would be known as the "Widow Vic." We are a nation without heroes. We worship for a few days and then fall to laughing at our heroes. Hobson was a hero for about a whole month, but that strained us to such a point that in our relaxation we have not ceased as yet to laugh at him. Hobson, under the Spanish guns, was glorious; but the hero of Santiago could not maintain his glory when the Blunderbusses of the women of America were turned loose upon him. Our national life is suffering from the lack of hero worship. We now have ghouls who ransack the graves of the past years to find any rottenness in our noblest characters and proclaim this corruption as the true man. It is as if you were to photograph the boils on a man's body and call it a likeness of him.

What have been the causes that have operated in the destruction of the sense of reverence which is so essential to our individual and national well-being. First of all, we are in a new country. We have no Cathedrals to link us with the spiritual history of the past.

Our great buildings are painfully new. There is naturally a feeling of reverence that comes to one, standing amid the decaying beauty or amid the graves of the departed great. What plans, what hopes, what disasters, what spiritual conquests, what sense of man's nothingness and God's greatness! Unconsciously, even "Young America" will reach for his yachting cap and pull it off his shaved head. The only ruins we can boast of are our ruined forests, from which the century-old trees have been cut, leaving them to a dense undergrowth of scrub-oak. Surely this is not provocative of reverence.

"Nature has been so profligate here in America," says one, "that you ought to be a reverential people. Your mountains are lofty, your valleys are beautiful, and never was a country so rich in the majestic." True, but the vandals have been at work. Traveling into the mountains, we see towering above us a great rock. On this rock there seems to be an inscription. We ask ourselves the question: "Was this inscription laid into the rock by some Indian sage some thousands of years ago, and does it voice his longing after the Great Spirit?" With hearts full of reverential feelings, we begin to climb the steep ascent, intent on exploring the meaning of those Cabalistic marks. After tearing our clothes and cutting our shoes on the sharp rocks, we reach a vantage point where the inscription may be deciphered. It says:

"Whang-doodle's pills Cure liver ills."

It is to be feared, as we take an inventory of our bruises and our scratches, that our language is a trifle more strong than reverent. When shall we be delivered from the marring brush of the quack medicine advertiser?

Then our omniscient Fourth of July orator has had a hand in the work of

CLAIMS AND PROOFS.

(A DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARENT AND TEACHER.)

PARENT:—What school do you represent, sir?

TEACHER:—The Blackstone Female Institute.

PARENT:—Well, what do you claim for your school? I suppose you are like all the rest. You claim that it is better than any other school to be found.

TEACHER:—No, I do not claim that. The claim of the Blackstone Female Institute can be put in one sentence. We give thorough instruction, under positive Christian Influences, at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the welfare of both teacher and pupil.

PARENT:—That is a sweeping claim. It is an easy matter to make claims, but it is not so easy to prove them. If you can prove that you mean up to your claim, parents should be entirely willing to place their daughters at the Blackstone school.

TEACHER:—What you say is true. It is easy to make great claims, but we do not ask you to accept our claims simply because we say so or upon our own testimony. I will prove to you by impartial, well-informed witnesses that our claim is a just one. First,

As to the Character of our Instruction

We offer as a witness the leading educator in the State of Virginia, the Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of Schools and Colleges. Read the following letters:

BLACKSTONE, VA., June 23, 1899.
DR. W. W. SMITH,
WOMAN'S COLLEGE,
LYNCHBURG, VA.

DEAR DR:—You had with you at the Woman's College the last session three graduates of the Blackstone Institute. I write to ask you what the Faculty thought of the preparation which they had received at the Institute before coming to you. Also I will be obliged to you if you will state your opinion of the Institute as a training school for the College, as your frequent visits to the Institute and your acquaintance with the members of the Faculty and their qualifications for their work renders your opinion of special worth.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

LYNCHBURG, VA., JUNE 24, 1899.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
PRINCIPAL BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

MY DEAR BRO:—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered College classes and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and nine of your Faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates. To render correlation effective I consider two things necessary, an adjusted course of instruction and a Faculty familiar with the courses of the Woman's College and in sympathy with its methods. These you have. I hope, in my turn, that you find the graduates of our College whom you have taken into your Faculty, superior as teachers and worthy as Christian women.

Yours truly,
W. W. SMITH.

These letters show that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Second, We offer at least

One Hundred Testimonials of Parents

whose daughters have attended the Blackstone Institute, which testimonials declare with no uncertain sound that the claim which we make is amply proven, if the parents of our pupils are trustworthy witnesses. We are willing to rest our case on this kind of testimony. It is easy for the Principal and Faculty of any school to make strong claims. These claims are worthless without proof. We do not make claims for the Blackstone Institute and then offer our own statements as proof of the claims, but we leave it to parents to weigh the testimony in their own minds.

PARENT:—Well, I must say that the testimony of the Faculty of the Woman's College is equal to expert testimony in a case at court. But where are your testimonials from parents?

TEACHER:—Here they are, as many as you can wish for, printed in the back of this catalogue. There are testimonials here from all over the Virginia Conference, from many of the preachers and leading citizens in various counties. You also find in this catalogue a full statement of the purpose and aim of the institution, the course of study, the schedule of charges, and other necessary information. I have presented my claim. I have also presented my proofs, which are not merely my words, but the opinions of others. If you wish any more definite information write to—destruction. The long continuity of governments and the growth of governmental principles increase our reverence for Government and, consequently, the feeling of reverence itself. "Follow citizens," says our spread-eagle speaker, "the old Ship of State, without chart, is sailing over unknown seas, guided only by the pole star of everlasting truth, and the principles of eternal justice that the effete monarchies of the East have forgotten. In 1776, the Eagle said to the old Lion, whose tail lashed his foamy sides in rage"—presumably, Jefferson was the interpreter of Eagle language into the Lion tongue—"Farewell, I am going to leave you. You may pull your old carcass amid the jungles and morasses of the past, and scent out the dead carcasses of precedent, but as for me, I shall soar away into the blue empyrean, the unexplored vastness of silent space, and ever upward take my flight, with my eye fastened on the bright luminary that rules the day, without one longing, lingering look behind." And with a mighty squall, that terrified the lion and scared the sleeping bear of the frozen North, he arose; and ever since fellow-citizens, this grand old American eagle has been whizzing along at a two-forty gait." Fed on such stuff as this, our people have actually come to the conclusion that our form of Government is new. The truth is just exactly opposite. Our Government has not been of one or two hundred years' growth, but of a thousand years. Revolutionary war! We have never had a revolutionary war. We had a glorious evolutionary conflict. No tree can grow to any great height, or spread its branches to any great breadth, without having its roots fastened deep in the earth and entwining themselves around the everlasting rocks. Neither can any nation grow to greatness, unless it has its roots twined around centuries of tradition and principles long established. Our Government dates back to the time of Alfred the Great. Uncle Sam is no parvenu.

Science has had much to do with this decay of reverence. Science has not explained the mysteries of God's world, but it has given them name, and by the name juggled us into the belief that their mysteries have been dissolved. Says Carlyle, in his "Heroes and Hero Worship: 'This universe, ah me—what could the wild man know of it; what can we yet know? That it is a force, and thousandfold complexity of forces; a force which is NOT WE. That is all; it is not we, it is altogether different from US. Force, force, everywhere force; we ourselves a mysterious force in the center of that. 'There is not a leaf rotting on the highway but has force in it; how else could it rot?' Nay, surely, to the atheistic thinker, if such an one were possible, it must be a miracle too, this huge illimitable whirlwind of force which envelopes us here; never resting whirlwind, high as immensity, old as eternity. What is it? God's creation, the religious people answer; it is the Almighty God's! Atheistic science babbles poorly of it with scientific nomenclatures, experiments, and what-not, as if it were a poor dead thing, to be bottled up in Leyden jars and sold over counters; but the natural sense of man, in all times, if he will honestly apply his senses, proclaims it to be a living thing,—ah, an unmistakable, god-like thing; toward which the best attitude for us, after never so much science, is awe, devout prostration and humility of soul; worship, if not in words, then in silence."

We have the Science of Astronomy and think we know the stars. Electricity, because we have made of it a messenger boy and a beast of burden, no longer awes us, though we know as little about its essential nature as the old Norsemen who worshiped it. Words, mere words, have robbed us of the awful sense of mystery that made our fore-fathers reverent. And by its doctrine of evolution, science teaches that man is first cousin to the mule and related by a collateral line to the skunk. Thus has science struck a blow at reverence. Perhaps the final out-come of the teaching of the Christian man of Science will be to increase our reverence, as we come to comprehend the immanence of God, working ever to a wise end and glorious destiny; but this thought has not as yet taken hold upon the world.

Much of our irreverence is traceable to our humour. Our irreverent humour is a product of national irreverence but which reacts as a powerful cause on the rising generation. A comparison of Dickens with our modern humorists will convince the most skeptical of our decadence. Dickens reverence Fatherhood, reverences the Church and its worship, reverences marriage, reverences death. Our popular modern humour regardeth not man neither feareth God. Peck's Bad Boy depends for its humour on the irreverence of a son for his father. The Spoopendyke Papers, and Mrs. Caudle's Lectures are based on irreverent views of home life and the sacred relationships of husband and wife. Mark Twain will carry you to where a soul is agonizing with God and where holy men are offering the comfort of the Word, and bid you snicker. He will invade the sacred scenes of the dying hour and prompt you to snort; will carry you to a funeral, and whilst "dust to dust and ashes to ashes" rings in your ear will prompt you to giggle. When Mark leaves you laughing in presence of deepest griefs and the sublimest mysteries, John Kendrick Bangs comes along to conduct you to his House Boat on the Styx, and bids us laugh as he reproduces the follies and foibles of the living in the persons of the dead. Bangs ransacks the graveyard. We will never be a reverent people until such literature is rebuked.

An irreverent man is an imperfect man. Reverence is natural, and he who has destroyed that capacity has murdered a part of himself. He should begin the cultivation of this feeling by looking with an appreciative eye on all God's handiwork; should often, alone, gaze on the starry heavens, and in his closet muse on the greatness and power of the all-encompassing God.

is now located in its own grand new building, n. e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

For thirty years this school has been preparing young people for practical business life. It teaches Single, Double Entry and Joint-Stock Book-keeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English, &c. Send for catalogue, showing its splendid methods in preparing its students for business, and its success in securing positions for them, and for new building discounts.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 16; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted as a face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT

Truths Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

The cross is God's estimate of the value of man.—Rev. Warren G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati.

Martyrdom.

Martyrdom may prove our love for man, or it may show our ignorance and stubbornness.—Rev. George A. Thayer, Unitarian, Cincinnati.

How to Develop a True Public Spirit.

The only way to develop a true public spirit is not to try to cultivate it in mass, but to inculcate it in individual men.—Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Moral Gardens.

We must plant moral gardens where weeds have grown, or the future harvest of wrong will ripen more luxuriantly than ever.—Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Christian Church, Chicago.

Trust.

Trust is an essential element of our nature, and unless a man has grown distrustful through violation of confidence it is a natural habit to trust as it is to love.—Rev. T. J. Banner, Episcopalian, Pittsburg.

The New Theory.

The new theory does not embody in its creed that all that host of men to whom the gospel of Jesus Christ never came have been by that fact doomed to eternal condemnation.—Professor George W. Gilmore, Unitarian, Bangor, Me.

Detraction.

Detraction injures the detractor himself, injures the listener, perhaps awakens in its victim—for sooner or later he will hear of it—sentiments of hatred and revenge that will cause him to detract in turn or drive him even to the crime of murder.—Rev. Father Dubois, Catholic, San Francisco.

Infidelity.

The great Talleyrand committed no error when he told the infidel who asked him why infidelity prevailed so little against the influence of Christ, "Go and be crucified and raise yourself the third day and you will know why you cannot overthrow Christianity."—Rev. A. A. Rice, Los Angeles.

Power of a Life Surrendered to God.

The life wholly surrendered to God through Jesus Christ is a life that the Holy Spirit sanctifies. Such a life will tone ambition, bridle the tongue, kill envy, smother covetousness, quench pride, destroy impurity, hamstring slander and make you fit for heaven, glory, God.—Rev. E. Trumbull Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

The Future Life.

The conception of the future life rests upon the assurance of the divine word and upon Christian consciousness. Is there no rest which may meet our divinely inspired aspirations? Is man at his best when his thoughts and affections go out after holiness and heaven—a delusion?—Rev. Henry M. Booth, Presbyterian, Auburn, N. Y.

Spirit and Teachings of Christ.

The spirit and teachings of Christ will overcome war, bloodshed, intemperance and oppression, and the sermon on the mount will adjust all differences between mankind. God, the Father over all, and Jesus Christ, the Saviour of all, will bring about the universal brotherhood of all men.—Bishop C. C. McCabe, Methodist, Cincinnati.

The Lord's Work.

The work of the Lord will never be an unfinished work, though he may not see fit to let us put on the finishing touches. Let us not grow impatient with the parts assigned us, but rejoice to know that when the parts are put together in one glorious whole it will then be made manifest how impossible it is for any believer to toil in vain.—Rev. Dr. J. G. Walker, Baptist, Philadelphia.

Thoughtfulness For Childhood.

Nothing is more characteristic of Christianity than its thoughtfulness for childhood. Its first concern is to save the children. Jesus himself was born in the lowly manger of Bethlehem to this end. Would he give a microcosm of the kingdom of heaven to lost man, our Saviour takes a little child upon his lap and says, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Rev. Dr. W. A. Robinson, Methodist, Cincinnati.

God Before Everything.

What does the Lord want us to do? This is the supreme question at this moment. As we answer this we declare our duty and mark out the path we are to take through the future. He wants us at the outset to seek first the kingdom of God, and all other things will be added unto us—religion before position, righteousness before happiness, the spiritual before the material, God before everything.—Rev. Dr. Anthony H. Evans, Presbyterian, New York City.

Do the Will of the Lord.

Let each one keep the commands of Jesus Christ. Make it your daily prayer that God will give you strength to keep them. Keep them, no matter whether you feel like it or not. Let a lofty sense of honor and the sacredness of obligation impel you to right courses of conduct, and feeling will come at last as naturally as blossoms come to the trees of May.—Rev. Dr. G. B. Wosburgh, Baptist, Denver.

Power of Sympathy.

Sympathy puts us into the right attitude toward our fellow creatures. It reaches much further than thought. It is the index to the heart. The only true knowledge of our fellow man is that which enables us to feel with him. This gives us a fine ear for the "heart pulses" that beat beneath the mere clothes of circumstance and opinion, it has been well said. This is what may be called the feminine element of humanity. It is the finer side of our human nature. Not the calculations of the intellect penetrate beneath the surface and bring us an intimate knowledge of our fellow men, but the sure intuitions of sympathy, which, like arrows, speed unerringly to the mark.—Rabbi David Philipson, Hebrew, Cincinnati.

THE TREE OF DEATH.

Let the king of the grave be asked to tell
The plant he loveth best,
And it will not be the cypress tree,
Though 'tis over the churchyard quest.
He will not mark the hemlock dark,
Nor stay where the nightshade spreads;
He will not say to the somber yew
Though it springs o'er skeleton heads—
He will not point to the willow branch,
Where breaking spirits pine for death;
For a brighter leaf sheds deeper green,
And a fairer tree is the tree of death.

But where the green, rich stalks are seen,
Where ripe fruits gush and shew,
"This, this," cries he, "is the tree for me—
The vine, the beautiful vine!"
I crouch among the emerald leaves,
Gleaned with the ruby grapes,
I dip my spear in the poison here,
And strong is he who escapes.
Crowds dance around with savor bound,
Till my dart is hurled from my patient's breast,
When I shriek with glee, "No friend to me
Is so true as the vine, the tree of death."

Oh, the glossy vine has a serpent charm;
It bears an unblest fruit!
There's a taint about each tendrilled arm
And a curse upon its root.
Its juice may flow to warm the brow
And wildly lighten the eye,
But the frenzied mirth of a revelling crew
Will make the wise man sigh;
For the maniac laugh, the trembling frame,
The mad speech and the restless hand,
The shattered mind and blasted brain,
Are wrought by the vine, the tree of death.

Fill, fill the glass and let them pass,
But ye who quaff—oh, think!
That even the heart which loves must bathe
The lips that deeply drink!
The heart may mourn o'er a close link torn,
And the scalding drops may fall,
But 'tis better to mourn o'er a close link torn
Than the woe of a living fall.
Then a health to the hemlock, the cypress and
The willow;
The worm adding grass and the willow leaf,
For, though shading the tomb, they fling not a
So dark as the vine, the tree of death.
—Union Signal.

Correspondence.

DEAR RECORDER:

Let me send you a note concerning the great thank-offering at McKendree Church, Norfolk, on July 16th, which was the final payment on a Church property costing $25,000, the building erected eight years ago. For several years past we have been paying $1,000 per year, sometimes a little more, but this has been a heavy and hard pull and it has grown perceptibly harder to raise every year. Last year the interest in the old debt had so waned that by the hardest efforts, and with two public collections, only a little more than $500 was raised, the majority of which went for interest.

So that when many prayed and a few claimed to have received the assurance in prayer that the Church debt would be paid in full when due, the majority doubted and some expressed a decided opinion that the attempt was preposterous.

July 16th was fixed as the time to bring in the thank-offerings for this purpose. There had been a personal conversation with each member of the Church and an appeal placed in every one's hands with an amount suggested as their contribution. When Sunday, 16th, came there were no propositions called for and no amounts called out, but the plates were simply passed to collect the thanks-giving envelopes. When the offering was counted it was found to amount to (for the day) $2,800. The remainder needed to make up the full amount of $3,125, came in next day and Tuesday.

Such was the method pursued, but none of us for a moment think of attributing this great victory to anything but the Holy Spirit of God moving upon the hearts of His people in answer to the prayers of many. For nothing but His Almighty Spirit could have given us the willingness to contribute such a comparatively large amount. All honor to the faithful at old McKendree for the many noble gifts of cheerful self sacrifice to this cause.

I take this method of thanking them publicly from the bottom of my grateful heart. But let us one and all give every particle of the glory to God alone.

There was wonder and even amazement with many when the result was announced, but to those who had received the promise in prayer (and they were quite a number) the outcome brought no surprise, but only devout joy and thanks-giving to God.

What is $3,000, or any amount, to Him? Oh that we might always bear in mind His omnipotence and His willingness to give us whatsoever we desire in faith and for His glory.

Yours truly,

R. H. BENNETT.

DOES "SCHOOLING" PAY?

It is an education that has picked many a man up out of the environment of the hod-carrier and given him through life the sphere of the polished scholar.

An education will raise your child from the sink of ignorance to the mountain-top of observation of men and things.

It will furnish him the most skilled tools for a support or a competency.

It will put into his hands a map of the labyrinth we call the world and which he must tread to success or failure.

It will reveal to him the relations between himself and all other things, material and spiritual.

It will put into his hand a golden key to a fabulous treasure-house of delight.

It will equip him for the battle of life, which without it will much more likely go against him.

Christian education will evolve the potentialities of his soul and fit him to be a companion of the God of Gods.

What, then? Why, send your boy or girl to school this Fall, even if you have to go hungry or wear old clothes to do so.

And as you value his soul, life, and immortal destiny, send him to the best Christian school you can find.

R. H. BENNETT.

OPTIMIST AND PESSIMIST.

The above two words have come into frequent use, and their meaning often misapplied and misunderstood.

An Optimist is one who holds the opinion that "all events happen for the best." This can only be true when the events are ordered by an allwise and loving Providence.

A Pessimist is one who believes that everything happens for the worst. The true meaning lies between the two extremes. A distinguished author says that error moves in a circle, while extremes meet at a point. Our complications with other nations are bringing in new words and phrases which are frequently misunderstood and will necessitate a new vocabulary for the nomenclature of our modern phraseology.

Under the old regime many singular blunders in language frequently occurred. Dr. Adam Clarke says that an English clergyman came to the word senacremid and called it "snatcherab." One of the old preachers of early Methodism, when he came to the word "quails," called it "squirrels." Not a great while ago a preacher was sent out at Conference to preach to the colored people. His discussion was mainly on the subject of EJACULATORY PRAYER. The colored preacher, who closed the services, exhorted his brethren to remember the sermon and not forget them "JACK-LEG PRAYERS."

Preachers and teachers should avoid technicalities as much as possible, that the "common people may hear them gladly." Commend me to the powerful appeals of John Easter and Joseph Carson of former times, and the good evangelists now among our people. Our District Conferences are now on hand and we shall hope to hear of "seasons of refreshment from the presence of the Lord."

THE ELEVENTH COMMANDMENT.

"Is there a fire in the spare room, Jane?" said Mr. Wade to his wife who was preparing supper.

"Oh, yes, the room is warm," replied Mrs. Wade; "but I wish you would take up some wood now, so we won't have to disturb Mr. N— after he comes."

"I'm afraid he won't get here to-night," remarked the husband.

"Oh, I think he'll be along soon. They say he is a wonderful preacher."

It was Saturday evening. Mr. N—, who was expected, was the new Presiding Elder of B— District in the New Jersey Conference. Quarterly Meeting was to be held next day, and Mr. N— was to preach. The house of Mr. Wade was known as the minister's home. For years, the preachers as they came to this part of the field of their appointed labor, were kept by Bro. and Sister Wade. While Mr. Wade was splitting a log at the wood pile, his feelings warm with the anticipated pleasure of entertaining the Presiding Elder, a man of common appearance approached.

"A cold day," said the man.

"Yes," returned Mr. Wade; in a voice meant to repulse the stranger, whose appearance didn't impress him very favorably.

"How far is it to D—?" inquired the man.

"Three miles."

"So far? I would be obliged if you would let me go in and warm myself. I have walked two miles, and as D— is still three miles off, I shall be chilled before I get there."

So natural a request, Mr. Wade could not refuse; so the wayfarer followed him into the house.

"Jane," and his voice was not as cordial as it might have been, "let this man warm by the kitchen fire."

Mrs. Wade understood by the way her husband spoke, that he hadn't much sympathy for the stranger, and only granted the request because he couldn't well refuse it. The man's dress wasn't calculated to impress anyone very favorably. His hat was worn and the gray coat was threadbare. His long beard made his face not very attractive.

"You can sit there," said Mrs. Wade, a little ungraciously; for she felt that his presence was an intrusion.

"Thank you," returned the stranger.

Nothing was said for some minutes. The stranger was hungry; but a little warmth had been bestowed so reluctantly, he couldn't think of asking the farmer and his wife for a bite of supper. So he was preparing to go when Mr. Wade entered and said:

"I'm afraid Jane, the minister isn't coming. It is after sundown."

"He ought to have been here an hour ago," answered Mrs. Wade.

"It's getting late, my friend," remarked the farmer, looking at the stranger, who was buttoning his coat.

"It's three miles, you say?"

"Yes, three miles, and it will be dark in half an hour."

"What direction must I take?"

"Keep along the road until you get to the church; and then you strike off to the right, and keep straight on."

"What church is it?"

"The D— Methodist Church."

"I believe you said you were expecting the minister."

"Yes, our Presiding Elder is to preach tomorrow. He ought to be here now."

"He is to stay with you?"

"Certainly. The ministers all stay at my house."

"Couldn't you give me something to eat before I go? I feel faint."

"Jane, can't you give him some meat and bread?"

"Oh, yes I suppose so." And going to the cupboard she brought some bacon and half a loaf of bread and told the man to help himself.

The homely meal concluded, the man thanking Mr. and Mrs. Wade for their hospitality, opened the door and looked out. It was dark, and the cold wind rushed into his face. Closing the door, he said to the farmer:

"You say it is three miles to D—?"

"I do. I said so when you first stopped."

"But I was cold and hungry, and might have fainted by the way. You have warmed and fed me. Would you let me stay all night?"

"Go in there," said the farmer pointing to the kitchen, "and I'll see what Jane says about it."

"Hasn't that fellow gone yet?"

"No; he wants to stay all night."

"Indeed, we'll do no such thing. Where could he sleep?"

"Not in the best room, even if Mr. N— don't come."

"No, indeed!"

"But I really don't see, Jane, how we can turn him out of doors."

"It's outrageous! He ought to have gone while he had daylight."

"We'll have to keep him, Jane."

"But what can we do with him?"

"We might put him on the floor."

"I wish he had been to Halifax before he came here," said Mrs. Wade, fretfully.

"Oh, well, Jane, never mind. You know what the Bible says about entertaining angels unawares."

"Angels! Did you ever see an angel that looked like him?"

Mr. Wade, returning to the kitchen, informed the stranger they would keep him. Soon after, Mrs. Wade, giving up all hopes of Mr. N—'s arrival, took supper up. It consisted of coffee, cakes, broiled ham and chicken. After all was on the table, a short conference was held as to whether it would do not to invite the stranger to eat. They had filled him up on bread and bacon; but they thought it would look better to ask him to eat with them. There was a boy of five years at the table, who had been dressed in his best, in order to grace the minister's reception. Charley was full of talk, and the parents were fond of "showing him off," even before this humble guest.

"Charley," said Mr. Wade, after supper was over, "how many commandments are there?"

The child hesitated, and then looking up to the stranger—"How many?"

"Eleven are there not?"

"Eleven!" ejaculated Mrs. Wade.

"Eleven!" said her husband. "Is it possible, sir, you don't know how many commandments there are? How many, Charley?"

"Ten."

"Right. Did you ever read the Bible, sir?" addressing the stranger.

"Oh, yes, I have often read it. But I thought there were eleven commandments. Are you sure there are but ten?"

Sister Wade exclaimed—"Could anyone believe it? Such ignorance?"

"Doesn't the Bible say ten?" said Mr. Wade.

"It does certainly."

"Well can't you believe the Bible?"

"Yes, I believe the Bible; but it strikes me there are eleven commandments. Hasn't one been added elsewhere?"

This was too much for Brother and Sister Wade. Such ignorance they felt to be unpardonable. A long lecture followed, in which the man was scolded, and threatened with divine indignation. At its close he asked if he might have the Bible to read a while before retiring.

Next morning, after breakfast, the stranger thanked the farmer and his wife for their kindness; and went on his journey.

Ten o'clock came, and Mr. N— had not arrived.

So Mr. and Mrs. Wade started to meeting, thinking he would be there. But they were disappointed.

"Where is Mr. N—?" inquired many voices. "Something has detained him."

Mr. Wade, becoming chilled, concluded to go in and keep a lookout for the minister. Others followed his example, and in a short time the meeting house was filled. Soon the farmer was surprised to see his guest of the previous night enter and advance to the pulpit. By this time Mr. Wade was at his side.

"You mustn't sit here. Come down and I'll find you a seat."

"Thank you, it is very comfortable here."

"But you are in the pulpit!"

"Oh, never mind. It's comfortable here." And the man remained immovable.

Mr. Wade turned away intending to get a brother official to assist him in getting this man out of the pulpit. Immediately the stranger arose, and opening a hymnbook began to read,

"Help us to help each other, Lord,
Each other's cross to bear."

After the entire hymn was read the congregation arose and sang. After singing, they knelt, and the minister (for no one doubted his real character) addressed the Throne of Grace with earnestness. Then there was a deep pause throughout the room in anticipation of the text. Brother Wade looked pale. Sister Wade's face was crimson. The dropping of a pin might have been heard. Then the emphatic tones of the preacher filled the room: "A new commandment I give unto you; that ye love one another."

Brother Wade had bent to listen, but he now sank back in his seat.

This was the eleventh commandment. The sermon was searching, yet affectionate. The preacher uttered nothing that could wound Mr. and Mrs. Wade, but said much that smote upon their hearts. To think they had treated the Elder after such a fashion, was deeply humiliating. At last the sermon was over and the benediction pronounced. After welcoming the minister, the congregation dispersed. The Elder went home with Brother and Sister Wade. How the matter was settled between them we do not know, but we do know that we are commanded to "love one another."—The "Ram's Horn."

ELI PERKINS JOINS A DRINKING CLUB.

"Sellin' whiskey in Kansas!" exclaimed the purple-nosed railroad passenger, as he bit off a chew of plug tobacco while the train was pulling out of Topeka.

"Drinkin' whiskey! Why they're drinkin' more whiskey than they ever did before!"

"But we never see any bar-rooms," I remarked.

"No, they ain't no bars an' they ain't no signs of a bar, but they're drinking."

Then I rode through the State without seeing a bar-room, a drunken man or a sign up where whiskey was for sale. Valuable corners were occupied by stores, and the money that used to go up to the open saloons was going into the stores. I found that Kansas used to send out $15,000,000 a year to Peoria and Kentucky for whiskey, and now she is sending out about a million a year. I found that Kansas is now saving through temperance $14,000,000 and in ten years will save $140,000,000, and still that red-nosed lounge in the smoking-car is continually screeching through the car: "They're drinking more whiskey in Kansas than they ever did before."

Up in Maine I heard the same whiskey drinkers' refrain. It never came from a Church member or a prosperous moral business man. It always comes from a drinking man. So during my last trip through Maine I decided to investigate and find out if the law preventing drunkenness doubled the drunkards—if the law preventing the sale of whiskey really increased the sale of it.

Well, a lecture engagement called me up to Farmington, twenty-five miles north of Lewiston. The engagement was for Saturday night. I had to drive up from Lewiston. It was a $10 ride through the snow.

"This is a temperance State, isn't it?" I said to the stableman as he was hitching up his team.

"Temperance State!" he exclaimed, "why, they're pouring down whiskey here—drinkin' more'n they ever did before."

"Hadh't you better take a hot milk punch before we start?" I said.

"Hot milk punch!" he said, his eyes snapping with joy, "yts, it would taste good, but you can't get those fancy drinks up here. No bars, you know, an' you've got to make them fancy drinks at home."

"But where there is so much drinkin' there must be bars near by," I said.

"Well, they're drinkin' all the same, but we don't have bars. We have to manage a little, an' it takes time, you know."

So we started off for the long twenty-five mile ride through the snow. We passed several hotels and stopped and warmed. There were no bar-rooms, and hot lemonades were the only drinks to be had.

We found Farmington without a bar, and a thorough temperance town. The audience that greeted me showed temperance, intelligence and prosperity in their faces.

Coming back the next morning I said to my driver: "It is strange that people will so traduce this temperance State."

"They don't traduce it," said the driver. "They're drinking goin' on here. I can get you a drink."

"You can get me a drink," I said, with an accent on the "can." "Why, of course you can," I said enthusiastically, "and when we get to Lewiston we'll have some nice hot whiskey, won't we?"

I noticed my man didn't enthuse. Then, after a moment's thought, he remarked:

"I'm afraid I'll be too busy putting out my horses; but I could get you a drink if I had time."

"But I'll pay a boy for unhitching the horse," I said as we drove into the Lewiston stable. "Now, let's have the

New Equipment on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway.

To accommodate the increasing travel over the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway the Pullman Company have just completed and placed in service on the "F. V." Limited four new twelve-section and drawing-room sleepers of the latest pattern and most magnificent furnishings. They are named after four of the picturesque and historic rivers crossed by the C. & O., viz: "Rappahannock," "Greenbrier," "Rapidan," and "Kanawha." They are fitted with the newest pattern wide vestibules and painted the regulation C. & O. color—a bright orange with brown and gold trimmings. The interior wood work is highly polished vermilion, the upholstering dark blue plush, except in the gentlemen's smoking rooms, which are large and commodious and upholstered in leather. The ladies toilet rooms are much larger than in sleepers heretofore built, a point much appreciated by the fair sex. The construction of the cars is such that when the berths are up there is more room over head, permitting better ventilation and freeing the cars from the low, stuffy appearance generally noticeable. They are lighted by electricity, and, in addition to the regular clusters in the ceiling, each berth is fitted with a small globe for the convenience of occupants. "Evening Star," Washington, D. C.

DR. LEFTWICH GOES TO DANVILLE.

Rev. Wm. M. Leftwich, D. D., of Tennessee, has been designated by Bishop Wilson to fill the pastorate of the Main-Street Methodist Church, Danville, for the unexpired term of the late Dr. Sledd. Dr. Leftwich is a native of Bedford county, Va., and one of the most prominent members of the Tennessee Conference.

EASTERN SHORE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Eastern Shore District Conference was held at Accomac Court House last week. The reports generally showed activity in Church work, with increased membership and larger contributions.

Messrs. S. J. Stevenson and G. W. Henn, of Accomac; W. P. Wise, of Northampton; and J. L. Price, of Salisbury, Md., were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference, with L. J. Hyslop, Thomas C. Kellam, S. W. Ames and P. E. Hines, alternates.

The next Conference will meet in Wachapreague.

The date of holding the Tarlington camp-meeting has been changed from August 11 to the 18th.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 23.—The Epworth convention formally adjourned tonight, to meet in San Francisco in 1901. The work was practically ended last night. The final session was devoted to addresses on "Missions." Incoming trains to-day brought thousands of visitors, and it was estimated that the number of delegates had reached ed the 20,000 mark. The visiting ministers filled the city pulpits in the morning, and the afternoon was devoted to missionary conferences.

Tonight Hon F. D. Fuller, of Topeka, Kansas, presided in the tent: Rev. J. F. Berry, Chicago, Tomlinson Hall; Rev. J. H. Riddell, Winnipeg, Manitoba, in the Opera House, and Rev. W. B. Chapman, Louisville, a Robert's Park Church. Rev. John F. Goucher, of Baltimore, delivered an interesting address on the work in India. He has just returned from an inspection of the missionary stations in that country, and spoke of the progress of the Epworth League. He had with him 20 flags from Indian Epworth Leagues. Bishop McCabe, "the chaplain of Libby Prison," spoke of the missionary work in the South. Other speakers of the evening were Rev. J. U. Coleman, Knoxville, Tenn.; Rev. W. F. Wilson, Hamilton, Ont.; Rev. G. W. Briggs, Owensboro, Ky.; Rev. W. L. Haven, and Rev. B. L. S. Baldwin, of New York.

At the close of the addresses farewell consecration services were held. In the tent this service was conducted by D. W. Potter, of Chicago; Bishop Fitzgerald, Nashville, in Tomlinson Hall; Rev. L. W. Munhall, Germantown, Pa., in the Opera House, and Rev. G. J. Bond in Robert's Park Church. These services consisted of testimonials by the delegates, hundreds of whom spoke in the four meetings. At the close the benediction was pronounced and the convention adjourned.

The Board of Control will begin its meeting tomorrow morning, which will probably last till Wednesday. Bishop Ninde, Detroit, is chairman of this board. The most important matter to come before the board will be the question of federation of the young people's societies.

The following resolutions were adopted by the convention:

"Resolved, That we congratulate the country on the passage of the anti-liquor act, which so accurately represents the will of the American people. Its nullification by Attorney-General Griggs is viewed with painful solicitude and ever-increasing indignation, and we hereby pledge Congress our hearty support in maintaining it against the untenable opinion of a subordinate executive officer.

"We heartily endorse the opinion of the temperance forces sought by the American Anti-Saloon League.

"We regard the election of a poligamist to Congress by the State of Utah, as an indignity offered to every American citizen and an insult to the purity and sanctity of the Christian home. We protest against the election of Mr. Roberts to the House of Representatives, and demand that one whose life is so repugnant to Christian principles shall be expelled from that great law-making body.

"We favor a federation with other young people's societies, both locally and nationally, through suitable executive committees for the promotion of Christian citizenship."

A resolution was adopted that in case satisfactory railroad rates and arrangements could not be made for holding the 1901 convention in San Francisco, the meeting place would be changed.

"Methodist philanthropy" was the subject of an address by Rev. H. C. Chreitberg, of Charlotte, N. C.

At the afternoon sessions, Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, Richmond, Va., spoke on "Blindness of Christian Manliness."

"Late City in Lady Life" was discussed by Rev. J. D. Chavis, Greensboro, N. C.

Rev. W. R. Proctor, of Portsmouth, Va., spoke on "Total Abstinence and the Pledge."

EPWORTH LEAGUE WORKERS.

There are now about one hundred student missionary campaigners from the colleges and universities of the Methodist Church who have volunteered to give not less than one month of their time this summer, without compensation, to work among Epworth Leagues of the Methodist Church. Many of these students are going for the foreign field, some of them going out this fall.

A few are undergraduate students, traveling expenses are met by small assessments upon leagues started, and they are travelling in almost every part of the country, chiefly, however, east of the Missouri river. The future of a year's work is in the hands of the district missionary committees to serve these committees to serve the Church.

CLAIMS AND PROOFS.

(A DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARENT AND TEACHER.)

PARENT:—What school do you represent, sir?

TEACHER:—The Blackstone Female Institute.

PARENT:—Well, what do you claim for your school? I suppose you are like all the rest. You claim that it is better than any other school to be found.

TEACHER:—No, I do not claim that. The claim of the Blackstone Female Institute can be put in one sentence. We give thorough instruction, under positive Christian influences, at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the welfare of both teacher and pupil.

PARENT:—That is a sweeping claim. It is a very easy matter to make claims, but it is not so easy to prove them. If you can prove that you measure up to your claim, parents should be entirely willing to send their daughters to the Blackstone school.

TEACHER:—What you say is true. It is easy to make great claims, but we do not ask you to accept our claims simply because we say so, or on our own testimony. I will prove to you by impartial, well-known witnesses that our claim is a just one. First,

As to the Character of our Instruction.

We offer as a witness the leading educator in the South, the Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of colleges, and the following letters:

BLACKSTONE, VA., June 23, 1899.
DR. W. W. SMITH,
WOMAN'S COLLEGE,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

DEAR DR. SMITH:—You had with you at the Women's College the last session 200 graduates of the Blackstone Institute. I write to you what the Faculty thought of the preparation which they had received at the Institute before coming to you. Also I will be obliged to you if you will state your opinion of the Institute as a training school for the college, as your acquaintance with the Institute and your acquaintance with the members of the Faculty and their qualifications for their work renders your opinion of special worth.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

These letters show that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Second, We offer at least

One Hundred Testimonials of Parents

whose daughters have attended the Blackstone Institute, which testimonials declare with no uncertain sound that the claim which we make is amply proven, if the parents of our pupils are trustworthy witnesses. We are willing to rest our case on this kind of testimony. It is easy for the Principal and Faculty of any school to make strong claims. These claims are worthless without proof. We do not make claims for the Blackstone Institute and then offer our own statements as proof of the claims, but we leave it to parents to weigh the testimony in their own minds.

PARENT:—Well, I must say that the testimony of the Faculty of the Woman's College is equal to expert testimony in a case at court. But where are your testimonials from parents?

TEACHER:—Here they are, as many as you can wish for, printed in the back of this catalogue. There are testimonials here from all over the Virginia Conference, from many of the best and ablest citizens in various counties. You also find in this catalogue a full statement of the purpose and aim of the institution, the course of study, the schedule of charges, and other necessary information. I have presented my claim. I have also presented my proofs, which are not merely my words, but the opinions of others. If you wish any more definite information write to—

LESSON VI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 6.

Text of the Lesson, Ezek. xxxvi.
25-26—Memory Verses, 25-27—Golden Text, Ezek. xxxvi, 26—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

25 "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean from all your filthiness, and from all your idols will I cleanse you." The topic of our lesson is "The New Heart," but we must notice the context and observe to whom the words are spoken, then take the lesson for our own hearts. The previous verses speak of the land of Israel, the mountains of Israel, the people of Israel and of Israel's shameful treatment of Jehovah, on account of which He scattered them in many lands, but verse 24 says that He will take them from all lands and bring them to their own land, and our lesson begins by saying that then He will cleanse them. I have found but one thing in all the Bible that God says He will do with all His heart and soul, and that is that He will thus put Israel in their own land (Jer xxxii, 41).

26 "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you, and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh." As when the Lord God said to the serpent, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman" (Gen. iii, 15) He indicated that He would do it Himself, so here the giving of the new heart, and spirit is His work alone, but notice that while God is willing to give the new heart we must be willing to receive it, or rather Him, for Christ Himself in us is the new life (I John v, 12; John i, 11, 12).

27 "And I will put my Spirit within you and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments and do them." Not by might nor power of man, not by prayer or striving, not by intellect or education, but by the Spirit of God is the new life to be lived (Zech. iv, 6). When we receive the Lord Jesus Christ as our Saviour we at once become the abode or mansion in which the Father, Son and Spirit will dwell (John xiv, 17, 23). Then it becomes true that we are the temple of God and the Spirit of God dwelleth in us (I Cor. iii, 16).

28 "And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers, and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." The first part of this verse can only be understood in the light of the promises made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob from Gen. xii onward, and which still await fulfillment. The church, the body of Christ, has no land on earth, but is a company of people gathered out of all nations, whose home is to be the New Jerusalem. As to the last part of the verse, we are authorized in II Cor. vi, 16, to appropriate it to every believer.

29 "I will also save you from all your uncleannesses, and I will call for the corn and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you." Here we may appropriate the first part of the verse as being true for the believing gentile as well as for national Israel, but the last part has special reference to Israel in the time of their restoration. In II Cor. vii, 1, the promises of God to be a God and Father to those who are willing to separate themselves unto Him are used as a reason why we should cleanse ourselves from all unrighteousness of the flesh and spirit.

30 "And I will multiply the fruit of the tree and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen." This is specially for Israel, but contains precious things for us also. When the people of God run to the world for pleasure, it is like saying God does not satisfy us, and so we turn to you for comfort, and thus the name of the Lord is reproached.

31 "Then shall ye remember your own evil ways and your doings that were not good and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight." There is a deep and helpful lesson here for every saint, for until we learn to loathe ourselves we have not truly seen the Lord nor known ourselves. Ponder prayerfully Job xlii, 5, 6; Isa vi, 5; Dan x, 8; Rom vii, 18; Phil iii, 3, and turning from all that is of self, learn to say, "Thou art worthy, O Lord!"

32 "Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you. The same thing is said in verse 22, with the addition "for mine holy name's sake which ye have profaned among the heathen whither ye went." It is a solemn and searching thought that we are ever honoring or profaning the name of our Lord that worthy name by which we are called (Jas. ii, 7). It is comforting to know that He forgives us, not for any merit on our part, but only for His name's sake (Isa. xliii, 25; I John ii, 12).

33 "I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded." This and the following verses are wholly for Israel, but there are suggestive thoughts for all saints. David caused Mephibosheth to dwell in Jerusalem and to eat at his table, yet he continued lame on both feet (II Sam. ix, 13). We may dwell both at Jerusalem and Hebron, or better still, in God Himself, and continually enjoy His bounty, though in ourselves unworthy and helpless, lame on both feet.

34 "And the desolate land shall be filled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by." How many lives of professing Christians are desolate of all that is refreshing to God or man! It is never springtime with them, but always the bleak and cold winter season. There is life, but it is not manifest either in spirit, flowers or foliage, and no one is attracted to Christ through them.

35 "This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden." Such is the transformation in a life when the soul sees the beauty and loveliness of Christ and becomes yielded to and filled with the Holy Spirit. There are foliage, flowers and fruit to the glory of God. There are joy and gladness and continual sunshine because the Father, Son and Holy Spirit are filling the temple and have full control in it, working in it both to will and to do of their good pleasure (Phil. ii, 13).

36 "Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places and plant that that was desolate. I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it." Whether in Israel or the church or the individual life, God must be glorified, and when we are willing that He shall be glorified in us, that it shall be "Not I, but Christ," then He will work and people will glorify God in us (Gal. i, 24). But the next two verses following our lesson tell us that God wishes us to ask Him to do for us that which He offers to do. He puts before us the possibilities of a life wholly for Him, but if there is no response on our part He passes by, just as when He walked with the two to Emmaus on the resurrection day.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 6, "Drifting"—Text, Eph. iv, 14; Jas. i, 1-8.

"A double minded man is unstable in all his ways."

Anchor up, all sails set and no one at the helm is a risky way to navigate. Drifting never brings any one into port. In the religious life as well as in navigation considerable depends on the currents which surround one, the winds of opinion, the trimming the sails of action, the load one carries and many other items, but the most influential factor is the working of the rudder that directs the ship. The will is to us what the rudder is to the vessel. It determines destiny. It decides between impulses and settles action and fixes character.

It needs training to stand at the wheel and steer. No less does it require discipline for one to hold control of his will and direct his life according to reason and the will of God.

Many opinions and often conflicting ones will be met with. Many questions are of no importance to us and we need to put aside all curiosity about them and resolutely refuse to waste time on their consideration. Some things we must decide. Look over all the evidence available, balance the probabilities, choose the most reasonable. Hang to it till more light comes. Be confident after you have once decided. To be continually doubting or debating prevents all positive action. Go ahead with firm grip on the wheel after you have consulted chart, chronometer and compass and taken your bearings.

Fewer mistakes are made by confident, strong action than by wavering indecision.

Indecision is as fatal as wrongdoing.

It requires nerve to face things and decide, but it pays.

The sense of strength and the glow of satisfaction which come after one has studied his duty and, after perplexity and trial, determined to stop drifting and sail right pay for all effort.

A well known English minister a short time since preached a Sunday evening sermon on "Hypocrisy." Soon after he received a letter from one of his members, who was manager of a large concern, saying: After hearing that sermon he had gone home and, thinking the matter over, had said to himself, "I am living the life of a hypocrite." He could not afford to do it. He sat down and wrote his employers, resigning his position because their business was being conducted in a manner that was injuring his spiritual life. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were dark days. He had no prospects, and to throw up his position seemed folly, yet his soul said continually, "Better starve than be false to God!" Thursday came the answer. His employers had carefully church, so far as results are concerned, doesn't amount to a hill of beans."

"Did it ever strike you?" asked Uncle Bez, "what a remarkable thing it is, that so many folks know all about how everything on earth ought to be done? They say that there isn't a man in the whole country who doesn't know exactly how a newspaper ought to be run. There are hundreds of men in every town who can tell you off-hand, just what the railroads ought to do. There are plenty of women in this block who know precisely what all their neighbors' mistakes are. There are any number of men who can set the church right in five minutes on all questions that have puzzled the wisest and best men in all ages, and there are scores and scores of folks who can give the Almighty points on how to run the universe, and especially upon what to do with the church. But, somehow, editors continue to run their own papers; railroad presidents continue to run their own roads; our neighbors get along without our unasked-for advice, and I guess the Almighty will manage to hold the stars in their places and to take care of His children on earth a few more million years, without any great amount of assistance from us."

"But, dear me," said the Man-Who-Likes-to-Manage, "I wasn't thinking of suggesting to the Almighty—I was only saying how the church could become more effective."

"I know, I know," replied Uncle Bez, "but after all, that is God's business, not ours. You remember that Christ said to His disciples on that last night, 'I am the vine, ye are the branches.'....and My Father is the husbandman.' It is God Himself who takes care of the vineyard. It is He who casts forth the fruitless branches; it is He who purges the fruitful branches, and our part in the vineyard doesn't consist in giving Him advice, but in 'abiding in the vine.' We needn't worry about results—God giveth the increase. If we abide in Christ, we shall bring forth 'much fruit.' So it seems to me that what the world and the church really needs, today, is not a new system of training the vines; not a new sort of fertilizer for the branch, not more culture, nor more anything, but just a closer connection between the vine and the branches. And that, I think, isn't a work that can be done on the wholesale plan, nor by any 'system;' it is individual. Each one of us must make sure of our own union with the vine—and God will take care of the bringing forth of fruit. If every Christian and every church member is right, the church and its work will take care of itself.

"And Christ has told us how we may 'abide in Him.' 'If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love.' And do forms business habits, and by the time he's a man, he's confirmed in both his way of doing business and in his interest in it, and his love for it. Haven't you seen that lots of times? Haven't you seen children who had to be driven to their music lessons, become passionately fond of music? Well, it's the same way with keeping Christ's commandments. The man who forces himself to do it long enough, will finally do it from love.

"And I wouldn't worry because the branches which do not bring forth fruit, seem to be left in the church undisturbed. The Husbandman probably knows when it is proper time for pruning, and we may be sure that the pruning will be done. Nature always throws away a useless branch. When you stop using your arm, it withers up. Your body won't feed what you

you know that that is true—as true in other things as in our religious life? You take a boy into your store; he doesn't like the work; he is restless and wants to be off fishing or something of the kind, but if he keeps your commandments, if he attends to his work, even if he only does it because he has to do it, it isn't very many weeks before he becomes interested; he don't use. When a branch of a tree withers, it finally drops off, and the branches of the True Vine, which no longer abide in it, are sure to fall off, without any assistance from outside critics. Don't you think they will? "

And the Man-Who-Likes-to-Manage only said, well, he supposed so.

SUGGESTIVE THOUGHTS.

BY CHARLES MCCLINTIC.

MAN may inherit but cannot merit eternal life.

Sins should be washed white by the blood of Christ, not white washed by the devil.

Christ's yoke will not fit stiff-necked people.

Instead of loving only those who love us we are to love also the unloving and the unlovable.

To Help our fellow men requires tact and contact.

Every man that will not allow God to regenerate him is becoming degenerate.

FIVE MINUTE SERMONS

XXXIX. FOR WHOSE SAKE?

WELL, Brother August, I'm sorry you have to wait for me," said the pastor, as he made himself comfortable for a long visit with the Foreign Missionary Secretary.

"You look tired, Brother Bishop; but, then, funerals are always fatiguing."

"This has been peculiarly so. I can't help feeling that that old lady has been next to murdered. Her name was Jones—some people with very common names have uncommon life stories. She lived in that little cottage on the slope yonder, the one with the apple tree in front. If ever there was a saint of God, she was one, a lady, quiet, Bible-loving, patient, unassuming. Her husband is—well, actually, there he is now! See him, stroking his long beard: he'd miss that beard and his daily 'Democrat' more than he seems to miss his wife. Yes, sir, he's going down to open up his little bit of a store, by the creek there. He was a deacon in our church for a long time, and I have often seen him get up at the end of the sermon Sunday mornings and go to the store and open up so as to catch the boys and sell them cigars as they came from church. See him sitting there now, smoking, reading and stroking his beard: his conscience must be hidden in it the way he tries to smooth it. He never has had much trade, but, as far back as I know, he has tied himself to that store busy reading, smoking and stroking. At the same time, his wife has been tied to the house, both by her sickness and by the burden of home duties.

"She has suffered for years, and yet no one ever heard her complain, and there was something about her that made all the godly women of the parish enjoy an hour with her. Some of them used to help her with her work; she being very weak, and the deacon refusing to hire help—that would mean fewer cigars. They had a daughter, Miss Libby, but then, she did not like house-work. She was a second edition of her father, only in a more religious binding. She became peculiarly pious, cultivated a Madonna expression, became too spiritual to wash dishes, doted on slums and missions, you know, and adored conventions and religious gatherings, provided they were away from home.

"She heard a missionary from Ceylon speak at one of our county gatherings; she wept at the mingled romance and pathos and bathos. She pictured a ship leaving New York harbor, Liverpool, London, Mediterranean, Bombay, a missionary teaching, a missionary standing on the platform of the Somno church and how the people hung breathless on her story, and, lo, the missionary was Miss Libby Jones. You can imagine what that meant: she carried a jumble of dying heathen and cocoa-nut palms, and waving handkerchiefs and ancient cities and cinnamon groves and pith-hats, and jungles in her head, for some time. Then she went before the Board, went to the training school and carried out her programme.

"She used to write home about the voyage and the scenery and the natives; sent pictures of the mission building and of herself in native costume. But we had to examine the official reports to find out what work was being done. Of course, our mission collections went up, and we felt proud of our representative on the Foreign field.

"SEE HIM SITTING THERE NOW!"

"Later on, her letters told how hard her work was: then how weary she was: then that she was sick and, at the end of three years, she was on her way home again.

She found her mother just alive: sweet old saint, how wistfully she looked at Libby. That young lady was away, however, speaking at missionary gatherings almost all the time and, yet, somehow, her addresses hung fire. She appeared on our platform, but I am afraid we thought most of the time of a weak and worn little old lady in a cottage near by. Anyway, the collection was mostly chicken-feed. Naturally she wearied of the story of the 'poor heathen,' and then she prepared a lecture on 'Travels in the Orient,' and traveled the Occident with it.

"SHE APPEARED ON OUR PLATFORM."

"When the old lady began to sink to the end she called for Libby. But Miss E. Judson Jones, as she was now styled, was far away, and death reached her mother before she did. The end was triumphant, and yet the scene was inexpressibly sad for, at the last moment, her husband was away, keeping the store open, and her only daughter was miles away."

There was silence for a long time as the men watched the red fade from the west and the evening star break over the hill.

Then Brother August said: "Alas, how selfishness mars! How many there are who are willing to forsake houses and brethren and parents; but not for His sake!"

"And you can easily see how this affects our interest in the field abroad," said the pastor. "One man said, when asked to give, 'No, sir, I can't afford to pay for young people gallivanting 'round the globe.'"

"Yes, it is easy for people to allow such cases to blind them to the constant Christ like sacrifice of the hundreds on the field and to the pressing needs of the lost over there. The selfishness of others ought not to make us selfish, too. The more your people see of the Master's sublime self-sacrifice, the more they will give as He gave, and the less they will remember Miss Libby's folly."

ly considered the matter. They recognized his value and requested him to keep his position and conduct their business in a manner consistent with his spiritual convictions. It pays to be true to God. "Godliness is profitable to all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come." No man can afford to do business for himself or for others in a manner his conscience cannot approve. The best business policy is godliness and Christian integrity.

Fiji is Christian as few communities in the world are. Many other of the south Pacific groups of islands follow closely after. Yet these islands were but a generation since pagan and cannibal of the lowest type. The conversion of the South Sea islands is one of the most thrilling stories yielded by this eventful age.

It was Hallan who said, "I see that the Bible is into every fold and crevice of the human heart. I am a man, and I believe that this is God's book, because it is man's book."

Bishop Merrill.

Bishop Stephen M. Merrill is the senior effective bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was elected to the office in 1872 with seven others. Bishop Thomas Bowman was the first one elected and so would rank as the senior living member of the Episcopal board. Bishop R. S. Foster was also elected on a ballot previous to Bishop Merrill, but both of these bishops are noneffective on account of age and infirmities.

Bishop Merrill was born in Ohio in 1825 and entered the ministry in 1846. He is not a graduate of college, but ranks among the most scholarly of men in special lines. He is the best living authority on Methodist law and usage, and has written a number of books which have become standards in doctrinal matters. He was pastor, presiding elder and editor. From the latter position he was elected to the episcopacy.

MOTHER OF ALL EVIL.

Liquor Drinking Habit the Greatest Source of Crime.

Rev. James G. Dougherty of the Antislavery league, in a recent address on the evils of intemperance at Kansas City, said in part:

"So should every Christian feel in the presence of a great and widespread evil. Something is wrong with the church member who can live quietly in the midst of evils and do nothing to prevent their propagation. The greatest evil of our land, the fruitful mother of many evils, is the liquor drinking habit. We shall do little to control it until we close its schools, the saloons. It is not true 'Let whisky alone and it will let you alone.' Mothers and wives and children are weeping in misery today because of the evil whisky has brought their lives, and they have always let it alone.

The saloon injures the individual, brings sorrow to his family, corrupts public life, steals young men from Sunday school and from church to ruin them, body, mind and spirit; even drags down some ministers and blasts their lives. Better 400 cases of small-pox scattered over the city than the 400 saloons said to exist here. The results would be less injurious to the individual, the family and the community. The Antislavery league invites all men, without reference to political or religious affiliations, to unite as one man for the suppression of this great evil. The league is not a party, will not form a party or ally itself to any political party. It recommends only such methods as the men in each community can agree upon—the men who feel the saloon to be an evil and can unite on one proposition, whatever else they disagree upon—"The saloon must go."

THE GIN MILL.

A Factory Whose Product Is Disease and Death.

Rev. Dr. C. H. Mead of New York, in a recent address at Philadelphia, attacked the liquor saloon. Dr. Mead's subject was "The Mills that Grind." He began by calling attention to the fact that the revenues of the United States government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, were $1,250,000,000 and of this amount $800,000,000 came from the sale of intoxicating liquors.

"Now," said Dr. Mead, "when a man spends $1 on drink, what has he to show for it? Does it strengthen him, does it purify his blood, does it make his brain clear? No, a thousand times no! What makes America such a mighty nation? Its manhood. Every institution that strikes at the manhood of the country should be annihilated. And yet that is just what the liquor shop does.

"Every mill almost has its value. The sawmill produces wood, the grain mill flour, the pulp mill paper; in each raw material is turned to goods. The gin mill, what does it do? Are the teeth or the gin saw sharp?"

"In the bottles and decanters of rum are teeth so sharp that death is the least wound they inflict. These teeth tear away and eat into a man's brain."

WHY HE REFUSED.

A man who lately came over from America told the writer that on board the steamer one of the passengers went up to another in the smoking room and asked him to have a drink with him. The man then proceeded to light and read a newspaper and never noticed him. The other man again asked him to drink with him. No answer came. A third invitation was given in these words:

"Sir, I have asked you in a friendly way as possible to drink with me, and each time you went on with your reading and had not the civility to answer me. Now I ask you for the last time if you will drink wine, whisky, or anything else with me?"

The man then put aside his paper and answered quietly: "Do you want a glass, sir? Well, if I were to take a quarter of it, I could not read until I had drunk all the liquor in the bottle. This is why I would not drink with you."

All present admired the man's self-control and learned a lesson on the danger of putting one's soul in a brother's way.—Qu

Bane of the Nation.

It is not the ignorant who are most affected by the evil of intemperance, but the well educated people who are most likely to set a good example, are the victims. The gin bottle acts as a drink, come on."

"All right," said the driver. "I think I can get a drink; but mebbly the whiskey is out, and we'll have to take bottled beer."

Then I followed him through the dried weeds and snow along the river bank.

"This isn't the way to a saloon," I said.

"No, I am going to Mike Grady's. Mrs. Grady has some beer left over from a funeral."

When we reached the rear end of Grady's cabin the driver knocked on the door.

"Be off from there!" said an Irish woman's voice. "It's no use comin' round here. The perlice has been here and poor Mike has gone wid 'em."

"Con-found it!" said my driver, striking his left hand with his right fist, "the police are always getting on the end of a wake. But I can get you a drink yet." Then he looked at me quizzically and said:

"Will you join a club?"

"A what?"

"A club."

"Yes, I'll join anything to get a drink. I'll join the Masons, join a horse company, join a Church—anything."

"Come along then. I know where it is."

Then I followed him across the bridge and on up Main street.

Then he turned up a pair of stairs, and I followed him up three stories to a door with a little wicket door in the centre, where he gave three knocks, and the wicket flew open. Then commenced some low whispering, and then the big door slowly opened.

"Fifty cents is the price of membership," holding out a card with my name written on it. Then we went to the next room, where there was a bottle of whiskey on the table. I took it in my hand and smelt of it.

"What is it?" I asked.

"Oh, don't be afraid of it. It's whiskey."

It was whiskey—Maine whiskey, but such whiskey! My man had kept his word. I looked at the bottle, then looked at my membership card. I have that card now. I'm a member in good standing.

"Well," I said, "this is pretty near prohibition. If walking eight blocks, climbing up three pairs of stairs, joining a club of drunkards, and paying 50 cents to look at a bottle of vile poison isn't prohibition I never expect to see it."

If any clergyman reading this article doubts the truth of my story, I will send him my membership ticket by return mail—with my affidavit appended.

Prohibition does prohibit whiskey about as much as the law prohibits swimming. They will swim, but they will steal less. If the penalty against liquor selling were as strong as it is against murder there would be as few liquor sellers as murderers, and there would be less tears and less poverty in this world and less sulphur in the next. —Eli Perkins in "New York Voice."

TOO BIG FOR HIS BOOTS.

With great trouble, a small body of men were busy hoisting a heavy log to the top of a block house that was being repaired after an assault in one of the campaigns of the war of American Independence.

As the log swung to and fro the voice of a little man was heard encouraging the workers with a "Heave away! There she goes! Heave ho!"

By and by there rode past an officer in plain clothes, who asked the little man why he did not help the others.

"Sir," was the pompous reply, "I am a corporal."

"Indeed," said the other, "I did not know that. I ask your pardon, Mr. Corporal."

Dismounting without further ado, the officer lent a willing hand until the job was done. Then, wiping the honest sweat from off his brow, he turned to the little man and remarked:

"The next time, Mr. Corporal, you have a bit of work like that in hand, and too few men to do it, send for the commander-in-chief, and I'll come again and assist you."

With which offer and rebuke, General Washington left the astounded corporal to his own reflections.—"Little Folks."

BE A MISSIONARY AT HOME.

After an enthusiastic missionary meeting a young lady went to the speaker and told him she would like to become a missionary. Looking at her earnestly, the missionary said:

"I suppose you have been working in the Sunday-school, and seeking to win the scholars there for Christ?"

"No," said the young lady, "I never felt called to teach children; I am not suited for them."

"Well, perhaps you have been helping in a mothers' meeting, and trying to bring those at home to Jesus?"

"No, I cannot say that I have done any of this work, but if I went abroad I might be able to begin there."

"Believe me, my dear, young lady, if you cannot work for Christ at home you will not find it easier to do so abroad. We want as missionaries those who have proved themselves soldiers of the Lord Jesus.—Scottsman.

THE LIVE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Only second to the Scripture lesson is the music of the Sunday-school. It plays a most important part in establishing truth in the young hearts. Besides this it gives life and strength to the meeting. All children love music and there are few indeed who cannot sing. Music finds access everywhere, and many an untutored member of the church has been conquered by the strains of Gospel music who was obdurate to every other means of evangelization. propriateness of choice in musical selections helps to enforce the lesson of the hour. It is not always necessary to sing a whole hymn through. Sometimes the object will be better gained by singing a couple of stanzas from two or three different hymns.

Of all the hymns that have ever come to bless mankind there are none so full of Gospel truth as those that are now found in our Methodist hymn-book, and while some tunes may be "airier" and more "catchy," they cannot equal the depth and soulful melody of our hymn tunes. Those who have heard our well-taught children, whether at Sunday-schools, or anniversaries will be pleased to see how fully the children can grasp and appreciate our noblest hymns. These hymns, not only please the ear, but have food for the soul, and when the heart is stirred, action will follow. This musical training is not only of immediate benefit to the children, but it prepares them to participate in and enjoy the regular Church services. Today, as always, we wish our people to obey the injunction, "Let all the people sing," and let the singing be done with the spirit, and the understanding also." It is well to teach the children to memorize some hymns, tunes and words, and to have them sing without books. What incalculable blessings have come through such efforts can only be estimated from the testimonies that have come to our ears from all parts of the world, and from all experiences that befall the human lot. Music warms the soul, lightens burdens, corrects or expresses our joy, rouses our energies here, and prepares us for the ransomed hosts, when we shall meet to praise the Redeemer around the throne.

Virginia's Attractions.

It is astonishing what a vast amount of rational enjoyment may be extracted from a ten days' visit to Virginia; how it may be made to compensate for the untold miseries of months of labor, and, in fact, obliterate the remembrance of the "tucker" or of "trial balances," which one must endure while tossing among the breakers of modern business.

In the Chesapeake & Ohio sections of the Old Dominion are bits of scenery, each bearing an indelible impress of Creation's hands, and each preserving memories of Nature's might. The Natural Bridge, the Grottoes of the Shenandoah, the Caverns of Luray, the New River canyons, tell stories widely different from Nature's structures of continental Europe; and Old Point Comfort, Williamsburg, Richmond and the Lower James disclose fragments of history of far greater interest to us of American birth than the treasures of the Old World. Pictures of delicious and magic beauty abound. In the heart of the Alleghanies health and pleasure seekers find life-giving waters and social enjoyment at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia Hot Springs, and a host of other resorts of world-wide fame. If one is an enthusiastic lover of military history, with an admiration for war-like deeds of war-like men, he may stand on almost any mountain in Virginia and gaze upon fields where men's bones have been destroyed and upon plains which have wept bloody dew. The lover of Nature will see valleys of peace, and rich, fertile dells, through which silver rivers wind their graceful lines. The student of the natural school may feast his eyes on mines of iron and zinc and coal, and while to the sentimental there are nooks fitted only to the intermingling of the lover's speech

EARLY DRINK LAWS.

Property of Drunkards Treated as That of Lunatics.

Samuel Morewood, a British collector of excise, who wrote his excellent work on inebriating liquors at the very time when the drinking of distilled spirits was at its height in this country, mainly in 1826-80, makes the following judicious remarks in reference to the same:

"That it (excessive drunkenness in America) is a great evil all admit, and it can only be accounted for from a combination of circumstances which rarely occurs in other places. . . . Indeed when the moral habits become once depraved it is difficult to restore the mind to the exercise of religious pursuits. . . . In 1821 the American legislature wisely enacted a law which places the concerns and property of habitual drunkards in the hands of a committee of the court of chancery, thus extending to them the jurisdiction exercised by the court with regard to the estates of lunatics. . . . No wonder that so awful and calamitous a state would await such a number of individuals when we find that even boys acquire the habit of drinking much earlier than they do in Europe. . . . It is no uncommon thing to see a boy of 13 or 14 years old, with a cigar in his mouth, walk into a tavern in the forenoon to take a glass of brandy and biters to quench that thirst which the free use of tobacco always occasions, and it is well known that habits, when early contracted, become in some measure constitutional. . . . Forty millions of dollars, it is thought, are thrown away annually on spirits in the States, and it is frightful to think that among the prosecutions for irregularity in one year at New York 800 of these cases arose from intemperance, while of 730 persons committed the same year to the workhouse in Baltimore 554 were for intoxication, and in the entire States it is conjectured that 81,000 annually fall victims to this debasing propensity."—Detroit News-Tribune.

Temperance Education.

The assistant attorney general of the United States has rendered an opinion in which he holds that it is the duty of the various boards of education to enforce the law passed by congress May 20, 1896, that makes the study of alcohol with reference to its effects upon the human system a compulsory branch of study, not only in the public schools of the territories, but in the various Indian schools wherever located and in the naval and military schools of the United States. Teachers also must pass a satisfactory examination on this special subject if they have not already done so.—Exchange.

Intemperance in France.

Among all the European nations France suffers most from the evils of intemperance, which made terrible progress in the last 20 years. In portions of the northern parts of France the population is disappearing as rapidly as the American Indians disappeared before the fire water introduced by the white pioneers. In Normandy the women drink more than the men, and the mortality among children is excessive in consequence.—Chicago Record.

Teachers and Barkeepers.

There are 400,000 teachers employed in the public schools of the United States, and they are paid about $165,000,000 yearly. There are 1,200,000 barkeepers and saloon keepers, and the people pay to them over $1,000,000,000 a year.

Thou knowest not now, how can'st thou know?
Earth's shadows hide me from thy sight,
And oft I lead thee in the dark
When thou would'st have thy path-

And rugged is the way and steep,
And many a storm may break o'er thee,
But thou mayest trust me, I have crossed
Each wave of life's tempestuous

Thou knowest not now, thou wonder-

Thy fairest schemes are brought to

My ways are hard to understand,
Too intricate for finite thought.

But when earth's tangled maze is

And then hast reached the glory land,
Thou wilt look back with joy and own
I led thee with a loving hand.

Thou knowest not now; why those more dear
Than life to thee were called away,
Why all thy tears and prayers were vain,
When thou did'st ask to have them stay.

I know thy heart too fondly clung
To them, when I would have thy

And so I took thy treasures hence,
And laid them up for thee above.

Thou knowest not now, yet be con-

Correspondence.

ARMVILLE DISTRICT CONFER- ENCE.

Under the presidency of the consecrated Rev. Jas. H. Riddick the preachers and laymen of the Farmville District enjoyed at Crewe their annual gathering.

Geo. H. McFaden the host of the occasion, spared no pains to make the visit a most agreeable one, and he succeeded well.

Mc. has had much experience in housing and looking after District Conference and certainly his last effort in this direction shows that he made good use of the experience he gained elsewhere for if there were a hitch of any kind anywhere, the same has not reached our ears.

To be sure though Mc. had at comparatively easy task before him this time for with the abundance of charming homes at his command, each one with wide open doors, and generous welcome.
Crewe would have found no difficulty in entertaining twice nay 3 times the number of Delegates. There was a good attendance for a District Conference.

Seventeen preachers and about 40 laymen were on hand and most of them stayed until the last hours of the session.
We missed the genial Capt. Richard Irby, who generally honors us with his presence.

However, the Randolph Macon System of Colleges was well represented for with us were Dr. W. W. Smith, the Chancellor; Jas. Cannon, Jr., of the B. F. I., and Prof. E. Sumpter Smith, of Bedford
City Academy.

The first days session was taken up with reports from the various charges, the character of which show that the interests of the Church are being well looked after and point to a good report at the Annual Conference.

A hopeful spirit, in fact, seemed to have taken possession of the District.

We thank God for all that is passed
And trust him for all that's to come.

There was a large lay representation present on the first day.

The evening session was held during a continuous rain, which had not ceased at the hour for adjournment. Friday being set aside, by agreement, for the Educational movement, and the rain continuing to decline, to cease, a motion to proceed to the election of lay delegates to the Annual Conference was adopted after some discussion as to the advisability of making a precedent, not in accordance with our usual custom, which has hitherto been to elect delegates on the 2nd or 3rd day.

In all there were 6 Ballots taken resulting in the election of the following as delegates Judge J. M. Crute, of Farmville; Bro. W. H. Hubbard, of Burkeville
Circuit; Bro. C. E. Wilson, of Crewe; Bro.
J. H. Wall, of N. Mecklenburg; and of the following brethren as alternates
Bro. L. E. Jones, of Crewe; Bro. H. E.
Barrow, of Farmville; Bro. R. A. Blackwell, of Lunenburg; Bro. C. T. Reekes, of Boydton.

The 2nd day's morning session was enlivened and brightened by the introduction, during the presentation of the report on Epworth Leagues, a large delegation from the Crewe Junior Leaguers who, accompanied by their own organist and led by their own chorister, rendered, very spiritedly, several bright rallying Epworth League hymns.

Bro. McFaden created a profound impression upon the delegates present as he detailed a work of mercy and help in which the Crewe League had recently engaged.

During the evening session of the 2nd day the reports of committees began to pour in and many things which ought and should have been said were crowded out for want of time in which to discuss them.

H. E. Barrow, of Farmville, made a ringing speech on the financial report, which it would have benefitted every steward on the District to hear and heed. The Conference directed that the reports on Finance and Spiritual State of the Church; and of the District Secretary of the W. F. M. to be forwarded to the "Advocate" and to the RECORDER with a request for publication.

Rev. H. M. Hope addressed the Conference in behalf of the Conference or-gain.

H. E. Barrow, of the District Parsonage Board of Trustees, reported that through no fault of his own, the P. E. had not used the district parsonage this year, but had donated the rent to repairs on the building, and that the building was now free of debt and insurance paid up.

Friday's session, which was continued until the winding up of all the business of the Conference, was occupied, in the main, by the Twentieth Century Educational and Thank-Offering Fund movement, under the direction of Rev. James Cannon, Jr., the chairman of the Committee on Education and one of the secretaries of the Virginia Conference Education Board. Dr. W. W. Smith, in a masterly, thoughtful and eloquent address, made us all wish we had the wherewithal to send the amount of the Twentieth Century Fund up to and above the twenty millions which our sister Church proposes to raise.

Brother Cannon then undertook to raise a collection and in a little more than ten minutes the secretary was enabled to report $2735.00 subscribed.

Dr. W. J. Young followed with one of his wonderfully impressive speeches, the best effect of which, however, was lost by many of the delegates who were forced to leave town on the noon train.

The licenses of unordained local preachers were renewed, and licenses to preach issued to Walter A. Jeffries, of Trinity Church, Chase City Circuit; E.
Gordon Dunn, of Reese's Church, Charlotte Circuit; J. A. Winn, of Williams'
Church, Lunenburg Circuit; Virgie R.
Turner, of Williams' Church, Lunenburg Circuit; Robert R. Lumpkin, of Clarksville Church, Clarksville Circuit.

Rev. W. A. Jeffries, and Rev. R. P.
Lumpkin were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial, and Rev. E. Gordon Dunn was endorsed by the District Board of Education as a suitable and worthy applicant for aid in obtaining a ministerial education.

The District Conference passed, by a rising vote, resolutions of respect and love for our P. E., whose term expires at Petersburg in November next.

The customary resolution of thanks were adopted and the Conference adjourned without day to meet in Boydton next year.

There was some dissatisfaction expressed by visitors to the sessions of the Conference that there was not more time allowed for preaching; the stress of business, however, made it impossible to find place for more than two sermons a day.

The opening sermon, on Wednesday night, by Rev. R. A. Compton, from text, First John 1:14, was well prepared and well delivered; and the sermon on Missions, by Rev. W. W. Royall, D. D., who took as his text the Great Commission and to a crowded house held forth upon the subject so dear to the Christian heart, was intensely interesting.

We all enjoyed our visit to Crewe, and when the District Conference meets there next time may we be there, too!
SCRIBE.

P. S. Rev. J. E. McCulloch, on Friday night, addressed a full house in the interest of the Student Missionary Campaign, under the auspices of the local League.

RAPPAHANNOCK DISTRICT CON- FERENCE.

The Conference was held at Trinity Church, King George C. H., on July 19, 20 and 21, and was one of the most pleasant and harmonious sessions we ever had. We were entertained so hospitably and bountifully that we will be glad when it comes our lot to go there again.

Bishop A. W. Wilson, of Baltimore, Md., was present and presided all the time, and also favored us with two splendid sermons. Dr. W. W. Smith, chancellor of the Randolph Macon Institutions and Rev. Jas. Cannon, Jr., President of Blackstone Institute and Secretary of the Board of Education of the Virginia Conference, visited us, and gave us eloquent and interesting addresses. The Episcopal Church was kindly put at the disposal of the Conference, and sermons were preached there twice, to overflow congregations, by Revs. Jas. Cannon, Jr., and W. F. Davis. Rev. W. B. Jett preached the opening sermon before the Conference on Wednesday morning.
The other preachers during the Conference were Revs. J. E. Deshazo and F.
Burruss.

The usual committees were appointed and made reports. One report was but slightly altered owing to difference of opinion and discussion. It stated that among our members "the private daily reading of the scriptures is almost wholly omitted." If that be the case, we had a wall of Roman Catholics and trust to the priest alone for our knowledge of God and his word, and for absolution from sin. Reader are you a Christian, a Protestant, a Methodist, and living in this day of grace when the American Bible Society is striving to put a copy of the Bible in the possession of every individual, and do you fail to read even a few verses of God's word in private, daily? If so, had you not better try to get some word from your best friend every day?

The attendance of members of Conference was above the average—in all, 28 were laymen and 18 preachers. Besides there were 3 licensed to preach, viz: Geo. T. Forrester and C. Emily Thrift, of the Lancaster Circuit, and George W. Watkins, of Matthews Circuit.

The following were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: J. T. Minor, R. O. Patross, W. McD. Lee and L. Cockrell. Alternates: O. Eastburn, J. H. Wheaton, M. W. Bruce and Mesville Walker.

Seven Churches claimed the privilege of entertaining the next session of the Conference, viz: Clarksville, of Middlesex Circuit; White Marsh, White Stone and Wheaton, of Lancaster; Carmel, of Westmoreland; Tabernacle, of Spotsylvania and Calvary, of Richmond county. White Stone, of Lancaster county, which has twice before showed us how well she can entertain, was selected as the place. —A MEMBER, in the "Northern Neck News."

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The third District meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Farmville District convened in the Methodist Church at Farmville, July 7th, at 8:30 p. m.

After devotional exercises, conducted by Judge J. M. Crute, Mrs. Bacon, the District Secretary, took the chair. The delegates and visitors were welcomed by Mrs. D. T. Elam, of Farmville, and the response made in appropriate words and graceful manner by Mrs. Phillips, of Crewe. After singing another hymn, the meeting became social and the delegates and visitors became acquainted with the Farmville ladies. The meeting adjourned at 9:30 to meet Saturday morning.

The business meeting was opened at 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning, with Mrs. Bacon in the chair. Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. R. A. Compton, of Blackstone, with prayer by Mrs. T. McN. Simpson, of Farmville.

Mrs. D. T. Elam was elected secretary. The roll of the District being called, the following delegates responded: Farmville Auxiliary—Mrs. Annie Wootton; Crawley Auxiliary—Mrs. T. W. Crawley; Olive Branch—Miss Sallie Moore; Clarksville—Mrs. H. T. Bacon; Crewe—Mrs. G. H. McFaden and Mrs. Phillips; Blackstone—Mrs. R. A. Compton.

The address of the District Secretary was next in order. It was full and comprehensive; an earnest appeal to the Auxiliaries for promptness and increase in zeal, and urging that we reach the $50,000 mark this year.

She suggested a scholarship being given by the District, or a Brole woman supported, was presented, as well as attention called to the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering Fund. On the whole, her report was encouraging, reporting an increase in members, contributions, and subscribers to the Woman's Missionary Advocate.

On motion of Mrs. Elam, a rising vote of thanks was extended Mrs. Bacon for her most excellent address.

The presiding officer then called for reports from the Auxiliaries. Farmville reported in a live working condition, but, of course, much room for improvement. Mrs. Simpson stated that this Auxiliary had certainly grown in grace since her first acquaintance with it eight years ago. Crawley reported no increase, but working faithfully and holding the meetings regularly.

Olive Branch reported an increase in subscribers to the Missionary Advocate. It is a small country Auxiliary, earnestly at work and hopeful for the future.

Miss Agnes Wootten sang a beautiful and appropriate solo, "God Calling Yet."

Mrs. Compton, Mrs. McFaden and Crawley were appointed the Committee on Resolutions.

Blackstone reported a flourishing Auxiliary, organized in October 1898, has gained ten members since its organization, with a bright outlook.

Clarksville reported much interest awakened there, new members being added and old ones renewing membership.

An interesting and instructive paper on Korea was read by Mrs. R. H. Paullett, of Farmville.

Crewe reported this Auxiliary in a flourishing condition.

A letter was read from Lunenburg Auxiliary. Their meetings are held quarterly as their members are scattered throughout the circuit.

The Pamplin City Auxiliary was reported as doing well.

A paper full of information on our work in Mexico, written by Mrs. Berry, of Crewe, was read by Mrs. McFaden.

Mrs. Bacon spoke in behalf of raising money to make a life member. On motion, this was postponed until later.

Adjourned at 1 o'clock to meet Monday at 9 a. m.

The sermon was preached Sunday by Rev. T. McN. Simpson, his text being Psalm 68:11, Revised edition: "The Lord giveth the Word; the women that published the tidings are a great host."

The Monday morning's session was opened at 10 o'clock, the devotional exercises being conducted by Rev. T. McN. Simpson.

After the roll call the minutes of the preceding session were read and approved.

Mrs. H. E. Wall gave a delightful and instructive lecture on Mission work, taking South America and Brazil especially as her subject, illustrating her talk by the use of a large map, and exhibiting a number of interesting pictures, impressing facts upon her hearers in a forcible manner and showing a thorough knowledge of the work she was discussing.

Mrs. Simpson then read Mrs. W. C. Inge's letter in the "Advocate," exhorting and encouraging the Virginia Conference Society to press forward in the work of "Woman's Work for Women."

This was followed by a vocal solo, sweetly rendered by Miss Edna Barrow, of Farmville.

The question of a Scholarship being supported by the District was then discussed very fully, and it was thought advisable to undertake it.

The following resolution was offered: "Resolved: That the forty dollars ($40.00) necessary for the support of the Scholarship, above determined upon, be apportioned as equitably as possible to the several Auxiliaries on the District, and that a committee of three (3) be hereby ordered to make the apportionment."

“(Signed)

“Mrs. T. W. Crawley,

“Mrs. R. A. Compton.”

Mrs. R. A. Compton, Mrs. G. H. McFaden and Mrs. H. E. Wall were appointed the committee to meet this apportionment.

Mrs. Bacon was requested to write to each Auxiliary at once and inform them of this work to be undertaken and to respond promptly.

The committee reported as follows:

Farmville Auxiliary, $10.00; Boydton, $5.00; Clarksville, $5.00; Crewe, $5.00; Amelia C. H., $4.00; Pamplins, $2.50; Lunenburg, $2.50; Blackstone, $2.50; Crawley, $1.00; Hobson's Grove and Trinity, $1.00; Salem, $1.00; Olive Branch, $50; total, $40.00.

The Committee on Resolutions read their report, expressing appreciation of all courtesies extended them during the meeting, thanking Mrs. Bacon for her faithfulness as District Secretary, also the ladies who contributed papers to be read at the meeting.

The report was adopted.

It was moved and carried that the District Secretary be instructed to cast the ballot to elect delegates and alternates to the Annual Conference meeting, to be held in Petersburg in October.

The list of delegates is as follows:

Mrs. R. A. Compton, Blackstone; Mrs. T. J. Davis, Farmville; Miss Binford, Olive Branch; Mrs. Bascom Dey, Crawley; Miss Price, Salem; Mrs. G. H. McFaden, Crewe.

Alternates: Mrs. Cogbill, Boydton; Miss Lillian Bagley, Lunenburg; Mrs. Brady, Pamplins; Miss Southall, Amelia; Miss Humphreys, Clarksville; Mrs. Brazeal, Hobsons.

Mrs. Compton extended an invitation to meet in Blackstone next year, subject to change, if necessary.

After reading the minutes of the morning session, the hymn "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," was sung, and the benediction pronounced by Mr. Simpson, the session was adjourned to meet at the call of the District Secretary next year.

All felt it a privilege to attend, and much regret was expressed that every Auxiliary did not send a delegate.

Good can and will be accomplished if all will work together; so next year send your delegate.

FOURTH INTERNATIONAL EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION.

In 1897 the city of Indianapolis, Ind., made a successful campaign and captured this great bi-ennial gathering of Methodists. The committee in charge of that campaign promised to outdo every preceding international convention.

Indianapolis has entertained so many conventions that the people seem to be veterans in the service of hospitality. All the great external features which characterize these great gatherings were repeated. The citizens decorated the streets of the city in a handsome manner, and the League colors of red and white were displayed with rare good taste in flags, streamers, and electric lights. Many proclamations of welcome spanned the streets and avenues.

The general rendezvous of the Epworth hosts upon their arrival in companies and regiments was the magnificent Capitol building of the State, which by resolution of the Legislature had been extended the committee for convention purposes for the entire week. The large and cool rotunda was occupied by the registration force, which worked smoothly and intelligently. On Thursday afternoon forty-two States and Territories and Canada were represented, and the fourth International Convention to eclipse for numbers and enthusiasm any gathering of young people our denomination has witnessed. It is too soon to give exact figures, but the final registration figures will show this to be a monster assembly.

The meeting places were large and comfortable and convenient of access. Epworth Tent was pitched on the courthouse campus, and could accommodate 8,000 persons; Tomlinson Hall, an ideal meeting place, accommodated 6,000; and the English Opera House several thousand. All these places were decorated in a fashion which demonstrated the committee under that caption was not a victim of gaudiness.

The official program, which was a beautiful and substantial booklet of 145 pages, announced the topic, "Methodism of Today," for that hour. The delegates, who had come from the ends of the continent, crowded every available inch of space in the two mammoth meeting places. The largest interest of the day was centered in the tent meeting, because it was the officials' meeting. Ten thousand and vigorous and zealous Leaguers crammed the tent and overflowed into the campus.

The acoustic properties were early proved quite satisfactory. The great chorus choirs, which had been drilling for weeks, began their antiphonal singing, and Epworth Tent responded to Tomlinson Hall across the street. The grand old Methodist hymns were lustily and warmly flung to the winds, until the spirit of praise reached its climax in the great Anglo-Saxon national odes.

Chairman Lasby then, in words few and fitting, welcomed the vast throngs in behalf of the general committee. The applause which greeted his words showed the appreciative temper of the multitude. The presiding officer, the Hon. Hugh Dougherty, spoke a few ringing sentiments, and called upon the Rev. Henry J. Talbot to offer the opening prayer, which voiced praise and gratitude.

The welcoming staff was a strong one, and the overwhelming demonstrations of appreciation which greeted the representatives of the State of Indiana, the city of Indianapolis, and the Methodism of Indiana, respectively, stamped the gentlemen as peers at the business. The Governor of the Commonwealth, the Hon. J. A. Mount, welcomed the Leaguers in behalf of the State. The address was a remarkably strong effort, and a Presbyterian executive spoke appreciative words of our denomination's growth and work. His introductory utterance of welcome was, "What words can I employ that would fittingly express the warm welcome extended by the people of Indiana to this convention?"

The Hon. Eli. F. Ritter spoke eloquent words of welcome as the representative of the municipal government. He gave the delegates permission to blow their own horns within the walls of the city, averring Methodism had a record to sustain in that respect. The address in behalf of Indiana Methodism was made by Congressman James Watson.

The tide of welcome had struck the convention, but the men who were called upon to respond were happy in their utterances. Charles O. Jones, D. D., Bishop Ninde, and A. Carman, D. D., spoke in behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Church of Canada, respectively. Their addresses were warm in the temperature of appreciation of the hospitality, and breathed the spirit of denominational loyalty and interdenominational and international fraternity. The meeting had been going up in spiritual power, and culminated in a fruitful evangelistic service, conducted by D. W. Potter, of Chicago, Ill.

The first day's exercises had a happy and auspicious finish in the three immense gatherings which crowded every space of the three auditoriums in the evening. The topic considered was, "The Intellectual Life." The results of those twelve stirring addresses to the 12,000 or 15,000 younger Methodists will be seen in a stalwart intellectuality which will "strengthen the stakes" of our beloved Methodism. Drs. Workman, of Canada, Bashford, of Ohio, and Lloyd, of Texas, spoke upon "The High School and the College," Drs. Werlein, of Missouri, Elliott, of Canada, and Thorpe, of Brooklyn, magnified the "Value and Possibility of Self-culture." "Books and Reading" was the theme of the Rev. Messrs. Hamilton, of Boston, Knickerbocker, of California, and Plantz, of Wisconsin. The concluding addresses of the evening, upon "The Bible and the Intellectual Life," were delivered by Drs. McDowell, of New York, Bowen, of Georgia, and Hayes, of Evanston, Ill.

The first full day of the convention had a happy opening in the stirring love feast service which was held at 6:30 a. m. in Monument Square. The Epworth hosts were early astir, and gathered in large numbers at the appointed place. Dr. W. A. Spencer, of Philadelphia, Pa., was the leader of the great service. His leadership, the soulful olden-time Methodist hymns sung by the zealous Leaguers, and the hundreds of ringing testimonials made a feast of spiritual things.

The Department of Spiritual Work was divided into the pertinent topics: "The Devotional Meeting, Helps and Hindrances," "How to Help Revivals," and "How to Deepen the Spiritual Life." The Department of Mercy and Help suggested the topics: "Visiting Under the Direction of the Pastor," "Epworth House and Work in Cities," and "The Work in Country Chapters." "The Study and Use of the Bible," "The Reading Course and Reading Circles," and "Methodist Papers" were considered by the literary workers. The socialists of the League discussed the attitude to be sustained toward members, strangers, and "the social," respectively. The correspondence council emphasized system and method in discussions which centered in the themes: "Where Are Your Members?" "Chapter Records and Reports," and "Church Advertising." The financiers of the League debated "How to Raise League Moneys," "Systematic Giving," and "Local Church Support and Benevolence."

At Tomlinson Hall a great audience had gathered to hear the wonderful story of "The Last Days of the Confederacy," by General Gordon. The spirit manifested shows that the Epworth League knows no North, no South, no

East, no West. At the last moment the announcement was made that General Gordon would be unable to appear.

Bishop McCabe was pressed into service, and delivered his famous lecture, "The Bright Side of Life in Libby Prison."

In the English Opera House a splendid audience listened to J. M. Buckley, D. D., and Albert Carman, D. D., of Canada, speak upon the theme "Anglo-American Relations."

The third day of the convention was of a character which tested the capacity of the delegates in two respects, namely, their powers of physical endurance and their powers of mental assimilation. The program scheduled fourteen different services, extending from 6:30 in the morning until 10:30 in the evening. The speech-making was to be done by some of the most famous men in Methodism. The outlook was sufficient to cause some misgivings in the heart of the most seasoned convention attendant. The delegates and visitors had increased so numerously that every meeting place was thronged. The prospectors of the convention claim at least 15,000. The writer does not think it extravagant.

Although it is almost audacious, here goes an attempt to describe some of the great gatherings of the red-letter day: At 6:30 in the morning three love feasts were held in Tomlinson Hall, Epworth Tent, and the Opera House, led by Drs. Du Bose, of Tennessee, Graham, of Canada, and Pate, of South Carolina. Many hundreds of delegates attended these sunrise services, and ushered in the work day of the convention with songs and testimonies. After breakfast hour the streets were filled with people standing in every vacant place, sitting on the steps and tables. The general topic of the morning was "The Spirit and Life of Methodism." Three Bishops were the APPOINTED PRESIDING ELDER.

Because of the illness of the Rev. Dr. A. G. Brown, presiding elder of the Norfolk District M. E. Church South, a successor has been appointed. This duty devolved upon Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, who after considerable consideration determined upon the Rev. William H. Edwards, who for three years past has been pastor of Centenary Church, of this city.

The Rev. Mr. Edwards, besides performing the duties of presiding elder, will continue as pastor of Centenary Church till the close of the present Conference year, in November. He has authority to employ an assistant in the pastoral work, but he does not think that this will be necessary, as when he is compelled to be away from his pulpit he can have a supply.—Landmark.

H. C. PAULETT.

FARMVILLE, VA., July 29—H. C. Paulett, of Farmville, died this morning at 3:30 o'clock at Clifton Forge, in his fifty-first year. Mr. Paulett was a native of Farmville, was educated at Randolph Macon College, and for a number of years was a useful and popular minister in the Methodist Conference.

In the fall of 1878 it seemed wise for him to retire from the active ministry, and since that time he has been engaged in business with his father, Mr. R. S. Paulett.

In 1875 he married Miss Cully Twitty, sister of the late Rev. J. E. Twitty, D. D. He leaves his widow and three children.

Mr. Paulett ranked as one of Farmville's best men in business as well as religious life. His health gave way some months ago, and since June 1st he had been at the Monroe Red Sulphur Springs. On yesterday he left for his home, reaching Clifton Forge, where his condition grew worse, and died at 3:40. His remains were taken home, accompanied by his brother, R. H. Paulett, Mrs. R. S. Paulett, Judge Crute, and Colonel and Mrs. C. M. Walker.

He will be buried from the Methodist Church, of which he was a devoted member, Sunday afternoon; services by his pastor, Rev. Mr. Simpson.

May it be a great comfort to his parents to know that if "we all do fade as a leaf" he faded to shine more brightly in Heaven—ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

WHAT THE SOUTH IS DOING FOR EDUCATION.

In the past twenty years the South has increased 54 per cent. in population, but its school attendance has increased 130 per cent; that is to say, more than twice as fast as the population kept in school during the year; while in 1874 an average of 14½ out of every hundred were enrolled in school, ten years later (1884) the average had risen to 18½ per hundred, and in 1894, or 20 years later, the number enrolled is 22 in the hundred. Of all the people of the South, white and black, one in five is in attendance on school for some portion of the year. This is a large proportion of the people to be in school. Even in Saxony, which excels all countries of Europe in its school enrollment, the per centum in school is only 20.

DR. DUNCAN ELECTED.

Rev. Dr. James A. Duncan, of the Holston Conference and located at Knoxville, Tenn., was elected Monday night president of Randolph-Macon College, to succeed Dr. J. A. Kern, resigned. Rev. Dr. W. E. Edwards, of the Virginia Conference was elected to the chair of moral philosophy and Biblical literature, the trustees having decided to separate the chair from the presidency.

"AFTER YOUR BOY."

One of the delegates to a State Convention of Christian Endeavors, a young business man, dressed in a natty rough-and-ready suit, every movement alert and eager, and telling of bottled energy within, came suddenly upon a red-faced citizen who evidently had been patronizing the hotel bar. Buttonholing the delegate a trifle unceremoniously, the latter said:

"What are you fellows trying to do down of the meetings? You are hot temperance, I see by the papers. Do you think you could make a temperance man of me?"

"No," replied the delegate, looking him over from head to foot, with a keen glance, "we evidently couldn't do much for you, but we are after your boy."

At this unexpected retort the man dropped his jocular tone, and said seriously, "Well, I guess you have got the right of it there. If somebody had been after me when I was a boy I should be a better man today."—Temperance Banner.

GOD WILL SPRINKLE SUNSHINE.

If you should see a fellow-man with trouble's flag unfurled,
An' looking like he didn't have a friend in all the world,
Go up and slap him on the back, and holler, "How d' you do?"
And grasp his hand so warm he'll know he has a friend in you.
Then ax him what's a-hurtin' him, an' laugh his cares away,
And tell him that the darkest night is just before the day.

Don't talk in graveyard palaver, but say it right out loud,
That God will sprinkle sunshine in the trail of every cloud.

This world at best is but a hash of pleasure and of pain;
Some days are bright and sunny, and some all sloshed with rain,
And that's just how it ought to be, for when the clouds roll by We'll know just how to 'preciate the bright and smiling sky.
So learn to take it as it comes and don't sweat at the pores
Because the Lord's opinion don't coincide with yours;
But always keep rememberin', when car'es your path enshroud,
That God has lots of sunshine to spill behind the cloud.

CLAIMS AND PROOFS.

(A DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARENT AND TEACHER.)

PARENT:—What school do you represent, sir?

TEACHER:—The Blackstone Female Institute.

PARENT:—Well, what do you claim for your school? I suppose you are like all the rest. You claim that it is better than any other school to be found.

TEACHER:—No, I do not claim that. The claim of the Blackstone Female Institute can be put in one sentence. We give thorough instruction, under positive Christian influences, at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the welfare of both teacher and pupil.

PARENT:—That is a sweeping claim. It is an easy matter to make claims, but it is not so easy to prove them. If you can prove that you measure up to your claim, parents should be entirely willing to place their daughters at the Blackstone school.

TEACHER:—What you say is true. It is easy to make great claims, but we do not ask you to accept our claims simply because we say so or upon our own testimony. I will prove to you by impartial, well-informed witnesses that our claim is a just one. First,

As to the Character of our Instruction

We offer as a witness the leading educator in the State of Virginia, the Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of Schools and Colleges. Read the following letters:

BLACKSTONE, VA., June 23, 1899.
DR. W. W. SMITH,
WOMAN'S COLLEGE,
LYNCHBURG, VA.

DEAR DR:—You had with you at the Woman's College the last session three graduates of the Blackstone Institute. I write to ask you what the Faculty thought of the preparation which they had received at the Institute before coming to you. Also I will be obliged to you if you will state your opinion of the Institute as a training school for the College, as your frequent visits to the Institute and your acquaintance with the members of the Faculty and their qualifications for their work renders your opinion of special worth.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

LYNCHBURG, VA., JUNE 24, 1899.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
PRINCIPAL, BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

MY DEAR BRO:—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered College classes and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than most reasonably be expected seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and nine of your Faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates. To render correlation effective I consider two things necessary, an adjusted course of instruction and a Faculty familiar with the courses of the Woman's College and in sympathy with its methods. These you have. I hope, in my turn, that you find the graduates of our College whom you have taken into your Faculty, superior as teachers and worthy as Christian women.

Yours truly,
WM. W. SMITH.

These letters show that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Second, We offer at least

One Hundred Testimonials of Parents

whose daughters have attended the Blackstone Institute, which testimonials declare with no uncertain sound that the claim which we make is amply proven, if the parents of our pupils are trustworthy witnesses. We are willing to rest our case on this kind of testimony. It is easy for the Principal and Faculty of any school to make strong claims. These claims are worthless without proof. We do not make claims for the Blackstone Institute and then offer our own statements as proof of the claims, but we leave it to parents to weigh the testimony in their own minds.

PARENT:—Well, I must say that the testimony of the Faculty of the Woman's College is equal to expert testimony in a case at court. But where are your testimonials from parents?

TEACHER:—Here they are, as many as you can wish for, printed in the back of this catalogue. There are testimonials here from all over the Virginia Conference, from many of the preachers and leading citizens in various counties. You also find in this catalogue a full statement of the purpose and aim of the institution, the course of study, the schedule of charges, and other necessary information. I have presented my claim. I have also presented my proofs, which are not merely my words, but the opinions of others. If you wish any more definite information write to—

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 13.

Text of the Lesson. Ezek. xxxvii, 1-14—Memory Verses. 5, 6—Golden Text. Ezek. xxxvi, 27—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. "The hand of the Lord was upon me and carried me out in the Spirit of the Lord and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones." In verse 11 we read that these bones are the whole house of Israel, and verse 22 says that God will yet make them one nation under one king in their own land. This has never been fulfilled since the days of Ezekiel, but it surely will be, for Jehovah hath spoken it, and He will do it (xxxvi, 36). The interpretation of this lesson is, like the last—concerning Israel—but the application to all believers is very simple and practical.

2. "And caused me to pass by them round about, and, behold, there were very many in the open valley, and, lo, they were very dry!" There could hardly be a more striking illustration of deadness or lifelessness than dry bones, and this was the condition of Israel in the time of Ezekiel. Some were in Babylon, some in Egypt and some still in Emmanuel's land. There were a few like Ezekiel, Daniel and Jeremiah, who walked with God, but the nation as a whole had rebelled against God.

3. "And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest!" Many would have said that it was simply impossible, for many say today that a dead body will never rise again; that the dead body that is buried in the earth shall never see life. Ezekiel, by the Spirit of God upon him, did not presume to say what God could or could not do, but meekly answered as in this verse.

4. "Again he said unto me, Prophesy upon these bones and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord!" To speak to dry bones seemed a foolish and vain thing, for there was nothing in a dry bone that could possibly hear or respond. Many find it hard to believe that an unsaved soul is as dead as a dry bone and think that there must be a spark of the divine somewhere in every sinner that can respond to the voice of God.

5. "Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones, Behold I will cause breath to enter into you and ye shall live!" The whole Bible from beginning to end is a record of what God has done, is doing and will do and a testimony to the great truth that with God nothing is impossible (Math. xix, 26). He who created all things by His word can cause breath to enter into dry bones, and He is looking for people through whom He can work His wonders—people who have faith in Him.

6. "And I will lay sinews upon you and will bring up flesh upon you and cover you with skin and put breath in you, and ye shall live, and ye shall know that I am the Lord." It is all the Lord's doing that He may be glorified. In creation and redemption and in the new creation God is the one who does all. "Behold I make all things new!" (Rev. xxi, 5.) He says, "I will work, and who shall hinder (let) it?" (Isa. xliii, 13.)

7. "So I prophesied as I was commanded." The verse goes on to tell the result. The one great thing for the believer is to be "willing and obedient" (Isa. i, 19). Noah in building the ark, Moses the tabernacle, Solomon the temple, did just as they were told. God gave the instructions, and the one only thing required of them was implicit and unquestioning obedience. The worker with God is to remember that "It is God who worketh" (Phil. ii, 13), and it is the worker's privilege to see God alone and trust Him to accomplish all His pleasure (Isa. lv, 11).

8. "There was no breath in them." There was complete organization—bones, sinews, flesh and skin, all in order—but no life. Instead of dry bones scattered all about the prophet now saw a great host of bodies of men with wonderful possibilities if they only had life in them. There are many and seemingly perfect organizations on earth to do what is called the Lord's work, but they seem to go by hand power instead of steam power or electricity. There is no life in them.

9. "Thus saith the Lord God, Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live!" They had once lived, but an enemy called death, under the power of the devil (Heb. ii, 14) had been at work. God made man in His own image, but through the devil sin came and death and the curse and ruin, and God alone can restore that which the enemy destroyed. His way of restoring is seen in Gen. i, 2, 3. The Spirit and the Word do the work; the Spirit moves, and God speaks.

10. "So I prophesied as He commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived." So the seemingly impossible became a living reality, and God did it all, but He used His willing and obedient servant, who was willing to be foolish enough in the eyes of wise people to speak to dry bones which had not a particle of life in them. We do not need to look for a responsive heart in which to sow the seed, but simply speak His message as He commands us and leave all the results to Him in quietness and confidence.

11. "Behold they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost! We are cut off for our parts." They had reason to think so and to feel so when they considered themselves and their circumstances, the result of their sin against God, but since He had promised to restore them to their own land after 70 years (Jer. xxix, 10) it was their privilege to believe His promise and expect that for His own name's sake He would do as He had said.

12. "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, O my people, I will open your graves and cause you to come up out of your graves and bring you into the land of Israel!" Not only from the nations where they are in some sense a buried people, but from literal graves shall literal dead bodies come forth according to Isa. xxvi, 19; Dan. xii, 1, 2. "Every purpose of the Lord shall be performed" (Jer. li, 29) not only against Babylon, but for Israel, and it becomes us to honor God by believing that He will do as He has said.

13. "And ye shall know that I am the Lord when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves!" His lament over Israel was, Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider (Isa. i, 3). They know not the way of the Lord nor the judgment of their God (Jer. v, 4).

14. "And shall put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live." When all this shall come to pass, then in their own land they shall know that Jehovah hath spoken and performed it. Hath He said and shall He not do it, or hath He spoken and shall He not make it good (Num. xxiii, 19)? He is our life.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 13, "A Service of Promises."
Text, John xiv, 1-14.

"I will come again and receive you unto Myself."

Jesus had eaten the Passover supper with the apostles and then had told them of His intention to leave them for awhile, and that it would be impossible for them to follow Him. Three years they had followed Him, giving up all their previous business, and now the prospect of disbanding came suddenly upon them. The real facts of what was to occur—the crucifixion, resurrection, ascension, Pentecost—were all unknown to them and from the nature of the case could not even be surmised. It seemed as if the failure of all expectations was at hand, the collapse of all prospects of success in connection with this One, whom they had looked upon as the "anointed" of God.

It was impossible for Jesus to make matters more plain to them. That could only be done by the development of events.

But He could keep their courage alive by promises which would stimulate hope, awaken anticipation, and, as they were fulfilled, would make their faith stronger. He gives four promises of deepest import and widest scope:

1. Though He was to leave them, it was only that He might go ahead and prepare a place for them. This promise is not to the 11 alone, but is for Christ's followers in all ages. He is absent. We long to see Him. But in all our yearning for His presence there is the consciousness that He is busy. He is getting the new home ready. We are to prepare the bride, the church, for the great home coming. This is still preparation time for Him and us. By and by the marriage supper. Be diligent!

2. He promises to come and receive them to Himself. This also means all God's saints. Many ask, as Peter says in his epistle, "Where is the promise of His coming?" because all the little world in the rim of their heroism shows no change. But believers look for Him, work for Him, pray for His coming, and patiently wait. Be watchful and diligent!

3. He had done great works—healed the sick, opened the eyes of the blind, cured lepers, raised the dead and taught truth regarding God, man and the world as never man understood before. Moses had done great works, but Jesus surpassed him in wonders and wisdom. No man had ever spoken as He had; no one performed such prodigies. Now He promises "greater works than these shall ye do." That means His believers in all lands and for all time. How is it possible? It is incredible till Pentecost comes. Then, filled with power, sinful men, saved by grace, preach the truth, and sinners become saints. If possible, it is more wonderful than the work of the Sinless One. It continues. The Holy Ghost still inspires and the dis-

THE DEVIL'S DRINKING SONG.

BY HENRY F. COPE

HERE'S a fair, young boy. Hunt him down! Hunt him down!
He's his mother's joy. Hunt him down.
We must have recruits; whom it kills it little boots.
Hunt him down! Hunt him down! Hunt him down!
Down! Down!

See that clean, young man. Hurl him down! Hurl him down!
Give him his first dram. Hurl him down!
Tell him there's no harm. Let him feel the siren's charm.
Hurl him down! Hurl him down! Hurl him down!
Down! Down!

And the pure young girl. Drag her down! Drag her down!
Into fashion's whirl. Drag her down!
Blemish her fair name. Stain her deep with all our shame.
Drag her down! Drag her down! Drag her down!
Down! Down!

Hear the preacher talk! Pull him down! Pull him down!
All our plans he'd balk. Pull him down!

Twist our thumb-screws down, till we starve him out of town.
Pull him down! Pull him down! Pull him down!
Down! Down!

And the aged mother. Bring her down! Bring her down!
Cries and tears we'll smother. Bring her down!
Her gray hairs in woe, to the silent tomb must go.
Bring her down! Bring her down! Bring her down!
Down! Down!

The great wonder of Christianity is not the raising of a dead man, but the raising of a dead world.

The world is left free to enjoy its sin, because the church wants to be left free to enjoy its slumbers.

You can bury your nose so deep in some "Life of Christ," that you cannot see the ever-present Lord.

LIFE IN LITTLE NUTSHELLS.

BY CHARLES FREDERIC GOSS.

"MY LORD; THERE ARE PARTS OF IT, WHICH ARE—ER, ER—EXTREMELY GOOD."

THE HABIT OF TRUCKLING.

THERE are some things in life which are wholly good, some which are indifferent, and some which are totally bad.

And this is true, in spite of the timid and truckling spirit of men like the little Vicar of whom I recently heard.

(A man was originally called a "truckler," mind you, from the fact that a pupil used to sleep upon a little trundle-bed that was rolled under the couch of his master).

Well, this little Vicar was evidently used to sleeping under the bed of his Bishop.

For the Bishop—as the story goes—invited him to dinner, and handed him an egg which he broke as deferentially as he could.

A sudden sulphurous odor was wafted to the nasal organs of his Episcopal majesty who thereupon remarked oracularly: "I fear, my son, that the oval or roundish body laid by the domestic fowl and which consists of a yolk usually surrounded by white or albuminous matter and enclosed in a strong membrane or shell, (Webster) is bad!"

To which the Vicar in a thin, quavering and reverential voice replied: "My lord, there are parts of it, which are—er, er—extremely good!"

Now, this was manifestly not true. When an egg is bad, it is bad all through, (barring the shell at least, which being a non-edible membrane, cannot honorably be called a part of the egg under circumstances like those in which the humble Vicar found himself).

Not being true, it was false, and being false, it was a flat lie, and the little truckling Vicar is a type of those multitudes of people who, being invited to sit down at the table of their Bishop (the devil), do not dare say of any of the provender which he offers them that it is "wholly bad!"

No matter how vicious the habit, no matter how vile the fare, they double up their elastic and membranous spinal columns into a graceful and deferential bow, and say, "My lord, there are parts of it that are—er, er—extremely good!"

As we grow older, wiser and stronger, we find that there are things which we can do safely, which we could not do when we were young, ignorant and weak.

We have found that our Puritan forefathers thought some things to be evil, which are really innocent.

And upon this poor premise, we build the vicious conclusion that there is nothing which is bad in itself.

And in profane imitation of Almighty God, when He surveyed His glorious creation, we write above every habit and custom, "We see that it is good!"

What man who has ceased to be a "bigot," can plead "not guilty" to this charge?

The moment we are emancipated from the thralldom of narrow and provincial ideas, we become ethical anarchists!

"Some things are not bad," therefore no things are bad—such is our reasoning.

Now, it is time for us to realize that there are some things in this life that are as rotten all the way through, as the little Vicar's egg, and that no honest man can say in the presence of even Bishops or Millionaires, "My lord, there are parts of this egg that are—er, er—extremely good."

Grumbling is bad. Cheating is bad. Lying is bad. Subserviency is bad. Swearing is bad. They are all bad, and bad all through, and there are many more things like them which the good Christian cannot chew, but must eschew.

ciples still proclaim the gospel, and it still saves all who believe.

4. He throws wide open the doors of the Divine treasure house. He countersigns in advance every petition of His brethren. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do." The only proviso is that it is asked in His name. We are coming to know the meaning of that more clearly as the years pass. "In His name!" Not for self, not in pride, anger, malice; humbly, lovingly, trustingly, all faith, all hope, all charity, is bound up in it, and He keeps His fourfold promise. Work and wait.

That Prayer Meeting.

I mean the regular midweek meeting of the church. When one is first converted and full of ardor, how regular he is in attendance and how ready to speak and pray! What life and spirit there is to the singing and the greetings at the close! What desire and persuasion that others attend and take part! All goes so well and our spiritual life grows strong and full. Then there comes too often a period of drifting. Something prevents attendance for a week or two, interest slackens with absence, and then the service is neglected, duties are forgotten or refused and the soul is adrift. How is it with yourself?

It is easy to say, "I am as good a Christian as ever." But the fact remains, if you neglect the prayer meeting instead of using it as in times past you are not as good a Christian, but weaker, less helpful to others, farther from God, less joyous, hopeful and faithful. You need the prayer meeting.

The Quiet Hour.

Many of those who have reached the upper heights of Christian experience have been in the habit of having a special time each day set apart for reading the Bible, meditation and prayer. Whoever would learn anything must take time and concentrate thought upon it. No one can become acquainted with the things of God without taking time and giving thought to it. One may "say his prayers" through a long lifetime and yet never understand what prayer is. One may live in God's world till old age and yet never come to know God. If you have any desire after godliness and purity of heart and life, set apart some time in each day when you can shut out all the world and shut yourself in with Him. Then sit at Jesus' feet and let Him talk to you through the Bible, through the Holy Spirit. Is not this thing needful in your life?

In His Presence.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make;
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take;
What pained and troubled hearts are made a slaver!
We kneel, and in Thy presence we are made a slaver;
We rise, and as Thy presence is so near—
Stand out in sunbeams, brave and clear.
We kneel, how weak! We rise, how full of power!
Why, then, should we be so restless here?
Or, then, that we are not always strong;
That we are so often so far from Thee;
That we should be so restless here,
Anxious or afraid, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage with Thee!

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

In Jesus heaven and earth are brought together again, righteousness and peace kiss each other.—Dr. John P. Brushingham, Methodist, Chicago.

Our Citizenship.

Our citizenship is the source of our political greatness. It is our strength and our pride. It is also our menace.—Rev. Dr. Conaty, Catholic, Washington.

Blessings of Humanity.

The blessing comes not to him who is humbled by any way or by any means, but to him who humbleth himself.—Most Rev. Dean Hart, Episcopalian, Denver.

Self Sacrifice.

If the true spirit of self sacrifice were displayed by the Christians of the world, the nations of the earth would be soon Christianized.—Rev. Dr. Paul C. Curnick, Methodist, Cincinnati.

Great Evil Threatened.

But there is a danger fronting us today. It is that of cutting down the sphere of the kingdom of God and filling its place with other things.—Rev. N. H. Lee, Methodist, Denver.

Meaning of Christ's Incarnation.

The whole meaning of the incarnation of Christ and his redemptive work is the helping of man to change his nature to help him to live a true life.—Bishop Samuel Fallows, Methodist, Chicago.

Mysteries of Religion.

Religion as commonly taught is undergoing a process of purification. The mysteries are being gradually dispelled. You need not wait for the completion of the process.—Rev. G. W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City.

Tribute of Our Lives.

As an honest man you would not withhold from a fellow man what is due to him from you. Do not withhold, then, the tribute of your life that is due from you to God.—Rev. Milton H. Valentine, Lutheran, Philadelphia.

The Need of Christ.

When our life seems empty and vain, then we need Christ. Christianity will make a man suffer, but it will make him perfect. Christ is necessary, whether we have found him or not.—Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins, Jr., Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Christ's Sacrificial Love.

Only when we realize Christ's sacrificial love for us individually can we be lifted out of a life of selfishness into a life of self sacrifice. Only then can we have power and effectiveness in Christian labor.—Rev. H. R. Singleton, Methodist, St. Louis.

When the evil spirits come knocking at the door of our souls, or rather when they force open the door without knocking, as their custom is, we want to be able to summon him who alone has the power to gently and silently expel them.—Rev. John Goddard, Church of New Jerusalem, Cincinnati.

Our Duty.

It is our duty not only to be good and do good while we live, but to live as long as we can with that object in view. It is our duty to throw every safeguard around the lives of others, doing our utmost to banish diseases and pestilence and not attributing to Providence that which can justly be charged to neglect and indifference.—Rev. S. W. Dana, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Restitution.

When a man claims conversion and follows it up by restoring ill gotten gains, his act produces an effect which amazes even the most sarcastic and hardened skeptic. There is nothing we can do which will cause others to believe in the sincerity of our repentance and the power and truth of our holy religion more than restitution.—Rev. Henry Tesnow, Reformed, Denver.

Universal Individuality.

Christianity pertains entirely to man's life. The lack of individuality is the cause of all social strifes. More of the universal individuality would end this. So is there strife between the soul within the man and the man without. But when universal individuality is attained this ceases, and all the happiness possible opens to him.—Professor George D. Herron, Unitarian, Chicago.

Vision of the Perfect.

The idea of the perfect is in some sense present in all minds. When the vision of liberty dawns fully upon some soul, that soul is idealized as a patriot, a prophet, an Abraham, a Socrates, the Christ, a Washington, a Lincoln. It means that there is above man the infinitely perfect, and in man the germ, the potentiality, of the ever becoming life of the world.—Rev. D. H. W. Thomas, People's Church, Chicago.

Cellars and Parlors in Men's Lives.

There is a cellar in every man's life. He can go there if he chooses. He can go down into that cellar and close the shutters and bar the windows and bolt the door, and then he can lie down with his face to the ground and complain. "Oh, it is so dark, so dark!" That does not alter at all the fact that there is a parlor in that man's life, that it is fairly ablaze with sunshine and that he ought to be living there.—Rev. James D. Paxton, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Heaven is a real place, not the Nirvana of the Buddhist, not the thought land of the metaphysician, not the indefinite universe idea of the modern critic, but a real place somewhere, and it is beautiful beyond all power of language to describe. In heaven every child of God will have his own abiding place, and one which exactly and perfectly suits him; not a desire unfulfilled, not a taste ungratified, nothing lacking. So faultless will be every appointment of that heavenly home, so perfectly adapted will be the environment to the occupant, that those words, "I wish!" will never again pass our lips.—Rev. J. F. Bartlett, Baptist, Philadelphia day School Achievements," "Twentieth Century Movement," and "The Class Meeting" furnished the particular topics for the speakers. The work cut out by this arrangement required the services of twenty-four speakers.

FOURTH INTERNATIONAL EP-WORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION.

The meeting in the tent, with such speakers as Drs. Spencer and Buckley and Mrs. Rider Meyer, kept going up, up, up. It reached the most magnificent proportions of fervor and excitement when Bishop C. B. Galloway spoke upon "The Twentieth Century Movement." As the Bishop pleaded with the thousands to meet the greatest need of young Methodism, namely, a deeper spirituality, volley after volley of "Amen's" and "Hallelujahs" swept through the tent. It is impossible to describe the scene that followed the address. The 10,000 Epworthians packed in and around the tent arose en masse and began to sing the marching hymn of the militant Church of God, and a perfect sea of handkerchiefs waved for several minutes. That scene alone was worth a trip across the continent to attend this convention.

Two large gatherings in the interest of the Junior work were held on Saturday morning at Roberts Park and Meridian Street Churches. The work among the children which looks futureward received careful attention at the hands of the program committee. At Roberts Park Church S. E. Millington, of New York, presided. At this meeting the Hon. H. G. Armstrong, of West Virginia, spoke on "Membership of the Children in the Church." Miss Bowes, of Canada, told "How to Conduct a Junior meeting." Miss Huron, of Kansas, spoke of "Books for Boys and Girls," and H. L. Beach, of Texas, discussed "Junior Methods and Program."

The afternoon meetings considered the general themes, "Social Righteousness" and "Good Citizenship." Eighteen speakers had been drafted for the honorable work of the afternoon. The discussed "Elements of Christian Manliness," "Integrity in Daily Life," "Civil Duty of the Christian," "Filial and Parental Duties," "Obligations of the Citizen to the Church," and "The Citizen and the Common School."

(Resolutions of Convention appeared in our issue last week.—ED RECORDER)

It was the day of days of the entire convention. The devotional spirit, which was intense during all the sessions, swept over the city in a great tidal wave. The citizens of Indianapolis were convinced that the young Methodists practiced what they preached on the question of Sabbath observance.

Seventy preachers were heard in the regular church services of the city at the hour of 10:30. The Leaguers were consumed with the array of talent. One wished he were divisible into many parts to hear the good things. The great preachers of all the branches of Methodism were at their best. The pulpit supply committee had enlisted the services of Bishops Ninde, Hurst, Galloway, Fitzgerald, Morrison, Superintendent Carman, Drs. Tigert, Jennings, Buckley, Crews, King, Hoss, Bashford, North, McDowell, Thirkeld, Spencer, Mason, Moore, and Hamilton. Every church was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the great audiences were mightily impressed with the preaching ability of Methodism.

The afternoon was devoted to the missionary conferences. The missionary force was strong and adequate. Twenty-one speakers spoke burning words upon the pertinent topics.

This fourth International Convention demonstrates to all skeptics and croakers that the Epworth League of Methodism is not on a decline. Despite all assertions to the contrary, it this great gathering of perhaps 20,000 Methodists emphasized one thing above another, it is that our beloved denomination never has possessed a youthful constituency which has been more hopeful, aggressive and spiritual.

The dramatic incident of the entire convention occurred during the magnificent service of Bishop Galloway at Central Church. In the midst of an impassioned appeal, in which he declared against ecclesiastical pugilists, the Bishop exclaimed: "All the Methodist forces must come nearer together, and I care not what form or federation the movement may take, I give my hand to this man, it shall have my ardent support." He turned and grasped the hand of Bishop McCabe, and the audience wept and shouted at the memorable sight. Has it ever occurred before in the history of later Methodism? It was a moment never to be forgotten by every person in that great audience, and furnishes an epoch to our common Methodism.

On the last evening of the convention four mammoth meetings were held. The local Churches were closed, and added their congregations to the 20,000 delegates; immense multitudes crowded the tent and halls.

The general topic of the evening was "Missions." It was appropriate that the subject that claims all subjects should have been considered at these final services. It is safe to say that the great question of Missions has never been presented at one time to so many thousands on the American continent. The speakers caught the spirit of the occasion, and spoke with splendid effectiveness. The multitude of young Methodists under the spell of those meetings scatter to the four parts of the continent with the shout, "The world for Christ."

The climax of these great meetings was reached in the farewell and consecration services, which occupied the expiring moments of the evening. Evangelists Potter Munhall, Bishop Fitzgerald, of the Church South, and the Rev. G. T. Bond, of Canada, were the leaders of these solemn services. The great throngs became sobered with the sentiment of the hour. Praise, testimonies, and prayers continued until well-nigh midnight. Finally came the earnest prayers of consecration, and then the 20,000 Leaguers in the different halls and churches sang the song with which every preceding convention had ended, "When the roll is called up yonder." Once, twice, thrice it was sung, and then the fourth International Convention became a contribution to Methodist history.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

AFRAID OF A SHADOW.

The young clergyman's text was the twenty-third Psalm, of which he gave a running commentary. When he came to the verse, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death," he abruptly paused and said: "I am a Scotchman; let me tell you a little incident which occurred not long ago in the Scottish parish where I was laboring." He leaned from the pulpit, and with the sweetness of Scottish accents began in a low, tender voice:

"I was sitting in my study, one Saturday evening, when a message came to me that one of the godliest among the shepherds who attended their flocks upon the slopes of our Highland hills was dying, and wanted to see the minister. Without loss of time I recrossed the wide heath to his comfortable little home. When I entered the low room I found the shepherd propped up with pillows, and breathing with such difficulty that it was apparent he was near his end. 'Jean,' he said, 'give the minister a stool, and leave me for a bit, for I wish to see the minister alone.' As soon as the door had closed he turned the most pathetic pair of gray eyes upon me I had ever looked into and said, in a voice shaken with emotion, 'Minister, I am dying, and—and—I'm afraid.' 'I began at once to repeat the promise

"Where, then, is there any room for fear, with such a saving faith?"

"For a' that, minister, I'm afraid, I'm afraid."

"I took up the well-worn Bible which lay on his bed, and turned to the Psalm which I have read to-day.

"You remember the twenty-third Psalm? I began."

"Remember it?" he said vehemently. "I kenmed it afore ye were born; ye need na' read it; I've conned it a thousand times on the hillside."

"But there is one verse you have not taken in."

"He turned upon me with a self-reproachful and even stern look."

"Did I na' tell ye I kenmed it every word afore ye were born?"

"I slowly repeated the verse: 'Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear not evil; for thou art with me.'

"You have been a shepherd all your life, and you have watched the heavy shadows pass over the valleys and over the hills, hiding for a little while all the light of the sun. Did the shadows ever frighten you?"

"Frighten me?" he said quickly. "Na, na! Dave Donaldson has Covenanter's bluid in his veins. Neither shadow nor substance could weel frighten him."

"But did these shadows never make you believe you would never see the sun again—that it was gone forever?"

"Na, na, t'cudna be sic a simpleton as that."

"Nevertheless, that is just what you are doing now." He looked at me with incredulous eyes.

"Yes," I continued, 'the shadow of death is over you, and it hides for a little the Sun of righteousness, who shines all the same behind; but it's only a shadow that will pass, and when it has passed, before you will be the everlasting hills in their unclouded glory.'

"The old shepherd covered his face with his trembling hands, and for a few moments maintained an unbroken silence; then letting them fall straight before him upon the coverlet, he said, as if musing to himself:

"'Aweel, aweel! I have conned that verse a thousand times among the heather, and I never understood it so afore—afraid of a shadow! afraid of a shadow!' Then, turning upon me a face now bright with an almost supernatural brightness, he exclaimed, lifting his eyes reverently toward heaven, 'Aye, aye, I see it a' now! Death is only—a shadow with Christ behind it—a shadow that will pass—na, na, I'm afraid nae mair.'"—Margaret J. Preston

New Equipment on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway.

To accommodate the increasing travel over the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway the Pullman Company have just completed and placed in service on the "F. R." Limited four new twelve-section the picturesque and historic rivers crossed by the C. & O., viz: "Rappahannock," "Greenbrier," "Rapidan," and "Kanawha." They are fitted with the newest pattern wide vestibules and painted the regulation C. & O. color—a bright orange with brown and gold trimmings. The interior wood work is highly polished vermilion, the upholstery dark blue plush, except in the gentlemen's smoking rooms, which are large and commodious and upholstered in leather. The ladies toilet rooms are much larger than in sleepers heretofore built, a point much appreciated by the fair sex. The construction of the cars is such that when the berths are up there is more room over head, permitting better ventilation and freeing the ears from the low, stuffy appearance generally noticeable. They are lighted by electricity, and, in addition to the regular clusters in the ceiling, each berth is fitted with a small globe for the convenience of occupants.—"Evening Star," Washington, D. C.

Virginia's Attractions.

It is astonishing what a vast amount of rational enjoyment may be extracted from a ten days' visit to Virginia; how it may be made to compensate for the untold miseries of months of labor, and, in fact, obliterate the remembrance of the "tucker" or of "trial balances," which one must endure while tossing among the breakers of modern business.

In the Chesapeake & Ohio sections of the Old Dominion are bits of scenery, each bearing an indelible impress of Creation's hands, and each preserving memories of Nature's might. The Natural Bridge, the Grottoes of the Shenandoah, the Caverns of Luray, the New River canyons, tell stories widely different from Nature's structures of continental Europe; and Old Point Comfort, Williamsburg, Richmond and the Lower James disclose fragments of history of far greater interest to us of American birth than the treasures of the Old World. Pictures of delicious and magic beauty abound. In the heart of the Alleghanies health and pleasure seekers find life-giving waters and social enjoyment at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia Hot Springs, and a host of other resorts of world-wide fame. If one is an enthusiastic lover of military history, with an admiration for war-like deeds of war-like men, he may stand on almost any mountain in Virginia and gaze upon fields where men's hopes have been destroyed and upon plains which have wept bloody dew. The lover of Nature will see valleys of peace, and rich, fertile dells, through which silver rivers wind their graceful lines. The student of the utilitarian school may feast his eyes on mines of iron and zinc and coal, and while to the sentimental there are nooks fitted only to the intermingling of the lover's speech.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist institution in the State!

WHY
ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING
PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practical school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

TIME TO ME THIS TRUTH HAS TAUGHT.

(We are indebted to Mr. Robert Fairbairn, formerly of Newcastle, for the following verses. They were copied and given to him by the widow of the late William McIntosh, who was one of the early merchants of the same village over forty years ago.)

Time to me this truth has taught,—
'Tis a truth that's worth revealing,—
More offend from want of thought
Than from any want of feeling.

If advice we would convey,
There's a time we should convey it;
If we've but a word to say,
There's a time in which to say it.

Many a beautiful flower decays,
Though we tend it e'er so much;
Something secret on it preys,
Which no human aid can touch.

So in many a loving breast
Lies some canker-grief concealed,
That if touched is more oppressed,
Left unto itself is healed.

Oft unknowingly the tongue
Touches on a chord so aching,
That a word or accent wrong
Pains the heart almost to breaking.

Many a tear of wounded pride,
Many a thought of human blindness,
Had been soothed or turned aside
By a quiet word of kindness.

Time to me this truth has taught,—
'Tis a truth that's worth revealing,—
More offend from want of thought
Than from any want of feeling.

The names of J. H. Wall, R. B. Oliver, and T. B. Rogers, were added to the Committee on Circuit Boundaries.

On the second day the following members appeared and took their seats:

Clerical—Rev. W. E. Grant.
Prince Edward—T. T. Pettus, alternate.

Blackstone—W. C. Irby, J. W. Hardaway.

Lunenburg—R. A. Blackwell.
Cumberland—J. C. Clarke.

Prince Edward—L. B. Perkinson.
Rev. S. O. Hutton, pastor of the Crewe Presbyterian Church, was introduced to the Conference.

Rev. W. S. Campbell addressed the Conference in the interest of the Bible Society

On motion, the invitation of the Church at Boydton was unanimously accepted and that town named as place of next meeting.

Reports of committees as follows:

REPORT ON EPWORTH LEAGUES.

We, your Committee on Epworth Leagues, report eleven chapters on the district. The growing interest in the League work is gratifying. Experience shows that the Epworth League is of God, and believing that this department of our Church can be made a source of great good to the young people specially and of strength to the pastors, we urge the organization of Leagues in every charge and persistent development of all departments as outlined by the League constitution.

We call attention to the Student Missionary Campaign which was recognized in our Church in the summer of '98, and we commend the services of the Missionary campaigners to the Leagues of the District.

We think the use of the Student Missionary Campaign Library, as provided by our Publishing House, will prove a most interesting and profitable course of missionary reading.

We call attention to the Missionary clause in our Constitution and urge that every League appoint a Missionary committee, and follow the Topic Card in having a monthly missionary meeting.

Believing that the “Epworth Era” has no superior in the South as a young people's paper, we commend it to the patronage of all our Leagues.

J. E. McCULLOCH.

PUBLISHING INTERESTS AND RELIGIOUS LITERATURE.

Our ability to supply our people with the best of religious literature is no longer a question, but an accomplished fact. Because there is now at hand, through our Publishing House, our Colportage Board and our religious papers, as good reading as any Church or denomination can furnish.

But, notwithstanding these encouraging facts, the reports from nearly all the charges in this District show that our religious literature is not well patronized. Very few copies of the Nashville “Christian Advocate” are taken. The Richmond “Christian Advocate” is circulated to some extent in every charge, but by no means as fully as it should be. The SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER seems more generally circulated, but not as widely as it should be.

Your committee would therefore earnestly recommend (1) The Nashville “Christian Advocate” as our Church organ at large; (2) The Richmond “Christian Advocate” as our Virginia Conference organ, and (3) The SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER, as deserving the patronage of our people, and especially the people of the Farmville District.

R. A. COMPTON,
W. H. HUBBARD.

SPIRITUAL STATE OF THE CHURCH.

The INITIAL spiritual life is stated in the words of the Saviour to Nicodemus: “Ye must be born again”—born from a love born of the Spirit. Paul states it this way: “Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

And with this new birth comes

1. The INWARD graces of the Spirit as fruits—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. These grow, develop, as one grows in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. There is first the blade, then the stalk, then the ear, and after the full corn in the ear.

2. But where there is the birth of the Spirit and the consciousness of these inward graces there will also be the OUTWARD FRUIT in the life. And we love to judge a Christian by this OUTWARD fruit.

The INDIVIDUAL has the testimony of the Spirit, and the consciousness of these inward graces, and GOD looks upon the heart while we look upon the OUTWARD appearance. By their fruits WE shall know them.

The wind bloweth where it listeth; thou hearest the sound thereof.”

He who stands in the tract of a zephyr, a gale, a tornado, is conscious of its presence. So is every one that is born of the Spirit; while the OBSERVER sees its effect in the waving grain, bowing forests, and uprooted trees.

One of the great evangelists of our day has defined religion as “hating everything that God hates and loving everything that God loves.”

And perhaps this is a good criterion by which to judge the outward life of a follower of our Lord.

Paul said to Titus: “These things I will that thou affirm constantly that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain GOOD WORKS.”

1. God loves His holy temple, for He is in His holy temple. He loveth the gates of Zion above all the dwellings of Jacob. It is the place where His honor dwelleth. The spiritually made child of God loves to meet God there in hearing His word, in partaking of His holy sacrament, in the songs of Zion, in the united prayer of His people, in public thanksgiving, and says: “I was glad when they said unto me: "The house of the Lord is a door-keeper, rather than a door-keeper, the Lord than to dwell in wickedness." "For the assembly of yourselves together as he a man of some is." "They be ed Lord spoke often on."

More glad to hear wait upon the word in and meet with Him in the

2. God loves to meet in prayer, and He who to meet him in the close of prayer and around the family altar.

The Christian life cannot be maintained without the prayer, and cannot reach its goal without the home altar.

3. God delights in the conversion of sinners. He who loves God loves the Sunday-school. It is a burning interest in the salvation of the heathen. When the Great asked his court chaplain for the briefest argument possible for the divinity of the Bible, he said: "The Jews, my lord." And if we were the shortest evidence possible of the life of the Church, we would say "Missions."

And God hates sin in every form, whether gilded or uncove

So do His followers. Paul condemns "those who profess, that they know God; but in works they deny Him, being abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate." God says: "Come out from among the world and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean things, and I will receive you."

The decent world says: "We do not get drunk, but we take social drinks. Join us." The decent world says: "We do not believe in gambling, but we take a social game of cards. Join us." The decent world says: "We do not believe in going to extremes. Join us in the square dance"—knowing that it will lead to the carnal, voluptuous waltz; and God alone can tell where that will lead to.

But the child of God says to all these seductive requests: "No, thank you. I will not say the least of the world, and God says: 'Love no the world, neither the things that are in the world. If a man loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him.' Adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, he is an enemy of God."

The child of God says to these seductive requests: "I must keep myself unspotted from the world, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. I am not only to avoid evil, but also its appearance."

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED ON FEBRUARY

Whereas, The financial condition of our church effects, in a great measure, the degree, all the other interests of the Church, and the financial condition is determined largely by the ability, industry, and wise methods of the stewards, therefore,

Resolved, 1: That our stewards be reminded to give their best time and talent to the discovery and execution of the methods for the regular quarantining of our pastors in full and successful meeting of all the members on the charges.

That our members be urged to co-operate with the stewards in every way in bringing our charges under the exercise of systematic giving.

We have heard with pleasure of our appointments on the district will meet their obligations, and that several have responded generously to a call for a twentieth century thank-offering, and that we commend their example to all our people.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL REPORT.

We have heard with pleasure of the progress of the Sunday-School work within the bounds of the Farmville District; and yet we feel that our people are not yet measuring up to their responsibility in this very important department of our Church work.

There is need for more work and better work in our Sunday-Schools.

We recommend that for the better equipment of teachers in our Sunday-Schools that our preachers are urged to see to it that Teacher's Meetings be held at every Sunday-School, and every week, as often as practicable.

We recommend further, that our Sunday-Schools not only use the quarterlies and lesson papers issued by our publishing House, but that the pastors and superintendents of schools make an earnest effort to extend the circulation in each Sunday-School of that excellent paper for young people—"The Weekly Visitor."

We are gratified to learn that Children's-Day exercises have been generally observed throughout the bounds of the District.

We also recommend that one Sabbath in each month be known as Missionary Day, and that a special collection be taken for that cause in each Sunday-School.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE RECORD REPORT.

The committee appointed to examine the Quarterly Conference Records have carefully looked into all the records present and find, with a few exceptions, that the books have been neatly and correctly kept.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

After carefully considering the reports on the various charges on the District, we submit the following report:

The reports from the pastors of the District show a strong temperance sentiment among our people. While this is true, a great deal still remains to be done. We deplore the fact that our people are not arrayed against evil as they should be. There is lack of unity and unanimity. Believing in a close union and more determined effort on the part of our people would lead to still grander results, we earnestly hope that our preachers and peoples will do all in their power to crush out this great curse of our country which is doing so much to aid the cause of the wicked one and to ruin our young men physically and spiritually, and is blighting and destroying the prospects and happiness of so many who might be useful to themselves, to others, and in the service of our blessed Master.

Realizing the value of early education on this subject, and knowing that ignorance in regard to the evil effects of intoxicating liquors on the human system is responsible to a great extent for the deplorable results, we beg leave to submit the following resolution to be sent to our next Legislature. (See petition.) Trusting this resolution will receive the hearty endorsement of this body, we do not hesitate to present it.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

The cause of Christian Education has always been dear to the heart of the Methodists of the Farmville District.

The first $5,000 subscribed to the endowment of Randolph-Macon College was subscribed at Crenshaw's Church, Nottoway circuit. The first $5,000 subscribed in Virginia to the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering has been subscribed at the same place.

Our people are as loyal to our schools and colleges as any district in the Conference. The preachers and laymen of this district in Conference, assembled, put themselves on record as follows:

(1.) That we hail with joy the great movement called the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering as a glorious opportunity for the manifestation by our people of their great thankfulness to God, and their great desire to strengthen our institutions of learning. We pledge ourselves, as the appointed leaders of the Church in the district, pastors, local preachers, and laymen, that by precept and example we will strive to lead our people in this great movement.

(2.) That we firmly believe in CHRISTIAN education and the ownership of our schools by the Church. We urge our people to send their children to their own Church schools, and especially to the institutions of the Randolph-Macon system and to the Blackstone Institute. These schools belong to us, and we pledge ourselves to do all in our power to build them up. We promise to aid the representatives of these schools in their work in our charges.

JAMES CANNON, JR.,

JNO. W. OTPEY.

REPORT ON MISSIONS.

Your committee rejoices to find, through a careful analysis of the Pastors' Reports, that the subject of Missions lies near the hearts of our people. Very few charges speak otherwise than hopefully of raising the entire amount asked, while many are so firmly organized and so energetically worked that they go far beyond the assessment. This is as it should be. The heart of the Church, so long as it is loyal to Christ, must ever respond to the call of the Master—"Go ye into all the world."

The rapidly opening fields in Japan, Corea, and China, as well as in Cuba and elsewhere, are a challenge that our Church dare not ignore. We must answer the cry, "Come over and help us," that is borne to us on almost every breeze. This great work does more to keep alive the fires of love in the heart of the home Church than any in which we are now engaged.

We, your committee, rejoicing in what has been done, do heartily thank God for such pastors and laymen, and for such consecrated and holy women as are now leading the great army of Missionary givers in this district. We commend—

1. The formation of Sunday-School Missionary Societies, as the Discipline directs.

2. The hearty co-operation of all our pastors and people with the workers in the Rosebud and Woman's Missionary Societies.

3. Early collections, and frequent allusion to the great work of Missions, as a set sermon at every Church on every charge, once a year.

4. Of the circulation among our people of the "Review of Missions."

5. The cultivation by our Leagues of the Missionary Reading Circles, and the generous circulation of that excellent book, by our own Bishop Galloway, "A Circuit on the Globe," as well as others of the same class.

W. W. ROYALL,

RO. A. BLAKWELL.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of our District has made some progress during the year in increase of members, the number being larger than it has ever been, though many of our women are yet indifferent to the great cause of "Woman's Work for Woman."

We earnestly ask all our pastors to use their influence in the spreading of information in regard to our work, believing as we do, that a Missionary Church means a successful Church in all other branches of Church work.

For the Quarters reported this year there is a gain over last year in our finances, and we are very hopeful that this will be our best year. We have never retrograded, and when, at the close of the year, we meet in Petersburg we trust that we will show the same record.

The spiritual condition of our workers is good, and many of them are being strengthened in the work; their efforts are not spasmodic, but full of determination to do all in their power to help in the great and absorbing interest of Missions.

We desire the prayers of our District Conference that the Spirit may abide with us in our work.

Our District meeting was held in Farmville, July 6th-10th, at which we believe the interest of the Woman's Foreign Missionary work was furthered. We had a pleasant and profitable time and the best of all the Spirit was with us.

The Rev. Mr. Simpson preached for us a fine sermon, from which we received much inspiration, and which determined us to try to do better work for our Master; to try to find out what Jesus would have us do and then to do it with our might.

Again we earnestly ask your prayers that a blessing may rest on our work, and ask earnestly the co-operation of all our pastors.

(Mrs.) M. L. BACON.

A RESOLUTION.

The following resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote of the Conference:

"Whereas, Under the law of o Church the term of our presiding elder expires at the coming session of our Annual Conference, and

"Whereas, We would record our high appreciation of him as a man and minister, and as an officer, therefore,

"Resolved, That in Rev. James H. Riddick the Church has a most faithful servant, and the Farmville District a most diligent and pains-taking presiding elder. He has gone in and out among us with the fear of God before his eyes and the love of his brethren in his heart. He has looked carefully after all the interests of the Church and has shown himself in spirit and in effort a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. We commend him most heartily to any work to which he may be assigned.

DR. EDWARDS ACCEPTS.

It was learned Monday upon the authority of one of the professors of Randolph-Macon College that Rev. Dr. W. E. Edwards has accepted "the Chair of Moral Philosophy and Biblical Literature in that institution.

Dr. Edwards was informed of his election the day the trustees met and he stated very promptly that he would accept the professorship. The doctor is now at Meherrin in, Lunenburg county. —Richmond "Evening Leader."

DR. DUNCAN DECLINES.

Rev. Dr. James A. Duncan has decided to decline the presidency of Randolph-Macon College to which he was elected by the trustees of the college on July 31st.

In response to a telegram sent by the "Richmond Times" several days ago, Dr. Duncan wired that paper from Nashville, Tenn., as follows:

"Times," Richmond, Va.:
'Talked with Chancellor Smith; learned situation; decided not to accept.'

MAMMON OR CHRIST.

(BY REV. R. H. BENNETT.)

Some one has said that Foreign Missions constitute the business of the Church and not an incident. Dr. Herriek Johnson said some years ago that the Christian who does not believe in Foreign Missions does not believe in the Ten Commandments, in the Sermon on the Mount, in the Lord's Prayer, in the Apostle's Creed, or in the Long Metre Doxology. This is true. And it seems that an earnest follower of the Master whenever called to exhort believers on this subject, must feel the absurdity of his position, like the Burman convert who, when urged to address a congregation in respect to their duty to send out and support more missionaries, after a moment of thoughtfulness, asked, with evident emotion, "Has not Jesus Christ told them to do it?" "O, yes," was the reply, "but we wish you to remind them of their duty." "O, no," said the Karen, "if they will not obey Jesus Christ, they will not obey me."

Viewed from the standpoint of the value of the individual souls saved and the untold heroism and sublime faithfulness of many of our missionaries and converts, our Missionary work as Christ's Church, is unspeakably glorious. Estimated by the myriads yet unreached by the Gospel, by the countless thousands of square miles yet unexplored by a single missionary of the Cross, by the number of centuries since Christ died, and by the untold resources of the Christians of the world, our achievements in Mission work would be supremely ridiculous if they were not a world-wide reproach and a heart-breaking tragedy beyond compare. The committee of the Chicago World's Fair carried its advertisements to every part of the earth in two years. And doubtless many a tribe heard of the World's Fair which has never heard of Christ. NINETEEN HUNDRED YEARS have slowly passed since our risen Lord gave the solemn order—"Go ye into all the World." And almost incredible, only a small fraction of the earth's inhabitants know after all these ages of His wondrous love and saving power. Why is this? The answer is easy. The reason Christianity does not conquer heathenism is plainly that heathens love heathenism better than "Christians" love Christ.

Dr. Chamberlain, of Arcot, India, tells of a Brahmin who, in a time of famine, starved to death by inches, although abundant good was placed within reach, because, said he, the food was prepared by some one of lower caste, and better starve and go to the Brahmin's heaven than eat and go to the Brahmin's hell. Rev. Mr. Noyes, of China, gives a list of the incomes of nine heathens, and their gifts to their religion as follows, and this represents the total for twelve months' hard labor:

- | | |
|-----------------------|-----------------------------|
| No. 1. Income, $120. | Given to idolatry, $29 30. |
| No. 2. Income, $60. | Given to idolatry, $14 84. |
| No. 3. Income, $60. | Given to idolatry, $21 69. |
| No. 4. Income, $48. | Given to idolatry, $20 22; |

Mr. Noyes seemed to think these were not striking exceptions. How often do we find such self-denial for Christ sake? Who will arise to put these heathen to silence, if not to shame, by an equal devotion to our blessed Master and the souls for whom He died? And yet it is well-known that $10 from a man with an income of $1000 or $1500, and $25 out of an income of $2500 or $3000 is considered (I speak of our Virginia Conference—one of the best in our connection) quite a satisfactory contribution IN A WHOLE YEAR to the Mission cause! We ought to blush to tell it! It must amaze the angels—one of the things connected with the Gospel at which they wonder

Why should not $100 on to $500 at the least to missions, has handed me out $5 or $25, I have felt like handing it back to him, and but for the thought that the Lord accepts even the most insignificant trifle from us in return for His infinite love, I would have felt like hurling the contemptible pittance into the sea. How many really deny themselves anything to spread the kingdom through the earth? Some do. How many eat cheaper food and wear plainer clothes that Christ's love may sooner conquer the nations? One of the hindrances to Missions is that we preachers and leading laymen do more talking and exhorting than giving and doing for this great cause, so dear to our Father's

CLAIMS AND PROOFS.

(A DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARENT AND TEACHER.)

PARENT:—What school do you represent, sir?

TEACHER:—The Blackstone Female Institute.

PARENT:—Well, what do you claim for your school? I suppose you are like all the rest. You claim that it is better than any other school to be found.

TEACHER:—No, I do not claim that. The claim of the Blackstone Female Institute can be put in one sentence. We give thorough instruction, under positive Christian influences, at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the welfare of both teacher and pupil.

PARENT:—That is a sweeping claim. It is an easy matter to make claims, but it is not so easy to prove them. If you can prove that you measure up to your claim, parents should be entirely willing to place their daughters at the Blackstone school.

TEACHER:—What you say is true. It is easy to make great claims, but we do not ask you to accept our claims simply because we say so or upon our own testimony. I will prove to you by impartial, well-informed witnesses that our claim is a just one. First,

As to the Character of our Instruction

We offer as a witness the leading educator in the State of Virginia, the Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of Schools and Colleges. Read the following letters:

BLACKSTONE, VA., June 23, 1899.

DR. W. W. SMITH,
WOMAN'S COLLEGE,
Lynchburg, Va.

DEAR DR:—You had with you at the Woman's College the last session three graduates of the Blackstone Institute. I write to ask you what the Faculty thought of the preparation which they had received at the Institute before coming to you. Also I will be obliged to you if you will state your opinion of the Institute as a training school for the College, as your frequent visits to the Institute and your acquaintance with the members of the Faculty and their qualifications for their work renders your opinion of special worth.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

LYNCHBURG, VA., JUNE 24, 1899.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
PRINCIPAL, BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

MY DEAR BRO.—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered College classes and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and nine of your Faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates. To render correlation effective I consider two things necessary, an adjusted course of instruction and a Faculty familiar with the courses of the Woman's College and in sympathy with its methods. These you have. I hope, in my turn, that you find the graduates of our College whom you have taken into your Faculty, superior as teachers and worthy as Christian women.

Yours truly,
WM. W. SMITH.

These letters show that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Second, We offer at least

One Hundred Testimonials of Parents

whose daughters have attended the Blackstone Institute, which testimonials declare with no uncertain sound that the claim which we make is amply proven, if the parents of our pupils are trustworthy witnesses. We are willing to rest our case on this kind of testimony. It is easy for the Principal and Faculty of any school to make strong claims. These claims are worthless without proof. We do not make claims for the Blackstone Institute and then offer our own statements as proof of the claims, but we leave it to parents to weigh the testimony in their own minds.

PARENT:—Well, I must say that the testimony of the Faculty of the Woman's College is equal to expert testimony in a case at court. But where are your testimonials from parents?

TEACHER:—Here they are, as many as you can wish for, printed in the back of this catalogue. There are testimonials here from all over the Virginia Conference, from many of the preachers and leading citizens in various counties. You also find in this catalogue a full statement of the purpose and aim of the institution, the course of study, the schedule of charges, and other necessary information. I have presented my claim. I have also presented my proofs, which are not merely my words, but the opinions of others. If you wish any more definite information write to—heart. If there was more example (and no less precept) on this subject, the ends of the earth would sooner fall before our Christ,

The plain truth is that we are simply playing at Missions. There are some Churches which are really in earnest and they make us silent for shame.

Methodism has much to glory in above Moravianism, but not in our love for our lost heathen brother. When the Moravian Church speaks of Missionary work, Methodism must hide its head for very shame. There are 30,000 Moravians. They support 500 Missionaries. There are 1,500,000 Southern Methodists (to say nothing of the millions in other Methodist connections). With the same love for God's work in heathen lands that fires the Moravian heart, we would have 25,000 Missionaries at work. The very imagination staggers at the thought of the results following such a state of affairs.

How much we talk (some do not even talk) and how little we give! Some months ago it was published far and wide that a certain Missionary Secretary (not of our Church) made a habit of spending his time at the most palatial hotels, from which princely quarters (his expenses paid out of the offerings of the people to Missions) he would emerge to utter eloquent pleas for self-sacrifice for the cause. Doubtless the useless and extra expense for this sinful and selfish waste would suffice through a year to maintain an extra worker for Christ in heathendom.

About the same time I read of the above, there came under my observation the case of a Virginia Conference preacher who, out of a salary of $387, supported his family and gave $35 to Foreign Missions, in addition to his other gifts to the Lord's work. And while God may bless the eloquent words of the Secretary, yet that Virginia preacher (and there are others like him) is doing more to save the world than the metropolitan Secretary.

How dare a minister of the Lord Jesus add field to field and stock to stock while his Master's works halts and souls die for lack of the very money he hoards. The Master hath need of it. The thought comes sometimes that no man can know Christ in all the fullness of that knowledge until he is as poor as was his Lord. I shall not soon forget the emphasis and unction of a prominent minister of our Conference, a man "great in the sight of the Lord," who said, when another preacher was quoted as being worth $10,000, "I should tremble to go to the throne of God, as a minister of the Gospel, with $10,000 in my pocket."

Some weeks ago General Otis called for 50,000 more troops for the Philippine war. Almost instantly men rushed to the recruiting stations to enlist in what many believe to be an unrighteous war, to serve for a pittance, to fall before Aguinaldo's bullets or die like flies of the fever. The war-tax brings in hundreds of millions to furnish the sinews.

Our Southern Methodist Missionary Societies, in their recent annual report, say of the work: "The only limitation recognized was the lack of funds. The limitations are boundless."

Let a lover of his Lord, as he reads this, compare the outlay and asm of the United States for the conquest of Cuba and the Philippines with his personal outlay and enthusiasm for the conquest of the world for Christ, and he may find out why the Church has been 1900 at work on a task already only begun.

WHAT THE SOUTH IS DOING FOR EDUCATION.

In the past twenty years the South has increased 54 per cent. in population, but its school attendance has increased 130 per cent; that is to say, more than twice as fast as the population kept in school during the year; while in 1874 an average of 14½ out of every hundred were enrolled in school, ten years later (1884) the average had risen to 18½ per hundred, and in 1894, or 20 years later, the number enrolled is 22 in the hundred. Of all the people of the South, white and black, one in five is in attendance on school for some portion of the year. This is a large proportion of the people to be in school. Even in Saxony, which excels all countries of Europe in its school enrollment, the per centum in school is only 20.

Even after making allowance for the fact that the South has a larger proportion of children in its population than any other section of the Nation, this remains a wonderful showing for the wisdom and self-sacrifice of the Southern people. They are, indeed, building a "New South," and its cornerstone is the school.

This appears in a stronger light if we take into consideration other statistics. In the twenty years from 1874 to 1894, the value of school property increased from sixteen millions to fifty-one millions, or two millions a year. It built better school buildings and adopted modern improvements to such an extent that while in 1874 the average value of a school-house in the South was only $373, in 1894 the value had risen to $543.

In the twenty years the average wages of the teacher have increased nearly 16 per cent.

Higher education has also a good record. It did not have so far to climb as the elementary schools for all classes of people. But while in 1874 the number of college students for the South numbered 10,103, in 1894 the number is 25,304, or two and one-half times as many.

In 1876 the South had an enrollment in its schools of 571,506 colored children and 1,827,139 white children. This was a good start for that time—more than half a million colored children in actual attendance on school for some portion of a year. But in 1894—eighteen years later—the white pupils had increased to 3,835,593, while the colored pupils had increased to 1,424,995. The increase of white pupils for the 18 years was 150 per cent. Twenty three out of every 100 white inhabitants are enrolled in school, and 19 out of every 100 of the colored inhabitants.

But the pupil receives now better accommodations, better instruction and a longer school session than then, and the newly established training schools are sending into the work thousands of professionally training teachers.

The South has done all these things for education. But what has education done for the South? It has

The health, order, and high character of the work last session evidenced by the following:

1. Only one case of serious sickness (pneumonia), and that yielded promptly to treatment.
2. Forty-three (43) per cent. of the students received no demerits during the entire session.
3. Thirty-nine (39) per cent. passed with distinction on all their classes.

The fact that nineteen (19) degrees, professional and classical, were conferred this year on students prepared at the Academy by the Colleges and Universities of this and other States shows the thorough character of the work we are doing.

the productive power of the individual by nearly 50 per cent. It has produced a laboring class that can use machinery to assist the bone and muscle. It has made possible the great change of vocations from the production of mere raw materials to the production of the finished product. There is a change going on in all civilized countries. The machine is coming in at one end and the mere drudge out at the other. The unskilled, the unskilled man is not needed, for his hands and muscles cannot compete with the machine. But he is needed in the work of directing the machine. He is therefore called upon to step up from occupation of the overseer of the machine. The change from handwork to brainwork is a necessity. But this cannot go on without schools that fit the pupils out with alert and versatile intelligence.—W. T. HARRIS, D. D., U. S. Commissioner of Education.

BY PROXY.
(N. A. M. ROE.)

Edith Haskell was president of the Epworth League. She was just the one to take that office, because she had ideas and knew how to carry them out. Eager to work, in earnest, anxious to push forward the organization, is it any flourishing.

Edith Haskell sprained her ankle and threw her knee out of joint by a hard fall on the ice. Dr. Catoy said in all his practice he had never had a case like it. He said she must be on crutches before she could use her foot to walk about and then only sparingly. In his own mind he had no doubt.

"Mamma, will you think for me?"

"Yes, dear, if I can. What troubles you?"

"What is the matter with me or with my work. I made the best president the League had had because I had the time to give to all the members and so. George Carey was splendid, but he worked every day, and some times he gave up work evenings when he could not afford to do so. I might be at the meeting every time, and he had to give it up. Now with me, I am near the church, I know all the young people, and they like me. I have time to spare, and I make ready every week so if someone fails I can substitute. Why am I laid up here, when I ought to be at work?"

"Perhaps my little girl was getting conceited."

"No, mamma, I don't think so, for I so truly love my Saviour that I put him first, and all I do I try to do in his name. I feel it is right that I am here, but I want to satisfy myself that I have done all I could, and that it is not for lack of love or work on my part. Why is it?"

"You will be shown, Edith, don't trouble about it. There are always reasons and better ones than we can give, for everything that comes to us. Your being here will be a blessing in the end. Trust God."

Days of suffering and nights sleeplessness fell to Edith's lot, but through it all her mind was active for the welfare of the work she was so much interested in.

"Mamma, she said one day, 'I am going to send for Harold.'"

"Very well, dear. You write the note, and will have Mrs. Callahan take it when she goes home and drop in the box at the corner."

"Do you suppose he will take my class just for next Sunday?" she asked doubtfully.

Mrs. Haskell looked surprised, for Harold Davis was getting a little fast, so people said. He had been for the church and its people, he never had joined the League and his associates were not the better class of young men.

"He might. It would do no harm to ask, and he would do almost anything to please his old playmate."

"Harold, I want to ask you to substitute for me next Sunday in the Sunday-school, will you?"

"Not much! You'll have to get somebody else to do your substituting. I can't," he said, brusquely.

"I've a scarlet fever and school is closed, so she goes home for three weeks. I've asked Mr. Dana, and he will not be in town. I've asked—oh, I've tried hard to get some one, and then I gave up. You have been my substitute for so long, and now you must not fail me this time."

"S'pos'n I say I won't do it?"

"I should like it, for I remember how you always used to say you couldn't and wouldn't and then you just did, and I am sure you will if you only say you won't."

Harold took the class. The four ten-year-old girls told him most interesting things about the Judean kings, and in return he invited them to go sleigh-riding Wednesday.

"I'll ask Mrs. Halleck to go along and see that we don't have too good a time."

When his boon companions asked him for Wednesday afternoon, "he was going to exercise his father's black span, and he had promised to take out a lot of ladies to test the sleighing."

Mrs. Halleck said, as she stepped out in the parsonage, "You have given a great deal of pleasure this afternoon and I am going to offer you one now. Miss Kendrick, the singer, the singer, is here a few days, and I wish you would come to tea Friday night. I will promise you a treat, for she has a beautiful voice."

Friday night his fast friends missed him from their circle.

"Harold, you have been so good to keep my class that I don't know how I can ask you to do any more, but there's nobody else. You know when I was hurt I was down to read a paper before the League public meeting, and, as it was six weeks away, I never thought I should not be able to do it. I haven't stepped on my foot yet, and Dr. Carey keeps putting me off. If you would only do it for me, I should be so at rest, for you used to be the best reader in school, and I know you haven't forgotten how. Will you do it? It's all written, and you can take it home and practice it all you like."

"Well-l-l," was the hesitating answer.

The subject of the paper was "Clean Hands and a Pure Heart," and before the public meeting Harold had it nearly committed to memory. More than that its clear sentences followed him about like a nightmare. Did he smoke with one of his friends, something whispered, "Clean hands." Did he sit down to a game of Cards, the same voice was in his ear. He began to ask himself if it was worth while to go through life with soiled hands and an evil heart.

There were remarks made at first when the people saw him, Sabbath after Sabbath, trying to teach Edith's class, but when it was known that he was merely taking her place until she was able to come herself and more-over that he was there at her request, being a very old friend of hers, no one made further complaint. No one, not even Edith herself, could have read that paper with more earnestness, more hearty emphasis, than did Harold. Edith had found a perfect substitute.

"Edith, has God shown you why?" asked Mrs. Haskell one morning after Harold had called to tell her about the public meeting.

"Yes, mamma, and there is a continual song of thanksgiving in my heart. I would stay here years, I think, to save Harold Davis. To see my old playmate—you know we could just toddle when we used to play in the big meadow—to see him drifting away—oh, I prayed about it, and I never thought God

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practise school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

"AS A LITTLE CHILD."

There fell from the lips of my girlie,
One beautiful evening in June,
A word that sounded uncanny,
Like an instrument out of tune.

I said, "That will never do, darling,
Such language you never must use."
"Well, I really and truly can't help it,"
She pleaded by way of excuse.

"Then, my darling, you'd better tell
Jesus
That He hasn't power to save."
"O, I couldn't do that, my dear mama,
When His life so freely He gave."

"Then, my darling, what can be the matter?"
If Jesus is loving and strong;
And you must keep sinning and sinning,
Why something must surely be wrong."

In a moment the dear head was bending,
While the wee hands covered the face;
I knew that my darling was asking
The Lord for His heavenly grace.

Then, looking up brightly and smiling,
"I can help it now, mamma," she said,
"For Jesus is strong and He loves me;
I'll trust Him and not be afraid."

O, hearts that are weary of sinning,
O, feet that grow tired on the road,
Just take from my girlie a lesson,
And bring all your weakness to God.
—"The Christian Guardian."

THE GOSPEL OF FRAGRANCE

We hope our readers will appreciate and enjoy the sermon of Dr. Parker at the reopening of Wesley Chapel, London, England. J. C. Sr.

The reopening of Wesley's Chapel will be remembered not only for the "sunlight after rain" which secured the success of the open-air portion of Mr. Westerdale's programme, and for the financial triumph which leaves the whole property free from debt, and for the beauty of the decoration which everybody so greatly admired, but especially for the brilliant speaking by men who looked upon Methodism from so many and various points of view. Lord Battersea's speech was scarcely the speech of an outsider. It much more nearly resembled what one might reasonably expect from a thoughtful Village Methodist. Dr. Parker is at all times so ready to help, if the Methodists need his eloquent voice, that he may be regarded as a friend of the family. The sermon he preached was a stroke of pulpit genius. It must have made every preacher present wild with envy that so brilliant a conception had never occurred to himself. It was perfectly appropriate. Nor was it necessary by formal application to fit the subject to the occasion. It spoke for itself. It was a message to all the Methodist Churches—a message all the more impressive and tender because it came from the door of that which Dr. Parker, in his luncheon speech, called "the tent of misery by the waters of sorrow." It was the first occasion on which our dear friend has spoken outside his own pulpit since God took away the "light of his eyes." Standing once again in Wesley's pulpit, and speaking to one of the largest morning congregations we have ever seen in the venerable Chapel, with the President, the ex-President, Dr. Rigg, Dr. Jenkins, Dr. Waller, and the Rev. C. H. Kelly in their places under the historic pulpit, with the choir seats filled by boys and girls from the Children's home; with well known Methodist families from all parts of England, from Australia, America, Africa, and the Far East before him, Dr. Parker announced the beginning of his text, "And they found Him in the Temple, sitting in the midst of the Doctors." This is a very significant primary importance, which Methodism at this present moment most of all needs to remember, that "the midst" is not where the lamp stands, but where the light, which takes up the room of no man, silently shines. The rose is in the middle, but its fragrance is in the midst. It is one of the brightest facts in the history of Methodism that it has been permitted to cultivate what Dr. Parker called "the gospel of fragrance," which climbs the imprisoning walls and diffuses itself. Many have wondered that Mr. Westerdale should have succeeded in bringing together under the shadow of Wesley's Chapel so many men of front rank in other Churches, and especially men whose ordinary occupations are those of the politician, the Colonial administrator, or the scientific observer. But to quote Dr. Parker once more, we must never forget "the pervasiveness of great influence." The latest celebration on this historic spot reminds us that, whilst the Methodists are the natural trustees and guardians of the place, they hold it in trust for the whole Church of God and for the whole world of religion, of social morality and of scientific thought. Wesley more truly today than during his life belongs to the whole nation, and to all those other nations that are being born of the Anglo-Saxon race. Methodism is where and what it is because Jesus is "in the Temple, sitting in the midst of the Doctors."

DR. PARKER'S SERMON.

Hundreds had been entering the Chapel by the side doors during the progress of the outdoor meeting, being desirous, doubtless, of securing good places. When the main doors had been opened, and the crowd had entered, the building was completely filled, and presented a magnificent spectacle. The Choir of the Children's Home occupied the choir stalls, and Mr. F. A. Mann was at the organ. The simple but chastely beautiful service was conducted by the Rev. Chas. H. Kelly, who read as his lesson, Isaiah lxii. The anthem was Spohr's "How Lovely are Thy Dwellings Fair." Beside Mr. Kelly sat Mr. Westerdale, and behind him the President and the ex-President. As we sang the hymn,

"O, for a thousand tongues,"

Dr. Parker came in from the vestry, accompanied by Dr. Rigg and Dr. Jenkins, who joined the group below the pulpit as the preacher ascended its stairs.

The "beginning of the text," said Dr. Parker was Luke II., 46, "And they found Him sitting in the midst of the doctors."

Where is the midst? Is this a geometrical term signifying the centre—a local centre—a measurable centre? What is "In the Midst?" Does it mean in the middle? It does not! It is a larger term. What is in the midst of this house? The light! The light fills all space and takes up the room of no man! The glory fills all space and welcomes every little child to sit down! The lamp may be in the centre, but not the light! There is a local centre, and there is an active energetic penetration which pulses round the whole circumference and beyond. And circumference is a little; narrow geometrical term. What is "In the midst?" The fragrance! The rose is in the middle, the fragrance is in the midst. You build great walls and enclose your rosaries so that no man outside can see the beautiful flowers. But there are some little, ill-kept children outside the wall who suddenly say to one another, "What is this? There are flowers, roses; where are they?" The roses are on the other side of the wall. But the gospel of fragrance climbs the wall; it falls down on the other side and blesses the wayfarer and the homeless! The rose is in the centre, the fragrance is in the midst. And so with my Lord, the Redeemer of the Universe. He is not in a locality measurable and fixed; but we shall see, as the texts come to one another and gather into a glorious culmination, that Jesus Christ is not local, but universal, "the propitiation not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world." The world cannot told Him; the universe incommodes His infinity. He is above all things, and before them, and below them, and after them, and only begins to begin when we have been with Him an eternal time.

"They found Him in the midst of the doctors," just as near to one of them as He was to the other; equally near to all, "in the midst." The suggestion, therefore, is of penetrative, pervasive influence. Never forget the pervasiveness of great influence. It halts nowhere finally. It urges its gentle, penetrating way on and on through all the circles and all the grades. It would include all and bless all. "In the midst of the Doctors," the midst of the learning, the philosophy, the highest civilization of the time, and he is there still. "In the midst of the Doctors," in the midst of the expanding, refining, and spiritualizing civilization, "ruling all things." He is not always known; He could not always be identified by name; but all so feel that there is something ghostly, spiritual, mysterious, not to be accounted for in mere words; a weird, strange, personality and energy. Of course, every grade or circle has its own mother tongue, and we do not urge men to drop their mother tongue, though we would sometimes teach them a fuller and richer language. There are men who are still talking about "discoveries." We do not object to the word; it is harmless enough. There are other men who would speak about the same subject under a higher designation. There are some persons who are not afraid even in science to substitute the word "discovery" by the word "revelation"—light, a flash from Heaven, an answer unexpected but all satisfying. I would not take the word "discovery" away from men who really appreciate it and value it. It will do in the meantime. But I am not ashamed of the word "revelation." I think all great ideas in science, chemistry, mechanics, in civilization generally, come down from the Father of Light. I should not, therefore, speak of "discovery," but of "revelation;" new aspects of Providence, new gleams of the Infinite Personality. But if another man is meanwhile satisfied with the word "discovery," I am not going to regard him as an Atheist or an Infidel. Perhaps he may one day speak the higher language. Until then I pray God's blessing on him, that he may be a patient, diligent, fearless student. There are not so many Infidels as one might suppose. I do not know whether there is a column in the census schedule in which are recorded "Infidels." I hope not. I think it would paralyze any printer to print such a work under such circumstances! Some people are more guided by Christ than they are really aware of. They do not recognize the complete mystery of the situation. Once a man was healed, and he was going up and down talking about the cure, and the people said "Who cured thee?" And he said, "I know not his name." But he wandered into the Temple, and then a voice fell on his ears—a voice as never heard before—music, sentences of pearl, a wondrous approach to the soul. "Then the man knew that it was Jesus that had healed him. One day the visitor will drop, the anonymous leader will show his face, and men will then know that it was Jesus that led the civilization of the world. "Even so Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Proceeding further, and adding another text, we find Jesus Christ saying to His disciples "Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I. Where? "In the midst," the old place, the only place, the right place, the eternal place—"In the midst!" What, in the midst of three? Has a triangle a centre? In the midst of an odd number, and not being one of the number? Yes, that is the mystery. In the midst of three and equally related to all the three, and equi distant from all the three. That is the Church. Beware what epithets you attach to the word "Church." The Gospel admits only two epithets. It will not have anything to do with the meaner sort, the baser things. It will only allow two epithets to be writ, so sensitive its dignity, its majesty, its all but Deity. What are these two epithets? "Glorious!" That will do. "Everlasting!" That will do. The Gospel wants no other adjectives. So with the Church. The controversy generally rages round the epithets. Oh! that men had no gift in epithet-making! I would rather they took to epitaphs, or to anything less mischievous than epithet-making in regard to Christ's Church! Where Christ is there is the Church. If that is so I get rid of quite a number of little lame epithets—and good riddance. "They say, "Weak Churches." Christ never spoke of them. "Struggling Churches." Christ knows nothing about them. "Isolated Churches." They are wrong; it is impossible! The worst of Atheism! That is unthinkable, that my Lord has left His Church in an isolated condition! There are no poor Churches! Of course, the reply will be, When we say poor Churches we mean poor in point of money. When did Christ ever connect the word "money" with the word "Church?" The Church is a spiritual body, a spiritual revelation and incarnation, living in dependence upon the Infinite and the Eternal strong when left without poor human patronage; mighty, tremendous, when not loaded with the patronage of men who think that they can buy the blood that redeems them, or state it in equivalent terms of arithmetic and pence table. Christ in the midst means wealth, strength, companionship, victory! I would send from this, one of the most illustrious pulpits in the world, a message to all Churches of two and three and the smaller plurals—a message heart-elevating and heart-stirring, viz., Because Jesus Christ is with you, in you, in the midst of you; you are neither small nor poor, neither struggling nor isolated. Count not yourself; count the Lord. Then victory is assured. "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills whence cometh my help."

Take another text of the same kind: "And with Him they crucified two thieves, one on the right hand and the other on the left, and Jesus"—where? In the old place, the only place, the eternal place, "Jesus in the midst!" In the midst of the thieves, as He was in the midst of the doctors. He is still there; He cannot be misplaced. He lives everywhere; He lives in slumland, in thiefland; He lives among the thieves, and the adulterers, and the wrongdoers. Hear me sirs; hear me! "This man receiveth sinners," and to that your preaching must come, or you may shut your doors again. Throw away the golden key and write Ichabod on the facade of this edifice. "Jesus in the midst!" of the thieves! That cross could not have been elsewhere. There is a fixed geometry, a fixed proportion and perspective, an abiding and unalterable poetry and fitness of things. All this is represented by the cross in the midst. It could not have stood on either side; Jesus must be in the midst, or nowhere, pervading, penetrating, interpenetrating, uniting all elements, forces and ministries and constructing an infinite Redemption. We must leave Christ some place in His Church, as we must leave God some room for His Providence in the world. "We must not be too clever. We must not consume all the space. We must now and then sit down and be silent, and patiently wait for the incoming of the King. "Be still and know that God is the Lord." It would not do for us to be in the midst of the thieves because we have something that may be lost. It is a cloak that buttons and buckles, a long cloak and sometimes a fur cloak, and the cloak is called—Respectability! That cloak may be lost. It would not do for you and me to go alone among the thieves, but Christ can go. He can look the woman whose face is a living blasphemy back to girlhood, and womanhood, and hope. Let Him do it, and let us work in little crowds at His bidding, that one may help the other in the maintenance of that rotten cloak, moth-eaten and often worthless, called—Respectability.

Where shall we find Him again? "I turned to see the Voice that spake unto me! What! turn to see a voice? Yes. You and I dare not have said that, for many would have been severe upon us for such an incoherent and almost paradoxical style or figure or metaphor. To see a Voice! That is what the great Seer saw in the Island Church. "I turned to see the Voice, and lo! seven candlesticks and One"—where? "In the midst," as he was in the midst of the doctors, and in the midst of the Church, and in the midst of the thieves, and now in the midst of the lights, the luminaries, the leaders in the Church, and all its high thinking and best endeavor. Who are the candlesticks until Jesus takes up His place in the midst of them? Ministers, local preachers—we are only as candlesticks. We have no light; we give no light, except we first receive the illumination from the face of the Saviour and through the ministry of the Holy Spirit. There is no Church, there is no ministry without Jesus, and with our Jesus being "in the midst." And then, though the candlestick be poor and the little light of a local kind be very limited, yet there shall be a great glory in the house, and wondrous results shall follow the ministry that is enkindled, illuminated and sustained by the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. Three in One and One in Three. Keep up your hearts. Many have left us, but they have gone to poor lodgings; many have taken up their golden-headed canes and gone out on a Sunday afternoon, but they will all come back again when the weather changes. Do not be down-hearted, and especially poor ministers who have to carry heavy loads. Do not be discouraged, because some man has borrowed a magazine from some other man, and learned from it that some other man has peculiar doubts as to the authorship of the Pentateuch. It is poor theology, but excellent moonshine. But our dependence is on the living lamp, the living light. "I am the Light of the World," and it will abide when all the little lanterns of Man's invention have been blown out and thrown into the ditch. Your strength is of God. Hold on! Hold on!

Take another instance, to show that the first text was not merely fantastical, but that we have touched a great seam of revelation and actual profit. "I saw a Throne and a Lamb." Where? "In the midst." In the midst of what? In the midst of the Throne. What, the same that was in the midst of the Doctors, in the midst of the Church, in the midst of the thieves, in the midst of the candlesticks? The same; in the old place, the only place, the Eternal place—a Lamb as it had been slain. There were rips and scars on that Lamb. That meant wounds, and blood, and mysterious suffering. So He has come to the Throne, has He? Yes, because He came from the Throne. It is so, and none can alter it. And then, where next? In the midst of the Doctors, and the Church, and the thieves, and in the midst of the candlesticks, and in the midst of the Throne! Where else is He? In the midst of the Deity! The Father; the Holy Ghost; and Jesus—"In the midst!" The old place, the Eternal place. Hallelujah! In the old place, in the midst of the Deity. He wants to be in the midst of our hearts, and wants to take possession of our whole nature, and bless us with sevenfold blessings. He wants to draw us from the external and menial and transient, and to give us a home and resting place in the Eternal, the Unseen, the Divine. He wants to home us in the bosom of God—"London Methodist Recorder."

THE TEST.

The principal of a school in which boys were prepared for college one day received a message from a lawyer living in the same town, requesting him to call at his office, as he wished to have a talk with him.

Arrived at the office, the lawyer stated that he had in his gift a scholarship entitling a boy to a four years' course in a certain college, and that he wished to bestow it where it would be best used.

"Therefore," he continued, "I have decided to let you decide which boy of your school most deserves it."

"That is a hard question to decide," replied the teacher thoughtfully. "Two of my pupils, Charles Hart and Henry Strong, will complete the course of study in my school this year. Both desire a collegiate education, and neither is able to obtain it without assistance.

They are so nearly equal that I cannot tell which is the better scholar."

"How is it as to deportment?" asked the lawyer.

"One boy does not more scrupulously observe all the rules of the schools than the other," was the answer.

"Well," said the lawyer, "if at the end of the year one boy has not gone ahead of the other, send them to me, and I will decide between them."

"As before, at the closing examinations the boys stood equal in attainments. They were directed to call at the lawyer's office, no information being given as to the object of the visit."

Two intelligent, well-bred boys they seemed; and the lawyer was beginning to wonder greatly how he should make a decide between them. Just then the door opened, and an elderly lady of peculiar appearance entered. She was well known to them all as being of unsettled mind, and possessed of the idea that she had been deprived of a large fortune which was justly hers. As a consequence, she was in the habit of visiting lawyers' offices, carrying in her hands a package of papers which she wished examined. She was a familiar visitor to this office, where she was always received with respect, and dismissed with kindly promises of help.

This morning, seeing that the lawyer was already occupied with others, she seated herself to await his leisure. Unfortunately, the chair she selected was broken, and had been set aside as useless.

The result was that she fell in a rather awkward manner, scattering her papers about the floor. The lawyer looked with a quick eye at the boys, before moving himself, to see what they would do.

Charles Hart, after an amused survey of the fall, turned aside to hide a laugh he could not control.

Henry Strong sprang to the woman's side and lifted her to her feet; then, carefully gathering up her papers, he politely handed them to her. Her profuse and rambling thanks served only to increase Charles' amusement.

After the lady had told her customary story, to which the lawyer had listened with every appearance of attention, he escorted her to the door and she departed.

Then he returned to the boys; and, after expressing pleasure at having formed their acquaintance, dismissed them. The next day the teacher was informed of the occurrence, and told that the scholarship would be given to Henry Strong, with the remark: "No one so well deserves to be fitted for a position of honor and influence as he who feels it his duty to help the humblest and lowliest."—"The Christian Work."

The best proof of the divinity of the Christian religion is the daily life of the Christian himself—not his words and professions, but his conduct and spirit; not his Sunday garb and service, but his everyday tone; not his Church ways, but his home walk.—Bishop Vincent.

THE GOSPEL TRAMP.

(BY MRS. MALINDA CLEAVER FAVILLE.)

Hobo is the generic name of the Eastern tramp for his kind. Mr. Flynt, the literary tramp, says there are many species of hobo. In New York City alone there are several, each with varieties. Tramping has charms for the born vagrant. The man who is tied to a home must sit down three times a day with the same people, at the same table, which he works hard to supply. The free hobo eats each meal at a different table, or perchance at no table, and sometimes he gets no meal. If the cooking is bad he moves on; the next meal may be worse, but until eaten it has in it the possibilities of the untied. The hobo experiences nothing of the trials of the householder whom fate has bound to a vile cook, or to a woman who has a fancy for apple pie seven days in the week. She may make excellent pie, but in a score of years unchanging dessert becomes a weariness. Whatever else the hobo may lack, abundant variety is always his.

Hobo theologian has long been known in Western cities by the plain cognomen of "Gospel Tramp," an individual who goes from Church to Church at will, owing allegiance to no steeple in particular. His peripatetic is due to an innate vagrant tendency, or else to improper spiritual nourishment in earlier life. Some constitutions will bear a constant unseasoned diet of ritualism, calvinism, baptism, or faith-without-works-is-dead, and some won't. Hobo Theologian is of those who won't.

This particular individual of the gospel tramp species, became such through a desire for knowledge. He has learned some things not taught in the seminaries. He knows that ecclesiastical households do not "neighbor" freely enough to become acquainted with each other. Their various heads are acquainted, but the children do not often play together. The families have a curious and puzzling habit of calling articles of spiritual furniture common to each, by different names, and each insisting that its own particular nomenclature makes its possession more valuable than any of the others. The hobo doesn't mind telling the good children who do not wonder that the provisions which are really "filin'" are practically the same in each family, but differently seasoned in deference to the household taste, and served hot or cold, wet or dry, as each family prefers. He is a gentle, if hungry, hobo, inclined to receive the much or little which falls to his lot, in the spirit in which it is set before him. He prefers to speak of what he has received, rather than of what he has failed to get. In common with the majority of his species he is quite as willing to be arrested and sheltered as those other hobos who commit minor offenses in Pennsylvania county towns, because when locked up they have food and fire, daily papers and tobacco. He is not wandering from one household to another out of mere curiosity to see what the families have to eat, but because he is hungry, often with that awful hunger one may have when filled with eatable he cannot assimilate. He has learned that there are many who ride from station to station upon the hard bumpers of reasonable doubt, starving upon the cold and meatless bones of dogma and pinched by the frosts of doctrine until the spiritual garments are so travel-worn that the wearer feels his proper place to be the wind-swept curb of the broad pavement outside the Church. He knows, too, that the Church doors would easily swing inward at his touch and admit him to the light and warmth within. The ushers cannot receive him until he comes in; he will not come in because of his worn garments. What shall we do for him?

PROF. ATWATER'S EXPERIMENTS AND THE TEACHING IN REGARD TO THE ALCOHOLIC QUESTION IN THE SCHOOLS.

(BY H. F. HEWES, M. D.)

The recent experiments of Prof. Atwater are of great interest to physiologists and chemists since they throw much light upon one of the doubtful questions of physiological chemistry, or pharmacology, that of the metabolism of alcohol in the body.

It is a mistake, however, to think as some people apparently do, that the result of these experiments should change the teaching in the schools in regard to the use of alcohol from a hygienic point of view. The schools teach that the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage is not justifiable under the laws of hygiene. The result of Prof. Atwater's experiments do not contradict this teaching.

These experiments merely show that the body can derive some energy from alcohol. This does not in itself entitle alcohol to be placed among the food substances in the hygienic sense of the term, which is the sense in which the schools and the people in general use term food. If it did, such a violent poison as muscarine, the active principle of the poisonous plants of the mushroom family would have to be classed with the foods, since it also is oxidized in the body with liberation of its contained energy.

To class a substance among the foods we must know that the sum total effects of its use are beneficial to the body. Muscarine is not a food because its poisonous effects offset the benefit of the energy which it liberates. Alcohol has poisonous effects as Prof. Atwater himself admits. The question as to whether it can be considered as food depends entirely whether its beneficial effects are greater than its poisonous effects. Prof. Atwater's experiments do not prove this. Until this is proven the burden of the proof is against those who would include alcohol in the list of food substances. For scientific experiment so far, experiments upon large bodies of men in the ordinary conditions and vicissitudes of life, in the armies and in exploring expeditions where labor and exposure have to be endured, indicate that when the regular "moderation" quantity of alcohol is taken, the harmful effects offset the beneficial ones and that the drinker is made less fit rather than more fit to work.

And stronger still is the reason against speaking as Prof. Atwater does, of alcohol as food in the same sense as sugar. For people generally will interpret this to mean that it is a food equally to be recommended with sugar and ordinary hygienic foods. And this, as Prof. Atwater will agree, is an entirely false idea and one calculated to do much harm. For while we get our energy from sugar without risk of poisoning, to get energy from alcohol we run great risk of poisoning, and to get any amount such as would be necessary to support life in ordinary conditions, we must take enough alcohol to poison ourselves seriously. (By poisoning is meant some harmful effect upon the functions of the body.)

The above dangers in the use of alcohol, also the possibility of the formation of the alcohol habit, make its use as a beverage unjustifiable even if there were no other arguments against it.

It is unfortunate that the alcohol question has been brought upon this technical ground. The question of the hygienic status of the use of alcohol does not depend upon the technical question of the definitions of a food and of a poison. The controversy upon this point has produced statements upon both sides which have given rise in the public mind to great misconception of the truth.

Both sides in this technical controversy will agree in regard to the main question, that children should be taught to look upon alcoholic liquors as dangerous substances, to be avoided from considerations of health and general welfare.

And in the present light of our experience and of scientific investigation, the school books must continue to exclude alcohol from the list of substances desirable as foods, and to teach the avoidance of this substance as a good hygienic rule.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION FROM THE STANDPOINT OF A PASTOR.

Every zealous undershepherd of "the Great Shepherd and Bishop of Souls" has a longing, burning, passionate desire—

1. To save sinners. His heart's desire and prayer to God for them is that they might be saved, and he "ceases not to warn every one night and day with tears."

2. He is also zealous for the edification of believers, over whom the Holy Ghost has made him overseer—warning every man and teaching every man in all wisdom, that he may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. He can say with the great apostle: "Who is weak, and I am not weak; who is offended, and I burn not." "Being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the Gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us."

To accomplish this end of saving sinners and edifying believers, the zealous pastor is on the alert to stimulate and use all the good and helpful influences about him, and correct, as far as possible, all the evil, vicious influences that tend to hinder his work.

Chief among the good influences are the Christian home, the organized Church, the Sunday school, and the individual godly men and women, who are living epistles, known and read of all men, who—

"Let their lips and lives express
The holy gospel they profess."
"These for Christ, their Master stand,
Fights in a benighted land;
These their dying Lord confess,
These are Jesus' witnesses."

And chief among the influences that hinder him in his work he finds the bar-room, the card-table, the ball-room, and the individual ungodly men and women in the community.

And the zealous, alert pastor finds that the influence for the good of those who compose the home, the organized Church, the Sunday school, and, in a word, that the influence of each individual man or woman is greatly increased by the cultivation of mind and heart, or by that which we call education. He learns that knowledge is power for good if it is sanctified.

He finds, also, that the influence for evil of those who patronize and defend

CLAIMS AND PROOFS.

(A DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARENT AND TEACHER.)

PARENT:—What school do you represent, sir?

TEACHER:—The Blackstone Female Institute.

PARENT:—Well, what do you claim for your school? I suppose you are like all the rest. You claim that it is better than any other school to be found.

TEACHER:—No, I do not claim that. The claim of the Blackstone Female Institute can be put in one sentence. We give thorough instruction, under positive Christian influences, at the lowest possible cost, consistent with the welfare of both teacher and pupil.

PARENT:—That is a sweeping claim. It is an easy matter to make claims, but it is not so easy to prove them. If you can prove that you measure up to your claim, parents should be entirely willing to place their daughters at the Blackstone school.

TEACHER:—What you say is true. It is easy to make great claims, but we do not ask you to accept our claims simply because we say so or upon our own testimony. I will prove to you by impartial, well-informed witnesses that our claim is a just one. First,

As to the Character of our Instruction

We offer as a witness the leading educator in the State of Virginia, the Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of Schools and Colleges. Read the following letters:

BLACKSTONE, VA., JUNE 23, 1899.
DR. W. W. SMITH,
WOMAN'S COLLEGE,
LYNCHBURG, VA.

DEAR DR.—You had with you at the Woman's College the last session three graduates of the Blackstone Institute. I write to ask you what the Faculty thought of the preparation which they had received at the Institute before coming to you. Also I will be obliged to you if you will state your opinion of the Institute as a training school for the College, as your frequent visits to the Institute and your acquaintance with the members of the Faculty and their qualifications for their work renders your opinion of special worth.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES CANNON, JR.

LYNCHBURG, VA., JUNE 24, 1899.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
PRINCIPAL, BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

MY DEAR BRO.—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered College classes and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and nine of your Faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates. To render correlation effective I consider two things necessary, an adjusted course of instruction and a Faculty familiar with the courses of the Woman's College and in sympathy with its methods. These you have. I hope, in my turn, that you find the graduates of our College whom you have taken into your Faculty, superior as teachers and worthy as Christian women.

Yours truly,
WM. W. SMITH.

These letters show that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Second, We offer at least

One Hundred Testimonials of Parents

whose daughters have attended the Blackstone Institute, which testimonials declare with no uncertain sound that the claim which we make is amply proven, if the parents of our pupils are trustworthy witnesses. We are willing to rest our case on this kind of testimony. It is easy for the Principal and Faculty of any school to make strong claims. These claims are worthless without proof. We do not make claims for the Blackstone Institute and then offer our own statements as proof of the claims, but we leave it to parents to weigh the testimony in their own minds.

PARENT:—Well, I must say that the testimony of the Faculty of the Woman's College is equal to expert testimony in a case at court. But where are your testimonials from parents?

TEACHER:—Here they are, as many as you can wish for, printed in the back of this catalogue. There are testimonials here from all over the Virginia Conference, from many of the preachers and leading citizens in various counties. You also find in this catalogue a full statement of the purpose and aim of the institution, the course of study, the schedule of charges, and other necessary information. I have presented my claim. I have also presented my proofs, which are not merely my words, but the opinions of others. If you wish any more definite information write to—

LESSON IX, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 27.

Text of the Lesson, Ez. i, 1-11—Memory Verses, 2-4—Golden Text, Ps. cxxvi, 3—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. "Now in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." All is done that the Scripture may be fulfilled, and the Lord does it all. The opening verses of this book are just the closing verses of the previous book repeated and therefore confirmed (Gen. xli, 32) or established, that we may give special attention to them. God had said by Jeremiah that after 70 years He would punish the king of Babylon and restore Israel to their own land (Jer. xxv, 12; xxix, 10). He had also called Cyrus by name more than 100 years before he was born and had said that Cyrus would perform all His pleasure (Isa. xlii, 28; xlv, 1).

2. "The Lord God of Heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, and He hath charged me to build Him an house at Jerusalem." The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever He will (Dan. iv, 32). When any one, be he king or peasant, accepts the position he occupies as given him by God and seeks therein to do the will of God, he cannot but be blessed, for God Himself will see to it (II Chron. xvi, 9). There is a house now being builded, even the church of God (Eph. ii, 19-22), and every pastor and teacher and evangelist and missionary is authorized to help build up the church, the body of Christ.

3. "Who is there among you of all His people? His God be with him and let him go up to Jerusalem and build the house of the Lord God of Israel." Here every individual who is willing is commissioned to go up to Jerusalem and help to build the house; so each individual believer is commissioned to take part in saying to all who have not yet received Christ that He loves them, died for their sins and rose again and will receive them if they will come to Him (Rev. xxi, 17; John i, 12; vi, 37).

4. "And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth let the men of his place help him." This help was to be with silver, gold, goods, beasts, besides the free will offering for the house at Jerusalem. No one was compelled to go to Jerusalem, but those who did not go were to help those who did go. So now no one is compelled to go as a missionary to foreign lands; it must be willing service; but those who do not go must be ready to help those who do go with all that they need.

5. "Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised, to go up to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem." Five times in our lesson is the house of God mentioned. It is the central thought. Not Jerusalem, nor the priests, nor Cyrus, but God and His house. So now the great thought in the mind of every preacher and worker and every believer should be the house of God—that is, the church of God—which He hath purchased with His own blood (Acts xx, 28).

6. "And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver with gold, with goods and with beasts and with precious things besides, all willingly offered." They have been a very great people to minister to the Lord Jesus when He was here on earth, but we can still minister unto Him by ministering to His people, specially to those who go forth in His name to help complete His body, and He will credit it all as done to Himself (Math. xxv, 40).

7. "Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem and had put them in the house of his gods." Because of Israel's sin God had suffered the holy vessels of His house to be carried to Babylon, but He had His eye upon them even when Belshazzar used them at his drunken feast. He suffered such holy men as Daniel and Ezekiel and others to be carried into captivity for their good (Jer. xxiv, 5). When speaking of Israel, He said, "I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies" (Jer. xli, 7). Many redeemed ones are in greater or less measure in the hands of the enemy, and it may be your privilege to restore some of these vessels to their right place in the house of the Lord.

8. "Even those did, Cyrus, king of Persia, bring forth by the hand of Mithredath, the treasurer, and numbered them unto Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah." All Israel was numbered by God. All the saints are known by name. The Lord knoweth them that are His, and He says to each one: "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine" (Isa. xlii, 1). Let it comfort you, dear child of God, that you are a numbered vessel and that if He allows you for a time to be in the enemy's hands He still careth for you and will in due time show you His deliverance.

9. "And this is the number of them: Thirty chargers of gold, a thousand chargers of silver, nine and twenty knives." The small number of vessels of gold compared with those of silver suggest that the most precious vessels are comparatively few, not that one redeemed soul is of more value than another, for the value of the precious blood of Christ is the value of every redeemed soul, but those who are willing to be utterly abandoned to Him, separate from everything He does not delight in, are comparatively few.

10. "Thirty basons of gold, silver basons of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand." There is another helpful lesson of a different kind to be learned from these vessels. If the golden vessels be taken to represent the most talented or the most used vessels before people, then to be perfectly happy to be a vessel of a second sort or one of the other thousand not described might be equally glorifying to God, but might require more grace to take a lowly place, but in Math. xxv, 20-23, the one who made good use of two talents received just the same commendation as the one who made good use of five.

11. "Brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem." This is the remark made of all the vessels. Babylon is a record of self exaltation from the tower of Babel in Gen. xi, where they said, Let us make us a name, to Rev. xvii and xviii, where they dare to make war with the Lamb. Jerusalem or Zion is the city of God, the city of peace, where our Lord was crucified, by whose blood peace was made. Many blood bought ones are captives in Babylon, living for self and to make themselves a name instead of magnifying the name of the Lord. Given to Christ that God may be glorified in us, let us live to complete His body, the church.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

For the Epworth League, beginning Aug. 1st, with the Christian's League—see Rev. Ps. xlii, 1-6.

"The Lord is my shepherd."

Some one has said, "There is no pleasure comparable to standing on the vantage ground of truth." This is the first gain of the Christian. In doing God's will he finds Christ's words fulfilled; he knows the truth and the truth makes him free. He does not possess all knowledge. He may make many mistakes, but he sees into the real nature of things and knows God as his father. He is no longer in fear of judgment, and, though realizing himself as a sinner, he has peace and pardon by faith in Jesus Christ. He is true in heart to God and man. He is free from malice, envy and pride and full of love. Happiness consists far less in what one gets or has than in what he is. When a person is filled with the love of God, he abides in restfulness of soul, even when business goes disastrously and disease seizes the body.

It is a source of deepest satisfaction to realize that God really cares for me. My interests, my good and my actions are all subjects of concern to God. When we really get hold of this idea, it is apt to get hold of us in return and change our actions. We come to new ideas and new deeds. God leads! I must be attentive to know what He wishes. God my shepherd! Let Him guide me where He sees is best. Green pastures, quiet waters, valley of death's shadows, anywhere, everywhere He sees best, I will gladly go.

There is great pleasure in mastering success in the world and among men. In business enterprises, in literature, art, science; in making a new discovery, a great corporation, in amassing wealth, in attaining social leadership, in the thousand and one avenues of worldly honor and prosperity there is great enjoyment. But there is no soul satisfaction in arms, in politics, in business to be compared to the simple knowledge of God as the personal Friend, Protector and Shepherd.

In childlike humility and simplicity the greatest of men have found rest and peace under the wings of the Almighty. Personal heart trust is the Christian's pleasure, perfect peace.

Secretary Hamilton.

Rev. John W. Hamilton, D. D., secretary of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education society, is one of the most widely and favorably known men of the Methodist Episcopal church. Fine physique, attractive address, frank, open manner, genuine piety, sturdy manliness and hatred of sham, linked with unusual executive ability and thorough cultivation in school and public life, have all combined to make him what he is, one of the foremost men in one of the foremost churches of the times. He first became widely known by his building the People's

FIVE-MINUTE SERMONS

"THE NEXT MOMENT HE MADE KINDLING WOOD OUT OF THE DASH-BOARD."

KICKING.

I WAS out in the extreme end of our county, last spring, looking after a church which is not able to support a pastor. I went to the home of its leading member, and remained with him over Sunday. Monday morning, he proposed that he would drive me over the field, and every family could have one pastoral visit, at least. I was glad to go, and soon found a beautiful horse hitched to a light buggy, awaiting us. The horse had been kept in his stable all the winter, and was fat and sleek, that crisp morning. He ought to be in the humor for going, after so long a rest, and such careful attention. He looked full of animation, and pawed the ground, restlessly, while we were preparing for the drive. He started with a little spring, the moment the farmer's boy let go his bridle, and he dashed into the road as if he enjoyed it to the utmost. A half mile down the road, we began to descend a little hill, and the harness began to tighten about his haunches. The next moment, he had made kindling wood out of the dash-board, and we were dodging splinters as a soldier dodges bullets. The next moment, he had sent part of the spokes of one wheel as he had sent the dash-board, but he had become entangled in the wheel and the harness, and had tumbled down in the ditch by the roadside, while the buggy was turned up edge-wise on two wheels. I was more surprised than the old farmer, for he coolly said that when young horses were first hitched up in the spring time, their long freedom from restraint and their full life developed under a winter's care, often made them restive and fractious. After our accident, we managed to keep to our original plan. After talking for a little time in one home, the family Bible was brought out, and I proceeded to read in the song of Moses, of God's care for His people. I read how wonderfully He had made them to "suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock; butter of kine, and milk of sheep, with fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Bashan, and goats, with the fat of kidneys of wheat; and of the blood of the grape thou drankest wine." That was as far as I read, but I never saw the next line quite so clearly before as my eye caught it, "Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked."

I have thought of that experience many a time since. It recurred to me last Autumn after the annual Conference of the district in which I live. My congenial colleague was removed, and another man was transferred to this point. Our churches here are not prominent, and the appointee was one to whom the Conference had always given city charges and important ones. What did he do? He kicked, because he would not have a village appointment, he would not take a church inferior to the ones he had held, he would not lose the advantages of city associations. He kicked till the Conference harness could not hold him any longer, and then took a transfer to another conference. He had grown so fat over his honors and his past preferences, that he could not be governed.

I thought of the same occurrence in connection with a professor in a denominational college. He was gifted with a good intellect, and was chosen to his chair when he was quite young, and he had a remarkable opportunity to distinguish himself and do good service to his church and the kingdom of God. A discussion soon arose in his denomination, and in the department in which he was a specialist. He took a part and aided in settling the difficulty. The papers flattered him, correspondents congratulated him, and the people cheered his name. He came out of the affair one of the "fattest" men in his denomination. What has been the result? He has been kicking ever since. He has taken up in the papers and reviews, one after another, the writings and the deliverances of his brethren, and the attitude of all its institutions and its professors. He has grown so important that he very disagreeably proposes to regulate the universe on new and better plans than heretofore. If all his brethren would abdicate he would be forced to end where he ought to have begun, by kicking himself.

Something recalled the farmer's horse when I heard the story of an old friend of mine who has grown suddenly rich. Providence seemed to favor him at every turn, and in a very little time he amassed a fortune. It was the hope of his church that he would make himself useful in his beneficence. But they tell me that he has kicked at every item of expense in the church itself, and at every contribution which has been asked from the people for a whole year past. He has waxed fat, and is kicking. And I have heard of young people whose heads were turned because they did well on some committee, or sang some solo well at a C. E. entertainment, until they kicked at everything asked of them which they did not think commensurate with their dignity. Has God been very good to you? Show your gratitude with humility. Don't kick.

church, Boston. He has been an influential member of several general conferences, and received a large vote for bishop the last time any were elected. Probably no man in our denomination, unless it may be some of the bishops, knows so many men in our own church and in other churches, the influential leaders in their respective spheres, as does Dr. Hamilton. He has done valuable work in his present position. He was with Bishop Fowler, fraternal delegate from our church to the British and Irish Wesleyan conferences, which he visited last summer. His addresses were valuable historical documents, and have been printed in a beautiful pamphlet for private circulation. The league should know him and the work he leads in the Freedmen's Aid society. In importance it ranks with the missionary cause.

Watch China. But yesterday she was the least known of nations, unless we except Korea and Japan. Today she is open from Shanghai to Tibet. China is to awaken from sleep of ages. What this means who can tell? John Chinaman is one of the most virile and astute and frugal of men. What any one can do, he can do as well, only give him a chance. Every third man on earth is a Chinaman. Russia, England, France and Germany may open his gates and climb over his wall and dictate his trade for awhile. China is awakening. If she becomes Christian, the Mongolian will unite with the Anglo-Saxon and Slav in making a new world. Help to make her Christian for the sake of the kingdom of God.

No other department is more important than the spiritual. The matter of greatest moment to each member and to the League and church as a whole is the deepening of devotional life. There need to be more of prayer, more reading and understanding of the Bible, not the matter of higher or lower criticism; or any questions of controversy, but the knowledge of the way the Bible would have a Christian live. We need more of open hearted, simple testimony.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Learn to walk from the teachings of all denominations.

Self denial for the sake of some great cause is productive of joy and not of misery.—Rev. David Utter, Unitarian, Denver.

Business of the Christian.

The Christian's business in life is to do good, to act wisely and deal justly.—Rev. James McFarland, Hyde Park Church, Denver.

Religion.

Religion, as Christ understood and practiced it, is the grandest thing on earth and the best thing in heaven.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Unselfishness.

When you are done with self and have thrown it away, the universe is yours.—God, life, love and human hearts.—Professor George D. Herron, Unitarian, Evanston, Ills.

Heroism and Noble Deeds.

The heroism of simple duty doing is open to every one at all times, and each noble deed is a real benefit to all the world of men.—Rev. C. E. St. John, Unitarian, Pittsburg.

Man Measured by His Mind.

Find a man's supreme desire and thought and you have his full measure and value, for our mind is what our most constant thought makes it.—Rev. J. T. Steffy, Methodist, Pittsburg.

Present Need of the World.

The world has no use for a religion that does not help the needy, and what the world needs today is not so much dogma, not so much doctrine, as it needs good cheer.—Rev. Dr. Myers, Denver.

Measuring God's Love.

God's love should not be measured by comforts, possessions and powers given to man, nor by the wealth and beauty given to the world, but by the fact that he gave his son to redeem it.—Rev. Dr. Anthony H. Evans, Presbyterian, New York.

Culture That Is Useful.

A culture which does not recognize him, who is life's ideal, and which is not guided by a deep religious conviction, may be flashy and brilliant, but it can never become permanently useful.—Rev. W. T. King, Methodist, St. Louis.

Striving to Save.

Those who strive to save others save themselves. The missionary who goes out in search of the heathen finds also himself. The light which is kindled for a dying race illumines the path of him who fights it.—Dr. Stakely, Baptist, Washington.

Domestic Labor.

The woman of the twentieth century can do no greater service for her kind than by inaugurating a new departure in advancing domestic labor to the true consideration of its merits, worth and dignity.—Rev. Dr. George B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver.

True faith always begets love—love to God and love to man, which is the whole demand that God's law makes upon us. Faith lays hold of Christ, the incarnate love, and so receives and reflects his image in the soul.—Dr. W. W. Boyd, Baptist, St. Louis.

Christian Grace.

It is impossible to live a Christian life without the grace of God. Grace is the root of every Christian virtue, and the virtue that cannot be traced back to grace, that does not derive its strength and life from grace, is not a Christian virtue.—Rev. R. A. Elliott, Presbyterian, Pittsburg.

Works and Faith.

If a man must choose between faith and works and will not have both, he should choose works. Works without faith are better than faith without works. To choose faith without works is to choose a corpse, for faith without works is dead.—Rev. Camden M. Cobern, Methodist, Denver.

Finding Out New Truths.

One congenial occupation for the healthy mind is to be ever finding out and using new truths, and there is no reason for supposing that the universe, wherever we may be, will not have such truths of knowledge and friendship to invite our exploration.—Rev. George A. Thayer, Unitarian, Cincinnati.

Attitude of Christianity.

There was and is a difference in the attitude of Christianity and other religions. Christianity is a religion of the skies. It says it is going to occupy the whole world and is not going to be coordinated with others and will not be tolerant of them.—Rev. Dr. Wallace McMullen, Methodist, Philadelphia.

The Ideal Life.

Whatever our ideals in life are, if we understand Jesus Christ, we must see in him the realization of the ideal life in a way not seen elsewhere. He who fails to see in Christ the consummation of all that is greatest in divine and human nature fails to understand the importance of the incarnation.—Rev. Lewis Earle Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

Setting One's Life to Music.

Let us attune our hearts and voices to the thanksgivings of our earthly life. Begin heaven's music here. Set your whole life to music. Your grief for sin, your search after truth, your daily task, your heartaches, your death anguish—set them all to music, for in heaven we shall see how, by divine grace, they were all made to work together for our good.—Rev. Dr. H. Atwood Percival, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Be Watchful.

We cannot expect to have a successful spiritual life if we do not use some of the watchful methods of the business man or the sailor. They keep their eyes open for things that are likely to help or hurt them; they are watchful, and so should all Christians be. Christ is always saying "Watch!" and it is by continual watching only that we can hope to be saved.

the bar-room, the card-table, the ball-room, and, in a word, that the influence of evil for each individual godless man or woman is also increased by education. He learns that knowledge is power for evil if it be unsanctified.

It is perfectly natural, therefore, that the zealous, alert pastor should cast about him to find the sort of education that those whom he is trying to save, or those over whom he has been placed as pastor, will receive—whether this education will be under influences that will help to make one more useful for good in the home, in the Church, in the Sunday school, or whether it will be under influences that will make one more injurious to the community by patronizing and defending those things which damage, if not utterly ruin, men's best, highest interest.

And then, too, the faithful, wide-awake pastor knows that the closing decades of this wide-awake century are emphatically decades of education, and he is aware that the coming century will be an educational century such as the world has never known. If our fathers were contented with the three R's, our children and our children's children will not be. And if our fathers were anxious to provide a good home and a large bank account for their children, the fathers and mothers of this age are more concerned, and the fathers and mothers of the coming generations will be more anxious that he legacy to their children shall be in the form of the best education they can give them. And the poor will share with the rich in the higher education of the future.

Where, then, inquires the faithful, watchful pastor, can this education be obtained? And he finds that the people are and will be dependent almost solely for higher education on State and Church institutions of learning.

And he finds that the State, by laying a heavy burden on the people by annual taxation, is well equipped to teach literature, science, mathematics at the lowest possible cost by giving free tuition; but for the education of the heart and the moral and religious life, that which is the most important for every one, and which will fit one for the highest usefulness, the State makes very little preparation—indeed, declares that this is not its function; and so the pastor finds that a part of the curriculum of these State institutions of learning, if he judges by the programmes published in the daily papers, are the very things that he knows are baneful to his work—that Germans, hops, balls, waltzes, cotillions, have as important place in many student's life in these State institutions of learning as his Latin, Greek and mathematics.

And so the faithful pastor observes that those who come into the community from schools where these vicious things are encouraged and patronized, if they have trained in these things, will certainly keep up this part of the curriculum, if they neglect the other parts. And sometimes these things are allowed in private institutions of learning and sometimes in denominational schools.

And the substance of religion that is encouraged in these State institutions of learning is overcome by the unholy things that are allowed. "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? What agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" Like the ancient Samaritans these State institutions of learning fear the Lord and serve their own Gods.

Who ever heard of a revival of religion in a State school. And one never will till they be separate and touch not the unclean things. God cannot honor an institution that relegates Him to the rear and puts a German, a ball, a hop, a waltz, to the front.

The faithful pastor, therefore, turns to the institutions of learning which his Church has provided, and where just as good literature, mathematics, science are taught as they teach in the State institutions, where just as much attention is given to the training of the mind as the State gives, and in addition to the mental discipline, they provide prayer meetings, revival meetings, class meetings, and balls, hops, Germans are tabooed; not only not allowed, not tolerated, but are branded as things unfit for one who wishes to reach the highest usefulness of mind and heart.

We do not say that every person who attends these institutions of learning comes back to exert a bad influence on the community. Far be it from us to declare to declare that. For some have strength enough to overcome these unhallowed, unsanctified influences.

Nor do we say that every young person who attends our Church institutions comes back home to exert the best moral and religious influence in his or her community, for some people persist in being ungodly and worldly in spite of the most helpful influences. But at these State institutions the young person has to maintain his Christian character in the face of influences that are bad, and which the institution endorses. At our Methodist institutions of learning the young person has all the helpful influences to develop his Christian character. Not every child that comes out of a godless home is godless. Not every child that is brought up in a Christian home becomes a Christian, but we expect to spend our life urging Christian homes and Christian schools against Christless homes and Christless schools.

And what comes of what we have said? This: Let every Christian man and woman, every Methodist man and woman, help to endow our Church schools by a liberal Twentieth Century Thank Offering so that they can give education to the people as cheaply as the State institutions, and surround those who attend school and are being mortally trained, with the hallowed influences of our holy religion. That which the State does by the power of its authority let us do by the power of love for our dear Lord.

It is needless in closing to say that we all know that the Blackstone Female Institute gives the very best mental training and surrounds its students with the very best moral and religious influences. Let us of the Farmville District rally to its support. Let us by a liberal Twentieth Century Thank Offering so equip it that it may quadruple the good it is now doing.

The health, order, and high character of the work last session evidenced by the following:

1. Only one case of serious sickness (pneumonia), and that yielded promptly to treatment.
2. Forty-three (43) per cent. of the students received no demerits during the entire session.
3. Thirty-nine (39) per cent. passed with distinction on all their classes.

The fact that nineteen (19) degrees, professional and classical, were conferred this year on students prepared at the Academy by the Colleges and Universities of this and other States shows the thorough character of the work we are doing.

RANDOLPH-MACON NOTES.

Prof. O. H. P. Dorpried, LL. D., of Central College, Mo., paid a short visit to his old friend, the writer, last week. He took his degree at Randolph-Macon in 1846. Took a wife at the old College in due time. Served as professor for a number of years. Has been a professor at "Central" for twenty-eight years during which time he has acted as president for several years. He has passed the stage of "three-score and ten," but is still strong, hearty, and serene as ever. If Virginia ever gave to the West a better sample of a Christian gentleman this writer has never had the happiness to meet him.

In entering Richmond from the North, you will see on the right two large buildings nearing completion. These are builded by white Baptists, and cost nearly $100,000. On the left colored Baptists are building as extensively. A little North the Presbyterians have nearly completed a series of buildings, some of which cost as much as $59,000, donated by liberal men. This makes a Randolph-Macon man feel—well, it is hard to say how he feels. Will it be TWENTY CENTURIES before the Methodists will catch up. I.

HOME TRAINING AND INFLUENCE.

In reading the account this week in the "Methodist Times," London, of the ordination services of the candidates at the recent Conference of the Wesleyan Church, England, I was much impressed with the simple but solemn exercises.

Forty-seven were ordained. Each one was called on to state briefly his religious experience and history, embracing the causes mainly leading him to a religious life and to become a minister.

No one reading these experiences can fail to be impressed with the deep and decided tone of religious life evinced by nearly every one.

Another interesting and notable feature was that of the forty-seven ordained thirty-five gave special testimony to early parental influence in shaping their religious lives and conduct.

How many, like John Wesley, will rise up at the great day and bless God for Christian homes!

Alas! that we read of Christian mothers who are prominent in CHAPERONING young people at balls, and such-like occasions. The newspapers seem determined that their "light" shall not be hid, though the Saviour said such light is "great darkness." I.

WHY DR. DUNCAN DID NOT ACCEPT.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., August 14.—Rev. James A. Duncan, D. D., pastor of the Church-Street Methodist Church, of this city, today gave out a statement in which he explained why he did not accept the presidency of Randolph-Macon College. Dr. Duncan denies most emphatically that Chancellor Smith was against him, as has been stated. He says Chancellor Smith is his friend and wanted him to accept the presidency. The full text of Dr. Duncan's own statement follows:

"As there seems to be some misunderstanding about the presidency of Randolph-Macon College, I will make a public statement of my reasons for declining the position. It was not an easy thing to do. Chancellor W. W. Smith urged me to accept, as did members of the Board of Trustees, the Faculty, and many personal friends among the old students.

"My reasons for declining is simply that the trustees want a man almost exclusively for field work, and I am sure that I could not do such work either to their satisfaction or to my own.

"As to the charge that Chancellor Smith influenced me to decline, he urged me to accept, and when I told him that I ought not to do so, he brought forth the strongest arguments he could advance to make me take the position.

"I have not the slightest doubt but that I would have had the most cordial support of the Chancellor and Faculty had I taken the position. I esteem it the highest honor that could well be conferred upon me, and only refused because I honestly believe that I can best serve the College by refusing to occupy a position I could not fill."

The people of Knoxville are very glad to have him decline the presidency, as he is the leading minister of this city. The initial announcement of his election to the presidency caused general expressions of regret on account of his probably leaving the city. It is expected that he will be returned here next October to serve his fourth year.—Richmond "Times."

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

All that you and I are responsible for is doing our duty. Ours is the seedling, and God alone beholds the end of what is sown. How do we know how much good we accomplish, when we do any good thing or utter any truth in love? Eternity will be full of surprises to us. Wait and see.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

A man may be an eternal failure although his footsteps glitter with gold and his words sparkle with knowledge. That man is the most successful in the divine kingdom who sets in motion the greatest amount of spiritual power for the glory of God, whatever may be the opinions or rewards of fallen mortals.—John Reid.

The Beautiful.

God incorporated the beautiful with his religion. He did it that it might also appeal to our more elevated senses, and this beauty is not something we admire simply, but something which stimulates us to purer and nobler lives—which proves its divine nature.—Rev. Albion W. Knight, Episcopalian, Atlanta.

Longing For a Settled Home.

There is a great longing among men for a settled home, for a fixed abode, for rest and repose. But it is a longing which can never be satisfied in this world, whether we recognize that fact or not. Nor as Christian men and women should we be disturbed by that fact.—Rev. Olin St. Roche, Episcopalian, New York.

The Higher Common Sense.

The higher common sense of men has come to teach them, then, that religiousness is not mere assent to traditional theology; indeed not that at all. But, rather, it is the living of life rationally, in consonance with the highest human instincts and in harmony with the eternal laws of the universe.—Rabbi Charles Fleischer, Hebrew, Boston.

Woman's Lot.

Let no woman who is exerting a steady, decided Christian influence in the family, who is unselfishly ministering unto others, who is dividing their sorrows, multiplying their joys, feel that hers is an inferior or commonplace life. As the family is so closely related to every other interest, so woman, like man, touches life on every side.—Rev. Dr. Stephen W. Dana, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

THE MESSAGE OF PEACE.

Bid the din of battle cease!
Folded be the wings of fire!
Let your courage conquer peace—
Every gentle heart's desire.

Let the crimson flood retreat!
Blended in the arc of love,
Let the flags of Nations meet;
Bind the raven, loose the dove.

At the altar that we raise,
King and kaiser may bow down;
Warrior-knights above their bays
Wear the sacred olive crown.

Blinding passion is subdued,
Men discern their common birth,
God hath made of kindred blood
All the people of the earth.

High and holy are the gifts
He has lavished on the race—
Hope that quickens, prayer that lifts,
Honor's meed and beauty's grace.

As in Heaven's bright face we look,
Let our kindling souls expand;
Let us pledge on Nature's book,
Heart to heart and hand to hand.

For the glory that we saw
In the battle-flag unfurled,
Let us read Christ's better law;
Fellowship for all the world!
—Julia Ward Howe.

THE REIGN OF THE DEAD

In the biography of Constantine the Great—the first Christian Emperor—who flourished in the early part of the fourth century, and whose patronage of Christianity revolutionized the fortunes of the entire Christian Church, the following account is given of his reign after death:

"He breathed his last at noon on the festival of Pentecost, 337 A. D., in the sixty-fourth year of his age and the thirty-first of his reign. His body, clad in Imperial purple, and crowned with a diadem, was laid in a coffin of gold. The Imperial guards transported it in military order to Constantinople, which mourned in all sincerity for the hero whom the city and Empire had lost. A platform of many steps was raised in the middle of the principal hall of the palace, covered with purple and ornamented with Imperial insignia, surrounded with candles burning in candlesticks of gold, and on its summit the dead Emperor lay in state, with a jewelled cross in the centre panel of the ceiling shining above him, like the cross which he had seen in the sky on the day of his conversion. A numerous retinue of attendants watched around the body day and night. Every morning the great officers of State and the Court officials paid their respects to the Emperor without any change of the customary etiquette, saluting their dead Sovereign as if he were still alive. All laws and edicts continued to be issued in the name of Constantine. 'No mortal,' says Eusebius, 'had ever, like this blessed Prince, continued to reign even after his death.'"

This strange and striking pageant of a dead Emperor's Court was continued for three long months, until his son, Constantius, arrived from a distant part of the Empire and proceed to celebrate his father's funeral and to occupy the throne in his room. Probably it is an event absolutely unique in the annals of history; certainly it is one not to be commended or approved. Is not this old world picture, however, an illustration of a tendency in the human mind which finds expression in many features of the religious life and the religious world of to-day? Are there not large numbers of people who are more or less controlled by a dead thing to which they give imaginary virtues, rather than by a living evangelizing force?

Apply it, for example, to our conception of personal salvation, our relation to the Lord Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world. What is this Christ to us day by day, and at what point do we lay hold of Him? To very many He is simply the Christ of Calvary, the Lamb of God who there, by his dying, atoned for human sin and redeemed the personal life of the believer. They know Him in no other fashion. To them faith in Christ means a perpetual attempt to realize His atonement as between themselves and the guilty past, and they build upon the foundation of the Crucified One. It is true that He "died for our offences," but He "also rose again for our justification." The death was one and transitory; the Resurrection, the Life, is an abiding fact. The Cross is the medium by which we are saved; the Sacrifice offered thereupon was in our room and stead, but the power of salvation is in the living Divine Man, who reigns upon the Mediatorial Throne and who stoops to dwell in the contrite heart.

In the lives of individual Christians to-day there is needed a more vivid realization of Him who said to His disciples: "Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," and who is ever faithful to His promise. Let our faith grasp Christ, who is a living reality, who can lift us up above the sordid cares and temptations of the present evil world, who can cheer the passing days with the bright shining of His love, and endue us with His resurrection power. To dwell only at Calvary is to be under the reign of the dead. The King to-day is upon the Throne of the Ages, the Conqueror of death for Himself and His people, and behold He is alive for evermore.

Another way in which many good and devout souls fall into the error which this old-time incident illustrates is by clinging to past forms and institutions and methods after they have ceased to be a living force. I will put a case which is typical of many of our large towns. A sanctuary was built sixty years ago, with its family pews and its free seats, to be the home of a vast congregation and the centre of an effective religious organization. In the earlier years of its existence its services were crowded; some who still worship within its walls were converted there. The place abounds with sacred memories; its very stones are dear unto them, and its history is recorded on high. To-day, however, the neighborhood around is greatly changed; the population has become of a much lower order; the families of its worshippers are almost gone, and the congregation is gradually melting away. A feeling of depression is in the hearts of its little band of workers, and everybody knows that the glory is departed. But the structure remains as before. The institutions and methods of operation are those of fifty years ago. The work is still carried on upon the old lines. The only difference is that then they succeeded; now they fail.

Why not change them? Why not move with the times? Why not bring the methods into harmony with the character of the surrounding population. Why not clear out the empty family pews? Why not brighten the services, and appeal to the masses. Why not adapt the ministry to the new conditions which have arisen? The answer is, because of the reign of the dead. The sanctuary was built and the work begun to save the people. It is only fulfilling the purpose of the men out of whose gift and sacrifice it arose in proportion as it is filled with worshippers, and its services are leading them to Christ. It is not accomplishing that end now, nor likely to do so under present conditions, but because a few of its saintly and life-long worshippers love it as it is, and venerate and cling to the past—which has become a dead past—adaptation and advance are out of the question.

Surely this ought not to be. There is need for the sacrifice of personal feelings in the Lord's work. However much we may love and venerate the past, our duty is to do all that lies within us to save the men and women who are round about us in the world today, and God will certainly not hold us guiltless if we allow ourselves to be controlled by the dead past to the damage of the living present. Ought not office-bearers in our many half-empty chapels—half empty because of the conditions which I have described—very carefully to consider the important question, "How many souls around us are going down to ruin who might perchance be saved if in our Church we adopted methods more likely to bring the people in? And if this be so, where runs the line of our responsibility?"

There is also an application of this illustration to the larger life of the Methodist Church. One frequently hears John Wesley referred to as though he still occupied the presidential chair. But if John Wesley reigns in the Methodism of to-day it is indeed under "the reign of the dead." How often, when discussing the changes and developments in our Church government, which are only of the nature of healthy progress—and changes must come in any living organization—are we confronted by some quotation from our venerable Founder, and we are forthwith charged with disloyalty. But John Wesley lived in his own day, not in the nineteenth century. All his opinions were formed amid the conditions of the world as it was more than a hundred years ago. To apply them to life to-day, without change or modification, is unjust to him and the very height of absurdity. We can only deduce what his opinions would have been concerning various points in present day Methodism by studying the great principles which became fixed in his character, and to which he was always rigidly true.

John Wesley's life was characterized by progress, which continued to his latest years. He never feared to make changes and adopt new departures when he saw that the work demanded them and felt that they were God-inspired. For example, at the first he had great doubts about the wisdom of preaching in the open air, but he soon discovered that the Divine Spirit was leading him in that direction; thenceforward he flung himself into the movement and few men have preached in the open air so extensively or won such marvelous success. Again, when Thomas Maxfield—a layman—began to preach at the Foundry in Wesley's absence, he hurried home from Bristol full of indignation, for the purpose of stopping this gross irregularity. But through his mother's wisdom he first heard him, and that settled the matter; he saw that God was in it; he said, "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good." From that point there arose under his direction the greatest school of lay preachers the world has ever seen, and one of the chief glories of Methodism.

It would be easy to point out many other evidences of the enlargement of his views as the years advanced, and his constant readiness to accept new conditions under the guidance of God as the need arose. The truth is that John Wesley was a great Reformer; he could never have founded the Methodist Church had not this been the case. The system which he invented was not a cast-iron system, never to be changed or modified; rather was it a young sapling which he planted, destined, by virtue of the life that was in it, to spread and grow and become a mighty tree, yea, a forest of trees, watered by the rain and nurtured by the sun. He was always developing its organization and stepping out in fresh directions, and if he could have continued to live to our own day this would still have been his policy. To attempt to bind down the Methodism of the nineteenth century to the pattern of Methodism as John Wesley left it is an attempt to impose the reign of the dead and a dishonor to our great Founder.

The leading principle of his life was the evangelization of the people. To that principle he was always faithful, and he shrank from no change which was necessary in order to its successful pursuit. Everything else was secondary; the Methodist Societies were called into service to save the people. That is the great principle which he entrusted to the Methodist Church, and to that trust let her be true. Broadly interpreted, the Methodist preachers and the Methodist people have nothing to do but to save souls. Let us live and labour, and organize, add adapt our machinery, always for that end, under the guidance of God the Holy Ghost; so shall we continue to be a great living Church, doing our part in fashioning the present age, which is the work which God has given us to do.—D. K., in "London Methodist Recorder."

JONATHAN'S RIGDON'S MONUMENT.

"Jonathan Rigdon died very poor, didn't he deacon?" I said.

"Yes, they buried him in a pauper's grave. Poor Rigdon! And he had a big heart," said the deacon. "He spent his whole life and a big fortune building a monument to another man."

"Was the monument ever finished, deacon?"

"Yes, and Jonathan did it."

"How?"

"Well," said the deacon sadly, "Jonathan commenced it early. He commenced putting money into the monument at 17 and finished it at 50."

"And he gave his whole time to it?"

"Yes, he worked night and day, often all night long, and on the Sabbath. He seemed to be in a great hurry to get it done. He spent all the money he earned upon it—some say $50,000. Then he borrowed all he could; and when no one would loan him any more he would take his wife's dresses and the bed clothes and many other valuable things in his home and sell them to get more money to finish that monument."

"How sacrificing!"

"Yes, Jonathan sacrificed everything for that monument," said Jonathan sadly. "He came home one day and was about to take the blankets that lay over his sleeping baby, and his wife tried to stop him; but he drew back his fist and knocked her down, and then went away with the blankets and never brought them back, and the poor baby sickened and died from the exposure. At last there was nothing left in the house. The poor heart-broken wife soon followed the baby to the grave. Yet Jonathan kept working all the more at that monument. I saw him when he was about fifty years old. The monument was nearly done; but he had worked so hard at it that I hardly knew him, and his face and nose were terribly swollen. And the wretched man had been so little in good society all the while that he had about forgotten how to use the English language; his tongue had somehow become very thick, and when he tried to speak out would come an oath."

"But the good man did finally accomplish his great work?" I said.

"Yes, he finished it," said the deacon, his eyes moistening with tears.

"Oh, I should like to see it," I said.

"Come with me," said my informant sadly, "and I will show it to you. It stands in a beautiful part of the city where five streets meet. Most men put such things in a cemetery. But John had his own way, and put it on one of the finest lots to be found."

"Does it look like Grant's monument?"

"Yes, it looks a good deal like Grant's monument. It is a grand house. There it is—look at it!" said the deacon, pointing to a beautiful mansion. "See! it is high and large, with great halls and fireplaces, and such velvet carpets, and oh, what mirrors! Isn't it rich and grand?"

"And who lives in it, deacon?"

"Why, the man who sold Jonathan Rigdon nearly all the whiskey he drank. He lives there with his family and they wear the richest and finest clothes, and —"

"And poor Jonathan?"

"Why, he's in the pauper's graveyard. Alas!" sighed the deacon, "the world is full of such monuments built by poor drunkards who broke the hearts of devoted wives and starved sweet children to death."—ELI PERKINS, in "New Voice."

THE COST OF A CHURCH CARPET.

In the following manner, the Chicago "Advance" gives the condensed story of the direct and collateral cost of a church carpet. The direct cost of the carpet was $800, but as the women of the Church raised the money by giving entertainments, the pastor's estimate was that when all the items of cost were figured in, the carpet had cost fully $1,000. He reached this astonishing total by estimating the work, worry, nervous strain, bodily weariness and heartaches of one hundred women; the heroic efforts of men, women and children to eat the things which were to be eaten, and hear, see or buy other things which had been provided to extract money from them; the colds, fevers and other ailments contracted while attending the entertainments, and the consequent doctor's bills; the money spent in other Churches, for if they come to your entertainments you must go to theirs; and worst and most costly of all, the demoralization of the Church and the curtailment of legitimate giving which follow in the train of such methods of raising money. But they got their carpet.—Ex.

WHAT AMERICAN LIQUORS HAVE DONE AT MANILA.

"The Escolta," which is, the great business street of Manila, is less than half a mile long. On it are the biggest retail stores, restaurants, postoffice and leading commercial offices. Since the Americans have come, however, this thoroughfare is degenerating into a saloon street! Even in the native quarters there are scores of little nipa huts which are selling American beer and American drinks. To illustrate the vast amount of drinking which is done, I mention the statement made to me by the agent of an American company, who told me that he had sold five thousand barrels in a single day to the various saloons. The business none in one regimental canteen, in drinks alone, was $1,700 Mexican, in a single day, and in another regiment it was $1,100. It certainly is a humiliating thing to see a beautiful street like the Escolta change in two months from a great retail show street into a line of saloons.—Exchange.

THE PARSON'S BARREL.

"Well, parson," said Deacon Goodgold to his pastor, "that last Sunday morning's sermon was number one prime; may I ask you which end of the barrel that came out of? Your barrel is like the widder's in Scripture; it never seems to give out."

"I am glad that my sermon suited you," replied the genial dominie, "for I got part of that at your house, part came from neighbor B—'s, and a part from Mrs. C—, in whose sick room I spent an hour, and one hint in it came from your boy Frank, who rode by my house on 'old gray,' without any saddle or bridle. I picked up some of the best things in that discourse during an afternoon spent in pastoral visiting."

Parson Honeywell was a shrewd man, and a faithful, godly pastor. He had not a great many books; and his family increased faster than his library. His Bible he had at his fingers' ends; it was his one great unexhausted storehouse of heavenly knowledge. But he also had a book of human knowledge second only to God's Word. In the forenoon he studied his Bible, and in the afternoon he sallied out with his horse and buggy and studied his people. He rode with his eyes open, finding illustrations—like his Divine Master—from the birds of the air, the flowers of the field and the sower or ploughman by the wayside. His mind was on his sermon all the week. If he saw a farmer letting his team "blow" under a rodeside tree, he halted and had a chat with him. He observed the farmer's style of thought, gave him a few words of golden counsel and drove on, leaving the farmer something to think of and something to love his pastor for also. If he saw a boy on his way from school, he took the lad into his buggy and asked him some questions, which set the youngster to studying his Bible when he got home. Parson Honeywell caught his congregation when they were young.

Deacon Goodgold was curious to know more about the way in which the minister had gathered up that last Sunday's sermon. "Well," replied the parson, "I was studying on the subject of trusting God in times of trial. When I went to the fountain head, for the Bible never runs dry. I studied the text thoroughly, comparing Scripture with Scripture. I prayed over it, a half-hour of prayer is worth ten hours of study, in getting light on things of God. After I had put my heads and doctrinal points on paper, I sallied out to find my practical observations among our congregation. I rode down to your house, and your wife told me her difficulties about the doctrine of assurance of faith. From there I went over to your neighbor B—'s house, is terribly cut down since he failed in business. He told me that with the breaking down of his son's health, and his own breaking down in the store, he could hardly hold his head up, and had begun to feel awfully rebellious towards his heavenly Father. I gave him a word or two of cheer, and noted down just what his difficulties were. From his store I went to see poor M. C—, who is dying slowly by consumption. She showed me a favorite flower that she had put into her window sill to catch the sunshine, and said that her flower had been a daily reminder to her about keeping her soul in the sunshine of her Saviour's countenance. Her talk braced me up and gave me a good hint. Then I called on Widow M—, who always needs a word of sympathy. Before I came away she told me that her daughter Mary could not exactly understand what it was to trust Christ, and was finding no peace, although she had been under deep conviction of sin for several weeks. I had her daughter called, and I drew from her all her points of difficulty. I read to her such texts of Scripture as applied to her case, prayed with her, and then started for home. Your boy rode by my house on the horse, who went along without a bridle, and stopped when he got to the bar that lead to the pasture."

"Before I went to bed, I worked up all the material that I had gathered during the afternoon; and I studied the solution to the difficulties of your wife and of your neighbor B—, of the troubled daughter of Widow M—, I wove the answers to your doubts and difficulties into my sermon. The cheerful experiences of good Mrs. C— in her sick chamber helped me mightily, for faith in action is worth several pounds of it in theory. I went to my pulpit last Sunday prepared that my sermon would help ten or four persons there, and if it would fit their cases, I judged that it would fit thirty or forty more cases. For human nature is pretty much alike, and sometimes when I preach a discourse that comes home close to my own heart's wants, I take it for granted that it will come to plenty of other hearts in the congregation."

"Yes, parson," said the deacon, "your sermon cut a pretty broad swath. I often feel 'thou art the man' when you hit some of my besetting sins. I have often been wanting to ask you why your sermon barrel has never given out, as poor Parson Scanty's barrel did before you came here. He always gave us about the same sermon, and as I lay back by the door, it got to be mighty thin by the time it got to my p.v."

Parson Honeywell turned pleasantly to the deacon and said, "I will you what the famous old D. Bellamy once said to a young minister who asked him how he should always have material for his sermons. The shrewd old Dr. said: 'Young man, fill up the cask, and then if you tap it anywhere, you will get a full stream; if you put in very little, it will dribble, dribble, dribble, and you may tap and get precious little after all.' I always get my people to help fill up my cask. Good afternoon, I con."—"Christian Guardian."

SAM JONESISMS.

In a lecture in Virginia recently, Sam Jones said: "Yankee Doodle" and "Dixie" are both catching tunes. One is twisted on one side of the Mason-Dixon line, and the other on the other side. The sentiment that puts Fitz Lee and Wheeler in line with the blues in blue lasts until that particular is over. Then each side goes to twisting the same old tune.

The South is like a dog whose master whipped him for biting a cat. The dog knew he could never bite the cat any more, but every time she passed he would jump at her and scare her. Now, we can't secede any more. We can jump up and growl every time something happens that we don't like. In other words, we are going to ruin our little institutions without aid or advice from 'Yankee Doodle.'

The average negro in the South is as well as the average Chinaman in San Francisco. Not one man in ten in the South has ever seen a lynching, say nothing of having taken part in it. Southerners discourage and denounce lawless hangings, except for one crime of rape. And I want to say that rape means rape, be it North or South. I never saw a lynching. If one took place within one hundred miles of me I did not know of it till I read it in the papers. Gov. Bandler is in on the elimination of ignorance by voice from the ballot-box. A characterless, moneyless, ignorant negro or white man has no more business at the polls on election day than a mule or a pig, and I mean no reflection on the two latter animals.

What do I think of 'Bob' Ingersoll? I have had my opinion pretty well expressed in an editorial comment in the Atlanta Constitution. In brief, that editorial said that Ingersoll fought in an open and made no pretensions of being other than he was. He did not profess religion to betrayal. He struck Christianity no blow while pretending to hold its doctrines. But in all his life Ingersoll never did one-half the good committed by the Briggs, the Potlows, the Lyman Abbots, and others of his kind who have done, are doing and will continue to do. "Them's my sentiments."

I suppose infidelity is progressive. Ingersoll began by doubting. Then he lied. Then he denounced. He ended up by doubting whether his doubts were doubts or not. Peace to his ashes! I did not gung with him while he lived, and I will not abuse him now that he is dead. But if he could get back to this country and fill the engagements he made while alive, I would like a front seat to hear what he has to say now, with the experience of the past few days added to his original lectures."

METHODIST PASTORS.

There was a large attendance of members at the Methodist preachers' meeting Monday morning. In the absence of Rev. W. H. Edwards, the president, Rev. R. M. Chandler, the vice-president, presided. Rev. C. C. Wertenbaker, of Isle Wight circuit, lead in prayer.

There was nothing special reported from the Churches Sunday, beyond the reception of two members at McKendree.

Rev. R. M. Beadles, of Norfolk circuit, announced that he would begin a protracted meeting this week at Ohye Branch Church.

Rev. Dr. Young, who has recently visited Dr. A. G. Brown, at Ashland, brought a message of love from him to the brethren. He said the Dr. was in great peace, abiding in the consciousness of God's love, and was perfectly resigned to the Master's will, whatever that may be.

Rev. Geo. H. McFaden, pastor of the Methodist Church at Crewe, who is on his vacation, dropped in just before the meeting closed. He reports everything in fine condition on his charge. He is visiting his father-in-law in Norfolk county.—Norfolk "Pilot."

The Rev. Wm. H. Atwell, formerly pastor of the Cumberland-Street M. E. Church, Norfolk, and now of Ashland, passed through the city a few days ago en route to the Turlington camp meeting ground, in Accomac county.

Mr. Reginald Walker, of the Richmond Y. M. C. A., was in the city yesterday on his way to Princess Anne to assist Rev. Mr. Scott in a revival meeting.—Norfolk "Pilot."

GENERAL.

The opening sermon of the next Ecumenical Conference will be preached by Bishop Galloway.

The date and place of the next Ecumenical Conference will be London, England, Sept 4-17, 1901.

Bishop Keener is reported to have said Methodism in Kentucky was set back fifty years through the neglect of her early institutions of learning.

Bishop Hurst has invited Bishop Galloway to spend Sunday with him during the Rock River Conference, and preach one of the ordination sermons.

Bishop Chas. H. Fowler says: "If the Bible be true, it matters not very much what else may be true." When asked by a reporter for his opinion of R. G. Ingersoll, he said: "I do not care to stick a spear into a dead tiger."

Rev. Dr. S. M. Buckley, writing of the Epworth International Convention, says: "Bishop Galloway made an extraordinary impression. He seems to have retained the best of the old Southern style of oratory, and added to it a considerable mastery of the conversational style which in the halls of Congress has superseded it. Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald was present and spoke in his usually attractive and suggestive style."

Bishop Morrison has entirely recovered from his recent indisposition and is again at his place in the pulpit and the field. His sermon at Inman Park recently was greatly enjoyed.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth has gone to the East to look after the mission interests in Japan and China. May the blessing of God accompany him and rest on the cause he goes to help.

Bishop Warren A. Candler will soon transfer his residence from Oxford to Atlanta. Oxford will feel the loss of the good Bishop and his family keenly. The demands on his time, however, are so great that it is necessary for him to have a more accessible location. Atlanta Methodists will welcome him with open arms.

Mrs. Hoss, wife of Dr. E. E. Hoss, editor of the "Christian Advocate," who was so painfully injured by a fall while on a visit to her son in Cuba, though still on crutches, is fast recovering and will soon be well. This is good news to her many friends.

The editor of the "Alabama Advocate" has recently visited Bishop Keener who is spending the summer at Ocean Springs, Miss. He says: "He had on a short, striped sack coat and white pants. How courteous, how kind, how gentle he is. You are drawn closer to him than ever. He takes the same interest in the Church he took when able to go in and out among the Churches. He has all the dignity, all the elegant manners, all the kindness of the antebellum Christian gentleman. You forget the Bishop in the lovable man."

The Salisbury "Advocate" says:

Bishop A. W. Wilson, senior Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, will preach at Trinity Church Sunday morning, 29th inst., at 11 o'clock. Bishop and Mrs. Wilson and Miss Wilson while here will be entertained by the family of Ex-Gov. E. E. Jackson.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

(BY DR. T. A. KERLEY.)

I see in the "St. Louis Christian Advocate" of August 8, that your Nashville correspondent, "Veritas," does me serious injustice in two respects: 1. He says that I speak for "the majority of the members of the Conference." I distinctly disclaim speaking for any one but myself. It would be presumptuous for me to speak for anyone but myself. 2. He represents me as voting for the passage of Dr. Barbee's character, solely on the ground of his resignation. I give as first in importance and order my belief in Dr. Barbee's penitence as a reason for my vote. The other reason is subordinate to this and is a part of it, and without the other would be an invasion of moral principle.

I herewith send you my circular letter and ask you to publish it as a correction of "Veritas" and a vindication of myself.

THE CIRCULAR LETTER.

In a recent statement of the Book Committee, these words are found: "The Tennessee Conference, of which Dr. Barbee is a member, after a discussion extending over more than two days, passed his character without a dissenting vote. * * * No less than four regularly constituted Church tribunals to which the Church has given jurisdiction; either over the acts or the moral character of Dr. Barbee, have unanimously held that HE WAS NOT GUILTY OF MISCONDUCT IN OFFICE." (Capitals mine.)

It is clear, from the above, that the Book Committee includes the Tennessee Conference in the four "regularly constituted Church tribunals," and in the opinion of that committee, the Tennessee Conference, with the other three, "held that he (Dr. Barbee) was not guilty of misconduct in office." Is it possible that the Book Committee was ignorant of the fact that the Tennessee Conference adopted a paper, by a vote of 167 to 33, in which occur these words: "We record our deep sorrow for the things done by our agents, and endorsed by our Book Committee, in collecting this money, feeling THAT IN THE DISPUTED POINTS THEY ARE WHOLLY INDEFENSIBLE; and we deeply regret that there has been no expression condemning the same by any official before whom the matter has been considered." If the Book Committee has been laboring in the interest of the WHOLE TRUTH and had been endeavoring to put the Tennessee Conference before the Church, in the light of its completed action in the case, it would have brought forward the action of the Conference as recorded in the foregoing words and considered this act along with the one passing the character of Dr. Barbee. Not only this, but a men honestly and earnestly seeking for the truth, they would have tried to find some reason or reasons for both acts. If there be no reasons for both acts of the Conference, its members are not only in a contradictory and ridiculous attitude, but they have been guilty of dishonesty.

I do not presume to speak for any other member of the Tennessee Conference, but for myself I wish to say that I voted for the resolutions which declare the conduct of the agents "wholly indefensible," and I also voted to pass Dr. Barbee's character. In the latter case my vote is not to be interpreted as declaring that Dr. Barbee "was not guilty of misconduct in office," for I had just voted that he was. I believed then, and I believe now, that he had committed a serious offense.

I voted as I did for the following reasons:

1. I believed that I was dealing with a penitent man. All the facts in the case at the time it was being considered, satisfied my mind that I was voting to pass the character of a man who had done wrong, but was sorry for it. It was my desire to be governed by Christian charity and to avoid all unnecessary harshness toward Dr. Barbee. I felt in my heart that I wanted to be on the side of mercy.

2. It was reported before Conference and oft repeated during the session, that if the Tennessee Conference would pass Dr. Barbee's character he would resign as Book Agent, and open up the way for a satisfactory adjustment of all the troubles. I believed that this report was well founded and felt sure, if carried out, would speedily end in an honorable adjustment of the whole matter. With this end in view, and believing as I did at the time, that Dr. Barbee regretted his course, I voted to pass his character.

I make this statement in the face of the declaration of the Book Committee "that the Tennessee Conference was capable of being a party to such an agreement or understanding would be a most unjust reflection on the integrity of the Conference." I was a party "to such an understanding," and with the additional fact, that I thought I was dealing with a penitent man, I do not see how it is "a most unjust reflection on (my) integrity." There is this comfort: The Book Committee's judgment is not infallible or final.

In the light of subsequent developments, I am convinced that I was mistaken in these matters; that Dr. Barbee was not then, and is not now, sorry for his conduct, and that if he ever intended to resign, he now has no such thought. In the light of these facts, I regret that I voted as I did in this case, and if it were to do over, I could not vote as I then did.

As a personal privilege, I will ask at the next session of the Tennessee Conference to spread the substance of this statement on the Journal of the Conference.—"St. Louis Advocate."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON X, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 3.

Text of the Lesson, Ex. iii, 10, to iv, 5—Memory Verses, 10, 11—Golden Text, I Cor. iii, 17—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

10. "And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord they set the priests in their apparel with trumpets and the Levites, the sons of Asaph, with cymbals to praise the Lord, after the ordinance of David, king of Israel." That God should dwell in the midst of Israel was His purpose from the first, and so He said to Moses concerning the tabernacle, "Let them make me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them" (Ex. xxv, 8), and when the tabernacle was finished He filled it with His glory, as He did also the temple (Ex. xl, 33, 34; I Kings viii, 10, 11). He would fill the church with His glory now if she was wholly given up to Him, and so He would every individual believer, and He would be glorified in us if we were willing.

11. "And all the people shouted with a great shout when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid." In each of the 26 verses of the one hundred and thirty-sixth psalm the refrain is, "For His mercy endureth forever," and the first verse is, Oh, give thanks unto the Lord, for "He is good." It is probable that this was one of the songs they sang. We would do well to make at least the first verse our daily song. God is good and God is love in all that He does. Righteous also is He in all His ways, and it becometh us ever to praise Him. The foundation of the house of the Lord makes us think of the silver sockets on which the boards of the tabernacle stood, the silver being the ransom money which the numbered ones paid as an atonement for their souls (Ex. xxx, 15, 16; xxxviii, 25-27).

12. "But many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice, and many shouted aloud for joy." In Hag. ii, 3, it is said that this seemed as nothing in comparison with the first house. The old people, looking back and thinking of the past glory, wept as they remembered that which had been, while the younger people probably rejoiced in anticipation of a temple for the glory of God. Ezekiel had said that God would do better unto them than at their beginnings (Ezek. xxxvi, 11), and it may have been faith in God that led to the shout of gladness for joy.

13. "So that the people could not discern the noise of the shouting for the noise of the weeping, but the voice of the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off." There was much noise, and it was heard at a great distance, but it was very confused. Missionaries have gone into all lands, but there is often a confused testimony just as it is in what we call the home lands. There is a great need of a clear, joyful testimony that Christ died for our sins; that He is risen from the dead and alive forever more, ready to receive all who will come to Him, and that He is coming again to reign in righteousness and subdue all things unto Himself.

1. "Now when the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that the children of the captivity builded the temple unto the Lord God of Israel." The great adversary, the devil, is ever going about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour (I Pet. v, 8), and he has had long practice, for he has been at it ever since he began in Eden to tempt Eve, but our Lord Jesus has taught us that he may be overcome by the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. In Rev. xii, 11, we read of some who overcame by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony and who loved not their lives unto the death.

2. "Then they came to Zerubbabel and to the chief of the fathers and said unto them, Let us build with you, for we seek your God as ye do, and we do sacrifice unto Him since the days of Esharhaddon, king of Assur, which brought us up hither." This king is mentioned by name in II Kings xix, 37, and the people are mentioned in II Kings xvii, 24. As to their worship, it is said that they feared not the Lord, but while they had a kind of fear they still worshiped their own gods (II Kings xvii, 33, 34, 41). They talked fairly, and their request sounded well, but their hearts were not right with God. They were the adversaries of God and of His people. Cain worshiped God in his own way, but he was really an adversary of God and of his brother, who worshiped God in truth.

3. "Ye have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God, but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as King Cyrus, the king of Persia, hath commanded us." Although this seemed unkind, it was not so, but was on the part of Zerubbabel and Joshua real faithfulness to God. A great difficulty and disgrace and dishonor to God in the church today is her conformity to the world and the way in which she seeks the favor of the enemies of God in what she calls the Lord's work. Because she is in partnership with Sodom she cannot know the blessing of the Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth.

4. "Then the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah and troubled them in building." People can say and do very hard and cruel and wicked things when Satan gets control of them, and the most wicked and cutting and killing things are not always said by the ungodly, but by those who profess to be the Lord's people and perhaps are. I have known those who have been much used of God allow themselves to be used of the devil to try and hinder the Lord's work by misjudging, and saying unkind and untrue things of the Lord's servants. Our Lord has told us that we shall have tribulation and shall suffer persecution, and He has said, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you."

5. "And hired counselors against them to frustrate their purpose all the days of Cyrus, king of Persia, even until the reign of Darius, king of Persia." So did they who stood by the enemies, and even the Lord himself, and the Lord himself was hindered in them, for a cause that was in themselves was working and incensing the work to them by the Lord's power, but it was only for a time, for the work was required and the building was finished and dedicated to God with great joy (Chapter ii, 11-16). Let us never be discouraged because of our enemies, for if God be for us who can be against us? The work may seem to be hindered, but when God says, "I will work and who shall hinder it?" (Isa. xlii, 13) why can we be discouraged? The Lord will perfect that which concerns us (Isa. xlviii, 3), therefore we will wait for joy.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

People For the Week Beginning Sept. 3, "Holding Up the Pastor's Hands"—Text, Ex. xvii, 1-13.

"When Moses held up his hand, Israel prevailed, and Aaron and Hur staid up his hands."

Amelek had attacked the poorly armed Israelites, and it seemed as if there could be no deliverance for the Hebrews. But while the armed men went out to repel the attack Moses went up on a hill, where he could oversee the fight and yet be isolated from the camp and in quiet pray to his God. In earnest entreaty he held up his hands and asked Jehovah for victory. While he prayed the Israelites gained, but his arms grew tired and as his hands hung down the enemy recovered the ground lost. Moses' two helpers took a stone, and, placing their master upon it, held his arms up, standing one on either side. Then the army of God's people succeeded in completely routing the enemy.

The helpers are essential to success at the present time. Moses may plan and pray and lead the people, but unless Aaron and Hur do their part there will be small chance of victory. In too many churches the great burden is left to rest on the pastor with little real help from those who should be his helpers.

In the visitation of the sick, the aged, strangers, those who do not attend services and those who are seeking God there is need of much assistance. In many places deaconesses are helping a great deal. This is good as far as it goes, but does not answer all the requirements of the case. There is need that the members of the league and church show an interest in these and call upon them and give sympathy and aid. The pastor can do much, but he often finds people whom he cannot reach who could be readily influenced by some young man or woman.

Another way that the pastor can be most effectively helped is by regular attendance at prayer and class meetings. If it is a preaching service, he can manage very well by thorough preparation. No preparation on his part, however careful, can insure a live prayer meeting. The people must be present and take part interestedly to make it of any value. Hold up his hands from strength.

In the matter of greeting strangers at church service he needs help. It is impossible for him to see and speak to every one. Notice the unfamiliar faces and give the visitor a cordial word of welcome, find out if he is a newcomer or only a transient visitor. Introduce him to the pastor and ask him to attend other services.

Do your own work and it will greatly relieve the overtaxed pastor and give new impetus to the work of the church and the cause of God.

LITTLE THINGS.

OD has no end of material
For poets, priests and kings,
But what He needs is volunteers
To do the LITTLE things.

There are many men who are ready
To lead in battle and strife;
But very few are willing to do
The LITTLE things of life.

Naaman was told to wash and be clean,
But he turned aside with hate,
For he thought a man with his disease
Must needs do some things great.

The widow's mite was a LITTLE thing
From a money point of view;
But He who reads our inmost hearts
Sees more than mortals do.

Great deeds receive reward below,
And earth's applause is given;
But LITTLE things are seen by God
From His watch-tower high in heaven.

HONEY FROM THE ROCK.

AW can only condemn;
Love can save.

Hunger is not a critic.

Love suffers long, and says nothing.

The praying heart makes the willing hand.

Moses gives precept, but Christ gives practice.

Faith in God does not mean credulity toward men.

It is the black life that makes death look dark.

Talebearers furnish the fuel for the fire of strife.

Light thoughts are often heavy enough to drag men down.

The first two words in the Lord's Prayer contain all the rest.

The flower of holiness blooms in a swamp as long as the sun kisses it.

Filling the church is a more common aim than filling the congregation.

If you are in Christ, you are as He is.
"the same today and forever."

Church membership may be a fiction, but following Christ is always a fact.

Christ loves our Lazarus too well to send him back from His presence to ours.

Sermons, of themselves, will no more save men, than pitchers will quench thirst.

The names in the Lamb's Book of Life are not copied from the church register.

God has to take some people out of the world, to set their money in circulation.

Some folks think they are Christians, simply because they want to go to heaven.

The snows of winter are welcome when they come down from the mountain in August.

"The preacher said so!"—Yes, but perhaps he didn't know any better,—what does God say?

If the humiliated Christ could heal and bless, how much more can He do so now He is glorified?

When you talk about the check-book of faith, you must remember that God's bank is for deposit, also.

We shall never really sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, until we get closer together in earthly places in our churches.

INCOMPETENT CRITICS.

MR. NONOSE:—"I hear lots of people talk about perfume in flowers, but I never saw any perfume yet. I don't believe in it. They must be a lot of fanatics."

MR. NARYEYE:—"I have investigated the subject of
'sur light' very carefully and find it is all a humbug.
There is no such thing."

MR. EARLESS (talking on his fingers):—"I never could understand how people can get so crazy over 'music'.
Why, there's no such thing as 'music'."

MR. NUMBSOUL:—"Religion? Bah! There's nothing in it."

LIFE IN LITTLE NUTSHELLS.

BY CHARLES FREDERIC GOSS.

"YOU'RE OFF YOUR TROLLEY!"

"WITHOUT ME YE CAN DO NOTHING."

THE car stopped moving, and the lights went out.

"You're off your trolley," shouted a newsboy.

The motorman stood stock still. The passengers held their papers so that the light from the street lamps might shed a feeble glow upon the latest news from Sampson's fleet, and the conductor seized the trolley rope, leaned far back over the splash board of the car and tried again and again to throw the wheel onto the wire.

"You're off your trolley!" shouted twenty other newsboys, who had joined the first one.

"Shut up," roared the conductor.

Can anything in the world be more helpless than a street car when it is "off its trolley?" It is idler than "a painted ship upon a painted ocean."

If a street car could think and had just as much sense as some men I know, it would say to itself as it went whizzing along the iron rails: "I am a very highly endowed street car. The power that resides in this motor under my platform is something colossal. I can go anywhere. I can do anything."

Suddenly the little wheel slips and it comes to a dead standstill.

Oh—the power is not in the motor after all; but in the wire!

A friend of mine by the name of Snodgrass, had been moving steadily and swiftly along a prosperous course. Having been born and reared in a Christian atmosphere, he became a member of the church, lived a consistent life and day by day drew into his soul that divine energy which streams into every immortal spirit which is "en rapport" with the living God.

At length the approbation of his friends and a protracted experience of success in all his undertakings produced a quiet complacency which eventually developed into vanity, then egotism and finally pride.

"I am a very highly endowed man. The power that resides under this hat of mine is something colossal. I can go anywhere. I can do anything."

Just about that very time, the lights all went out, his business fell off, his friends forsook him and poor Snodgrass came to a dead standstill.

A kind old man who had been watching him, came to his office one day, and said to him in a quiet way, "Snodgrass, you are off your trolley."

And he was!

Did you think you were a "storage battery," charged with a fixed amount of the electricity of life and warranted to go at any time and in all places?

A man lives a life of sweetness, happiness, hope and power, only by being in close and vital connection with the Divine!

Just in proportion as he reaches up holy hands and lays hold of the everlasting arm of God, the higher life surges into him.

The moment he lets go, he begins to come to a standstill. He may have acquired momentum enough to keep him moving for a while; but sooner or later the lights die out and progress ceases.

Do you think that this is "poetry," "sentiment," "moonshine?"

So did the trolley car!

I think that it is truth—the changeless truth of life. I think that Christendom is full of blasted and withered lives, today, because so many men "are off their trolleys."

Great preparations are in progress for the celebration of the opening of the twentieth century. The industrial world will have its Paris exposition, intended to surpass all previous efforts of a similar kind.

Then the cash offering of $20,000,000 will come easily. How much it needed—old debts, new enterprises at home, in the foreign fields, schools, hospitals, homes. Let us consecrate ourselves wholly to God's service and then all our possessions dedicate to His work.

Not what a man is able to do, but what he actually accomplishes, is the measure of his practical value in any sphere of action.

It is not possible to say that the

But now I cast that queer sense
And sorer shame aside;
Such dread of sin was indolence,
Such aim at heaven was pride.

I step, I mount, when I was led.
 Men count a . . .
 I know them, yet thou . . .
 I love his necessity

EN ROUTE TO BRAZIL.

(BY BISHOP E. R. HENDRIX.)

One of the five days which I was able to spend in London before sailing for Brazil was the Fourth of July. The stars and stripes were to be seen flying from many hotels and business houses, and sometimes in company with the unionjack of Great Britain. I attended the reception of our able Ambassador at the spacious Carlton House Terrace, where the crush was as great as on New Year's Day at the White House. I saw some leading men of Parliament present, among them Sir William Harcourt, until recently the Liberal leader. Lord Rosebery, when Prime Minister, used to recognize, in this pleasant way, our Independence Day. The perfect sincerity of the good feeling now existing between England and America I was better able to gauge when present in the evening at the dinner of the American Society at the Hotel Cecil, on which occasion the flags of the two countries hung side by side, and, after toasts to the Queen and the President, the national anthems were heartily sung by the "four hundred" Americans and Englishmen amid much enthusiasm. Excellent speeches were made by Ambassador Choate, Senator Lodge, Mark Twain, Dr. Butler, the Master of Trinity College (Cambridge) Cardinal Vaughan, Lord Dartmouth, a member of the Privy Council and a descendant of the Lord Dartmouth in the Cabinet of George III., together with leading noblemen who hold high rank in the army and navy as well as eminent positions on the bench. The folly of the Ministers of George III. was as heartily censured by the Englishmen as by Americans, but all believed that the separation of the American colonies was inevitable and for the best. England has never repeated her folly of oppressing her colonies, while the very independence of America has made possible an ally in carrying out the manifest destiny of the Anglo-Saxon people for the world's enlightenment. There was great candor of speech on both sides mixed with great good humor which was by no means confined to the contribution of the author of "Innocents Abroad." Mark Twain railed the English on their inability to speak correct English, which was taken in all good humor. Lord Dartmouth's indifference to his final "g's", and his soft and pleasant voice would have secured him easy recognition as a typical Southerner. The better class of traveled Englishmen are outspoken as to the influence of American habits of speech and thought upon the English of today, especially in correcting a certain brusqueness of manner. The Archbishop of Canterbury deeply touched his clergy on asking them to pardon anything of the kind in the relations with his brethren, and "to forgive the old schoolmaster."

It was a matter of much regret that I could not accept the kind invitation to take part in the interesting exercises attending the reopening of City Road Chapel on July 7th, and the unveiling of the memorial tablet of Dr. Moulton. but I had to leave London before 9 o'clock of the same day to take my steamer for Rio. I found on visiting City Road Chapel the great improvements which were being made in the historic building called "Wesley's Chapel," and saw the noble tablet to be unveiled on the morrow. I was glad to see the marble column bearing the name M. E. Church, South, which was erected through Bishop Keener some years ago. Happy is universal Methodism in having such custodians for this venerable and historic pile, now so rich in monuments and tablets, as our British Methodists with their reverence for the past.

A most interesting meeting was that of the Stationing Committee, which I was invited to attend. The President of the Conference, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, was in the chair, with the ex-President, Dr. Watkinson, at his right, as were other former Presidents. Before them were seated the Chairmen of the 34 Districts of the British Conference. Their work was to station in less than 900 charges some two thousand Methodist preachers. Their method would make any American presiding elder feel at home, as some of the chairmen so strongly commended one or two of their preachers as finally to have "to take them back on that selfsame recommendation," like the Irish coachman was reinstated. All this work, while done in absolute secrecy two weeks before the Conference, is subject to revision at Conference, but the number of changes then made is not very great.

Dining with the President and several ex Presidents, I was delighted to know that over $3,500,000 of the $5,000,000 Twentieth Century Fund had been subscribed. It was frankly stated that while much hard work would be necessary to secure it all, yet they expected to raise it and possibly more. It has come not in large gifts, but in many gifts both from within and without the Wesleyan Societies. Ministers and laymen have worked together. The spiritual life of the people as well as of the preachers has been quickened, and the offering has been made religiously. While the different objects have appealed to all classes, and the thorough organization of the circuits (our English brethren avoid small and weak stations as a tendency toward Congregationalism and chronic weakness) has done much, yet it is the intelligent co-operation of the preachers which has made possible this great result. Large districts and large circuits well manned have been found most important in securing all the great results attempted in many similar movements. The chairman of the district has usually been the pastor (jointly with one or more preachers) of a leading circuit also. But the territory is compact, the means of communication good, and the spirit of co-operation all that could be desired.

To my brethren in the ministry in America—North and South—I cannot tell how much our British brethren look to us, under more favorable conditions, to sustain and bear aloft the banner of aggressive Methodism, and to use to the utmost this Twentieth Century Movement to equip ourselves for the great service which American Methodism must render. A hybrid Methodism means in time a mongrel Methodism. In aping other Churches we may lose what is distinctive without attaining is best suited to some other Church. As I see our great universal Methodism at the close of this century I am more profoundly impressed than ever with the unfinished mission of Methodism to the human race.—Nashville Advocate."

VICTORIA'S SHORTCOMINGS.

Britishers Not Entirely Satisfied With a Court That Is Expensive and Invisible.

For more than a generation the English queen has remained in close retirement. Irish soil during the whole of that period has not been touched by the sovereign foot. London is visited by her majesty at long intervals, and then only for a day or at most two days at a time. The queen dislikes London. Her health suffers from the murky atmosphere. Royal pageant and pomp, unless under most exceptional circumstances, that stimulate the imagination of democratic masses, with whom monarchy is an abstraction, have long been renounced, owing to the queen's advancing years, widowhood and seclusion. A few Scottish peasants, the inhabitants of Cowes and of half a dozen Berkshire villages are the only Britons who occasionally enjoy a sight of the queen of England. State visits to theaters and operas have long been abandoned by the court of St. James, although occasional patronage of leading companies of players has recently prevented an entire rupture between the sovereign and the drama. The same may be said about music, art, literature and the navy. Even during the jubilee celebrations the queen was compelled to deny herself the pleasure of reviewing her fleet at Spithead and delegated the pleasant and historic task of inspecting the warships at Spithead to the heir apparent. Notwithstanding the jubilee celebrations and the splendid tribute of passionate loyalty from far and near, candor compels me to declare that, although the republican question no longer exists as a political issue and is not likely to show its head in the present reign, traders and wage earners complain bitterly of the effects of the seclusion enforced on her majesty by her desolate position and her advanced age. More than $111,000,000 have been granted to her majesty by her faithful people, and workmen ask themselves and each other more often than is generally supposed what are the advantages accruing to them from a court that is both costly and invisible?—"If the Queen Had Abdicated," in Harper's Magazine For August.

THE YOUNG GIRL'S HEALTH.

Mrs. S. T. Rorer Directs Her as to Dress, Diversions and Diet.

"A young girl should be taught to carry her body erect, holding her abdomen in and putting the ball of her foot first on the ground," writes Mrs. S. T. Rorer on "The Best Diet For Bloodless Girls" in the August Ladies' Home Journal. "This is of the utmost importance to keep the organs in good position. The clothing should be loose, light, warm and suspended from the shoulders. Skirts should be made of light material, either wool or silk; the stockings fastened to the waist by means of supporters. The one skirt worn buttoned to the bottom of the waist, with an outside dress supported from the shoulders, should form the necessary clothing. The shoes should be made to fit the feet, with broad soles and low, broad heels. Gloves should be sufficiently loose not to stop the circulation at the wrists. A short walk each day may be taken, but fatigue should never be produced. Far better to spend most of the day out of doors in the hammock or a steamer chair.

"Early to bed should be the first motto. In the morning after a sponge bath with a thorough rub she should drink half a glass of comfortably hot water. When appetite is felt, a soft boiled egg, a piece of whole wheat bread thoroughly baked and well buttered and a little while after a glass of cool water, not iced, may be taken. The noonday meal should consist of a good, clear beef soup, a broiled steak or roasted beef, a little boiled rice, a lettuce salad with olive oil dressing and some simple dessert, such as whipped or Bavarian cream. After dinner rest should be taken in the open air, either in the hammock or steamer chair, and without reading or heavy mental occupation. For supper beef or mutton broiled and good whole wheat bread well buttered. At the close of this meal she should take slowly about two teaspoons of olive oil and masticate it before swallowing."

CORONIUM.

The Newest of the Elements Recently Discovered by Italian Scientists.

The multiplication of the elements goes on apace.

In the chemical sense an element is a substance which, unless you add some other substance to it, will produce nothing but itself. Thus iron, if kept uncombined with anything else, will yield only iron and iron alone. It is a simple body, which cannot be resolved into anything simpler.

In 1874, when Professor Josiah P. Cooke, Jr., of Harvard college published his well known work on the new chemistry, there were 63 elementary substances certainly known to chemists. In 1891, according to a list given by Professor Ira Remsen of the Johns Hopkins university, there were 67. Since then helium and argon have been added to the list of elements—two gases present in the air in minute quantities and remarkable for their indisposition to combine with other elements—and more recently the discovery of still another gas of the same group has been announced, which it is proposed to call metargon.

Argon and helium have been obtained from the gaseous products of mineral springs in England. It is to Italy, however, that the newest of the elements must be credited, upon which has been bestowed the name coronium. The detection of this substance was made known three weeks ago by a communication to the French Academy of Sciences by Messrs. R. Nasini, F. Anderlini and R. Salvadori, three Italian chemists and physicists, who have been engaged for some time in the spectroscopic study of the gaseous emanations from various volcanic districts of Italy.

The new element was discovered in this way: If the corona, or halo, of the sun be examined through the spectroscopic, a definite green line appears in the spectrum. This line is known to men of science as 1474K. It was once supposed to be due to the aurora, but this view has been abandoned, and the line has lately been regarded as indicating the presence of an elementary substance in the solar corona, which must be lighter than hydrogen and did not exist on the earth, since the green line had never been found in the spectrum of any terrestrial body. Now, however, the coronal line has been found for the first time upon the earth. In studying with the aid of the spectroscopic the volcanic gases arising from the solfatera of Pozzuoli the line is plainly revealed, and the inference is that the same element which manifests its presence in the solar corona by this green line must be present in these products of Italian mineral springs and will eventually be isolated as coronium—the lightest substance known to man.

A writer in the London Times, commenting on this interesting discovery, predicts that other new elements will be found associated with coronium.—New York Sun.

Easy Way to Handle Fodder.

One season when I had a great deal of fodder to feed at quite a distance from the stack I nailed some sheep crate pickets across the wheelbarrow, as shown in the illustration, and using a small rope to bind it on I found I could move large loads of fodder. This came very handy for moving fodder when it was not thought advisable to employ the team. It is better to move it this way than by the arm load, says a correspondent of the the Iowa Homestead.

THIS COLLEGE

is now located in its own grand new building, n. e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the state, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

OUR DUTY AS A NATION.

What Will Be the Effect of Our Final and Complete Victory Over Spain?

Many of us deplored the Spanish war, many of us now look forward with anxious solicitude concerning the effect of victory on the victor, but still as we survey the movements of human history in the large we cannot fail to see in all that is occurring the inevitable grist of the mills of the gods and the irrefragable judgments of the Weltgericht. Spain and the middle ages could not tarry in the west. We, on the other hand, could not shut ourselves within the walled gardens of our pleasant domesticity and shun responsibilities that the commerce and intercourse of the larger world exact of those who stand for order and equal justice in the affairs of men.

While, then, we may well be called upon now to readjust our conception of national purpose and duty to the new order and our new position, we dare not be false to ourselves or our past. Our charter and creed we must interpret, if no longer in the letter, then all the more scrupulously in the spirit. However the letter and the form may fade and vanish away, there are some things that must needs abide. A nation proclaiming government of the people and for the people cannot impose on conquered peoples a foreign sway or one that finds its supreme motive in the benefits accruing to others than the governed.

It is character that counts in nations as in individuals. Only in loyalty to the old can we serve the new, only in understanding of the past can we interpret and use the present.—Benjamin Ide Wheeler in Atlantic For August.

Lying by the Clock.

Many a man who would not for any money go into the kitchen at 7 o'clock in the morning and say to the cook: "Do you know it is half past 7 o'clock? Well, it is, and more—it's just 35 minutes past 7—and my train goes in 25 minutes!" will quietly and in cold blood put the clock up to telling this lie for him. This isn't fair to the clock. It is bad enough when a man, or even a woman, in a sudden gust of anger swears at a tramp or peddler or irritating caller with a slamming door or a banging window. That is done in a quick frenzy of temper and has sometimes the excuse of great provocation. But lying by the clock is always done with calm deliberation and malice aforethought, and it is persevered in day by day. It's too mean on the clock. Vocal as the big clock at Dr. Blimber's, speaking to poor little Paul, these martyred clocks should sit heavy on the conscience of the teacher, saying all day long in staccato tones: "My, mas, ter, makes, me, lie. My, mas, ter, makes, me, lie."—Robert J. Burdette in Ladies' Home Journal For August.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED ?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Heavenly Recognition

A LESSON IN BROTHERLY LOVE AND ITS RESULTS.

DEACON BROWN stood thoughtfully at the corner under a spreading black locust. He cast his eyes expectantly up the street, while he wiped the perspiration from his head. The red bandana was replaced in his capacious pocket, his hat upon his head and he kept his position in the shade.

The deacon was a good man, but like all mortals he had his faults. Not a few of his townsmen said of him, "A better man never lived." Many good deeds have been passed to his credit in the history of the town, and let us hope he had many treasures laid up in heaven. His figure, as he stood there that warm summer morning, suggested, however, the personality of one with a stern will.

Presently the minister, for whom he had been waiting, came near him.

"Good morning, Brother Brown."

"Good morning, Brother Markham."

"Brother Markham," said the deacon, "are you in a very great hurry this morning?"

"Not especially," answered the preacher. "I'm on my way to visit a poor sick woman, but there's plenty of time for a brotherly chat."

And the two, arm-in-arm, went down the narrow pavement.

"Brother Markham," began the deacon, "I have just been thinking and reading about a subject which affords me no little food for thought."

"Indeed, Brother Brown, I daresay it pertains to the subject of the kingdom."

"You're right, sir, it does. But it contains an individual interest for myself. It is the subject of 'Heavenly Recognition,'"

"Very fruitful subject, sir."

"Yes, it has been my lot in the dealings of an all-wise Providence to suffer much bereavement of loved ones. First a dear daughter, then a son, a sister, and last my own affectionate wife and now, I myself, from day to day, approach nearer the grave. Shall I know my dear ones and friends over there? is what I desire to know."

"I believe we will know all our friends and loved ones," the preacher assured him.

"What a precious thought it is. I, too, believe we shall. But I should like to hear a sermon on the subject, which will confirm me in my belief. Could you not give us a discourse on the subject next Sabbath?"

The preacher thought for several moments.

"Very well, very well; I shall endeavor to preach on that subject next Sunday."

With that, the minister stopped to speak to John Smith, another member of his charge and shook his hand cordially. But the deacon passed on down the pavement without recognizing this brother in the church. There had been a difference between him and Smith a number of years ago, and each, since that time, had allowed the other to pass, on the street and elsewhere, without speaking.

Did the pastor know this? Yes; and the repetition of the unbrotherly act so chilled his spirits at this time that he scarcely said another word as he and the deacon walked on farther. Presently he turned into the humble little home of Widow Roney, bidding the deacon good day.

What a joy shone in the sick widow's face as she saw her pastor approach her bedside that morning. And she reached out her thin work-scarred hand eager to feel his warm sympathetic grasp. Had any of the flock been to see her? No. Only the dear Mrs. Jones, whose worldly importance was no greater than the widow's. Dear old Mrs. Jones, she, too, had sorrows. She attended services regularly, but no one excepting the pastor and his wife ever recognized her. O, how times had changed! It had not always been this way.

"And how she does long to be free of this world, and go home to heaven where there isn't anything but love and fellowship," said the widow in her weak voice. "I long for it, myself. Her and me talks about the 'home prepared' a good deal, now-a-days."

The minister's countenance was sad. A congregation with so little of brotherly love in it was to be mourned and prayed over.

He read from his Bible, which he always carried with him, and prayed with the poor soul.

"Heavenly recognition," "heavenly recognition," the words kept recurring mechanically as he made his way towards home. This was strange, for his thoughts were mainly taken up with the shortcomings of his flock, especially their coldness toward one another.

The Ladies' Church Society met with Mrs. Wm. White that afternoon.

Let it be said with regret that it was not a representative body; half of the members habitually absented themselves on account of a personal grudge against the president, Mrs. Small, who, it was claimed, perpetrated an offense against these absentees once in the history of the society. The pastor was there. His countenance was sad. And after he had opened the meeting with prayer, he excused himself and departed.

"Heavenly recognition—" There must be a message in these words for the pastor. He shut himself up in his study at home to make preparation for next Sabbath's discourse.

Deacon Brown spent the afternoon around the store fronts, taking great pains to publish the subject of Rev. Mr. Markham's sermon. Soon the village in general was informed; at least in the course of the week. For the reason that every one finds the subject of recognition in heaven an interesting one, this item of news went fast. The gossips took the matter in hand, and no one could be found who did not know what would be the theme at Rev. Markham's church next Sabbath. So much for Deacon Brown's aptness in selecting a popular topic. Next Sabbath, the church was crowded as never since years.

"My brethren," said the preacher, "it was my intention all the week until this morning, to preach on the subject of 'Heavenly Recognition.' But I stand before you forbidden by the Spirit to preach on such a theme. My text this morning is found in I. John 3:14, and my subject will be, instead, 'Earthly Recognition.'"

Blank surprise was written on every heretofore expectant countenance. Deacon Brown seemed especially disappointed, and he cleared his throat nervously and with apparent vexation. Mrs. Wm. White, from her seat near the front, looked across the aisle to Mrs. Young, arching her eyebrows significantly. But the minister proceeded with his discourse, and his audience seemed intent upon hearing what promised something possibly sensational.

"We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

Thus the minister read his text. Then taking his eyes from off the book and looking at the audience, he repeated the remainder of the verse. Tears gathered in his eyes. "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." My brethren, how can we hope to participate in heavenly recognition of the saints in the next world if, through malice or pride we fail to practice earthly recognition before our transition? "He that hateth his brother is a murderer, and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Again, "whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Also, "Have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons." With the last he seemed to address the women.

The preacher drove home the truth with every sentence. Not a few tearful eyes followed him in his movements about the pulpit. It was easily seen that his words were uttered with telling power. Indeed, the Spirit was in the house that morning, and He left a lasting impress upon the hearts of the people.

Rev. Markham closed his remarks thus: "No, my brother, my sister, speak not of such impractical things as 'heavenly recognition,' when you pass a brother on the street without speaking to him. And my sister, when you allow a good woman and child of God, though poor, to come into service and pass out unnoticed by you; or when a poor widow is permitted to languish unattended on a sick bed. Oh, may we be more careful to exercise a Christlike kindness and affection toward our brethren; and then we shall begin to enjoy a foretaste of heavenly recognition here below."

The choir sang, and the congregation was dismissed. But the larger part of the crowd stood in the pews and indulged in hearty handshakes. The sermon on "Earthly Recognition," had had its effect. Many sought out old Mrs. Jones, the lone widow. Mrs. Small's pew was crowded by several members of the disgruntled element of the Ladies' Society, not a few promising to attend the next meeting. Deacon Brown managed to get to where John Smith was standing, and the two embraced on the spot. Two ladies of the fashionable type made an appointment to visit the sick Mrs. Roney in her cabin on the following day.

The pastor lingered at the door behind the crowd, now dispersing. The deacon stood by him.

"Ah, that's better," said the latter. "I now feel sure of the 'heavenly recognition.'"

"Thank God!" responded the pastor—Ram's Horn.

Educated natives in Japan and India are beginning to realize the value of Christian home life. A Japanese gentleman lately remarked: "The religion that makes the purest and happiest home will always be the best for any country. If Christianity does that, it is the right religion for Japan.—Ex.

"BLAMELESS."

Lord, is it possible that I Unblamed shall be?—
Is there, indeed, a stainless robe
Prepared for me?

When Thou didst leave Thy throne of light,
My sin to bear,
Didst Thou of Thine own righteousness
Bring me a share?

Shall I who, of myself, have naught
Or wise, or right,
Stand unproved and faultless in

Yes, Lord, all things are possible
To Thy rich grace;—
And I, O on I, shall walk in white

WESLEY'S SERVICE TO ENGLAND.

The interesting ceremonies connected with the Wesley Commemoration appeal to a far wider audience than that embraced within the limits of the denomination which calls itself by Wesley's venerable name. They also appeal to many who would hesitate to accept the particular theology which Wesley held, and who can no longer find much interest in the controversy between Calvinist and Arminian. England, as a whole, is as truly interested in Wesley as in Shakespeare; and it may well be doubted whether in the long course of her history any one person has ever influenced her life in so direct, palpable, and powerful a way as has John Wesley. We do not forget, of course, that Wesley was but one of a number of religious teachers and reformers whom we identify with the movement toward what we might call "vital religion." We do not forget the gentle poet of the movement, William Cowper, nor the sweet hymnist, Charles Wesley, nor the wonderful preacher, George Whitefield. We must not even forget contemporary movements in other lands, which we are apt to lose sight of under the great stress of the French Revolution, but which have a vital union with the English Methodist Revival. But when all is said and done John Wesley remains the one supreme and towering figure, a characteristic product of England, and one of the noblest and most saintly of her sons.

If it be asked what is Wesley's supreme title to fame, the answer, we think, would be that he arrested the moral and spiritual decline of England, and that he was the chief agent in the renewal of her inward and spiritual life. Though the story has been often told, we doubt whether any person who who has either no vivid imagination or no very intimate acquaintance with the history of the time can realize how rotten was the condition of England in the middle of the last century. There seemed to be scarcely a healthy piece of social tissue. An agnostic Whiggism had degraded the Church from a spiritual organization into a mere political mechanism; it had, as Cowper later on put it, made—

"The symbols of atoning grace
An office-key, a pick-lock to a place."

The hungry sheep looked up and were not fed; half the parishes in England were void of spiritual life, many were sunk in the lowest vice without restraint or reproof. The governing classes were perhaps even feebler and more corrupt than in the reign of the second Charles. Sir George Trevelyan, in his admirable work on the American Revolution, has shown how England's failure in her struggle with her colonies was in no small degree due to her immorality and corruption; and that was when a distinct upward movement had begun. What must have been the condition of a quarter of a century before? It seemed as though all the purity and earnestness of the English-speaking folk must henceforth be sought on the otherside of the Atlantic where simple and healthy puritan life had made its home. The new industry, ill-understood and unregulated, was making slaves of the poor, while the rich were living in practical atheism, and to sneer at religion was the part of a man of fashion. Englishmen were being enriched by slavery and the slave trade, to the horrors of which they were utterly callous. Gibbons and Adam Smith have described for us the learned ignorance and blank indifference of the universities. Horace Walpole has given us an insight into the lives of the upper classes and the morals (or no morals) of public men. It seemed as though English society was doomed to decadence.

Humanly speaking, we may say that such decadence would have ensued had it not been for the new movement of which Wesley was the leading religious and moral expression. It may seem at first sight strange to associate his name with those of such different persons as Richardson, Goldsmith, and Rosseau. And yet the philosophic observer, who, like the zoologist, must seek below the surface for real affinities, knows that all represented, each in his way, the movement from routine and dead formalism to sincerity and life. As Rousseau roused Europe from dead beliefs to living ideas, so did Wesley rouse England from death in "trespasses and sins" to a new life of divine possibilities. What the mechanical morals of sleepy Anglican rectors could not do for England, this holy man with his soul aflame with a sacred zeal and love accomplished. Think of those poor degraded miners with the tears making white channels down their black faces, and their hearts full of the new teaching that the world was the outcome of divine love, and themselves the objects of divine care. It was as truly a revelation to them as to the weary slaves of ancient Rome. It transformed life for them, for it began at the right end, by making obedience to moral law easy in the light of Christian grace and love. Moreover, no spiritual renewal stops at purely spiritual results; it overflows the whole nature and tends to produce good fathers and good citizens as well as saints. We owe it largely to the Methodist movement that, while the French could only renew their outward structure by violent revolution, the English could transform theirs by peaceable means. Yet Wesley was no quietist, no retiring ascetic. He faced the evils of his time as boldly as Savonarola. Like his contemporary, Dr. Johnson, he was a Troy, who, at times, was consumed with wrath at the existence of social wrongs, and wrote and spoke as a kind of fervid political evangelist. He denounced slavery as the "sum of all villainies," and this in the age when the pious John Newton was enjoying "sweet" converse with the Lord in the hold of a slaver. It is grossly unfair to connect the movement of "vital" religion with "other worldliness," though we may admit the partial impeachment urged by George Eliot in her analysis of Dr. Young. The names of Howard, Wilberforce, Elizabeth Fry, Zachary Macaulay, rise in judgment against so false an assertion. To tell the truth, English reforming zeal has mainly come from two quarters,—from evangelical religion, and from an earnest and sincere, though often crude and aggressive "free-thought." But assuredly the father of vigorous social reform was John Wesley; he labored and others entered into his labors.

But Wesley and his co-workers produced not only a great moral, but also a great intellectual, change in England. We doubt if what the Germans call the "weltanschauung" of a nation was ever so rapidly transformed as was that of England in the last century. Think of a change from the aridity of the Deistic controversy and the hollow brilliancy of Bolingbroke and Chesterfield to the green pastures and still waters of the "Lyrical Ballads," and ask yourself what could have wrought such a marvellous resurrection from the dead. We cannot perhaps explain this, for the spirit, in the last analysis, moveth where it listeth, but we do not see that the new literature and thought sprang from a new soil, watered by a new faith which once more saw the world to be divine, and men to be vitality related in social bonds forged by God himself. We do not suppose that the zealous converts of Methodism and the earnest preachers of the evangelical revival could appreciate the fairy loveliness of the poetry of Coleridge, or the bare grandeur of Wordsworth's sonnets. But we do say that each shared the new life, that each had passed from the desert of mechanism and formality into the promised land of freedom and truth. We also cannot fail to connect Wesley's movement with that later Oxford movement, so different in many ways, but yet, like it, a part of that great spiritual uprising against the tyranny of the world and the things of sense. Regarded as a mere separate movement, the evangelicism which came between the Wesleyan revival and the Tractarian development is past and gone; and the mere Oxford movement per se is passing. But if we regard these diverse movements as phases of the spiritual life of England, out of which all manner of noble growths (including the inevitable tares which spring up with the wheat) have come enriching and enlarging our vast heritage, then we can trace back to Wesley in a supreme degree the source of this great and beneficent influence to which England owes so much. And the movement in its main issue and character has largely expressed the nature of its founder. We have our fanaticisms and our ridiculous sects, as Voltaire told us in those days of brilliant skeptical criticism before John Wesley's career began; but the same religious ideal in the main holds the nation as it held Wesley himself. He was a man of culture as well as a man of piety; while burning with zeal for his fellow-men, he was never vain, egotistic, or blundering. He carried into his religion a fine instinct for the "minor moralities of life."

and the sole matter for regret which we can associate with him was the bitter controversy with Toplady, who, however, was the more to blame. In the familiar words of the Bidding Prayer, we associate Wesley with "sound learning" as well as "religious education," and we recognize that his genius for organization was as remarkable as his genius for piety. His memorable mission to Africa showed that spirit in him which justifies his saying the world was his parish. May the country which bore him, and the university which reared him, give us, in the coming century, such another religious leader to aid us, in the spirit of sobriety and truth, in the eternal contest with the evils and sins which grow like weeds in our human soil.—London Spectator.

THE SECRET OF A STRONG LIFE.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

I crossed the ocean lately on a powerful steamship, which weighed over twenty thousand tons, and pushed her way against wind and waves at the rate of over twenty knots an hour! I could not see the propelling force; that was hidden deep down in the glowing furnaces, heaped constantly with fresh coal.

That illustrates the spiritual life of every strong, healthy, growing Christian; his strength is measured by his inward supply of divine grace. The spiritual force and progress of a growing Christian prove that his life is hid with Christ Jesus. The moving hands on the face of any watch are the evidence of a mainspring. Happy are you if your neighbors, who see you every day, can know by your outward conduct that your inner life is fed by an unseen Christ.

The Great Apostle describes this inner life of the true believer as "with Christ in God." The source of this spiritual life is divine; it begins with the new birth by the Holy Spirit. By a mysterious but very real process the newborn soul's heart-life is so united to Christ, so dependent on Christ, and so supplied from Christ, that the apostle describes it as "hid with Christ in God."

As the root of an apple tree, concealed from the eye, goes down into the soil, feeling its way after earth-food and water, and drawing up nourishment for every limb and leaf, so a truly converted soul learns to go down into Christ for his spiritual nourishment. He learns to find in Christ not only pardon and peace, but power to resist temptation. He learns the sweets of fellowship with his Master; and so close is his intimacy with Christ, that in times of trouble or perplexity he has only to put the question, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" A genuine and joyous Christian life is such an inner partnership with Jesus that the believer can say, "I live—yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live in faith, which is in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." This faith is not a mere opinion, nor is it a mere emotion. It is our grip on Christ, and his grip on us. Saving faith means the junction of our souls to Jesus Christ. The mightiest of all spiritual forces is the Christ-faith, because it puts the omnipotent Lord Jesus into our soul as an abiding presence and an almighty power. It was no idle boast, therefore, when Paul exclaimed: I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me."

Paul knew whom he believed. In the days of my boyhood it used to be said of a person who was converted that he had "experienced religion." A good phrase that; for a religion that is not a genuine heart experience is not worth the having. The poor weaklings in our churches have had but little or nothing of this experience. They joined the church more than they joined Christ. If they had ever experienced the incoming of Jesus into their hearts, and had experienced a new birth by the Holy Spirit, they would not so easily topple over into worldlings and money-worshippers and moral cowards—too often into disgraceful defalcations of character. A steamer without coal is a helpless waif on the ocean billows. Empty bags cannot stand upright. It is the terrible experiment of joining a church without any heart-union with the Saviour, of trying to live without honest prayer and daily Bible-feeding, of fighting Satan with spears of soft pine instead of the sword of the Spirit—in short, the experiment of trying to pass for a Christian without Jesus Christ—this it is that accounts for so many pitiable weaklings on our church rolls. To stand up against all the social currents that set away from God and holiness, to resist the craze for wealth at all hazards, to conquer fleshly appetites, to hold an unruly temper in check, to keep down selfishness, to direct all our plans, all our talents, all our purposes and influence toward the good of others and the honor of our Master, requires more power than any unaided man possesses. It requires Jesus Christ in the soul. Christ's mastery of us alone can give us self-mastery, yes, and mastery over the powers of darkness and of hell. This is the secret of a strong and joyous life.

Such a life is self evidencing. Although the interior union of a believer to his Redeemer is visible, yet the results of it are patent to the world. They are seen and read of all men. Just as we know the supply of coal and the power of the unseen engine by the steamer's speed, so we can estimate the fulness and strength of a man's piety by his daily life. Our outward lives can never rise above the inward; he who has not Christ in his conscience will not have Christ in his conduct. In a thousand ways does the hidden life with our Master come out before the world. It is manifest in the man of business who measures his goods with a Bible yardstick; in the statesman who would rather lose his election than lose God's smile; in the citizen who votes with the eye of his Master on the ballot; in the pastor who cares more for souls than for salary. The mother displays it when she seeks first the kingdom of heaven for children, and the daughter exhibits it when she would rather watch by a sick mother's bed than enjoy an evening's gay festivities. No life is so humble or so obscure, but it can shine when Christ shine through it. If Christ is hidden within you, let him not be hidden by you from an observing world. You are to be his witness. The sermon that no skeptic can answer is the sermon of a clean, vigorous, happy and fruitful life.—The Sunday Magazine.

DR. BROWN'S CONDITION.

Dr. A. G. Brown's condition remains unchanged. He is still unconscious, having been in that condition for several days.—"Leader."

METHODIST PASTORS.

The Methodist preachers convened in regular meeting at 10:30 a. m. yesterday, the president, Rev. W. H. Edwards, presiding. Prayer by Rev. W. R. Proctor, of Park View Church, Portsmouth.

The pastors reported good congregations at all the city Churches.

There was an overflowing congregation at Epworth Church Sunday night to hear the sermon of Rev. Dr. Young on "What is a Hero?"

Rev. W. R. Crowder reported a fine revival in progress at Denby's Church, East Norfolk circuit. There have been ten conversions and twenty reclaimations. He received seven into the Church Sunday on profession of faith.

Rev. J. W. Nicholson said that several of the Churches of the South Princess Anne circuit had been blessed with a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. There have been eighty nine conversions and about sixty accessions to the Churches as the result of these meetings. He has a fine meeting in progress at Beach Grove; received nine on profession of faith Sunday, and administered the ordinance of baptism to thirteen children.

Rev. R. H. Bennett reported that he had organized a Sunday-School in East Brambleton, near the toll bridge, which gives promise of doing a good work among the children in that section. The school will meet every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Rev. W. H. Edwards will assist Rev. A. A. Jones in a protracted meeting at Haygood Memorial Church, Princess Anne county, this week.

A meeting of the Board of Trustees has been called for September 5th to elect another President of Randolph-Macon College.

Rev. N. H. Robertson, assisted by Rev. Mr. Gregory, of Pungoteague, is conducting an interesting meeting at Franktown Church.

The announcement a few days ago that the Methodist Church at Spout Springs, Appomattox county, would be dedicated Sunday, was erroneous. A member of the committee writes that the dedication will take place next Sunday, Sept. 3.—Lynchburg "News."

Rev. R. F. Beadles has been assisting his father in a protracted meeting at Olive Branch Church during the past week. Five persons have professed conversion.—Norfolk "Landmark."

If Heathsville circuit is to be divided and Henderson's and Melrose are to have their new parsonages ready to receive the preacher and his family by the next Annual Conference, we must bestir ourselves and put forth our best efforts.

Melrose Sunday-School will reopen the first Sunday in September.—MITY VEIL, in "Virginia Citizen."

The Rock Springs Tabernacle meeting closed on Sunday night with a powerful appeal from Rev. F. M. Edwards to the professed Christians to live more useful Christian lives, and to the unconverted to serve the Lord. This is the eighth annual meeting held on these beautiful grounds, and though some are still grumbling, yet the meeting still grows in interest and in numbers as the years go by. The committee and visitors are sadly grieved at the loss of the services of Rev. J. F. Schoolfield, who was suddenly summoned to his home in Danville to bid a last goodbye to his dying son.—Madison "News."

CORRESPONDENCE

OUR NEXT ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

In a few more weeks the preachers of the Conference will be making out their accounts for their annual convocation at Petersburg. Few occasions excite more interest among the preachers than these annual gatherings, and renewed friendships.

Petersburg is a popular place for the Conference and it will be entertained with the old-fashioned hospitality.

Bishop Wilson will be expected to preside, and Dr. Paul Whitehead will answer to his call as secretary of the body ecclesiastic.

The preachers will expect a good time, and I am sure they will not be disappointed. It will be a Conference of great importance, on the eve of great events foreshadowed by another century.

I shall hope to shake hands with old friends again, and hope to meet them in heaven at last. Amen. J. A. R.

RESOLUTIONS.

FARMVILLE, VA., August 6.—At a regular meeting of the Sunday-School of the Farmville Methodist Church, held this day, a committee having been appointed to present suitable resolutions in regard to the death of our brother, and for so many years beloved superintendent of this school, H. C. Paulett, who departed this life at Clifton Forge on the morning of July 29, 1899, while in his weakness he was making an effort to return home to the bosom of his family and many friends.

The said committee presented the following resolutions which were read and unanimously adopted:—Whereas, in the wisdom of an Allwise Providence our efficient, faithful and diligent superintendent, Henry C. Paulett, has been called from his labors here to that bright reward promised to all the finally faithful, therefore,

RESOLVED 1: That in the death of brother and superintendent, each officer, teacher, scholar, as well as all the families connected with this Sunday-School have suffered a personal loss.

RESOLVED 2: That while we as a Sunday-School mourn our loss, nevertheless we rejoice to believe that our loss has been his eternal gain.

RESOLVED 3: That we present our heartfelt sympathies to his widow and fatherless children in this their sad hour of bereavement, only praying that they may be lead by the spirit as faithful followers of the same Saviour that he loved to honor, until they as a family shall be again united in that brighter world above.

RESOLVED 4: That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family of our deceased brother, spread upon the minutes of the Sunday-School, also published in the Richmond "Advocate," METHODIST RECORDER, and Farmville "Herald." And as a further evidence of respect and esteem we have for our brother as a faithful, efficient leader and superintendent of our Sunday-School, as well as a correct, faithful member of the Church and high-toned Christian gentleman, we recommend that our Sunday-School room be appropriately draped in mourning for thirty days.

A CERTAINTY.

A man once said to Sam Jones, "Jones, the Church is putting my assessment too high." Jones asked, "How much do you pay?" "Five dollars a year was the reply." "Well, how long have you been converted?" "About four years," "Well, what did you do before you were converted?" "I was a drunkard." "How much did you spend for drink?" "About two hundred and fifty dollars a year." How much were you worth?" "I rented land and was plowing with a steer." "What have you got now?" "I have a good plantation and a pair of horses." "Well," said Jones, "you paid the devil $250 a year for the privilege of plowing with a steer on rented land, and now you don't want to give the God who saved you five dollars a year for the privilege of plowing horses on your own plantation. You are a rascal from the crown of your head to the soul of your feet."—Baltimore "Methodist."

BE TRUTHFUL: KEEP YOUR WORD.

A young man was leaving his native village. He asked, as a special favor, that his sweetheart should give him her photograph. To test him, she carefully wrapped up a piece of cardboard about the size and thickness of a cabinet photograph, and, handing it to him, said: "Keep this in remembrance of me." He supposed it was the desired picture, and afterwards wrote home to her that one of the comforts of his life was to gaze on her beloved features every night before retiring.

Why was she induced to use such means to test him? Surely she must have had doubts of his love—at all events of his honesty. Some habit of looseness in telling the truth, or in keeping his word, must have aroused her suspicions.

"If I am killed," said a young soldier to General Sheridan, "tell my mother that I kept my promise."

The battle was fought, the lad was killed and the general carried the message. The promise referred to was that he would never taste liquor and never a drop passed his lips.

When she was told, the mother replied: "General, that is better news than if my boy had taken a city."

The boy had kept his word, had conquered himself. That is often the hardest kind of a victory to win but it can be done by trusting the arm and heart of Him who delights in such battles and who is always ready to give the victory.

Many of you boys have already started on a business career and many others are about to do so.

There is one thing, which I know of nothing will tell in your favor more. It is A CHARACTER FOR TRUTH TELLING AND FOR KEEPING YOUR WORD.

And nothing will so quickly end your career disastrously as a reputation for untruthfulness and for breaking your word.

I was going to say, cut that out and paste it in your hat. But you had better have the truth of it in your heart than in your hat.

I believe a young man may be lazy, or inexact, or careless, or stupid; but if he be truthful, and if he is known to keep his word when once it is given, I believe that all the drawbacks I have named may be tolerated, deplorable, as they are.

For, don't you see, that should he possess all the qualities which men esteem to be excellent and yet lack a character for truthfulness and a sense

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 10.

Text of the Lesson, Hag. ii, 1-9—Memory Verses, 4, 5—Golden Text, Hag. ii, 4—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "In the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the Lord by the prophet Haggai, saying." Our last lesson told that the enemies of God and of the Jews caused the work on the temple to cease till the second year of Darius, but that then God raised up Haggai and Zechariah to encourage the people to resume the work (Ez. iv, 24; v, 1). It is also written in Ez. v, 5, that although the enemies again sought to cause the work to cease the eye of their God was upon the Jews, and this time He did not suffer the enemies to triumph. In this short prophecy of 38 verses the expressions, "Thus saith the Lord," or "The word of the Lord came," or their equivalent, are found 25 times, marvelously emphasizing the truth that this is all the Lord's doing.

2. "Speak now to Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua, the son of Josedach, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying." It was not for Haggai to ask, "How will they receive it?" or, "What will they think of me?" He had only to preach the preaching that God bade him (Jonah iii, 2) and trust God, who gave him the message to manage His own affairs. It would be well for all preachers to act thus: Receive the message from God, deliver it in His name in the power of the Spirit and be sure that it will not return to Him void, but accomplish His pleasure and prosper in that whereto He sends it (Isa. lv, 11). This would give great quietness in service because of confidence in God (Isa. xxx, 15; xxxii, 17).

3. "Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory and how do ye see it now? Is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?" The contrast between the first temple and the present condition of things was so great that the elders who had seen the first house could not refrain from weeping (Ez. iii, 12, 13). Things did look very discouraging, and when we look only at what our eyes see we will be very apt to be either over-much puffed up or cast down. It is only as we see God alone and believe His word, regardless of feelings or circumstances, that we can ever be established and not discouraged (II Chron. xx, 20; Isa. vii, 9; Rom. iv, 19-21).

4. "Yet now be strong O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord, and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedach, the high priest, and be strong all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work, for I am with you, saith the Lord of Hosts." A most remarkable verse truly! Three times "saith the Lord" and three times "be strong," because of the Lord's presence. The "yet" with which the verse begins takes us to Hag. ii, 17, 18, where we hear the prophet saying, "Though vines, olives, figs, flocks and herds all fail, yet I will rejoice in the Lord; or to Ps. lxxiii, 22, 23, where the writer, though despising himself because he felt like a poor, ignorant beast, said, 'Nevertheless, I am continually with Thee; Thou hast holden me by my right hand.'"

5. "According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so My Spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not." Not our faithfulness, but His, is the only ground of comfort. He abideth faithful, He cannot deny Himself (II Tim. ii, 13). David, in his last hours, found no comfort in himself or in his life which he had lived, but said, "Yet hath He made with me an everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure, for this is all my salvation and all my desire (II Sam. xxiii, 5). The love of the Spirit (Rom. xv, 30) is one of our greatest comforts, though not spoken of as much as the love of the Father or the Son. There is boundless comfort in our Lord's assurance, "Because I live ye shall live also" (John xiv, 19), assuring us that however weak and unworthy in ourselves He is our life, His faithfulness our strength.

6. "For thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land." In verse 21 this shaking is again mentioned. From Joel iii, 16, and Heb. xii, 26, and their contexts we conclude that whatever germinant accomplishments these words may already have had the fulfillment of them is yet future and associated with the day of the Lord and the coming of Christ in glory. I think it probable that the "little while" of this verse was that which He referred to in John xvi, 16-19, but one will say how could He say a little while or quickly (Rev. xxii, 7, 12, 20) when He knew it would be perhaps 2,000 years or more? According to II Pet. iii, 8, our Lord has not been gone two days yet, and if He comes back on the third day that will indeed be quickly.

7. "And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come, and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of Hosts." We know that our Lord came to the temple and taught in the temple when He was here in humiliation, and the disciples (at least three of them) beheld His glory (John i, 14), but the temple was not filled with glory, neither did He shake all nations. But in the day of the Lord's vengeance and the time of recompense for the controversy of Zion His indignation shall be upon all nations (Isa. xxxiv, 2, 8).

8. "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of Hosts." They were not therefore to be perplexed about the necessary funds, for He who owns the silver and the gold had ordered the work to be done, and He would provide. Even Darius had been led to decree that of the king's goods expenses should be given unto these men and of bullocks, rams, lambs, wheat, salt, wine and oil, that which they have need of day by day without fail (Ezra vi, 8, 9). If our first desire is always the kingdom of God and His righteousness, we may be sure that all the necessary funds and wherewithal for His work will certainly be forthcoming as needed.

9. "The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of Hosts, and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of Hosts." The temple of Solomon was filled with the glory of the Lord, but we do not read that this temple of the restoration was, or Herod's temple, though to the latter Christ came in humiliation and on two occasions cleansed it, but the temple that is yet to be shall see His glory, and Jerusalem shall be called Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there (Ezek. xlvi, 2-7; xlviii, 35). Christ is now the peace of every believer (Eph. ii, 14; Rom. v, 1), but when He shall sit upon the throne of David of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end (Isa. ix, 6, 7).

The Epworth League topic for Sept 10th and 17th is unavoidably omitted in JUNIOR RECORDER of Aug. 31st and Sept. 7th.—Ed.

TO IMPROVE ROADS.

OPERATION OF NEW YORK'S NEW HIGHWAY LAW.

Plan Provides For the Preservation of the Home Rule Principle — No County Can Be Forced to Improve Its Highways. How the Cost Is Divided.

After several years of agitation and discussion the state of New York has a road law which presents a comprehensive plan for the improvement of rural highways, says the New York Sun. It provides that any board of supervisors may adopt a resolution declaring that public interest demands the improvement of a certain piece of highway not located in a city or village, and upon petition of the owners of a majority of the lineal feet of property fronting upon such a highway they must adopt such a resolution. A copy of this resolution is then transmitted to the state engineer, who is to determine whether the piece of highway indicated is of sufficient public importance to receive state aid. If so, he is to have maps, plans and specifications for the work and estimates of the cost made and transmit copies to the board of supervisors.

The supervisors, with these facts and figures before them, may then adopt a second resolution declaring that such a highway shall be improved or may refuse to go any further with the matter. This plan was adopted so as to preserve the principle of home rule to the counties of the state, to make it impossible that any county should be compelled, if unwilling, to improve any portion of its highways and to prevent any county from undertaking the work until it had all the facts and figures before it.

If a county desires merely to know how much it will cost to improve a certain piece of highway, it need only adopt the first resolution and get the plans and the estimate of the cost free of charge. Then it can refuse to go any further. If it chooses, after ascertaining the facts, to adopt a second resolution, it may, but cannot be compelled to do so. If the supervisors adopt the second resolution, they must transmit a copy of it to the state engineer, who advertises for bids for the work. If no responsible bid is made within his estimate, he must make a new estimate and transmit it to the board of supervisors, and if the board then adopts a new resolution, based upon the new estimate, declaring that nevertheless such highway shall be improved, the state engineer must advertise again for bids, as before. When a responsible bid within his estimate is made the state engineer awards the contract, but if the town or county desires to do the work itself, it has a preference over all the bidders.

Each board of supervisors has, under

... LITTLE . SAINT . BRIDGET ...

THE TRUE STORY OF A SHORT LIFE.

It was Sunday afternoon. In a prosperous dram shop in the most densely populated district of a city overlooking the waters of the Mississippi, a crowd of loafers were tossing coppers for drinks, singing snatches of street ballads and exchanging coarse jests when a pale, slight child burst into the place closely pursued by a ruffian armed with the rung of a chair. There was a cruel purple welt across the little one's forehead, and her eyes were swollen with crying. She flew to one of the men who set her behind the bar in safety.

The woman hurled a phemy and invective at the man, and gave him a heavy blow with the stick she carried. The piercing cries of the terrified child soon brought a policeman to the spot, when the arrest of both the man and the woman followed, and they were led away, the child meanwhile crouching behind the bar.

"Now that you've yelled your father and mother into the lock-up, get out of here, you little brat!" said the proprietor of the saloon, and the girl, a child of less than nine years, shrunk from the place.

"I guess Mag belts the kid every chance she gets, now," said one of the loungers, and another answered:

"It's a good thing John was sober enough to stand up for her, or she'd have been laid out, this time, sure. The old girl is crazy drunk."

Meanwhile the little one turned into a by-street which led to her home, but she paused at the sound of singing in a neighboring room, and, as she stood sadly listening, a lady asked her to enter. The voice was gentle, the face kind, and the child laid her hand confidently in that of her guide and was soon seated beside her and listening to the ever-winning,

"Tell me the old, old story
Of Jesus and His love."

There were all classes gathered in that homely room—children of wealth who had accompanied the teachers perhaps out of curiosity, children of respectable people whose homes were not far away, and little outcasts who hardly knew the blessed meaning of the word home. But of them all no one was so sore-hearted and hopeless as little Alice Barney when she entered there, and no soul had ever been happier than hers, when she went away.

She was cheered and comforted by loving, human companionship, and accepted with entire comprehension and faith the whole of the beautiful old, old story of Jesus and His love.

A simple thing to do, but it changed her whole life. Her eyes beamed, her feet seemed to tread on air, she was lifted out of herself, and the dreadful world she had known existed for her no longer.

The next day she learned that her mother had been sent to the workhouse for ten days, but her father came home not only sober but ashamed. He found the poor room swept, and upon the table were clean cups and plates with bread neatly spread and the coffee hot.

The little girl had lost all her shrinking timidity, and seemed to her father a new being. She told the story of her experience at the mission school, and in a sweet, fearless way born of her joy, she said:

"They are going to tell more of the blessed Jesus on the street tonight, father, and there will be singing, too. Will you go with me to hear it?"

"No, child, I am not fit, but go you and have as much as you like of it."

What need to narrate the work of grace in this little one chosen of the Lord? Before her mother returned, she was at home with the band of city missionaries, and enlisted heart and soul in their work.

Her father did not oppose her, though he refused to go with her, but her mother was bitter in her denunciation of what she called the canting, ranting Christians. Alice, however, with a sweet wisdom and courage, went her way. She seemed to be living the lines of Sir Galahad:

"My strength is as the strength of ten Because my heart is pure."

Three weeks after our story opened, the Evangelists held their meeting near Mike's

The man stared at her a moment in astonishment, and then replied with a laugh:

"No, but well open the door and you may preach and sing to us in here. Now, do your best little Saint Bridget."

She clasped her small hands in gladness and went out presently bringing the little assembly to the very door of "Mike's."

They sang that precious hymn, "Rock of Ages," and then followed fervent prayers, after which Alice told her artless story of her unhappy life, "but now," said she, "I have no want and no fear. I can think of nothing but that Jesus loves us all, and that as soon as we know Him we shall love each other and live to help each other. Dear men in the saloon, you would be so happy and so safe if you would follow the blessed Jesus."

A big, rough man went out and announced his intention of "following the Blessed Jesus." This was the first result of the little St. Bridget's work, but it was only the beginning. Where Christian men and women, with years of service behind them, failed to move the hearts of dissolute men and women, the artless words and tearful pleadings of little Saint Bridget, as Mike called her, melted and persuaded them.

One night John Barney followed her to a meeting down town, and came forward telling how his little daughter's pleadings had awakened his conscience and brought back the days of his fortunate youth and the memory of his praying mother. With voice broken by sobs, he deplored his sin-

"Please, Mike, will you come out to hear the story of the blessed Jesus who died to save us from our sins?"

ful life and promised that, God helping him, he would redeem the time. The child's prayer of thankfulness for her father no one who heard it, can forget.

John Barney's conversion was genuine,

THE STORY OF A CHANGED LIFE.

TOLD BY AN EYE-WITNESS.

OUR hero lives in a city in Ontario, Canada, named after an Indian chief. A wife and five or six children grace the humble home. About forty years of age—short and stout—weighing about 200 pounds, and when sober presenting a good appearance. A drayman by occupation—with a good one-horse outfit. A first-class horseman when himself, but, alas! for poor "Tops"—the horse—when his master was drunk, and, of course, the wife and children faring little or no better, under the same circumstances. In short, "Ned" was now an habitual drunkard, and by his own testimony was ready to do anything for the sake of "whisky."

It is at this point that we begin to understand something as to its intensity, of the conflict to be waged, by this poor victim of the cup. Anything for whisky! The broken-hearted wife, children crying for bread, and the importunity of kindred and friends, all availed nothing, as compared with the "craving for whisky." When this could not be secured by "hook or crook," his own life was in danger by his own hand! What is to be done? Character gone—credit gone—love of family and home gone—all gone! "Past redemption"—is the general verdict! He himself and all who know him best, say: "'Ned' can no more drink moderately than you can blow up a powder magazine moderately! or, than you could fall from a church steeple moderately!" Hope had fled from all, and despair had taken its place, and only one word left to give expression to this awful case—"Lost!" Poor "Ned" is lost!!

Just at this time, and at this critical point—by order, we believe, of a kind Providence, Brother Shevery came to town "from the other side"—meaning, from the United States. It was reported that this evangelist had been a drunkard, and "a hard case." Our hero heard of this, and nothing would do but that he must go and see, and hear, this American for himself. He kept sober enough to go, and that night Bro. Shevery told the story of a drunkard who, staggering home one Saturday night, with money gone over the bar, and nothing for wife and children for Sunday dinner! Having a little thought left—for the needs of wife and children—called at a butcher's shop and, drunk as he was, asked for some meat.

But, alas! his money was spent in drink, and credit he had none, but meat for Sunday dinner he must have. The butcher, pointing to the scrap box on the floor said: "You can take some of that cat meat if you like." He took some. "Ah," said the evangelist, "that's what the drunkards give to their wives and children for Sunday dinner."

"Ned" saw himself in that mirror, and then and there resolved, by the help of Almighty God, that his wife and children should eat "cat meat" for Sunday dinner, no more forever!

He went home to fight the battle of his life. He felt that to go to the dray stand, hotel stables, or to associate with his bar-room chums, until fortified by grace Divine, would mean to him defeat. Hence, this greatest of all battles must be fought out at home. This was his feeling. But how can he afford to stay at home a day? The larder, loft, and basket about empty! Nevertheless, he felt that at home he must stay, until the unutterable craving for whisky should cease, and victory over self and sin should be secured. And then, too, they might as well be starved to death, as to be disgraced, by feeding out "cat meat" for Sunday dinner! Let it be now Saturday afternoon, and Sunday tomorrow, with only a part of a loaf of bread in the house, and not butter enough to spread it withal!

"Wife, what shall we do?" is the question propounded. Not a baker or grocer in town will trust him for so much as a loaf of bread, and it is Sunday tomorrow! In despair, for it is now three or four days since he heard the story of the "cat meat," he rushed out to the stable, snut the door, threw his arms around the neck of poor old "Tops," as though to beg his pardon for the ill usage of the past, when all at once, the thought flashed upon his mind that the Savior of the world was born in a stable, and cradled in a manger. He fell upon his knees by the manger in front of his horse and in answer to his cry for mercy, the Christ of Bethlehem appeared, and spoke his sins forgiven, and removed perfectly his hitherto insatiable craving for whisky, and filled his heart with joy unspeakable and full of glory. His language was: "My chains fell off, and I was free. I arose, went forth, and followed Thee." And at 10 or 11 o'clock that Saturday night, someone who could not sleep, brought a large basket full of choice provisions. Who will dare to say that our God dares not answer the cry of the needy?

Thus was fought one of the most heroic moral battles that we have ever known, in our practical life. All the more heroic, because he refused to appear as a hero. He made it his choice to tread this awful winepress alone in secret, and amongst its invisible! Truly, we saw grandly verified the saying of the wise man—"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city." He became an active member of the church, though barely knowing his letters, he soon became a good reader, and well able to give a sound scriptural reason for the hope that was in him. He also began to tell how great things the Lord had done for his soul, and would often tell the large congregations that he was no longer getting what they used to call "a blow-out," but was having a blessed "blow-in" of the Holy Spirit, and that his dear wife and children were no longer eating "cat meat" for Sunday dinner, but roast beef and plum pudding."

the general highway law, the power to elect a county engineer. If it has elected such an officer, the state engineer must act through him. If it has not, he must himself supervise the performance of the contract. When the work is completed, he must draw a warrant upon the state treasurer for one-half the cost of the work and certify the other half to the board of supervisors, which must levy 35 per cent of the whole cost of the work upon the county. The other 15 per cent is payable in one of two ways—viz, if the board of supervisors adopted the first resolution for the improvement without a petition from the adjoining owners, the board of supervisors must levy the 15 per cent upon the town in which the improved highway is. If the first resolution was adopted after such a petition, the board of supervisors must levy the 15 per cent upon the property owners on the improved highway.

The act further provides that improvements of highways shall be taken up in the order in which the final resolutions are received by the state engineer, but he shall not undertake any work in excess of the appropriation made by the legislature for the purpose from year to year. The appropriation made this year to start the work was $50,000. This amounts to a tax of about 11-1,000 of a mill on each dollar of assessed valuation in the state. The first counties to apply will be the first served. It is expected that the next legislature will appropriate at least $250,000 as the state share of the expense for improving highways next year.

After a highway is improved the adjoining owners must pay their highway taxes in money, as provided under the general highway law, which permits such highway taxes to be commuted for cash at one-half the regular rates. The act provides that the state engineer must collect information relative to the public highways and give to all officers having the care of roads, whether improved or not, such information free. He must furnish them plans and directions for the improvement of roads and bridges free of cost when requested by them.

Through the cities pay about 90 per cent of the entire taxes, not a foot of highway can be improved within their limits under it. The act is one, therefore, strictly for the aid and for the benefit of rural highways, and by it the legislature has attempted to provide a method for the improvement of the highways and to offer substantial assistance to the communities which will undertake it, but leaves to the communities the decision whether they shall take advantage of the offer so made or not. For every dollar so contributed by the state it provides that another dollar shall be contributed by the county and town in which the improved highway lies. If one county chooses to improve its roads and another does not, the county which does not need only contribute 1 cent upon the thousand dollars of assessed valuation for each $50,000 spent by the state for the purpose of helping the other counties to so improve their highways.

Feeding Ducklings.

The system of feed for ducklings, says a correspondent of The Country

Gentleman, is very simple. After having tried numerous complicated mixtures at the start, I have finally settled on a very common formula. The first meal, after being placed in the brooder, is cornmeal and bran equal parts, with a liberal handful of coarse sand introduced, all thoroughly mixed with cold water and fed in a moist consistency. After they are 2 days old I add a small quantity of soaked beef scraps. This mixture should be fed five times daily, but only just as much as they will eat up clean. They should always come up to the feed board lively and hungry.

POULTRY PRIMER.

Cardinal Points of Special Interest to Beginners in the Business.

It is true we learn by doing and gain knowledge every day, and that there are not a few who know at least the settled facts about the proper care of poultry. But a small army of beginners is with us every year, and it is principally to these that this modest article is dedicated.

Proper and due proportion of care in the management of poultry is worth whole pints of medicine.

Care means a naturally warm house in winter and plenty of shade in summer.

It also includes proper exercise, clean and wholesome food, clear water, grit, charcoal and a constant warfare waged winter and summer against vermin, principally lice.

Medicine should only be needed in isolated cases. When a whole flock is sick or out of condition, something is radically wrong.

Sick fowls should immediately be put in a place out of sight and hearing of the rest of the flock and they alone be given drugs.

There is no sense and often much harm in drugging a whole flock to cure a few sick individuals. Medicines should never be given in water which is contained in metallic vessels.

Warm mash in the morning, as much as will be eaten up clean and greedily in five minutes; wheat, oats and buckwheat buried deeply in litter for all day; exercise and parched whole corn in moderate quantities just before going to roost for lots of eggs.

For largest yield of eggs keep in moderate confinement, undisturbed by dogs, boys, etc., and add to the above ration lean meat, cut bone, grit, charcoal, crushed oyster shells, plenty of green feed, a little cayenne pepper, boiled beets and all table scraps that are not greasy or tainted.

When you want the eggs for hatching, introduce a vigorous male, drop the mash and cayenne pepper, cut down the grain one-half and double the lean meat, oyster shells and green feed or open the gates, and if the range is good and weather and season favorable feed nothing but grain and leave the rest to nature.

Such change of feed and treatment should be done gradually—a month is none too long. Then use your eggs for hatching, not before.

Do not be surprised if, say, your 50 hens were laying 30 to 35 eggs daily all winter they drop down to 20 or 25. This is what you are after, and as the spring season advances and the range is good they will again get back to their original number of eggs daily, particularly if they are of the nonsitting variety.

Free, unlimited range for growing chicks, a sharp lookout for vermin day and night all summer long, pinhead oatmeal, whole meal, bread and milk the first two weeks, then gradually change to whole wheat, boiled clipped oats and millet seed. Better, though, feed this last only in such quantities as to furnish a variety. In this way only also should cracked corn and cornmeal mush be fed to growing chicks.

Free range, plenty of shade and loose soil, good feed and clear water are the essentials in the growth of young chicks. Such treatment makes large, early matured and vigorous cockerels and causes pullets to begin laying at 4½ months.

The incubator may not beat the hen, but the brooder will at a gallop.

Green bone cutters, clover cutters and mills to crush oyster shells are indispensable to profitable poultry keeping.

You can buy your clover cut and your grit and oyster shells crushed, but green bone should be cut at home, the fresher the better.

Clover is rich in nitrogen and lime. No poultryman can afford to shut his flocks in this feed, especially in winter.

Do not believe that a dunghill has anything in common with a real thoroughbred—not in eggs, not in weight, not in growth, not in vigor.

Buy your stock from a live poultryman. Be slow in making crosses, and never use a male for breeding, that is a cross.—Ohio Poultry Journal.

Kaffir Corn For Fowls.

Kaffir corn is now a common crop with the farmers of the semiarid region of the southwest, being extensively grown in Kansas, Indian Territory, Texas, etc. It is a nonsaccharine variety of sorghum in which the nutriment instead of partially remaining in the stalk, as with the saccharine varieties, finds its way largely to the grains or kernels borne in the head or top of the plant. The seeds are about twice the size of ordinary sorghum seeds and are rich with starch. Kaffir corn can be used with satisfaction as a feed for all classes of farm animals, chickens included. The early varieties should ripen satisfactorily with our correspondent, and I recommend that he try this grain as a feed for fowls, remembering that it should be used in addition with rather than in substitution for the common grains. The seed can be ordered through seedsmen and should be planted and cultivated the same as corn. Since the English sparrow is fond of this grain and the heads are unprotected great damage is often wrought to the ripened corn through these pests.—W. A. Henry in Breeder's Gazette.

of the importance of keeping his word, even at a loss to himself, why all the virtues in the calauder will be rendered of little value, for the simple reason that nobody will trust him.

He would be like a splendid looking watch, possessed of excellent wheels, finely chased case, clear crystal, delicate hands—the whole planned with skill, yet the whole rendered useless by a defective mainspring.

Truth is the mainspring of life.

Young people be truthful. Be truthful not because it pays, but for the sake of truth. Don't lie, don't equivocate for anybody or anything. It isn't wise always to speak—there are times when one ought not to speak, but, if you do speak, speak the truth at any cost.

Of a certain Wall street operator it used to be said: "His check is worth a million, his word isn't worth a bean."

A thousand times over, the reverse had better be your case.

Get a reputation for lying or for tricky prevarication and you're gone. Get it for a year and it will stick to you for lifetime.

You may have braint, ingenuity, application, smartness, but I want to tell you that the most valuable thing you can have to offer the world of business you enter is your sense of truth; absolute, unswerving adherence to the simple truth.

The shrewdest schemer in Wall street won't employ a man who he knows will lie to him.

The head of a business firm once said in my hearing: "I'll do all the lying necessary, but I won't employ a liar."

Where there's no truth, or, even where there's no certainty of truth all the time, there cannot be confidence, and lacking confidence the whole fabric of society—business, social and religions—will tumble in heaps.

Truth is a straight path up hill; falsehood is a devious path through a jungle.

Truth is a crystal stream; falsehood is mud.

Truth is clear air; falsehood is a fog

"To thine own self be true, and it shall follow as the days the night; thou can'st not then be false to any man."

GARDEN LETTUCE.

Confusion of Names—Two Varieties of Unusual Merit.

A most valuable and interesting feature of the second part of the tenth annual report of the Rhode Island station is a classification and description of the varieties of garden lettuce. Descriptive lists of the varieties of lettuce have already been published, but it is believed that there has been no recent classification based entirely on botanical characters. The kinds have been grouped as spring, summer and winter, and as cabbage, cutting and Cox lettuces, and then the names arranged in alphabetical order. But with this disclosure any change in a name of variety is sure to lead to confusion. In this new classification the position of a kind of lettuce is approximately determined by certain botanical characters irrespective of the name. The descriptions of kinds which closely resemble each other are placed close together so that they can be readily compared and the minor differences noted. All of the descriptions have been prepared from carefully selected, well grown specimens. A major portion of the illustrations of lettuce heretofore have been quite as bad as the descriptions. The illustrations of the Rhode Island classification are mainly from photographs and therefore rich in detail and unquestionably accurate. Altogether, the plants from more than a thousand separate plantings of lettuce seed secured from leading seedsmen in the east, south, north and west, and also from Canada, England and France, have been available for the study of this species.

From the 69 varieties described and accompanied by 37 fine illustrations mention is here made of two attractive kinds:

California Cream Butter.—Leaves glossy green, blotched with red and shaded with red at least after light frosts, thick, elevations and depressions of the lamina, large and rounded, or those of the inner leaves pressed into folds, edges with conspicuous points on the sides and minute points where the veins terminate at the end. Plants large, 12 to 15 inches across, usually forming firm heads about four months after the seed is planted. A distinct variety, particularly good for private gardens. The leaves have a stronger flavor than those of the more delicate kinds, but to many tastes this is not objectionable—in fact, the leaves forming the heads are not usually excessively bitter. The vigorous constitution of the plants enables them to grow luxuriantly in soil that is not the best and in an atmosphere that is uncomgenial. The form of the plant is like that of the white seeded Tennis Ball, and the two varieties appear to be nearly related, although they are very distinct.

GOLDEN QUEEN.

Golden Queen.—Leaves short and broad, yellowish green, often shading to light yellow at the margins, edges smooth or with teeth only near the base, veins prominent, the lamina generally being depressed between them, at least when the plants are young. Base of midrib conspicuously shortened and thick, heads rounded, hard, weight four to eight ounces, texture crisp, free from excessive bitterness, base leaves few and small, seed white. A variety of unusual merit, either for field culture or forcing. The plants grow rapidly, and when well cared for they seldom fail to head. The heads average about the size of a little smaller than the white seeded Tennis Ball, and, like that variety, the plants go to seed rather quickly when grown in the open ground. The Golden Queen is recommended for growing under glass, because it is thought to be less subject to disease than the Boston Market, but it is doubtful if, on the whole, it is equal to that variety for forcing.

How Garden Vegetables Keep Best.

Nearly all our garden vegetables will keep best in the winter by being where the temperature is nearly down to the freezing point, remarks The American Cultivator, but cabbages, parsnips and onions keep well if frozen solid and put in a dark place or covered from the sunlight until the frost is out of them. They should not be handled while frozen. Turnips, also, are not injured by being frozen and must also be thawed out in the dark before handling, but it gives to them a sweeter taste and milder flavor, which is a recommendation to some tastes and by others may be thought a fault. We have taken turnips, cabbages and onions and thawed them out in cold water for immediate cooking and thought they were no worse for the freezing.

CUTS OFF THEIR HEADS.

This Is How the Sultan of Morocco Treats Tax Dodgers.

The sultan of Morocco is going to prevent his subjects from evading the payment of their taxes, even if in doing it he has to behead every tax dodger in the country.

In his majesty's domain tax dodging by the rich is well nigh universal, and well informed students and travelers, knowing how corrupt and rapacious the sultan's government is, do not doubt that much of it is justifiable. But the sultan looks at the matter in a different light. He declares that there is no excuse for tax dodging, that it is criminal and, moreover, that he has hit upon a punishment to fit the crime.

Frank E. Jackson, a globe trotter of 30 years' experience, has recently made a tour of north Africa, including the accessible parts of Morocco, and in a personal letter to Frank L. Dingley of Lewiston, Me., a brother of the well known representative of that name, he gives a graphic account of the sultan's bloody and desperate method of procedure.

While in Tangier, Mr. Jackson learned that the sultan, at the head of a large body of troops, was marching through the country collecting taxes, and that at Larochie he had decapitated a large number of tax dodgers and spiked their heads above the city gates, to serve as a warning to others who might not be disposed to pay their dues promptly.

"A company of five was formed," writes Mr. Jackson, "to visit Larochie and see if this ghastly report was true. The party consisted of an Englishman, who spoke Arabic; a German and three Americans.

"We boarded a small steamboat at Tangier and sailed down the coast to Cosa Blanca. There we engaged mules, donned Arab costumes (a very prudent thing to do) and early in the morning started to Larochie, about 25 miles inland. It was a beautiful country through which we passed, fertile and well cultivated, the monotony of the desert relieved by the fig and olive trees and the stately and ever present palm. But it is a country centuries behind modern civilization. Women are still sold into virtual slavery and not infrequently to take the places of beasts of burden. More than once along the way we saw a farmer working his land, his wife and a mule yoked together drawing the plow.

"We reached Larochie about noon. It is impossible to describe the sickening sight which met our gaze as we rode up to the main entrance to the city. There above us in a ghastly row were 15 human heads shriveling in the broiling sun. We rode around to the other gates, only to find the same gruesome display. In all we counted 45 heads spiked to the board arches over the city gates. Our curiosity was fully satisfied, and all of us regretted that we had traveled so far to learn that there was at the close of the nineteenth century so barbarous a country on the face of the earth as Morocco.

"And not all of the heads were those of tax dodgers. Some were of old men and women who had never possessed anything worth taxing. It seems the sultan had vented his spite on them after learning that a number of wealthy residents of the city had been warned of his coming and had fled to the mountains, taking their cash and other portable valuables with them.

"These murderous raids are made once a year by the sultan, and it is said that he nearly depopulates some of the districts through which he passes. Upon trustworthy authority we learned that what we saw at Larochie may be seen in the wake of the sultan at every city along his route. If more bloody caputs are gathered in one place than can be conveniently disposed of there, these are carried on to decorate the gateways of the next city."—Boston Herald.

Fashions In Baths.

The oft debated question whether the present generation carries personal cleanliness to a greater length than the preceding generation did had a curious light thrown upon it at the recent Tin Plate Workers' conference. One Wolverhampton manufacturer stated that not a quarter as many portable baths were made now as formerly, and another referred to the fact of orders for 200 shower baths having been taken by a traveler in one journey at some past period, while he supposed that at the present time a manufacturer did not sell three shower baths in a year. From this it would seem that the shower bath is obsolete and that the fixed bath has merely superseded the portable one. It would appear, therefore, that the verdict should rather be that fashion in baths has changed than that cleanliness came in with the prevalence of the fixed bath. —London News

Photographs of the Sultan.

Photographs of the sultan have been much in evidence lately in consequence of the Kaiser's visit to the Holy Land. But these portraits give a false impression of the sultan as he really looks today. Abdul Hamid has not had his photograph taken for 22 years, and the pictures which have appeared in the illustrated papers represent him as he was when he ascended the throne. The sultan was born in 1842, and he is therefore 56 years old. He wears a long beard, which is now turning gray. When he was a prince, he was without a beard, but as soon as he ascended the throne he abandoned the use of razors.

Bamboo is of universal use in China. The windows are delicate latticework of bamboo, and the furniture is of slender bamboo, bent and curled and plaited. The water bucket is a good big stalk, sawed off just below the joint and made as deep as is needed above it. For a bottle a slender piece is taken and treated in the same way.

The Age of American Generals.

Although General Miles is a younger man than most of the general officers in the service at this time, he is much older than any of the men who commanded in the civil war. He is 58, while Shafter is 62, Merritt 61, Brooke 60, Wheeler 62, Lee 62, Otis 60 and Hawkins 63. In fact, there is not even a brigadier of note except Wood who is under 50 years of age.

At the outbreak of the civil war, on the other hand, not one of the men who were to gain distinction in it was 50. Grant in 1861 was only 39, Sherman was 41, Sheridan 30, Schofield 30, Hancock 37, Custer 22, Meade 46, Hooker 47, Thomas 45, Kearny 46, Kilpatrick 35, Pleasanton 37, Rosecrans 42, Palmer 44, Logan 35, Howard 31, Buell 43, Slocum 34, Burnside 37, Banks 45, Butler 43, and General Miles himself was only 22.

On the Confederate side Lee and Joseph E. and Albert Sidney Johnston had passed 50, the former being 54 and the latter 54 and 58 respectively, but Longstreet was 40, Beauregard 43, Hampton 43, Bragg 46, Forrest 40, Stonewall Jackson 37, A. P. Hill 36, J. E. B. Stuart 28, Hood 30, and Joseph Wheeler was 25. Among the generals of the Union even he who came to be known as "old" Halleck was only 46 when the war broke out.—Boston Globe.

Under Gibraltar Strait.

M. Berlier, who has built two tunnels under the Seine, proposes now to tunnel the strait of Gibraltar. He will let England peacefully watch the surface of the sea while he will establish safe communication underneath the water with or without the permission of England. He would not cross at the narrowest part of the strait, but leave the European coast at the bay of Vaqueros and land in Africa at Tangier. The distance, including the approaches, would be about 41 kilometers, and the greatest depth of the water on this line would be 400 meters. At the narrowest part of the strait it is 600 meters.

The tunnel could be built in seven years, during which time the railroad along the coast of Morocco to connect with the Algerian system could be built. The cost would be 225,000,000 francs, and on this capital, according to wise calculations, a sufficient interest would be returned by the traffic (l'apres de savants calculs serait suffisant remunere). It is reported also that M. Berlier is building several castles in Spain.—Railroad Gazette.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

NORFOLK PREACHERS' MEETING

The Methodist preachers convened in regular weekly meeting at 10 a. m. Monday, with the president, Rev. W. H. Edwards, in the chair. Prayer by Rev. R. B. Scott, of Princess Anne circuit.

Large congregations reported from the Churches Sunday.

Two new members were received at McKendree.

Rev. R. B. Scott will soon build a new parsonage on the Princess Anne Circuit.

Rev. W. R. Crowder reported fifteen conversions at Denby's Church and twelve accessions on profession of faith.

There was one conversion at Centenary Church Sunday night.

Rev. A. A. Jones received one new member at Haygood Memorial.

Rev. Frank N. Faulkner, of Wilmington, Del., was introduced. He was very cordially received by the members.—“Pilot.”

MR. ROUTTEN IS WELL.

Rev. J. T. Routten, pastor of Denny-Street Methodist Church, Richmond, who has been somewhat indisposed for the past week, is himself again and filled his pulpit at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. last Sunday.

One of the most interesting services and a large congregation were marked features at Denny-Street Methodist Church Sunday night before last. A young man in the congregation was converted during the preaching and immediately at the close of the service made his way to the chancel and taking the pastor by the hand, said: “I have been a sinner for twenty-six years, but God has saved me tonight while you were preaching.”

The pastor offered a special prayer for God's protection of the young man, after which many members of the Church took the young man by the hand and assured him of their prayers.

COURSE OF LECTURES ARRANGED FOR.

The Epworth Leagues of the Methodist Churches in Petersburg have arranged for a course of lectures to be delivered by the leading pulpit orators of the Virginia Conference. The lectures will begin on the 25th of the present month, when Dr. Starr, of Richmond, will lecture.

Dr. W. G. Starr Elected President.

The Board of Trustees of Randolph-Macon College met on Tuesday afternoon and elected Dr. W. G. Starr to be president of Randolph-Macon College. Dr. Starr is no stranger in the educational field. He succeeded Dr. Paul Whitehead in the presidency of Murrefreesboro' Female College and built up the largest school in the Conference at that time. He has the push, the energy, the tact, the training, and the educational qualifications to make a successful president. He has a practically unanimous vote of the Board of Trustees behind him. The present greatest need of the College is to bring it and that for which it stands before the people. There is no place to do this which equals in results the individual Churches of our cities and circuits. Mass-meetings are valuable, but the rank and file of the membership can be reached only at the home Churches on regular preaching days. There is a fruitful field for labor in this direction, and the new president of Randolph-Macon will find a hearty welcome from our preachers to all their pulpits. They long to have the College represented in their charges. It is only by personal contact with preachers and people and the strong presentation of the necessity of Christian schools for the continued existence of the Christian Church, and of the spiritual wreck which will follow in the wake of the godless system of State schools, that we can hope to save our Church institutions to be the fortress and arsenal of our beloved Church. Dr. Starr is a valuable addition to the active force of Christian education in our State. We give below an account of the meeting as found in the Richmond “Dispatch.” We owe the fine cut given above to the courtesy of the Richmond “Times.”

“The members met in the Sunday-school room of Centenary Church. The session continued until 2:30 o'clock.

“Rev. S. K. Cox, D. D., of Baltimore Conference, vice-president of the board, presided in the absence of Bishop Granbery, the president, who is out of the State. Rev. S. S. Lambeth, D. D., of Bedford City, the secretary of the board was present.

“The meeting began with the usual devotional exercises. The board then went at once into the election of president in place of Dr. Duncan, who was tendered the position, but declined. This was the sole business before the board.

“Col. A. S. Buford, of this city, was the first to address the Chair. He placed in nomination Dr. Starr, for the presidency of Randolph-Macon College. He spoke about 15 minutes and paid Dr. Starr tribute after tribute that any man might be justly proud to have said of him. He mentioned his scholarship, his affability, his capacity for making and holding friends, and lastly his great enthusiasm which he throws into everything which he undertakes.

“Rev. Lesley Shipley, of the Baltimore Conference, seconded the nomination.

“Dr. Paul Whitehead, of Lynchburg, presented the name of Judge Shepherd, and spoke strongly in his favor. The vote was then taken, and Dr. Starr received 19 of the votes cast and Judge Shepherd one.

“Colonel Buford and Dr. Shipley were appointed a committee to bring Dr. Starr before the board.

“Dr. Starr made a brief speech, thanking the board for the honor, accepting it, and promising his best efforts in behalf of the institution.

“Brief speeches were made by other members of the board.

“The board increased the salary of the president to $2,000 per annum, and included the use of the president's house among the privileges.

“Dr. Starr will continue the dual capacity of pastor of Broad-Street Church, and president of Randolph-Macon until Conference meets in November.

“Dr. Starr actually began his work yesterday. He was some time in conference with Chancellor Smith in regard to some matters that had to be attended to at once.

“Dr. Starr was born in Rappahannock county, and is about 58 years of age. His father was a noble Methodist preacher, Rev. William H. Starr. He was educated at Raddolph-Macon College, taking the M. A. degree there. He married Miss Elizabeth Lee, of Gloucester county. They have two daughters. Dr. Starr has had the following pastorates: Bedford City, Suffolk, Richmond (Broad-Street Church), Charlottesville, Danville (Main-Street Church), Norfolk (Cumberland-Street Church), Petersburg (Washington-Street Church.) He was for five years president of Wesleyan Female College, Murrefreesboro', N. C. He is now completing his fourth year here. The Church has prospered much under him. Three hundred members have been received during these four years.”

TEMPERANCE.

OPEN DOORS TO HELL.

Give us a call. We keep good beer,
Wine, brandy, gin, and whiskey here.
Our doors are open to boys and men,
And even women now and then.
We lighten their purse,
We taint their breaths,
We swell up the column of awful deaths.
All kinds of crimes we sell for dimes
In our sugared poison so sweet to taste.
If you have money, position or time to waste,

Give us a call.

Give us a call. In a pint of gin
We sell more wickedness,
Shame, and sin,
Than a score of clergymen,
Preaching all day
From dawn to darkness,
Could preach away,
And in our beer (though it may take longer
To get a man drunk
Than drinks that are stronger),
—e sell our property, shame and woe,
Who wants to purchase?

THE CHURCH MUST STRIKE THE BLOW.

It is clear to us that if the liquor traffic is ever put down the Church of Christ must strike the fatal blow. In some way, sometime, somewhere, Christians must take action to put an end to this curse. It may not be by any method yet devised, it may not be this year, or next, but in God's time and way this responsibility will be made clear to all persons identified with the Lord's cause. It is certain that liquor men themselves will never voluntarily end the traffic. It is likewise certain that their sympathizers will never compel them to do it. It is morally certain that the average Legislature will never take up the initiative of such a task. Only men of deep religious conscience can be expected to bear the brunt of such a fight, to sacrifice ease, comfort, popularity and perhaps property and life to strangle this monster. God has laid this commission upon his own: "Take up the stumbling block out of the way of my people." Let not fear or favor dissuade you from such an imperative duty. To shrink from it is disloyalty; to falter is sin and to neglect it is slow religious suicide. Condemnation will surely come to a people whose eyes have been opened to duty and who selfishly, indifferently and wilfully neglect to go forward. Stagnation, barrenness, death and burial are the inevitable consequences of such a course.—"Michigan Christian Advocate."

DARK CLOUDS ARE IN THE NATION'S SKY.

These are dark days for the temperance reform. The statement sounds harsh, did you say? Nevertheless it is true. We gain nothing by closing our eyes to the dismal facts. We would better face them squarely and honestly.

Look at the conditions:

The only political party which represents before the nation the principle of legal prohibition has made no growth worth mentioning in a dozen years.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, after twenty-five years of splendid usefulness, is dangerously near the breakers. Bereft of its magnetic and resourceful leader, the organization is vexed by internal dissensions which grievously retard its growth.

The fraternal societies which for years did such a great work in the field of moral suasion have largely dropped out of sight.

Prohibition is being attacked by subtle and powerful forces in every State where the saloon has been outlawed. Slowly but surely the enemy is advancing into the very strongholds of our cause.

The army canteen is maintained by the Government in spite of the protest of hundreds of thousands of our best citizens, and multitudes of our citizens at home and abroad are being debauched and ruined and dragged down to hell.

The brewery is America's greatest oligarchy. It has grown fat and sleek and strong. Before it the multitude bows. The combined liquor interest of the country has our rulers by the throat. It has Congress by the throat. It has State Legislatures by the throat. It has Governors and Mayors and Aldermen and Editors and even Ministers by the throat.

The indifference of our people to the encroachments of the liquor power is appalling. A stupor seems to have settled down upon us. We are in the presence of a foe more subtle and terrible than we have ever faced, yet we sleep on. We are bound hand and foot by men whose only purpose is to rob and ruin, yet we sleep on. We have swept down the stream in fancied security, until now the thunders of the giant cataract greet our ears and its foaming waters wait to engulf us—yet we sleep on!

Oh, patriotic, God-fearing people of America, WAKE UP!—"Epworth Herald."

WHY HE QUIT DRINKING.

A professional gentleman, who was accustomed to take his morning glass, stepped into a saloon and, going up to the bar, called for whiskey. A seedy individual stepped up to him and said:

"I say, squire, can't you ask an unfortunate fellow to join you?"

He was annoyed by the man's familiarity and roughly told him:

"I am not in the habit of drinking with tramps."

The tramp replied:

"You need not be so cranky and high-minded, my friend, I venture to say that I am of just as good a family as you are, have just as good an education, and before I took to drink was just as respectable as you are. What is more I always knew how to act the gentleman. Take my word for it, you stick to John Barleycorn, and he will bring you to just the same place I am."

Struck with his words, the gentleman sat down his glass and turned to look at him. His eyes were bloodshot, his face bloated, his boots mismated, his clothing filthy.

"Then, was it drink that made you like this?"

"Yes, it was, and it will bring you to the same if you stick to it."

Picking up his untouched glass he poured the contents upon the floor and said: "Then it's time to quit," and left the saloon, never to enter it again.

HOW TRAMPS ARE MADE.

In an article entitled, "How men become tramps," Josian Flynt says:

There is one other cause of vagrancy more potent than all I described, and its name is whiskey. The love of liquor brings more men and women into trampdom than anything else, and until this fact is more conscientiously recognized there can be no thorough treatment of the tramp. There is no need to enter into details on this subject; all that I can do is to report the fact. The public needs to realize more fully than it now does the awful effects of strong drink on vagabonds. A realization of this fact is likely to be productive of some remedy for the evil it represents. If the tramps of America could be freed from the bondage into which whiskey has brought them, there would not be very many vagrants in the country. That the American tramp is the result of the fluctuations of the labor market, I do not believe. The American tramp does not want work, as a rule; but I know that he does want to be free from liquor. And if this can be accomplished, I feel safe in saying that he will go to work. Under the influence of drink he becomes a sort of voluntary idler; but if he were temperate, he could be made a valuable citizen."

UNITY OF ACTION.

EDITOR OF THE RAM'S HORN:—I believe the crying need of the temperance movement at the present time is UNITY, UNITY, UNITY. Not unity of thought, not unity of opinion—we have that already—but unity of action. We do not want more party, but more principle and more Christianity. What care the saloon-keepers and brewers for party? Nothing at all. Why? Because their livelihood is at stake and vote for men who will protect their best interests. But have the Christian people no interests at stake? Yes! a thousand times, yes! Their boys and girls, their homes, their country and their religion are at stake and yet party is placed before all these sacred interests.

While such is the case the efforts of all Christian societies, home and foreign, of prayer-meetings and Churches are crippled and handicapped. Moreover, it is useless to pray "Thy kingdom come" while Christian men vote for the devil's kingdom. When the Church of God takes united action on this great question the death knell of the saloon will be sounded from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Aye, and the echoes will reverberate around the world. God hasten the day!

A. L. A. MURCUTT.

Australasian Lecturer, W. C. T. U.

AN ITEMIZED ACCOUNT.

A prosperous liquor dealer was boasting to a group of men standing near his saloon of the amount of money he had made.

"I have made $1,000 in the last three months," he said.

"You have made more than that," quietly remarked a listener.

"What is that?" was the quick response.

"You have made my two sons drunkards. You have made their mother a broken-hearted woman. You have made much more than that, I reckon, but you'll get the full account some day."—"Epworth Herald."

TEMPERANCE RETROGRESSION.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:—If your correspondent from York, Pa., fully grasps the points I made in my papers on "Temperance Retrogression," he fails to indicate it in his note. I will try, both negatively and positively, to make my meaning plain.

A horse in a treadmill walks and sweats, and still walks (good, faithful creature), but makes no headway; so it seems to me it is with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Prohibition party, Annual Conference resolutions, lectures, sermons, etc., on temperance—all amount to little or nothing of practical value. That stage of the question has long since passed. The case now demands not words, but deeds. Its vital part is fully exposed and the weapon (thank God!) within our reach with which it may be given a fatal blow. The power is in our hands to turn the monster's sting back upon itself and kill it with its own poison. How?

Recognize the liquor traffic as a lawful business, then compel it to conduct its affairs fully on business principles, and it will die of its own hideousness. As taxpaying business men, not as humanitarians, we should demand of the State Legislature laws which will require liquor dealers to pay the expenses they incur, make good the damages they inflict upon individuals and upon the State, repair all the losses they occasion, and the end of the evil will quickly be seen. In fact, the liquor business could not endure and pay the porhouse and judicial expenses it occasions.

If the temperance agencies and the taxpayers of any State in the nation would concentrate their efforts upon the policy of securing the legislation needed, they would succeed, and the liquor business would be but the shadow of what it now is.—H. H. MOORE, in the "N. Y. Christian Advocate."

CHARGED WITH MURDER.

"Prisoner at the bar, have you anything to say why sentence of death shall not be passed upon you?"

A solemn hush fell upon the crowded court-room, and every parson waited in almost breathless expectation for the answer to the judge's question.

The judge waited in dignified silence.

Not a whisper was heard anywhere, and the situation had become painfully oppressive, when the prisoner was seen to move. His head raised, his hand clinched, and the blood rushed into his pale, careworn face.

Suddenly he arose to his feet, and in a low, firm, but distinct voice, said:

"I have! Your honor, you have asked me a question, and now I ask, as the last favor on earth, that you will not interrupt my answer until I am through.

"I stand before this bar, convicted of the willful murder of my wife. Truthful witnesses have testified to the fact that I was a loafer, a drunkard and a wretch; that I returned from one of my prolonged debauches and fired the fatal shot that killed the wife I had sworn to love, cherish, and protect. While I have no remembrance of committing the fearful deed, I have no right to complain or condemn the verdict of the twelve good men who have acted as jury in this case, for their verdict is in accordance with the evidence.

"But, may it please the court, I wish to show that I am not alone responsible for the murder of my wife!"

This startling announcement created a tremendous sensation. The judge leaned over the desk, the lawyers wheeled around and faced the prisoner, the jurors looked at each other in amazement, while the spectators could hardly suppress their intense excitement. The prisoner paused a few seconds and then continued in the same firm voice:

"I repeat, your honor, that I am not the only one guilty of the murder of my wife. The judge on the bench, the jury in the box, the lawyers within this bar, and most of the witnesses, including the pastor of the old Church, are also guilty before Almighty God, and will have to stand with me before His judgment throne, where we shall all be righteously judged.

"If it had not been for the saloons of my town I never would have become a drunkard; my wife would not have been murdered; I would not be here now, ready to be hurled into eternity. Had it not been for these human traps I would have been a sober man, an industrious workman, a tender father and a loving husband. But today my home is destroyed, my wife murdered, my children—God bless and care for them!—cast on the mercy of the world, while I am to be hanged by the strong arm of the State.

God knows I tried to reform, but as long as the open saloon was in my pathway, my weak, diseased will-power was no match for the fearful, consuming, agonizing appetite for liquor.

"For one year our town was without a saloon. For one year I was a sober man. For one year my wife and children were happy, and our little home was a paradise.

"I was one of those who signed remonstrances against reopening the saloons of our town. "One of the fourteen first-class Colleges for women in the United States."

Official Report U. S. Comm'r Education.

Randolph-Macon Woman's College, LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

This college is named by the United States Commissioner of Education as one of the fourteen colleges for women in the United States entitled to be classed in "Division A." [See Official Report, page 1732.]

1. LOCATION:

Virginia.

Near the foot of the Blue Ridge, in the residence suburbs of Lynchburg—beautiful scenery, health-giving climate, railroad, telegraph, telephone, street cars, modern facilities.

2. PLANT:

$149,000.

Campus 20 acres. Buildings new, modern; steam heat, gas, hot and cold water, etc. Front 365 feet. Four separate laboratories; excellent library; skylit art studios; large gymnasium, chapel, lecture rooms, music rooms, etc.

3. ENDOWMENT:

$102,000.

The annual income from the endowment of $102,000 is applied toward current expenses. The plant is exempt from charges for rent or taxes, thus patrons get thousands of dollars free every year. The purpose of the college is not to make money, but to make noble, cultured women.

4. COURSES:

Elective.

Nine distinct elective courses lead to the A. B. degree, enabling the student, after the fundamental discipline has been secured, to follow the bent of her natural talent. A. M. courses entirely elective. Full courses in music and art.

5. FACULTY:

Full faculty of college grade. Twenty-three instructors and two hundred and twenty-five students last session. Professors selected for special ability in their departments, and for personal worth as men.

6. PHYSICAL CULTURE:

Large gymnasium, well equipped. Regular training for vigor and grace by competent directress. Out-door sports arranged for—tennis, basket ball, cycling, etc.

7. HOME LIFE:

Officers and teachers and their families live with the students, and help make their home life elevating and happy. Noble character is the ultimate end of our culture, and intimate association one of the chief means.

Special arrangements to aid teachers who wish to improve their preparation.

MEETING AT OLIVE BRANCH.

(BY REV. B. DEY.)

Our meeting at Olive Branch resulted in 56 conversions and about 40 additions to the Church. Others will join. Bro. W. S. Vaughan was here and conducted the singing and was otherwise useful. He is good help in a meeting.

The meeting at Prospect is still in progress. So far there have been seven conversions, with a good prospect of many more. Bro. W. J. Williams is doing the preaching. He preaches with fervor. Bro. Vaughan also is with us.

MEETING AT NOTTOWAY.

(BY REV. R. A. COMPTON.)

We have had a very profitable meeting at Nottoway, St. Mathews Church, resulting in fifteen additions to the Church. The congregations were large, attentive, and besides the conversions, we think a profound impression was made upon the community.

Brother J. E. McCulloch did the preaching, and he did it well. He possesses decided talent for managing such meetings. His subjects are well-chosen and well discussed, and he promises well for the ministry. His spirit and manner are attractive to young and old, and in fact we found no fault in him.

We expect to hold a meeting this month in Blackstone and are hopeful of good results.

A CALL FOR HELP BY THE RED CROSS IN CUBA.

(BY CLARA BARTON.)

It is estimated that a part of the debris of the terrible war that has so long been waged in Cuba consists of some 50,000 orphan children of reconcentrados who have in the last few years died of starvation and want.

These children are scattered through nearly every city and town which had been of sufficient size and importance to receive the driven-out country people. They are not children of low or doubtful origin, many are of the best of Cuban families. The reconcentrados were largely the country people of property—farmers. They were driven by Weyley into the towns and cities, not because they had not, but because they had something, and it was suspected that they supported the insurgent bands by supplying them with provisions and money. The fathers were killed or joined the Cuban army and disappeared. The mothers are dead.

Almost every living child among them represents the sacrifice of a heroic mother. When there was little food the mother went without and died. The children ate and lived.

The Cubans are not responsible for the destitution of these poor children. When the starving reconcentrados were driven into the towns, the residents divided food and clothing with them, and then divided again and again; but there was a point at which they had to stop giving. They had children of their own; Cuba is a country of large families, and it became a question of starving their own children or of letting the young reconcentrados look out for themselves.

Only for the Cuban rations distributed by our army it would be a sorry lookout for these helpless little ones. They range in number from thirty to seventy-five and even one hundred in the various towns; utterly homeless, and no one has the least personal interest in them or responsibility for them. All are kind to them, for the Cubans are a kind people. The townspeople still do what they can, but their main dependence is, however, begging of the passengers of every passing train. It sometimes becomes difficult to alight for the crowd of little eager faces and outstretched hands; and yet they are among the brightest, most grateful and loving children I have ever seen, when cared for and made comfortable.

Their very rags are filled with disease germs, filthy beyond description. Starvation has distended their stomachs, emaciated their limbs, the feet are swollen and often broken open, heads crusted with vermin, and all have the itch.

The war is ended, but the Red Cross still stands in its tracks with the fifty thousand reconcentrado orphans on its hands. Its agents work faithfully on, gathering them up out of pollution and death. Its source of supplies is the American people and that only.

We believe that with as many dollars as there are estimated children, aided by the Cuban people themselves, these children can all be taken up as shown, placed in their little home asylums, learn to work and become healthful adjuncts of a community rather

DR. STEEL'S NEW FIELD.

Rev. Dr. S. A. Steel has been transferred from the Tennessee Conference to that of Virginia. For some time Dr. Steel has been located at a charge in Nashville. He has not been appointed to any special Church, but has been transferred without appointment until the Virginia Conference meets in November. He then may be assigned to some Church by the Bishop presiding over the Conference.

DEBAUCHED SOLDIERS.

A correspondent sends these sad facts about the return home of a Wisconsin company of volunteers. They are enough to make one sick at heart and burn with indignation:

"DEAR DR. BERRY:—It was my misfortune to spend the day and night at West Superior, Wis., during the time that Company I of the Third Wisconsin was mustered out of service. I say it was my misfortune because I could not keep away from drunken soldiers, who were everywhere to be seen. It made my heart ache to see nearly a hundred young men who were brave enough to enlist in war not men enough to resist the temptation of intoxicating drink. During the afternoon and night the streets and hotel were crowded with these boys, reeling and cursing and insulting their best friends. To what extent is the army canteen responsible for the downfall of these young men? I was assured by one of West Superior's leading merchants that many of the boys who were that day drunk were never known to take a drink of intoxicating beverage before they went into the service of our country. Is this not an awful example of what the canteen will do toward ruining our young men?"—"Epworth Herald."

THE SALOONIST'S CONVERSION.

"I will sell you no more whiskey," said a saloon-keeper to a dissipated-looking man who stood at the bar asking for a drink, "you have had delirium tremens once, and I cannot sell you any more—stand aside."

He stepped aside to make room for a couple of young men who had just entered, and the saloon-keeper waited upon them very politely. The other had stood silent and sullen, and when they had finished he walked up to the saloon-keeper and thus addressed him: "Six years ago at their age, I stood where those young men are now. I was a man with fair prospects. Now, at the age of twenty-eight, I am a wreck, body and mind. You led me to drink. In this very room I formed the habit that has been my ruin. Now sell me a few glasses more, and your work will be done. I shall soon be out of the way; there is no hope for me. But they can be saved. Do not sell it to them. Sell it to me, and let me die, and the world will be rid of me, but for heaven's sake sell no more to them!"

The saloon-keeper listened, pale and trembling. Sitting down his decanter, he exclaimed: "God help me, this is the last drop I will ever sell to anyone!" And he kept his word.—Ex.

GENERAL SHERIDAN AND DRINK

General Sheridan—"Fighting Phil," as he was called in the days of the Civil War—stood talking with an old army comrade in Washington one day when Sheridan's four children drove away in a cart.

The fond father looked after them with a tender glance and then said to his friend: "I often think that pitfalls are waiting for my small, brave soldiers all through life. I wish I could always help them over."

"Phil, if you could save your little son from the most to be feared of all the temptations which will beset him, what would it be?"

"General Sheridan leaned his head against the doorway and said, soberly:

"It would be the curse of strong drink. Boys are not saints. We are all self-willed, strong-willed, maybe full of courage and thrift, and push and kindness and charity, but woe be to the man or boy who becomes a slave of liquor! Oh, I had rather see my little son die today than to see him carried in to his mother drunk."

There are thousands of parents who have the same feeling about their boys as this brilliant commander.

Help us to save their sons by destroying the saloon.

THE JUNIOR RECORDER.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., SEPTEMBER 7, 1879.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 17.

Text of the Lesson, Zech. iv. 1-14.
Memory Verses, 8-10—Golden Text, Zech. iv. 6—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. "And the angel that talked with me came again and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep." The golden text is the verse in this chapter that is generally taken as a text for a sermon, and from it many helpful lessons are learned in reference to the necessity of relying upon the Spirit in all work for God. But we are given the whole chapter for our study and must look at it as a whole. This is the fifth vision in the series, and one helpful thought from this verse is that we are naturally asleep to spiritual things and must be wakened by God ere we can see them.

2, 3. "And said unto me, What seest thou?" Then follows a description of what he saw. A seven branched candlestick or lamp stand all of gold, with a bowl on the top from which pipes carry the oil to the several lamps, and on either side an olive tree from which oil is carried to the central bowl. He sees a self supplying seven branched lamp stand all of gold connected with two olive trees. This carries us back to the temple and to the tabernacle, but in each of those the people made and brought the olive oil which the priest used daily to fill the lamps.

4, 5. He asked the angel what these were, and the angel asked him if he did not know, and he answered that he did not know. When Ezekiel was asked if the dry bones could live, he did not venture an answer, but meekly replied, "O Lord God, Thou knowest" (Ezek. xxxvii. 3). When John was asked by one of the elders who the white robed, palm bearing multitude were, he did venture an answer, but said to the elder, "Sir, thou knowest" (Rev. vii. 14). When we do not know, it is always better to say so than to let people be deceived by making them think we know.

6. "Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the work of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." The prophet was to assure the governor that by supernatural power, even by the Spirit of God, the work would be carried on. Haggai gave the same encouragement in last week's lesson when God said by him, "My Spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not." From Gen. i. 2, where it is written that the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, to Rev. xxii. 17, where the Spirit and the Bride say, Come, all work for God is done by the Spirit of God.

7. "Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain, and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it." The difficulties in the way of completing the house would be overcome by the undeserved favor or grace of God through the Spirit, and the work would surely be finished to the glory of His grace, for with God nothing is impossible, and it is nothing to Him to work by many or by few (Math. xxi. 21; II Chron. xiv. 11). As to individual believers, each one may rejoice that by the grace of God he stands accepted in the Father's house, and we have redemption by His blood, that He who begins the work in us will surely finish it (Eph. i. 6, 7; I Cor. i. 8).

8, 9. "Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house, his hands shall also finish it, and thou shalt know that the Lord of Hosts hath sent me unto you." And so it came to pass notwithstanding manifold hindrances, for the Lord had purposed to do it (Zech. i. 14, 15). The counsel of the Lord standeth forever.

10. "The heart to all generation is a heart of stone. It was purposed in the heart of God to have a spot or wrinkle on the garment of His church, holy and without blemish, having spot or wrinkle or anything of the kind (Eph. v. 27). His people are to be perfect in their own hearts, for the Lord of the whole earth will not have a spot on His garment (Isa. lii. 11).

11, 12. "Then answered I and said unto him, What are these two olive trees upon the right side of the candlestick and upon the left side thereof?" And again he asked what the two olive branches were which empty out of themselves oil into the gold. See margin. If the lamp stand represented the light which Israel was to be for, God in the midst of all nations, then the olive trees which supply the oil which enables the lamps to give light must be very important. The question for the whole church and for every individual believer is, How can we shine for God steadily and brightly? and the answer is found in these two olive trees.

13, 14. "And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my Lord. Then said he, These are the two anointed ones that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." Compare Rev. xi. 4, and see in the two witnesses the two anointed ones for those days. In the time of our lesson the two anointed ones were Zerubbabel and Joshua. In earlier days they were Moses and Aaron, but always, whoever the ruler and the priest might be, they point to Him who is both Priest and King, the true Melchisedek, who shall build the temple of the Lord and bear the glory and sit and rule as a priest upon His throne (Zech. vi. 13). The Lord Jesus Christ, therefore, in His office as Priest and King, gives us the true significance of the two anointed ones, and if we understand His relation to us as both Priest and King we shall shine brightly and steadily for Him to the glory of God COACHING.

Graceful Accomplishment to Know How to Drive Four-in-hand.

Every considerable city in this land has now horse lovers who either own coaches for pleasure driving already or who expect to do so in the future. There is no joy greater than bowling up hill and down dale with a party of friends on the top of a coach drawn by handsome horses with tossing heads and shining coats, animals so well trained that they take pride in answering the light pressure of their driver's hand upon the rein. Beautiful horses, pretty, gayly dressed women, and men as good looking as may be, but who before all love good driving equines and know them, where can you beat the combination?

How to drive a four-in-hand is something that every horse lover wants to know. Mr. Aurel Batonyi has written a book in which instructions on the subject are given with drawings illustrative. The pictures here are reproduced from the Batonyi illustrations:

EVERY DAY RELIGION

CHRIST IS THE ONLY WAY.

BUT, Uncle Bez," said the Girl-Wh o-Tosses--Her--head, "I don't think I'm such a desperately wicked person. My father and mother were good people; so were my grandparents, and I've never wanted to do anything very bad. I mean, that my instincts are right. And yet you insist that I need the same kind of 'cleansing' and the same kind of conversion that some drunkard or thief or murderer needs. That doesn't seem reasonable to me, Uncle Bez."

"My child," said Uncle Bez, "there are a good many persons who do not distinguish between decency and religion. Many a man thinks that because he lives outwardly as a gentleman should, that he has fulfilled every requirement of religion. But he is mistaken. A man does not necessarily have to be a Christian in order to be decent. He may have refined tastes which will keep him from making a beast of himself at the wine table; he may have humanitarian instincts which will keep him from taking undue advantage of his brother in business; he may have a gentle spirit which will make him courteous to all the world, and yet be inwardly consumed by a fierce pride which will prevent his accepting the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Savior. The mere fact that he is a decent man and a gentleman, is something, to be sure; it saves him from a part of the misery of human life, but he still is outside the salvation brought to mankind by the death of Christ upon the cross. And the trouble usually is that he is simply too proud to accept the gift so freely offered him.

"It often seems to me," Uncle Bez went on, "that all the trouble in this world can be traced pretty directly to man's desire to have his own way. We are very proud creatures: almost any one of us is ready at a moment's notice to improve upon the Lord's plan of things. It began in the Garden of Eden when our first parents insisted upon having their own way, and we've been eating the forbidden fruit ever since. Cain wanted his own way, the people in Noah's time wanted their own way, Lot's wife wanted her own way, Joseph's brethren wanted their own way. Pharaoh wanted his own way, though warned by the prophets of God to let the Children of Israel go, the Israelites, wandering in the desert, wanted their own way, even their great leader, Moses, wanted his own way, and because he followed it was not allowed to enter the Land of Promise. And so on down through the ages, men never like to give up their own will, even to the divine will of the Ruler of the Universe.

"You may have wondered, sometimes, why it was that the Jews crucified Jesus Christ. Even Pontius Pilate said, 'I find no fault in Him.' He was gentle and mild; He taught only the purest truth; He went about doing only good; and yet the Jews lieved on Him readily enough. Faith and desire are very close relations. Whenever a man begins to cry earnestly, 'Lord, help my unbelief,' Faith is not long in coming. But Christ's way wasn't the Jew's way; He set at naught all their plans, and so they crucified Him. We mustn't lose sight of the fact that it was the eminently respectable people of the day who were responsible for Christ's death—people who insisted very strongly upon what they professed to believe was the right thing—the church people of Jerusalem—and they did it because they wanted their own way.

"And so, when my little friend comes to me today and says that she isn't bad enough to need the cleansing that Christ gives, that she isn't a drunkard nor a thief, nor a murderer, that she's pretty near good enough as she is, I'm afraid the trouble is she wants to have her own way; that she is too proud to accept the sacrifice Christ made upon Calvary; that she is even like the Jews who nailed Him to the cross, she thinks more of her own way

"SHE'S PRETTY NEAR GOOD ENOUGH AS SHE IS."

clamored for his death. Why was it? Was it not because He interfered with their way? They had built a way of salvation of their own, and they were not going to have it knocked over, not even by the Son of God, if they could help it. Of course, they didn't think He was the Son of God—but they didn't want to believe that. Had it suited their plans, they would have found belief in Him easy enough. If Jesus had gone to the Sanhedrin and announced that He had come to restore the ancient kingdom and to drive out the Romans, and to re-establish the power and glory of the Jewish officers, they would have be-than she does of the Divine plan. Isn't that the trouble? Isn't that why the world refuses Christ's salvation?

"But, my dear, there is no other way. Christ's death on Calvary, the crowning point of the world's history, is our only hope. You won't put yourself outside that hope, will you?"

JESUS WEPT.

FRANK WALCOTT HUTT.

A manly soul wastes not in tears, said one,
As to himself all sympathy he kept;
But how, in after days, was he undone,
When he was told about the Christ that wept.

and thereafter little Saint Bridget, as she came to be universally called, was always accompanied in the evening by her father. During the day he was industriously at work, a changed man in every way. His example of industry and sobriety did much for his old comrades, and a great reformation was going hand in hand with the revival.

In the two years following her first prayer, Alice was, by the blessing of God, the means of the thorough conversion of forty souls. Her mother, to her great sorrow, was not among the number, but the little girl's love and faithfulness made its impression on Margaret. She reformed her ways so far as to leave off habitual drinking, and to lead outwardly a more reputable life.

However, the Lord was to call her, in His own time.

Alice, always full of joy and happiness, came home one afternoon radiant.

"Mother! dear mother!" cried she, "what do you think? Mike is going to close his saloon, not sell it, close it! And he has asked us to hold a meeting there tonight, when he will tell his story to all who come. Mother! mother! aren't you glad? Let us get a nice supper for father, and then we'll all go to the meeting."

The mother had been drinking that day, and was morose. She answered: "I'll get the supper, but I'll not go to Mike's. I'm not much good, and I'm best by myself," and seizing a can of gasoline which she mistook for kerosene, she poured some on the wood. The room was full of the fumes, and in a few moments burst into flames that enveloped both mother and daughter in their fiery embrace. In response to the alarm, the firemen quickly came, and succeeded in carrying the almost lifeless forms out of the doomed building before it fell.

The mother was badly burned, the child, fatally. They were removed to the hospital, and that night little Saint Bridget went home.

She had her cot drawn up beside her mother's; she could talk little, but her last words were:

"I am going to God. Dear mother, give your heart to 'e Savior who loves us, and then we shall be together in heaven."

To her father, she said: "Tell them all to keep on being good. Don't forget, father!"

And he did not forget. This is not a fancy sketch, but the true story of a short life.

Mike is now one of a squad of Christian policemen. John and Margaret Barney are successful evangelists. On the site of their old tenement stands a gray stone building. In the gable end next the street, is a marble tablet bearing in gold letters this legend:

SAINT BRIDGET'S MISSION.
"And a little child shall lead them."

When a man wants to cut the punishments out of the Bible, it is proof of his guilt.

SENSITIVE TO DUTY'S CALL.

NOTHING is more certain than the fact that we can so deaden ourselves to the voice of Conscience that we fail even to hear its pleading in moments of deepest sin. On the other hand, by attending to its warning, we are made aware of the very lightest whisper of our inward monitor.

Commenting on this fact, The Christian Guardian furnishes the following apt illustrations:

"It is told that a telegraph operator at Springfield, Mass., was kept at his post of duty for many hours receiving special news. After losing two nights' sleep, he was relieved from duty to get some rest. He went to his room at the hotel, and soon was fast asleep. When the time came for him to return to his instrument, he could not be awakened. Loud pounding on the door did not result in arousing him. An operator then, with his knife handle, tapped 'Springfield' on the door, in imitation of the clicking of the instrument. At once the sleeping operator sprang from his bed, and was soon ready to continue his work.

"It is said that firemen hear, in their sleep, the signal calling them to duty, while they sleep right on through any number of signals which do not concern them. In an article on 'Heroes Who Fight Fire,' in The Century, Jacob A. Riis tells of a fire department chief who has a gong right over his head at his home, every stroke of which he hears, although he never hears the baby, while his wife hears the baby if it so much as stirs in its crib, but does not hear the gong.

"The gentlest whisper of Conscience is sufficient to call to action the one who has trained himself to hear that voice. A single text from God's Word is a louder call than all the noises of the world, to the one who trains himself to obey that voice."

MET THE TIME OF NEED.

Not many stories of unaffected generosity come to light, but the Michigan Christian Advocate secured a good one recently, concerning Rev. Russell H. Conwell, of Philadelphia. It says of him that he wrote this letter recently to Dean Hutchings, acting president of the University at Ann Arbor:

"Many years ago I made it a rule that I would never retain for my own use more than a certain sum of the proceeds of any lecture. I find that the Toledo lecture has netted me twenty-five dollars in excess of that sum. Is there a needy student in your university to whom that amount would be acceptable?" At that very moment the dean was carrying in mind the case of a young man who had said to him, "I must leave school. I depend on doing chores to earn my tuition, and I have not been able to get enough to do to pay the fees." He was a promising student, and the dean answered him, "You stay in school, and the tuition money will be found somewhere." The twenty-five dollars was just the amount needed. The student is happily and hopefully continuing his university work.

There are spots upon the sun, so they say,
But they never cast a gloom on the day;
The sun shines just as bright
As though none were in sight;
And the days are just as warm,
So those spots can't do much harm,
And the world is not undone
By the spots upon the sun.

"I am afraid we cannot depend on the sun to furnish us light much longer, for I can plainly distinguish spots on its surface already!"

Even where private citizens in a town have no coach it is common for enterprising livery stables to keep one or more for hire on occasion, and the man who knows how to drive the four steeds gracefully and safely is always in demand.

Sheep in pasture choose for their night resting place the highest ground. They naturally like dry spots, and if it is a barren knob, therefore, in a field, they will in the course of a short time fertilize it completely and the droppings while making it their night quarters.

A FRAME RESIDENCE.

Built in the Southern Style—A Good Example of What Can Be Done For $3,800. [Copyright, 1898, by George Palliser, 32 Park place, New York.]

In employing an architect it is natural to consider that he might be done without. Some people base their ability to plan their own buildings on what they have seen others do or on what experience they may have had themselves, and I have known people who never had anything to do with building to tell their architect when the contract was made, "I can superintend the work myself," thinking that as the plans and the specifications were settled the rest was easy and they could do it as well as any one else. When I have a client of this kind, I am always glad to note the measure of his success or failure, and it has invariably turned out that such clever people have either ended in a law suit with their builders or have had a big bill to pay for extras, and often both. Builders prefer to deal with those who know the business and who, when they require information from the architect, can get it in practical form. But from one who does not know a plan or its construction it is difficult to get anything, and it is generally a quarrel over everything, as it is but half done, and in nearly every case the architect is called on to settle disputes at last.

The architect protects his client and at the same time is just to the builder. With his knowledge and experience he is able to give advice and assistance in the settlement of every detail. He places his imprint on all that he does, and the value of this comes in the artistic effect produced. At the same time his superior knowledge enables him to see the finished conception, and he does not interfere with the end in view by changing here and there as progress is made. And this is what the owner invariably does who has the courage of his convictions. The architect, no matter how vigilant he is, cannot foresee everything in the operation of building and must take for granted much that the builder does. Hence it is important to get the co-operation of a competent builder, one who has a sound reputation and who is known to do the best work only. With such a builder, the work being supervised by the architect, the result will be satisfactory and will show superiority of taste and ingenuity of form, as well as be workmanlike, economical and lasting. These are the fruits of efficient management.

This design was erected in the south and shows a capital plan arranged to suit that locality, the kitchen being isolated, entirely outside the main house, as is usual in that section.

A frame residence, 47 feet wide and 58 feet deep; a good plan for a roomy home

SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

Height of stories—first floor, 12 feet; second floor, 11 feet; frame rough sheathed; first story clapboard finish; other parts shingled; roofs of shingles; inside finish of yellow pine, of neat design and finished in natural wood; plumbed complete, having water from cistern, force pump and tank; cesspool for drainage; walls sand finished for papering; open fireplaces, with wood mantels complete; exterior work, two coats paint; veranda ceilings, yellow pine, finished in spar composition; shingles, two coats creosote stain; attic floored over.

Cost to build, $3,780. This price was in the south, where lumber and other materials are cheap.

The kitchen wing can be enlarged or changed to suit requirements and can be made two stories high at slight added cost. The height of the ceilings can also be changed.

A South African Political Heroine.

I must tell you what one of my girls did on Wednesday. This place is very Dutch, a strong Bond district, and, of course, the girls have shown party spirit, too, during the election. One girl brought her tiffin in a piece of newspaper on which was printed a portrait of Mr. Rhodes. The girls stuck this up on the wall and threw pellets at it. There were only two admirers of him in the whole school, a little and a big girl. The big girl tore it down and handed it to the little one, who ran for her life (she's 14) with the precious greasy paper. When she found the whole school after her, she tore it up, and as they still pursued for the pieces she ate them. That night she complained of a pain, and you can imagine how astonished her aunt was, when, in answer to her anxiety, she said: "No, I don't think it's cold. I expect it is Rhodes!"—Matabele Times

In the course of a speech seconding the memorial resolution on the late Isaac H. Bromley at the Union League club, New York, a fortnight ago Chauncey M. Depew said: "He was one of the few wits whose faculty was so perfect that he did not need to inflict a wound. Victim and associates equally enjoyed the joke, for Bromley's humor in the social circle never left a scar. His answer to the angry subscriber of the paper he was temporarily editing years ago because of the scarcity in its columns of cables and telegrams was characteristic: 'We are poor, but honest. Even our Vatican news is taken from The Sentinel of Rome, N. Y.'"

ALLIGATORS AT PLAY.

How the Ungainly Creatures Conduct a Game of Pyramid.

Did you ever see the zoo alligators play pyramid or any other of their famous games? They wrestle like old time Greco-Roman boys and strain and struggle in all sorts of ways at it. When finally one wins by getting the other on his back, a funnier thing occurs. The victor makes a sound like escaping steam, then the others make sounds like escaping steam—alligators' applause, if you please. Then they all become still and watch the vanquished brother squirm to get off of his back and on to his legs again. If he's longer in doing it than the gang think is proper, they move up in single file and give him a jab with their jaw in his upturned belly. When finally he gets himself righted, all hands again set up the steam escaping racket, cheering him long and as loud as they did his victor. Their meaning no fight is shown by their never hurting each other.

Another of the great midsummer pastimes of these zoo alligators is playing pyramid. The gators play pyramid several times a day. To see it done you'd declare that the ugly things had been trained to it. But no. It's just one of the ways of the sporty side of their life. The game comes on by one of the bigger alligators uttering the steam hissing noise. This calls the others to attention. Then the big one says a line or two of alligator talk and stretches himself full length in the center of the pen. No sooner is this done than a little bit smaller alligator crawls on top of the other and stretches out lengthwise, but head to tail with the other. The second one being settled, he lets off a little steam talk, and a third, a little smaller alligator, climbs up on top of the second and settles down as the second did. They keep this up until six or seven have builded themselves into as strange and wonderful a pyramid as ever an eye beheld. After each one has settled on top of the other he lies perfectly motionless, so that when the pyramid is completed it appears as some marvelous carving.

But this effect lasts only about two minutes after the pyramid is finished. Then comes a new chapter of the act. The Sandow 'gator underneath all starts to crawling. He heads for up and down places in the pen, the game clearly being to see how long it will take him to jolt his strange pyramid load to pieces. And right here develops what appears to be a strict rule of the game. Say there are seven in the pyramid, and the sixth from the bottom jostles off first, taking, of course, the seventh one with him. You'd naturally think the game done for that sixth and seventh alligator. But not at all. It seems that the sixth one is in disgrace for having been shaken off before the seventh one, who was top of the heap. Therefore, what does the seventh do but cling to the back of the sixth after they've fallen off and proceeds to ride Mr. Alligator No. 6 around the pen until Mr. Sandow Alligator has succeeded in dumping the whole shooting match. If the fourth is shaken off before the fifth, the fifth, like the seventh, proceeds to ride his disgraced "next" until Sandow gets rid of all his load, and another game is started.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Made the Paper Pay.

Papa Cobb, the old Harvard athlete, who returned from Dawson on the Roanoke with a big bag of gold, tells the following story about patriotism for the stars and stripes at Dawson:

"One day a man showed up in camp with a single copy of a newspaper containing the first account of Dewey's victory at Manila. This single paper was the first intimation we had of the great things our navy had been doing, and it was sought after more eagerly than gold.

"An enterprising Yankee purchased it for $10 and then hired Tammany hall for the evening. He charged 50 cents and packed the hall. He read the paper to the crowd, and after every sentence there was a regular warwhoop. It made the walls of the building tremble. The success of the venture was so pronounced that he rented the hall for the next night and reaped another harvest. He made $400 off that one newspaper and sold it to a miner who was going into the diggings for $50."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Corn Oil.

Some of the manufacturers of glucose in Chicago have turned their attention to the production of corn oil, an article extracted by pressure from the germ of the grain by a method similar to that used in the manufacture of linseed oil, leaving a residuum not unlike in its character the oil cake of commerce. It seems that in the production of glucose it was a matter of necessity first to extract the germ, this, for a long time, involving a waste. As against this, a company now turns out some 350 barrels of corn oil per day. Most of the oil goes to England for soapmaking. It is shipped in secondhand oil barrels, each of a weight, when filled, of 400 pounds, rated at the factory at 3 cents per pound. Some of the oil is used in this country principally in mixing cheap paint and for adulterating linseed oil. It is regarded as a rapid "drying" oil.

Fascination of Light.

Many theories have been suggested as to why light attracts moths, but perhaps the best explanation is that it fascinates them as a serpent does a bird. So much is this the case that traps have been devised for their destruction based on this fact. One of these inventions consists of an electric searchlight in connection with a blowing fan. The insects, completely fascinated, are attracted by the light and fly close to the lantern; they are then drawn into a pipe by a suction draft and carried to a sort of mill, which mixes them up with a little flour. The resulting blend is then used for poultry food. When some warships were using their powerful searchlights off the coast of Egypt, at more than two miles from the shore, millions of insects, fascinated by the light, traveled along the beam of light until they struck the glass and fell, where they accumulated into a heap more than two feet in height. Light equally fascinates fishes, and they have been lured to the nets by a glowlight lowered in the water.

THE IDAHO PEA.

Its Seeds Are Said to Possess High Feeding Value.

The Idaho pea is being talked of lately as a new forage plant, and its cultivation has been highly recommended in the west on account of the value of its seeds for horse feed and as a substitute for coffee. From the forage plant investigations of the department of agriculture it is learned that gram, Idaho pea or chick pea (Cicer arictinum) has been in cultivation in eastern countries longer than any other leguminous crop. It is estimated that there are now in India 5,000,000 acres devoted to its cultivation either alone or as a bycrop with wheat. Next to the cereals gram forms the largest part of the food used in India and in portions of northern Africa, Spain and other countries bordering on the Mediterranean.

This plant is a branching annual, with many upright stems from the same root. The leaves resemble those of the vetch, having seven pairs of small leaflets. These are oblong, soft, hairy all over, one-half inch long or less, and sharply toothed on the margins. The flowers are borne singly in the axils of the leaves on short stalks about one-half inch long. The pods are bladdery, inflated, from one-half to three-fourths of an inch long and finely pubescent, with glandular hairs. Each pod contains one, or very rarely two, large seeds, which are wrinkled and bear a fanciful resemblance to a ram's horn, whence the Latin name arictinum. The seeds are a little larger than those of the common garden pea, to which they are quite similar.

The Idaho pea was cultivated in 1895 and 1896 at the Colorado experiment station. Professor Cooke states that it "has demonstrated its ability to make a large growth with plenty of water and a fair growth with a very limited supply." It belongs to the pea family, and is grown in rows 30 inches apart, and the plants 60 to 12 inches apart in the rows. Its growth indicates that it can be raised for about 1 cent a pound.

About 30 to 50 pounds of seed are used per acre, depending upon whether it is sown in drills or broadcast. All authorities agree that it is better suited to arid and semiarid regions than to humid ones, the crop apparently requiring a great many sunny days during its season of growth. Better results are obtained in growing it with irrigation than without, although it makes a fair yield on comparatively dry soils. If continued experiments with this plant in the west prove that its average yield is as high as has been claimed, it will undoubtedly prove a valuable addition to the list of forage plants suitable to semiarid regions.

The gram plant is very sensitive to cold. The seed should be sown not earlier than May 15, or, at the higher altitudes, about the 1st of June, and if some of the short season varieties are procured there will be less danger of their being caught by early frosts. Gram is sown in India as a winter crop. It is said to be adapted to almost any soil from light sandy to heavy clay or loam, apparently preferring the latter. It might prove of some value in parts of the southern states as a winter crop and soil cover on lands which are unsuited to the vetches and the crimson clover. It requires only moderate amounts of moisture and is said to be injured by prolonged cloudy weather or abundant rains, which cause it to flower prematurely and thus materially affects the yield of seed.

THE GIRL'S ALLOWANCE.

It Is Her Right, and It Teaches Her the Proper Use of Money.

"Every self respecting woman, be she maid or wife, has a natural and intense dislike to ask her father or husband for every penny she needs," says Edward Bok, writing in the August Ladies' Home Journal on "Giving Allowances to Girls." "Nor is the feeling lessened by the fact that the money can be had for the asking and is always given ungrudgingly. It is the asking which women dislike. They justly recoil from it, and men ought to understand it better than they do. It should be said that the husband who refuses to give his wife a regular allowance is rapidly becoming the exception. But there are still too many fathers who withhold an allowance from their daughters. If it be true that the average girl has no idea of the value of money, how will she ever gain a better knowledge of its worth unless she is given the opportunity?"

Our girls must be educated in money matters, and there is no surer method than by giving them money of their own to spend—a regular weekly or monthly allowance given them to cover certain regulated expenses. It is only natural that at the start a girl will spend foolishly. To meet this inevitable experience the amount of the allowance should be accordingly regulated. After awhile, however, when she gets accustomed to the handling of money, she will learn its value better and be more judicious in spending it. To give a girl an allowance is not a privilege, but her right. To withhold it is to do her a serious wrong and likewise is an injustice to the man whom she will marry and whose money she will be entrusted with to spend wisely. She should have experience before she reaches that point, and that experience can only come to her from her father in an allowance of her own while she is his daughter in his home."

"Lieutenant Hobson," says Today of London, "whose sinking of the Merri-mac before Santiago has made him famous, was at one time a resident in Paris, and was among the first to join the White Rovers' Football club, who pioneered the association game into France. W. H. Sheator, who was one of the founders, and who gave me this little bit of information, did not speak very highly of Hobson's play. He remarked: 'Hobson always played as though he did not know on which side he was on. He kicked all over the place, and among the most celebrated of these kicks was one that put a prominent member of our club to bed for six weeks.'"

OUR DUTY AS A NATION.

What Will Be the Effect of Our Final and Complete Victory Over Spain?

Many of us deplored the Spanish war, many of us now look forward with anxious solicitude concerning the effect of victory on the victor, but still as we survey the movements of human history in the large we cannot fail to see in all that is occurring the inevitable grist of the mills of the gods and the irrefragable judgments of the Weltgericht. Spain and the middle ages could not tarry in the west. We, on the other hand, could not shut ourselves within the walled gardens of our pleasant domesticity and shun responsibilities that the commerce and intercourse of the larger world exact of those who stand for order and equal justice in the affairs of men.

While, then, we may well be called upon now to readjust our conception of national purpose and duty to the new order and our new position, we dare not be false to ourselves or our past. Our charter and creed we must interpret, if no longer in the letter, then all the more scrupulously in the spirit. However the letter and the form may fade and vanish away, there are some things that must needs abide. A nation proclaiming government of the people and for the people cannot impose on conquered peoples a foreign sway or one that finds its supreme motive in the benefits accruing to others than the governed.

It is character that counts in nations as in individuals. Only in loyalty to the old can we serve the new, only in understanding of the past can we interpret and use the present.—Benjamin Ide Wheeler in Atlantic For August.

Lying by the Clock.

Many a man who would not for any money go into the kitchen at 7 o'clock in the morning and say to the cook: "Do you know it is half past 7 o'clock? Well, it is, and more—it's just 35 minutes past 7—and my train goes in 25 minutes!" will quietly and in cold blood put the clock up to telling this lie for him. This isn't fair to the clock. It is bad enough when a man, or even a woman, in a sudden gust of anger swears at a tramp or peddler or irritating caller with a slamming door or a banging window. That is done in a quick frenzy of temper and has sometimes the excuse of great provocation. But lying by the clock is always done with calm deliberation and malice aforethought, and it is persevered in day by day. It's too mean on the clock. Vocal as the big clock at Dr. Blimber's, speaking to poor little Paul, these martyred clocks should sit heavy on the conscience of the teacher, saying all day long in staccato tones: "My, mas, ter, makes, me, lie. My, mas, ter, makes, me, lie."—Robert J. Burdette in Ladies' Home Journal For August.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

DR. DAVID'S LIVER PILLS are offered to the public as the best cure for a disordered liver known, and but one trial is needed to convince the most skeptical of this fact.

These Pills are very mild and harmless in their action upon the Liver and Bowels, and where persons are suffering with any Bilious Affections, Headache, especially Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dyspepsia, or any disease of the Liver or Stomach, they should always have a box of them near at hand, and take them by directions found on the box.

The verdict of everybody that has taken Dr. David's Liver Pills is, "They are the best and most pleasant Pills I ever took." All sufferers should give them a trial. Price 25 cents a box; five boxes for $1.00. For sale everywhere. Ask for Dr. David's Liver Pills, and have no other. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

LESSON XIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 24.

Text of the Lesson, a Comprehensive Review of the Quarter—

LESSON I.—Gracious Invitations, Hos. xiv, 1-9. Golden text, Hos. vi, 1, "Come, and let us return unto the Lord." The Lord made man for Himself, that man might enjoy Him and that He might enjoy and dwell with man and be glorified in him. He wants us for his peculiar treasure and desires that we should find in Him our portion (Ex. xix, 5; Lam. iii, 24). This He sought to fulfill in Adam, in Noah, in Abraham, in the prophets and apostles, but it was only fully exemplified in Christ Jesus.

LESSON II.—Daniel in Babylon, Dan. i, 8-21. Golden text, Dan. i, 8, "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself." It is one thing to be a child of God, but to be such a choice one as Daniel, who would separate himself from even seemingly lawful things that God might be glorified in him, is a rare thing. This is the narrow way, and few there be that find it, but those who do find it learn to know God as others cannot. See in verses 9, 15, 17, 20, how God wrought for and in these men because of their special devotion to Him.

LESSON III.—The Hebrews in the Fiery Furnace, Dan. iii, 14-28. Golden text, Dan. iii, 17, "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us." If we are willing to be His choice ones, set apart for Himself (Ps. iv, 3), true Nazarites (Num. vi, 1-8) fearing not the frown and seeking not the favor of any man, and not fearing even death, we must expect to be hated for His sake (John xv, 20, 21); but he tells us not to fear suffering or even death (Rev. ii, 10; Math. x, 28), for to die is gain, and to be with Christ is very far better (Phil. i, 21, 23).

LESSON IV.—The Handwriting on the Wall, Dan. v, 17-31. Golden text, Ps. lxxv, 7, "God is the Judge." A drunken feast, God dishonored and defied, one word from Him of solemn import, and Belshazzar passes from time into eternity. He knew how God had warned and humbled his father, but gave no heed to it, and Daniel summed up the story when He said to him, "The God in whose hand thy breath is and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified?" (verse 23).

LESSON V.—Daniel in the Den of Lions, Dan. vi, 10-23. Golden text, Ps. cxxi, 5, "The Lord is thy keeper." We have again the truth that to fear God is to fear no man and not even to fear death. Daniel's friends would not bow their heads nor bend the knee to save their lives, and Daniel will not stop praying nor close his windows when he prays to save his life. When there is fear of man there is forgetfulness of God (Isa. li, 12, 13).

LESSON VI.—The New Heart, Ezek. xxxvi, 25-36. Golden text, Ezek. xxxvi, 26, "A new heart also will I give you." How can we get over sinning against God and become brave and true people for God, like Daniel and his friends? The natural man cannot do it, and no amount of education or reformation can make him do it, but God can give a new heart, a new nature, even put Himself in us, and God in us can do as He did in Daniel and his friends, for it was by the Spirit of God in them that they did as they did.

LESSON VII.—Ezekiel's Great Vision, Ezek. xxxvii, 1-14. Golden text, Ezek. xxxvi, 27, "I will put My Spirit within you." Not only does God give a new life which we never had before, but by His Spirit who comes to live in us He will live that life. The believer becomes a mansion in which Father, Son and Spirit dwell (John xiv, 17-23); a temple of the Holy Ghost (I Cor. iii, 16; vi, 19), and if we yield fully our life will be that of one alive from the dead, a resurrection life.

LESSON VIII.—The River of Salvation, Ezek. xlvi, 1-12. Golden text, Rev. xxii, 17, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." While all who receive Christ are equally saved, there is no limit to the degree of yieldedness which he may enjoy. Our enjoyment of Christ may be as water to the ankles or to the knees or to the loins or as a mighty river, and it all depends upon our willingness to be wholly or only in part set apart for God Himself.

LESSON IX.—Returning From Captivity, Ez. i, 1-11. Golden text, Ps. cxxvi, 3, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." This is not the age of subduing the world unto God, but of gathering out of all nations an elect people who will rule with Christ when He comes again; in other words, it is the age of gathering out the church, of building Eve, His body and bride, and all believers are commissioned to take part in this by either going themselves to help give the gospel to every creature or by helping with their money and prayers those who do go.

LESSON X.—Rebuilding the Temple, Ez. iii, 10, to iv, 5. Golden text, I Cor. iii, 17, "The temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." There were many and very persistent hinderers to the work in the days of Zerubbabel, who for a time actually caused the work to cease, and yet in due time the temple was finished. There are many hinderers and hindrances to the work of completing the church, and yet He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied.

LESSON XI.—Encouraging the Builders, Hag. ii, 1-9. Golden text, Hag. ii, 4, "Be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work—for I am with you." The people, being hindered, grew indifferent, and were attending to their own affairs while the house of God lay waste, consequently they labored in vain, worked hard and accomplished little, and when they had somewhat by their toil it all seemed to blow away. God raised up Haggai and Zechariah to show the people their sin, and to guide them in the right way, and from the day when they began to resume building the temple, God began to bless them (Hag. ii, 18, 19).

LESSON XII.—Power Through the Spirit, Zech. iv, 1-14. Golden text, Zech. iv, 6, "Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." This is the great lesson of the whole quarter—apart from God nothing but failure, but by His Spirit great things are accomplished. Daniel and his friends, Ezekiel, Haggai and Zechariah, Zerubbabel and Joshua were all men of the Spirit, the Spirit working in them and through them to the glory of God. I believe with increasing firmness that our one great need as Christians is to be fully under the control of the Spirit of God.

THE FISHERMAN'S STRING.

I went a-fishin' one sweet summer day,
Bein' sick o' work an' wantin' to play.
I longed for a sight o' the woods an' things,
The smell o' ferns an' the whirrin' of wings;
So I took my rod and a piece o' pie,
An' I struck a path goes m'anderin' by
A brook that's plum full o' shinin' fish,
The purtiest ever was served on a dish.

There, shady, an' snug-like beside the brook,
I fixed up my rod an' baited my hook,
'Twas as sweet as heaven there in the shade,
The fragrantest day that God ever made.
The birds they was busy as gatherin' bees,
There was matin' goin' on in the trees,
An' I had luck that day—the tidiest batch
As ever was fisherman's lot to catch.

First I caught a sight o' a thing so sweet,
Outside o' Eden it couldn't be beat;
'Twas a nest o' babies—a robin brood,
All a cheepin' an' pesterin' fer food,
How the old birds worked till each crop was filled,
An' every hungerin' cheep was stilled!
Then I thought o' the Father's love fer me,
Till the tears brimmed up 'n I couldn't see.

Next, I caught a sight o' a shinin' fin;
'Twas a trout enjoyin' his mornin' spin,
"God put you in there, ol' fellow," says I,
"An' there ain't no reason that you should die.

Today there'll be fun an' freedom fer you;
I'll just let you swim, an' that's what I'll do!"

An' surely I caught sight as I left him there
Another sweet glimpse o' my Father's care.

So I stayed there—an' "fished"—the hull day through,
Enjo, in' the trees an' the sky o' blue,
The robin's clear call an' the pillow o' moss,

An' not a thing sufferin' hurt an' loss.
Yes, I might 've shot an' I might 've snared,
An' I might 've hooked, but fer once I spared,
An' I caught in my heart, as I come away,
An echo of voices that seemed to say:

"Be kind, thou good Father of us all,
To the man who loved the robin's call,
Who looked on the fish and harmed it not,
And hurt no thing in this holy spot."
—Ada M. Shaw, in "Zion's Herald."

WAR CLAIM

We give below the first note of the fall Conferences on the war claim, and will continue to let the Virginia Conference know what is going on in the Church in reference to this great question. Editorial comment will follow next week.

MISSOURI CONFERENCE.

The following resolutions were adopted by a very large majority:

WHEREAS, There are many members of the M. E. Church, South, who can never approve of the method by which the publishing house war claim was collected, and

WHEREAS, There seems to be no chance of relief left to the Church except by the action of the General Conference, and

WHEREAS, A majority of our bishops have refused to call a special session of the General Conference to attend to this important matter, therefore

RESOLVED: That the Missouri Conference here and now records its call for a special session of the General Conference to meet the first Wednesday in May, 1900, to which body everything pertaining to this publishing house claim shall be referred for proper adjustment.

RESOLVED, Secondly: That during this session of the Missouri Conference delegates shall be elected to this special session of the General Conference.

RESOLVED, Thirdly: That this Conference respectfully and urgently request all other Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, to join us in this call

CORRESPONDENCE

(There has been a great deal said recently in condemnation of Prof. Atwater because he made a statement in one of his tracts that alcohol, under certain circumstances, was a food. Mrs. Faville in this article shows that while Prof. Atwater does hold this view he also holds that the "moral argument against the use of alcohol is invincible.")

The light never damages truth.—Ed.

ONCE MORE, PROFESSOR ATWATER.

(BY MRS. M. C. FAVILLE.)

The very elect are just now paying as much and about the same kind of attention to the truthful Prof. Atwater as was some years ago paid the truthful Dr. Briggs. In one respect the same result is likely to follow—the arousing of a popular interest in the faithful chemist's work, which it could not have attracted without the free advertising of the vociferous opposition. The funny thing about the matter is this: Prof. Atwater has but restated and demonstrated more clearly what has long been known to students of chemistry and physiology. Mark, the word is students, not great doctors.

"There is no doubt that alcohol, in certain doses, may properly be called a food. If not more than two ounces * * * are taken in the twenty-four hours it is completely oxidized in the body and excreted as water and carbon-dioxide. In this oxidation energy is of course liberated and can be utilized."—Newell Martin, in "Human Body," 1881.

In the "Century" magazine for May 1888, Prof. Atwater gave a popular account of his food studies, and made practically the same statement as that in the offending bulletin. Do none of the elect know their "Century?"

"To the final question, IS ALCOHOL A FOOD? We must, in the present state of physiological science, answer, unqualifiedly, in the affirmative. * * * It also unquestionably retards the waste of tissue, and this directly apart from its action on the nervous system."—B. F. Westbrook, M. D., in "Practical Therapeutics," 1897.

The physicians quoted, as well as Prof. Atwater speak with authority. No scientific man holds the confidence of his brother scientists as these men hold it, except he is known to be a faithful seeker for truth, and has demonstrated his ability to find it.

None of them say alcohol is a wholesome food; all say it is not, and that it is dangerous. Food is that which builds up the body or prevents waste of its tissues, or furnishes it with energy. By this construction alcohol is a food which supplies physical energy and saves the wasting of tissues without consuming energy for its assimilation. About the same per cent. of alcohol as of meat, vegetables, and other foods, is wasted by the body. These are rock-bound facts. It is quite as useless and fanatical to deny facts to-day as it was when the teachings of Galileo were fresh. It is wiser to use our energy in learning truth than to waste it in condemning truth-seekers. Refusal to face the truth, to recognize facts, is evidence to every one but the subject that his own armor is faulty.

It has been said that Prof. Atwater should not have published the results of his experiments. There was once a Church afraid to give the Bible to the people. He knew that he was not telling anything very new. How could he know that one of his bulletins was to fall into the clutches of the elect, or what reason had he to suppose that if such a thing occurred, the little paper would be read?

The statement which has been torn from its setting has been made in reliable text books of physiology for many years. Why should the repetition of it be demoralizing. The professor's critics should not have so widely advertised this one truth, unaccompanied by its natural companions, if they thought it mischievous.

There is nothing in Prof. Atwater's many useful papers on foods which indicates that his true views of temperance are lax. In the "Century" papers above referred to, after his statement of the fact that alcohol is a food, he quotes Dr. E. A. Parks as follows:

"In health it (alcohol) is certainly not a necessity, and many persons are much better without it. As now used by mankind, it is infinitely more powerful for evil than for good."

Prof. Atwater's comment is:

"I should be inclined to insist more strongly upon the importance, in this country at least, of general abstinence from its use."

Again he says:

"Great as is the physical evil of alcohol, the moral evil is incomparably greater; true temperance reform is moral reform; like every other moral reform it will be best furthered by close alliance with the truth. The moral argument against alcohol seems to me invincible. Is it not certainly strong enough when the facts are adhered to, without the exaggerations into which earnest reformers, in the intensity of their convictions, are sometimes led?"

"When we teach them (our children) in the name of science, shall we not teach them the simple facts which science attests, and which they can hereafter believe, rather than exaggerated theories, whose errors, when they learn them, will tend to undo the good we strive to do? In short, is not temperance advisable even in the teaching of temperance doctrine?"

"In the great effort to make men better, there is one thing that we must always seek, one thing that we must never fear—the truth."

Is there any uncertain sound about that?

Norfolk, Va.

THE SUPERANUATE

MADE ACTIVE.

To-day the training school holds the situation. If you want a machinist, a missionary, a plumber or preacher, the training-school prepares him. Twenty-five years ago, when I started as a young preacher, the elder gave me the Biggsville circuit for a training-school. It had five appointments, from ten to fifteen miles apart. The man who says those fifteen-mile tramps were not as good as parallel bars for muscular development has never tried them both. The three sermons on Sunday made safe the pressure of my youthful enthusiasm, and five protracted meetings gave a growth in grace. Altogether, my training-school was not particularly conducive to the practice of rusting out. The new kind may be better, but I am old foggy enough to doubt it.

Biggsville at this time contained about two hundred souls. In the outskirts of the village, on the way out to the cemetery on the hill, there stood a cheap little house. The original architect evidently calculated without his host, and when two rooms would not hold, with the closet crowding, a wife and seven children, he managed to add an "L." It had not yet become the fashion for one man with one wife and no children to occupy a house as big as a hotel for a private residence. It was customary in those days to have children and expensive to have rooms. She had two small children and a smaller income. It was found to be a good thing for both when Sister Walker leased the "L" to old Father Bracken, who, after forty years in the ministry, had been rendered "ineffective," and had settled at Biggsville because he must settle somewhere.

Strange as it may seem, it was, nevertheless, true that, notwithstanding forty years of manhood devoted to the service of God and man, the interest he drew on this investment, when cashed in the coin of the country, made only about $140. That is to say, the Conference Claimants Committee once gave him that amount as a top notch. It did not do this often. Small as it was the sum did double duty in helping the widow keep the wolf from the door, as well as making existence possible for Father Bracken. It looked like a case of poverty, but Father Bracken did not show it.

"A man he was to all the country dear; And passing rich with forty pounds a year."

Do you suppose a preacher ever forgets his first sermon? He may forget what he said, but never how he felt. I well remember how the perspiration bathed my body and anxieties played hide-and-seek through my brain in the pulpit of the little Biggsville Church. Suddenly there arose before me from the front seat the vision of a calm, inspiring face brightened by a pair of clear, trustful blue eyes, and sunlit with the radiant smile of faith. It seemed like the faith of one of the patriarchs. Its inspiration kindled mine and lifted me on the wings of faith above the weakness of the flesh and out into the deep things of God, till the preacher was lost in the preached word. This was my introduction to the superannuate of the Biggsville circuit.

I was reading a paper one day in the rear of John Wayne's store while John and a travelling man were talking in front. I overheard them.

"Hello! Who's the old codger coming down the street in threadbare clothes, hands behind his back and walking like a king in his garden?" said the travelling man. John's hands opened and shut, his breath quickened, but he relieved the tension and burst out:

"King in his garden?" That's just what he is. If ever there was a true child of God that's the man, and as this is God's country you struck it about right, if you didn't intend to. He's a child of a King, walking in the King's highway. There's one man that proves 'Tis religion that can give Sweetest pleasure while you live, and I'd stake my all he'll prove

'Tis religion can supply Solid comfort when you die."

"Why, John, you are a little enthusiastic over the old man, aren't you?"

"Yes, but I have lots of company. There isn't a man, woman or child in this town but's just the same."

"He must be something extra!"

"He is indeed an extra sort of a man. The new preacher joked him the other day on being so popular. A merry twinkling flashed in the old man's eyes and he said: 'Yes; it does the people of Biggsville good just to see me.' He thought he was passing a joke, but the rest of us knew it was the Gospel truth. Then, too, he's a sort of sunshine and a better medicine than any doctor these parts has got. He would sooner do something for some one else than himself any time; and ain't that about as near as you ever get to loving your neighbor as yourself? 'Round here that goes for pretty good proof that you love God, too; so you see he has the whole thing."

"Yes, John, if a man loves his neighbor as himself, I guess he's got religion. Is the old man well fixed? Most old preachers have hard picking, and how can he be so saintly if he's on a constant watch to see if the rations will keep up the supply to the end?"

"Well, he's just like the rest. It's about 'live horse and get grass' with him."

No regular meeting of the Church came off without Father Bracken. He often conducted the service in my absence. In revivals his exhortations did more in bringing forward sinners than my best sermons.

As the days went by I saw that his natural force was abating. They gave him a cane at one of his charges, but he seemed to think nature had not intended him to lean on any other support than the arm of the Infinite. The night of January 20 was long remembered in Biggsville as the night of the great blizzard. A blinding snowstorm prevailed all day, and when night came the mercury dropped to twenty degrees below zero. It was not until late the next morning that men could be seen shoveling paths in the snow.

Father Bracken had also been a disciple of John Wesley in the matter of early rising. On this very cold morning, however, Mrs. Walker did not wonder at not hearing him moving in his room. But when the breakfast dishes had all been put away, and still there was no sound, she ventured into his room to stir the fire. Great was her surprise to see him sitting in his armchair in front of the fireless fireplace, with his head resting on his hands as they lay on the table.

Fearing he was ill, she rushed to him, placing her hand on his shoulder, and said:

"What's the matter, Bro. Bracken? Are you sick?"

No voice responded, but her pressure on the shoulder swayed the stiff body to one side and revealed the truth. Father Bracken was in the land where there is no sickness. His large Bible lay open before him, and one of his pencilings brought out the passage from Timothy: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love His appearing."

On Sunday afternoon in every direction outside the Church could be seen teams hitched. Men and boys in great numbers stood around, kicking their toes to keep them warm and talking in subdued tones. Inside, every possible nook and corner was filled. Never before nor since was there such a large funeral seen in that country.

I stood looking over the pulpit desk after the services, looking down at the calm face of Father Bracken, and at the groups of people who filed by, shaken with sobs. Each stopped a moment and looked with love at the face more people pinned their faith to than any other ever known there. The choir sang softly with quavers in their voices:

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories fade away;
Change and decay in all around I see;
Thou, who changest not, abide with me."

The thought came to me as I looked on that to be a bishop or a president is not to be compared with this glory. Let my last end be like his. James H. Shaw, in "Christian Uplook."

RELIGIOUS LIFE OF

FAMOUS AMERICANS.

Among the notable historical articles scheduled for periodical publication during the coming few months is a series of articles on "The Religious life of Famous Americans," which will be contributed to the "Union Gospel News" of Cleveland, by Waldon Fawcett; who has recently come into some prominence as magazine writer. The opening paper of the series is entitled "George Washington as a Churchman," and will be followed by others on Franklin, Webster, Lincoln, and other notable Americans. The series finally concluding with presentations of the religious views of commanders prominent in the Spanish-American war.

WASHINGTON'S RELIGIOUS SIDE.

No visitors were admitted to the Washington home on Sunday, with the single exception of Speaker Trumbull, at the time secretary to the general, and who for years maintained the custom of spending an hour with him each Sunday evening. Washington, as a rule, spent Sunday afternoon in his room and in the evening frequently read a sermon of a selection from a religious work to Mrs. Washington in her own apartment.

The wife of the first president of the United States was quite as devout as her husband. After breakfast each morning she retired for an hour to her chamber for prayer and reading the Holy Scriptures, a practice she never omitted during half a century of life under varied conditions. In Church Mrs. Washington always knelt, while her husband stood during the devotional portions of the service. At every repast Washington always, unless a clergyman was present, asked a blessing in a standing posture. If a clergyman was present he was requested to ask a blessing and also to return thanks after the conclusion of the meal.

OPENING EXERCISES OF THE BLACKSTONE FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The opening exercises of the Blackstone Female Institute will take place on Friday night, Sept. 15, in the Institute Chapel. The address will be delivered by Rev. W. Asbury Christian, pastor of Centenary Church, Lynchburg. The opening sermon will be delivered by Dr. J. T. Wightman, of Baltimore, who is at present supplying the pulpit of Dr. A. Coke Smith, at Court-Street, Lynchburg. It is one of the characteristic features of the Blackstone work that as much stress is laid upon the opening exercises as upon the closing. It is very important to pitch the tune right in the beginning.

Revs. John Anderson, W. F. Packard, J. H. Pritchett and R. H. Cooper, delegates to the last General Conference, were continued to the call Conference.

Some of the most pertinent and pointed speeches in the war claim debate were by Judge Shackelford, Prof. Bond and Revs. R. H. Cooper, and W. A. Hanna.

Rev. J. M. O'Bryen and Prof. R. T. Bond were chosen to represent the Conference at the next session of the American National Anti-Saloon League which meets in Chicago.

The next session of the Conference will be held in Fulton. The Worn-Out Preachers', Widows' and Orphans' Funds received no help from the Publishing House. The senior Agent said in explanation that it was an "off year."—"St. Louis Advocate."

BISHOPS AND BOOK AGENTS.

In the discussion at the recent session of the Missouri Conference it was asserted that our Bishops at Baltimore discouraged investigation of the methods by which the Publishing House war claim was collected. Bishop Granbery, speaking from the chair, said that it was the first that he had ever heard of the matter. If there was such discouragement, he thought it must have come from individuals and not from the College of Bishops. No one at Baltimore fully realized the gravity of this question or the far-reaching consequences of the questionable acts of our Agents. But there were few of the multitude who listened to the debate at Fayette last week who did not realize the force of the declaration of Dr. J. H. Carlisle, of South Carolina, when he said, "Far better for Southern Methodism had a flood-tide in the Cumberland river washed out the foundations and our Publishing House had fallen into ruins."

During the temporary calm of the last 100 days the fog and dust of personalities and prejudice have sufficiently cleared away to enable many people who have been blinded and dazed in the confusion, to now clearly see the thing in all its hideous deformity. Both sides in the Fayette debate evidently realized the seriousness of the situation, and that something must be done. They only differed as to whether we should wait for a regular session of the General Conference, or whether a special session should be called. If every Conference in the Church could hear Judge Shackelford's speech they would realize the necessity of doing something as soon as possible.

The people who think that our Bishops are insensible or indifferent to the situation are very much mistaken. A great moral question can never be finally settled until it is settled right, and it is only a question of time when the great wrong will be righted.—"St. Louis Advocate."

DEATH OF JAMES A. RIDDICK.

In the death of Rev. James Andrew Riddick, who passed away Saturday night in Petersburg, after a long illness, aged eighty-nine years, the oldest member of the Virginia Methodist Conference is removed from earth. For 68 years he had been a minister of the gospel, though not in active service of late on account of failing health.

Dr. Riddick was a man of the most sunny disposition. His life was one of purity and filled with good works. Though bowed beneath the weight of nearly 90 years, his mind was clear almost up to the moment of dissolution. He is survived by five children—Dr. James G. Riddick, of Norfolk; Mrs. Judge S. S. Weisiger, Mrs. Judieth Smith, and Misses Bettie and Emma Riddick, all of Petersburg. He also has a number of relatives in this city.

HIS CAREER.

James Andrew Riddick was born in Gates county, near Sunbury, N. C., September 13th, 1810, being on his mother's side a direct descendant of the well-known Alston family of the old North State.

After receiving the best education that the schools of the neighborhood afforded, the young man, in his sixteenth year, went to Suffolk to become a clerk in the mercantile establishment of his brother, Mr. James McGuire, a man distinguished for his piety and liberality. Mr. McGuire's home was the mecca for Methodist ministers, and here Dr. Riddick met such eminent divines as Dr. Daniel Hall, Rev. Melville B. Cox, Bishop McKendree, Henry Holmes, Hezekiah G. Leigh, Ethelbert Drake, Benjamin Devaney, Martin P. Parks and others.

It was association with such men as these that Mr. Riddick became imbued with the spirit of preaching. In 1831, he went to Brunswick county to engage in the mercantile business with his brother. He became converted at a camp-meeting, however, and in the following year, having met John Wesley Childs, so well remembered for his piety, closed his business and went with him to the Conference at Norfolk in the month of February, where he took an appointment under Presiding Elder John Early, and was sent to help Rev. Jesse Powers on the Amelia circuit.

RECEIVED ON TRIAL.

At the next meeting of the Conference, held in Petersburg in February, 1833, he was received on trial and sent as an assistant to the Rev. John H. Watson on the Prince Edward circuit. The following year he was put in charge of Mecklenburg circuit, where he met with great success.

In 1835 Dr. Riddick was appointed to Shockoe, in this city, and for several years following he continued to fill the most important stations in the Conference.

When the Conference met in Portsmouth in 1842, Dr. Riddick asked for county appointment on account of his health, and was sent back to Amelia circuit. During 1842 he married Miss Judieth A. Gregory, who made him a model wife. She died a number of years ago.

In 1845, after filling Charlotte and Amelia circuits, his ill-health forced him to discontinue until 1850, when he resumed his labors, returning to Amelia circuit.

Thence he went to old Randolph-Macon district, where he remained five years, when, at the request of Murfreesboro' Female College, he was made presiding elder of the newly-formed district known as Murfreesboro, where also, he remained four years, being appointed to Sussex circuit in 1859 and 1860.

At the Conference in 1861, he took a supernumerary relation, and settled on a farm at Stony Creek, Sussex county, Virginia. He remained on this farm until after the civil war, when he removed to Petersburg, where he lived the rest of his days. Of late years he had been writing articles for different periodicals.

FIRST METHODIST MINISTER.

Four members of the Riddick family were ministers of the Gospel. The subject of this sketch was the first of the name to become a minister and a member of the Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dr. Riddick was always classed among the best business men of the Conference. For a number of years he was secretary of the Conference Missionary Society and assistant secretary of the Conference.

Since the death of the venerable James McAden, in 1889, he had been the senior member of the old Virginia Conference.—Richmond "Times."

The funeral of the late Rev. James A. Riddick took place Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock at Washington Street M. E. Church and was quite largely attended. The services were conducted by Rev. Geo. W. Wray and Rev. W. W. Lear.

on the synthetic plan. Dr. James M. Gray, the originator of this method in classes has had one class in Boscon numbering over 1,000. There are a number of large classes in Chicago studying the Bible synthetically. It gives the student a bird's-eye view of the Book and gives more real useful and helpful knowledge of the Scriptures, considering the time used in study, than any other plan. The Union Gospel News, Cleveland, Ohio, has secured the services of Dr. Gray to conduct its readers through the Bible in a year on this plan. Anyone by taking a copy of the paper can by means of it conduct a class of 50 or 100. The aim is to have classes in all cities and towns of the United States. The lesson commences in the Oct. 5th, is, ue.

Guinea Fowls.

These birds must be well known to be appreciated. From childhood we have had them on the farm, from 5 to 250 in a flock. They are no trouble whatever, lay their eggs in nests which they make in the grass and wheatfields, we often finding nests with from 3 to 75 eggs piled on top of each other. From some of the nests we take part of the eggs, and leave some for them to raise their young. They sit, hatch and raise their broods, and we often do not see them until late in the fall, when they bring their chicks home, sometimes as many as 20 in a flock. Such chirping, such flying up trees! The little keets look much like partridges when about that size. They are splendid meat to fry or roast or for potpie, and to enjoy a breast of fowl one should eat a guinea fowl. The eggs are considered the richest of all eggs and keep well. We put them up to use in winter, and two years ago, when illness and death in the family made me forget the eggs until June, we found them just as good as when put away. If you try guinea fowls, you are sure to have eggs and fowls for your table, and no trouble to get them.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Egg Statistics.

A statistician has drawn up a table to show how many eggs the various kinds of domestic fowls lay per annum and how many eggs go to the pound: Geese, 4 to the pound, 30 per annum; Polish, 9 to the pound, 150 per annum; bantams, 16 to the pound, 100 per annum; Hamburgs, 9 to the pound, 200 per annum; turkeys, 5 to the pound, 30 to 60 per annum; game fowl, 9 to the pound, 100 per annum; Leghorns, 9 to the pound, 200 per annum; Plymouth Rocks, 8 to the pound, 150 per annum; Langshans, 8 to the pound, 150 per annum; Brahmas, 7 to the pound, 130 per annum; ducks, 5 to the pound, 20 to 60 per annum.—American Fancier.

PLAIN CHICKEN COOPS

SOMETHING NEITHER INTRICATE NOR EXPENSIVE.

No Slant to the Roof and No Hinges on the Door—A Simple Putting Together of Plain Boards and a Little Wire Netting.

To the man who is compelled to run out after dinner and knock a chicken coop together while the horses are resting the average poultry coop illustrated or described in poultry papers or departments is an aggravation. There are a number of things to be considered in coop construction, but much depends upon the order of points desired. The average man puts them about this way: (1) Utility, (2) cheapness, (3) ease of construction, (4) convenience and (5, if at all) appearance.

After a good deal of trying, says a writer in The National Stockman and Farmer, I have one which satisfies me. Dimensions are made to fit my lumber, generally 2 by 3 feet and 12 to 15 inches high. I cut my lumber to make a solid box, no slope for roof. In putting together I nail the bottom to battens, making a platform which is not fastened to the box. Instead of putting in the front board I lay it aside and nail in an inch strip at top and bottom of point and cover with one inch wire netting. This netting is cut three or four inches longer than front and stapled fast except one end, which is left loose for the last few inches and laps round the corner of coop and is hooked over two nails, one each at bottom and top. This is the door. When hen is to be let out or in, unhook netting and fold it back, bending it if necessary to have it stay open or hold it in place with stick or stone. For the little chickens a few wires are cut near the floor and loose ends bent back. There will be less danger of this being stretched and enlarged if a heavy-ier wire is bent the right shape and the loose ends of the netting bent round it. The board that was cut for the front is used in shutting in the chickens at night. In mild weather it is simply placed to cover the small chick door and held in place by a board or stone. In cold or stormy weather it can be placed over the entire front. This is a perfect ventilator. In hot weather this board can be placed in front of the coop to make shade for both hen and chicks.

No slant is given the roof. It is covered with paper, felt or anything else that will turn rain, and it is scarcely possible to place a coop so it will not have slope enough to carry off all water. A sloping roof adds one-third to one-half the time of construction. A hinged door is also a dreadfully costly thing in time. I make my coops as high as I can get them by using only one board. That is rarely over 16 inches; 12 will do. If two boards are used to get the height, the sides ought to be papered the same as the roof. Lap the paper or felt over the edges of roof so as to stop all cracks and drafts and then get ventilation in front by adjusting the front board.

recognized as a forage crop and soil renovator. The plant has attracted considerable attention among farmers in the Gulf States, but its use for forage, green manure and soil renewing is as yet the exception rather than the rule. It seems, however, that in regions where it can be successfully grown it may become a rival to the well known cowpea.

The Florida experimental station has reported a culture experiment with the velvet bean, and the results which were obtained are quite promising. The plot upon which the experiment was conducted comprised about one-fourth of an acre of very poor soil. The soil was prepared as for corn, and the beans were planted in rows three feet apart and about one foot apart in the row. The plot was kept free from weeds until the rapidly growing vines shaded the ground and covered it with dense vegetation. A square rod produced 93 pounds of green forage, which was at the rate of 16,680 pounds per acre. It is estimated that the yield of hay would have been from two to three tons per acre.

According to a farmers' bulletin of the department of agriculture, its use as a green forage for all kinds of stock and as a crop to be grown in orchards for its fertilizing value is recommended by practical men who have given it a trial. The luxuriant growth of the crop well adapted to shading, mulching and fertilizing the soil. Furthermore, like other legumes, the velvet bean gathers nitrogen from the air and thus acts as a valuable fertilizing agent for whatever purpose it may be grown, although the greatest benefit to the soil results from growing it for green manuring. Besides storing nitrogen, the crop serves as a mulch, and when turned under adds humus to the soil, improving it physically and mechanically. This is of great importance, especially when the renovation of the soil is dependent on the use of commercial fertilizers.

The seed may be planted in drills or rows four feet apart each way, putting from three to five beans in the hill. Some growers drop beans every fourth or fifth furrow while plowing the land, and cover them with the following furrow. It requires about 16 quarts of seed per acre when planted in every fourth furrow. The planting should be done early in the spring. The yield of beans is estimated at about 20 bushels per acre.

The velvet bean seems to thrive best in the extreme south and cannot be grown with success as far north as the cowpea. At the North Carolina station seed started slowly, but when well established made vigorous growth. Owing to the long season of growth of the plant only a few pods were full grown and no seed had ripened when they were injured by frost.

VOLCANIC BATHS.

The Bather Revels In a Crater of Ice Cold Mud.

Volcano baths are the proper thing nowadays in certain parts of California and Mexico. Down in Mendocino county, Cal., such baths have become most frequent.

The volcano bath is not a water bath, nor is it a fire bath or a lava bath, as might be supposed. It is a mud bath, and no ordinary mud bath at that. Ice cold mud of a bluish tint and of the consistency of freshly mixed mortar is the element into which the bathers plunge, splashing and spluttering. The way they manage it is unique. A sapling is felled in the forests near the volcano craters, stripped of its limbs, carried to the crater and placed across it, so that each end of the pole rests on firm ground. Fancy yourself sliding out on one of these sapling stretched across a crater of mud. The mud is so soft and sticky that you will find it difficult to get up, and you will find it difficult to get down. The mud is so soft and sticky that you will find it difficult to get up, and you will find it difficult to get down.

cold mass of mud and swinging yourself there, suspended by your hands until fatigued. Then, with just life enough left to crawl back along the log, you reach unyielding ground again.

Once plunged into one of the craters of mud, with all ties to the sapling above severed, a person would be lost forever, being swallowed up in the murky depths in an instant, for vastly quicker in action and surer of its victim than quicksand is the mud of Mendocino's mysterious volcanoes.

Cleanliness has nothing to do with it. It is not that for which people face the dangers of the volcano bath. The mud which is belched forth from the earth's interior is supposed to contain important medicinal properties.

There are about 25 of these singular mud belching volcanoes in Mendocino county, and they are among California's many wonders. They are situated high on a mountain side, seven miles from Cahto. At this time of the year they are unusually active. Their gurgling roar may be heard for a distance of several miles when they are most violent. The mud frequently shoots over the rim of the crater, flows down the mountain like a lava stream and enters one of the Eel river's tributaries called Mud creek. It fills the craters, which are about five feet above the earth's surface and bounded with a circular base or miniature crater from four to seven feet in diameter at the base and two to three feet at the top. Prospecting parties have hewn down saplings 50 feet in length and pushed them into the mouth of a crater. Some of these have disappeared altogether. Others remain near the surface, playthings of the muddy element, which tosses them about like fishermen's bobbins in a rough sea. A significant coincidence is the fact that when the ocean, 20 miles away, is unusually heavy and rough the volcanoes become intensely active, belching forth not only their burden of ice cold mud, but volumes of warm vapor. In some mysterious way the ocean seems to control their action. —San Francisco Bulletin.

When Cannon Was Silenced.

Congressman Cannon is a hard bitter and merciless. I never saw him disconcerted but once, and then he was himself hit hard and silenced for the day. It was this way: Boutelle, as chairman of naval affairs, brought in a bill to pension the widows and orphans of the victims of the Maine disaster in Havana harbor. Cannon jumped on it and asseverated that any jackleg pension attorney could drive a coach and four through the bill and loot the treasury without limit, and then he cited similar legislation in the case of the Samoa disaster in 1889.

Boutelle is a fierce man, a capital talker, the handsomest man in the house and impulsive. Springing to his feet, his face ashen with anger, every nerve quivering with passion, his voice vibrant with rage, he pointed his finger at Cannon and exclaimed, "Mr. Speaker, there are men in this world who would break up a funeral procession if they were not appointed to drive the hearse." The house screamed with laughter and delight, for there were few there into whose legislative dumping Cannon had not at some time put a spider. It was the only time old Joe was not able to return a Roland for an Oliver. —Washington Letter in Louisville Courier-Journal.

TO CATCH JOHN'S FANCY.

Hints to Merchants Who Will Make an Effort to Secure Chinese Business.

To the "foreign devil" who would cater to the Chinese trade it is of the first importance almost to study well the matter of trademarks, for upon the circumspection with which these are chosen will depend largely the fate of the goods. Mr. Samuel L. Gracey, United States consul at Fuchau, in one of his recent reports, gives a list of some of the pictures most frequently seen and which therefore presumably are popular and would lend themselves well to trademark use. But simply naming these things does not supply sufficient data from which to prepare them. It must be remembered, so Mr. Gracey tells us, that Chinese art is very peculiar, and a tiger as ordinarily represented by foreign artists would not meet with favor with John Chinaman. It must be a tiger according to Chinese imagination and art, of unreasonable length of body or bigness of head or curve of tail and in impossible attitudes. On a popular Japanese match-box is displayed a monkey standing on its front feet, head nearly touching the ground, with hind feet up in the air and tail whipping the skies. The grotesque and even hideous to European and American minds tickles the fancy of the dwellers in far Cathay. No description can supply adequate information to an engraver or colorer by which he could produce the real thing, and any departure from the Chinese fancy in such things would brand the goods at once as foreign product and doom it to defeat.

A Chinese dragon differs from a Japanese dragon in its contortions. A royal dragon must have five claws, while the plebeian beast has only four. A stork must always stand on one leg, or, flying, must present an enormous spread of wings and trailing long legs. All Japanese birds when flying must have a tendency downward, never up or on a straight course. To a Japanese nothing is preferable to the representation of snow capped sacred Fusi-yama, as seen on nearly all Japanese fans, screens and other articles. One of the labels mentioned by Consul Gracey represents a woman in bright robes, holding a long necked vase on her shoulder, while at her side is a monkey holding a chrysanthemum in its mouth. Others are equally grotesque. But they all are suggestive of the curious fancies of those of the Celestial empire.—Cassier's Magazine For August.

Demand For Eggs.

An exchange says that New York city market requires more eggs each year than are sent out by the three largest egg producing states. If one considers how many other large cities there are in sections where the egg production does not equal the demand, we will see why it is that the business cannot easily be overdone. And there is also now a considerable export demand for eggs.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

ONE STEP AT A TIME.

There's a mine of comfort for you and me
In a lonely home bit of truth;
We were tenderly taught at the mother's knee.
In happy days of youth.
It is, what if the road be long and steep,
And we too weak to climb,
Or, what though the darkness gather deep,
We take one step at a time.

A single step and again a step,
Until by safe degrees,
The milestones passed, we win at last
Home, when the King shall please.
And the strangest thing is often this,
That the briery, tangled spots,
Which cumber our feet, should be thick and sweet
With our Lord's forget-me-nots.

It matters little the pace we take,
If we journey steadily on,
With the burden-bearer's steady gait,
Till the day's last hour is gone;
Or if, with the dancing foot of a child,
Or the halting step of age,
We keep the goal in the eye of the soul,
Through the years of our pilgrimage,
And yet, in the tramp of appointed days,
This thing must sometimes be,
That we falter and pause and bewildered gaze,
For the road has led to the sea.
And the foeman's tread is on our track
As once on the booming coast,
Where the children of Israel, looking back,
Saw Pharaoh's threatening host.

Then clear from the skies our leader's voice,
"Go forward!" bids us dare
Whatever we meet, with fearless feet,
And the might of trustful prayer.
So, ever advancing day by day,
In the Master's strength sublime,
Even the lame shall take the prey,
Marching one step at a time.

And what of the hours when hand and foot
We are bound and laid aside,
With the fevered brain and throbbing pain,
And the world at its low ebb tide?
And what of our day of the broken heart,
When all that our eyes can see
Is the vacant space, where the vanished face
Of our darling used to be?

Then waiting and watching and almost spent,
Comes peace from the Lord's own hand,
In his blessed will, if we rest content,
Though we cannot understand.
And we gather anew our courage and hope,
For the road so rough to climb,
With trial and peril we may well cope
One single step at a time.

DREYFUS CASE.

The whole world rings with indignant protest at the injustice of the verdict in the Dreyfus case. But there is, strange to say, little comment on the underlying reason for such a result.

St. Bartholemew's Days is a part of French history, and this verdict at Rennes is of the same character. The blood of the Huguenots shed hundreds of years ago cries aloud to-day in the injustice to Dreyfus, and says "the same principle caused us both." France is a Roman Catholic country, and the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church, "The end justifies the means," is the thought underlying St. Bartholemew's Day and the Dreyfus outrage.

Why was France obliged to reopen the Dreyfus case? Did the Roman Church demand it? Nay, never! The demand for justice to the despised Jew came from Protestant principles and has been voiced and defended, not by the Roman Church, but by the Protestants, Jews, and the anti-clericals. People trained under Jesuitical principles, as the French have been for centuries, cannot appreciate the horror with which this conduct has been received by the Protestant world. Romanism, carried to its logical results, eats all of the fibre out of the nobler qualities of the soul, and leaves the mere shell, and so the French are renowned for certain society, fashionable graces, but are sadly lacking in the higher and nobler qualities of manhood and womanhood. Spain, Italy, France, South America, Cuba, Porto Rica, the Philippines, all have been given up to Romanism for centuries, and they are feeble, frivolous, fickle, and utterly unable to stand before the great Protestant nations of the world. The Dreyfus case is a logical fruit of Romanism.

Below is given the comment of Dr. Buckley in the "New York Advocate" on the case, and an outline of a sermon by Dr. Young, taken from the Norfolk "Landmark."

Dr. Buckley says:

The world has not read the testimony in this celebrated case. If it had, in the absence of an opportunity to hear the witnesses and to note the bearing of the accused, in so complex a case, it would not ordinarily be able to form an opinion of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. But the sentiment of those who did hear and see is almost wholly in his favor. The unquestioned villainy of many of the General Staff, the strange absurdity of many of the expert witnesses (one in particular), the confessions of the voluntary exile Esterhazy, the suicide of Henry, the sneaking and melodramatic performances of Colonel Du Paty de Clam, the bullying tone of the opponents of Dreyfus, the bitter race animosity, the statements of Italy and Germany in favor of the accused, raise a powerful presumption that he is innocent.

Whether he be or not, an amount of corruption scarcely conceivable has been proved—the proceedings in the Chamber of Deputies and in the Senate, the tergiversation of so many Ministers of War, the monstrosities of the trial have placed France in a most unfortunate condition before the world.

France has never recovered from the First Revolution. Reacting from a corrupt monarch and a too subservient Church, its career has been strangely inconstant. Licentiousness and intemperance have constantly increased. On the one hand the peculiar conscience which Roman Catholicism seems to have developed in the Latin races, on the other the utter demoralizing influence of atheism, and a public morality which exhibits traces of the corrupting influence of both, have culminated in a state of affairs in which the world gazes upon France with amazement, and would not be surprised at any revelation of recklessness or perjury or revenge.

It is a pity that a people with so many good qualities, situated in a part of Europe where they might be a center of moral, intellectual, and social light, should have forfeited to so great a degree the respect of the world. Spain itself is today worthy of more respect than France. What is it that accounts for the conditions and tendencies of the Latin races? Is it something in the race, in the religion, or both? We do not attribute it wholly to the influence of the perverted form of Christianity which dominates, nor pretend to tell how much better the conditions might be under other forms. But if one looks at the South American Republics, at Spain, at Italy, at France, and at Portugal as they now are, and reviews their history for the last hundred years, it seems that the Latin races are not keeping up with the general course of modern development as illustrated by Germany, England, and the United States. There is a pervading quality perceptible in their social, civil and religious life, which is distinguishable alike amid the very great differences among the Spanish and the French and the Italian characteristics; and that quality is not perceptible in the other nations mentioned, nor does it exist in any marked degree among the Slaves.

DR. YOUNG'S ADDRESS.

"Is it nothing to you, and ye that pass by? Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger." Lamentations of Jeremiah, 1st chapter and 12th verse. This was the text from which the Rev. Dr. W. J. Young preached at Epworth M. E. Church Sunday night, his subject being: "The Lessons to Be Learned from the Dreyfus Case." As was expected, such a subject with such a speaker was attractive enough to fill to repletion the beautiful auditorium, and seldom since its erection has so large a congregation assembled within the spacious building. Hundreds stood up during the sermon, but all were amply repaid, for it was one of the most magnificent efforts made by Dr. Young during his ministry in Norfolk. The most courtous attention was paid to the speaker during his discourse, which lasted about an hour.

Dr. Young began by stating that the text was an indication of the condition of the Jews when they were persecuted by their enemies in the East, and said that the persecution of Dreyfus by the French courts and people was only a part of the long, sad record of Jewish persecution from the dim, distant past, down to the present time. "Never before in the history of the world has such a wave of indignation spread over the country as followed the verdict of the court-martial at Rennes, and it is well that the world has given expression to its indignation, for it has brought nations closer together than States of the same nation were formerly."

Dreyfus was described by the eloquent speaker as being patient, heroic, manly, acting the part of a true martyr. It was not only Dreyfus who was persecuted, but it was the principles of truth and right that were being trampled upon, and as France has failed to uphold these principles it is the right of all nations to cry out that justice and truth and love shall be respected. He strongly protested against the decision against Dreyfus and said that the nations had so strongly protested that President Loubet must take matters in his own hand and release at once that man whom the world believed innocent.

The church and nation had many lessons to learn from the Dreyfus case. No people on the globe were more religious in some respects than the French, and yet Justice and truth and righteousness do not prevail and have been absent during this crisis in the history of that people. The whole trouble with France, as illustrated, could be expressed in one word—medievalism. It does not live in the nineteenth century, but in the middle ages; it has not the liberty of the present, as is shown in its hatred for the Jews. Shall a hated Jew stand in the way of the military? The answer was no, this being prompted by expediency, not justice. France had also shut her eyes to Protestant development, and it is a glorious fact that Protestants have aided and supported Dreyfus through thick and thin. Mme. Godard (whom the speaker praised in the highest terms) who allowed her house to be used by Mme. Dreyfus and Maitre Labori, after the hotels at Rennes had refused them shelter, is a Protestant, so was the president of the Court of Cassation, so was the ex-premier who testified for Dreyfus, so was Maitre Labori.

"And yet," said the speaker, "it is unfair to throw too many stones at France. Norfolk is considered as a Church-going, religious city, and rightly so, but why are taxes so high here? Why are the streets kept in such poor condition? Why are bonds of some saloon keepers allowed to be given by others? Why are there so many dens of iniquity, so many homes of shame? It would appear that such a condition is even possible here, as it is too frequently the case that Churchmen fail to bring religion in touch with their social and public life, which accounts for the little actual effect that religion has in that direction."

Dr. Young considers that the reason the Jews have not been converted to Christianity in all these years is that they have been subjected to persecution instead of receiving the proper treatment at the hands of the Christian world; that the Church cannot hope to attract the world to Christ till the people begin to live in their civil and public life as they do in their private life, and neither can it hope to influence the heathen world much till Christians are religious in fact as well as in name. His oration was a magnificent burst of eloquence and his hearers were only regretful when he had concluded.

The music at this service was also very attractive. The opening number was a chorus by the choir, and as an offertory Mrs. S. H. Baily sang with excellent effect Bradsky's "Thou Art Mine All," to the words "Ashamed of Jesus." After the sermon Mr. Albert Howard Garrett, an excellent baritone, sang "The Heart Bowled Down," to appropriate words. This is the first time that Mr. Garrett had ever sung at Epworth Church, and his manner of execution was particularly worthy of favorable comment. He sang at St. Luke's Church in the morning.

THE PHILIPPINE WAR.

It is a difficult thing to pass judgment upon a matter upon which there is so much conflicting testimony. There have been all sorts of statements about the condition of affairs in the Philippine Islands, until the great main facts seem to be in danger of being lost sight of. President Schurmann, a member of the commission sent out by President McKinley to investigate matters and report to the Government, has furnished a statement to the press which is valuable in its calm and apparently impartial summarizing of facts. He is a man of ability, of trained mind, the president of one of the leading universities of the country, and what he says is of value. We publish it in full, for the question of the Philippines is one of the greatest questions before our nation today. Our national honor is involved in the matter, and we must do right as a nation as well as individuals, otherwise God will punish us for our evil doing. The statement follows:

"It is very important that the public should know the actual facts of the situation. Things are what they are, and the American public should understand them, whether they agree with or run counter to the public's wishes.

"First, it requires some effort to realize the vastness of the archipelago, which extends triangularly from Formosa to Borneo and Celebes, through sixteen degrees of latitude. Never going out into the Pacific Ocean on the East nor the China Sea on the West, I made a circuit of 2,000 miles all South of Manila. This gives some idea of the difficulty of maintaining an effective blockade, as the coast line of all the islands embraced in the archipelago is many more thousands of miles.

Second, the multiplicity and heterogeneous nature of the tribes is something astonishing. Over sixty different languages are spoken in the archipelago, and though the majority of the tribes are small, there are at least half a dozen having a quarter of a million members. The language of these people are as distinct from one another as French and Spanish or Italian, so that the speech of any one tribe is unintelligible to its neighbors. These tribes are all civilized, and Christianized, but small uncivilized tribes, among whom Igorotes seem best known in America, inhabit the mountains in Luzon and form a large part of the population of Mindanao. In this island also there is a large Mohammedan population which is independent of the Mohammedans in the neighboring Sulu archipelago.

"Third, it is the Tagalos inhabiting some of the provinces about Manila, who are resisting the authority of the United States. Other civilized Filipinos are neutral, except where they are coerced by armed bands of Tagalos, who seized upon their governments during the making and the ratification of our peace treaty with Spain. It would be incorrect to assume, however, that these tribes are allies of ours. They are not. Indeed they are not without suspicion of the white race, of which they have had experience only through Spain. But there are men of intelligence and property, and the masses, when not stirred up by the Tagalos, recognize the advantage to them of American sovereignty, and so remain neutral, although robber bands from time to time descend from the mountains to plunder and burn the estates of the peaceful inhabitants on the plains.

"Fourth, the insurrection, though serious enough, as experience has proven, is not a national uprising. Indeed, there is no Philippine nation. As I have already said, there is a multifarious collection of tribes having only this in common, that they belong to the Maylay race. The inhabitants of the archipelago no more constitute a nation than the inhabitants of the continent of Europe do.

"Sixth, the United States having assumed by a treaty of peace with Spain sovereignty over the archipelago, became responsible for the maintenance of peace and order, the administration of justice, the security of life and property among all the tribes of the archipelago. This is an obligation which intelligent Filipinos, not less than foreign nations, expect us to fulfill. Nor will the national honor permit us to turn back. In taking the Philippine Islands, we annexed great responsibility. The fact that the responsibility is heavier than most people supposed it would be is no excuse for failure to discharge it. I repeat that the Philippine question is essentially a question of national honor and obligation."

TRAMP METHODISTS

Dr. Buckley, with his usual discrimination, gives the following description of SOME Church members whom all pastors will recognize. They are of the "tramp" order: restless, roaming dissatisfied:

"We have sometimes been asked about certain Methodists that co-operate with this movement and are conspicuously reported. It is only necessary to say that all denominations have some members who care more for notoriety than for straightforward work in the Church, some who can work more effectively where they are not known than where they are, and some who do not come under either of these classes, but have a twist in the understanding which causes them to flock wherever the unusual, and especially the mystical, prevails; and there are some who have worn out their extravagances at home, some who, in the friction of life, have accumulated sore spots, and others who can easily be affected by contagious zeal kept up by extraordinary methods."

THE BISHOPS ON MORALS OF THE BOOK AGENTS.

Nothing has ever so profoundly stirred Southern Methodism as the revelations that have been made of the methods that were used to collect the publishing house claim.

After the bishops sent their letter to the Senate, a goodly number of the Conferences and some of our Church editors thought it best to leave the matter with the bishops, having, as they said, entire confidence in their wisdom and ability to settle the trouble aright.

The action of the bishops has been before the Church for some months.

What was the action? What is its full force and meaning? Did the bishops condemn the agents? Did they clear them?

The bishops disclaim any right "to the proper administration of the book agents, on the grounds that 'The law has specifically charged the Book Committee with that responsibility.'" Some will question the correctness of this position—this general disclaimer of all responsibility. However, the discussion of this point is beyond our purpose and we pass it by.

There were many who hoped the bishops would call a General Conference, and it is known that four of them so voted. Our bishops are conservative men, and it is well that they are. In times of storm it is well to have a firm hand and a clear head at the helm. The discipline provides that a General Conference can be called in two ways. (1.) By a majority of the bishops. (2.) By a majority of the Annual Conferences. The bishops knowing this and doubting the wisdom of a called session, leave that question with the Annual Conferences to decide. If the discipline had put the calling of the General Conference entirely in the hands of the bishops, their vote on this point might have been different. It is but just to believe that if they had supposed a majority of all the ministers and members of the Church wanted a General Conference, they would have called one.

What was the action of the bishops in regard to the agents?

(1.) They transferred to their records the official action of the United States Senate.

That official action, taken "after full investigation" by the Senate Committee, states, (1.) "No censure should rest upon the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in connection with the passage of the bill for the payment of the claim." (2.) That the book agents were guilty of "misstatements and concealments in connection with the passage of the bill for the payment of the claim."

Let it be remembered that the bishops have entered this upon their permanent records, and have published it to the world as well. This act alone carries with it a weight of significance that is well worth pondering. Its meaning gathers emphasis from the further language used by the bishops in their official deliverance.

(2.) The bishops "deplore" the language used by the book agents. "Deplore" is a strong term and means "to feel or express deep and poignant grief for; to bewail; to mourn; to sorrow over." (Webster.)

(3.) The bishops affirm that the language used by the agents, the "misstatements and concealments," "(the adroit answers)," "has been the occasion of humiliation and action by the ministers and laymen of our beloved Church."

(4.) The bishops approve the conduct of "the ministers and laymen of our beloved Church," saying, "we sympathize with their jealous concern for the good name of the Church," as shown in their humiliation and action over the language of the book agents.

(5.) The bishops intimate that the book agents, in maintaining the claim of the Church, used methods that were not "candid" and that were "unrighteous."

To sum up: The bishops after "much consideration of communications that were sent" them have entered upon their permanent records and published to the Church and the world, what is tantamount to an episcopal decision on the methods used in the collection of the publishing house claim. It is substantially, as follows:

"We find that the Senate, after full investigation, exonerates the Church from all censure, but that they charge the book agents with 'misstatements and concealments' in connection with the passage of the claim.

"We have been requested to remove the book agents, but the law has specifically charged the Book Committee with the responsibility as to the proper administration of the book agents, and we have no authority in the matter, because we are not, and have not been members of the Book Committee since 1878.

"While we have no authority to remove the book agents, still we put upon record that the language they used in pressing the claim, has caused us deep and poignant grief, and it has been, also, the occasion of humiliation and action among the ministers and members of our beloved Church. We desire to place ourselves on record as being in sympathy with these humiliations and these actions, since they show such jealous concern for the good name of the Church; and, further, because we do not believe that so just a claim of the Church should have been maintained by methods that were not candid and not righteous."

NOTE WELL.

It is well known that this deliverance is the action of the entire cabinet of bishops save three, and they wish something even stronger. Who, then, dare say that any of our bishops approve the conduct of our book agents or that they defend their conduct? They did they never would have passed such a severe condemnatory paper as the one they have given to the Church and which is commented upon in the above paragraphs. The truth is, the entire college of bishops condemn the conduct of the agents—that is their telegram to Senator Pasco and Senator Bate and the letter to Congressman Richardson. The language that the bishops have given to the Church and the world—and our bishops are not men careless in the use of words—can mean nothing else. It is known positively that more than a majority of them have told the agents they ought to resign.

Since the bishops, in their deliverance to the Church, have condemned the conduct of the book agents without calling a General Conference, it is evident that they leave that matter to the Annual Conferences.—"ONE OF THE ELDERS," in "St. Louis Advocate."

OPENING EXERCISES OF BLACKSTONE FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The sixth session of the Blackstone Institute opened on Sept. 14th. Friday night the opening address was delivered in a crowded chapel by Rev. Asbury Christian, of Lynchburg, and the opening sermon at Crenshaw Church, Blackstone, by Dr. J. T. Wightman, of Baltimore. Both brethren spoke greatly to pleasure and profit of the large audiences. An outline of the address and sermon are given below, the address by Brother Sturgis and the sermon by Brother Compton. At this writing the school has the largest enrollment in its history at this stage of the session.

(In reporting the address of Brother Christian no attempt is made at verbal accuracy, or to reproduce the oratorical embellishments of the fascinating address. The purpose of this report is to give the substance of what he said.)

Announcing a text from Shakespeare, he first defined "Self." In this exposition he emphasized and beautifully illustrated the vast superiority in being, nature, motive, and mission of this "self" to all other lives around it. He then spoke of being true to this self.

"To thine own self be true; and it shall follow as night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."

First, be true to your PHYSICAL self. The body is placed under the dominion of physical laws. Violate these laws, and you are untrue to your physical self. These laws are God given. So are the moral commands. You have no more right to ignore or violate one of these physical laws than you have to ignore or violate one of God's moral commands.

Sometimes men break these laws and when the penalty is inflicted they attempt to transfer the blame to God. A glutton kills himself by over-eating; or from a foul pig-sty near the house; or a cess-pool at the well, typhoid enters the family and kills off some of its members. We adopt our resolutions and start our preamble by saying: "Whereas, It pleased God in his providence to take out of this world," etc. Why it did not please God to do any such thing. Suppose I put my foot on the iron rail in front of the approaching train. The cars crush it to a jelly. Would there be sense or reason in my words if I should say, "It pleased the Railroad Company to remove and destroy my foot?" Such a statement would be lacking in truth, as well as in reason. But equally unreasonable and untrue are we who recklessly dare the penalty that thunders down the track of a violated physical law, and then piously (?) charge God with our own misdoings.

If in the coming days you are transformed into a house-keeper and your young husband happens to be cross and rough-spoken some morning after a breakfast on sour rolls, rancid butter, leathery meat, or other uneatable things, do not charge the outburst of temper to his bad nature, but blame it on the bad breakfast. Bad cooking destroyed at one stroke both digestion and good temper. Seriously, strive in every way to build up and keep a sound body by obeying God's laws of health. Be true to your physical self.

Second, be true to your INTELLECTUAL self. Here, also, law confronts us. Our mental faculties and capacities are placed under its operation and power. Obedience to its rules means progress, development, acquisition. To violate these rules is to stultify, weaken, and degrade the mind. There are no short cuts to learning. No short by paths lead to intellectual acquisitions. The old, beaten way of earnest, continuous effort of upright, downright hard work is still the highway and the only way that the intellectual self can travel assuredly to final success. To waste the hours of study; to resort to "cramming," "ponies," or other dishonest devices, is damaging, and may finally be disastrous to this mental self of thine.

After all your hard work, your honest, faithful efforts, you may miss some distinction, some prize—even the degree—that you toiled to secure. Never mind this, for you will have gained the abiding satisfaction, the blessed reward of knowing that you were true to yourself in motive and endeavor. And this is worth infinitely more than any reward represented by tangible things, such as distinctions, medals, degrees, unless these also represent the "well-done" of conscience. One can have a mania for degrees and yet be indifferent to the needs of the mind. One can achieve distinctions and at the same time be untrue to self, and really dwarf the real self. Some who directed all their energies to securing and obtaining degrees, remind me of a gourd I saw at the maturity of its growth. The shapely handle was as long as my arm. What a tremendous bowl, or receptacle, there must be at the lower end of the handle," I said to myself. Stepping around to a point where the leaves no longer hid the end of the handle, I saw, to my amazement, that the bowl was scarcely as large as my closed hand. The gourd had actually run most of its growth into—a handle.

Be more concerned about the inward voice of approval than you are for the outward tokens of success. Get both if you can, but rate the external as valueless if to secure it you have to be untrue to yourself in any sense or in the slightest degree. Always, in everything, be true to your intellectual self.

Third, be true to your SPIRITUAL self. This is the highest, the most important part of your being—of your "self." Purity of heart and of life are to be sought and maintained as the supreme consideration and duty. All else must be held as subordinate to this. You must not lower the high standard of a pure womanhood.

Christ has uplifted women to a high moral plane. You should never descend from it to reach even the dearest object of an earthly affection. I like to look upon a picture, the statue of an exalted Minerva, the virgin goddess. To me, she represents through all time, that lofty, pure, inspiring womanhood that says to every admirer, to every would-be suitor, "I cannot descend to your level. If you want me, you must elevate yourself to mine." O what moral upliftings of our young men would take place if our girls were thus true to themselves! If they accepted God's standard, lived up to it, and from its accessible heights would say to those who persisted in living on a lower moral plane, "I cannot come down to you." This going down is always perilous. What warnings lie in the blighted prospects, blasted hopes, broken hearts and ruined lives of some who were indifferent to warnings given them! The fate of such should inspire every maiden with the resolve to live in single blessedness, if marriage shall mean a decent even to the level of worldly-mindedness, by marrying a worldly-minded man. "Be ye not unequally yoked together." And if one that seeks you has a tendency to evil or dissipated habits drop him, unless he ascends securely to your plane before marriage. If he is fond of his glass occasionally, or regularly, do not make the mistake of thinking you can descend to his level by marrying him, and reform him afterwards. The chances that he will drag you down to the depths known only to God and the drunkard's wife, are greater than the chances for you to rise from his level with both his might and your own.

To be true to your spiritual selves, you must cherish and study the word of God, and obediently keep its precepts. It is still the Book of books. It will be "the man of your counsel" if you so desire. In any hour of darkness or perplexity turn to it for light. "The entrance of thy words giveth light," can be your experience as it was that of the Psalmist. "If any man will do His will, he shall know," is the divine proclamation and law. In some circles it is fashionable to doubt, or to proclaim uncertainty. For each of you to hide this word in her heart, verify it in her experience, and to say of its truths, "I know," is the will of God concerning you. To say of its teachings, "I do not know," is the fad and the folly of that wonderful creation, the so-called agnostic. And yet this same agnostic assumes that he is superior to those who accept and hold these eternal virtues. There is no superiority of manner and bearing like that which inflates the young and ignorant agnostic. One such sought an introduction to the great Dr. Bledsoe. He gave the doctor the benefit of his views, which included a criticism of Dr. Bledsoe's logic. After listening patiently for a while, the doctor interrupted the young man, and said, "My young man, you say that we can know nothing. You have convinced me that you and I together know everything."

"Delighted that Mr. Bledsoe should thus associate their names, he expressed his gratification, and added: "But tell me, please, just how you mean that we two with our knowledge combined know everything?" "Well," said the doctor, "I know that you are a fool, and you know everything else." You and I may never be called upon to thus "answer a fool according to his folly," but we are called upon to never play the part of the fool in such a case.

On the foundation and on the summit of our knowledge let us place the inscription, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to his trust against that day." Be true, be true to your spiritual self.

I need not dwell upon the need, and the way of being true to God and to your fellow man. Be true to yourself, and you are sure of being true to others. And so looking toward your fellow-man, I repeat:

"To thine own self be true; and it shall follow as night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."

Last Sabbath, Sept. 17th, the day for the opening exercises of the Blackstone Female Institute, at the Methodist Church in this place, was a lovely day. At an early hour people began to gather, and by the time for service the audience had about filled the large Church. Of that number, the Institute girls, new and old, were conspicuous—the largest enrollment at this stage of the session of any session in our history.

Rev. J. F. Wightman, of Baltimore, now temporary pastor of Court-Street Church, Lynchburg, Va., had arrived the evening before. After the opening exercises—the singing being conducted by the Institute young ladies—Dr. Wightman arose. His opening remarks were a pleasant greeting by which he gracefully led up to his text—"Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all Her paths are peace," Proverbs, 3d chapter, 17th verse. We cannot do more than give a meagre outline of this admirable and appropriate discourse.

The speaker said that the first thought of God to man was a benevolent thought; that he made everything beautiful in this world around us. That every law was attuned to harmony and all conspired to give happiness and delight. God never contemplated our misery. We must be happy. It is true, Providence is a mysterious volume, and we are often betrayed into doubt at the apparent darkness of these mysteries. But God in providence carries out God in nature; and that both alike, God in providence and God in nature, design us to be happy.

Now, what is religion? It is not superstition, which leaves all things to blind chance. It is not philosophy, which may seek to reason things out for us. It is not power, which defies law and loves not. Recognize what is back of all law. It is not riches, it is not beauty, not in the grave. But we come to the Bible, then we have, "Her ways are ways of pleasantness," etc. So, then, religion and Christ are in harmony with man's environments. Notice the language of the text. It says "pleasantness," not pleasure. Many things in life are of the saddest character. Sickness comes, and disease, with their sad attendants, the sudden and trying alternations and tests of life, as well as health with its joys; but under all circumstances, the design as well as the legitimate effect of all these, is to give happiness. "Her ways,"—notice the feminine is used here. It would seem that reference is made to the gentleness of woman in the tenderness of her dealings as contrasted with the sterner sex. "Ways," here, we also notice, is plural, which means all the ways or paths of life in which man is led. This is the design of Christ's religion, and hence it may be defined as "the peace of God which passeth all understanding."

But God saw a germ of evil in man. Then to carry out His glorious plan He must destroy this germ. Yes, there is something in each heart. It is strong, and man cannot control it. See anger in the child, the babe. Behold its passion—a strong desire to have its own way. Let this go on uncontrolled and it must lead to wreck. Even the virtues in the heart may run to excess. The good-bye kiss meant love, but that love must be restrained or it would not brook the pang at parting. Man, tho' a religious being, defiled as a religious animal, even in his natural tendencies to good, is unhappy, unless God satisfies him. There is no place, no circumstances that can satisfy him withouts God.

Christ deals with this evil. "Ye must be born again."—Created anew into righteousness and true holiness. So that by this new birth, God takes possession of him for the thorough eradication of all evil. He becomes a new being. Here, then, comes in this unspeakable joy. There is no joy like the joy of pardoned sin. If one sinner here and now should present himself, seeking this new birth, the angels would come down to bear to heaven the tears of repentance as a trophy. For "verily there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth."

But this religion is a controlling power. You say, does it restrict my liberty? To illustrate: You lock your door last night, shut yourself in, but you did it to keep out the thief and to protect yourself. So you close your heart against evil thoughts, which may be the suggestions of the evil one, who desires only your misery and death.

Then the speaker spoke of the three paintings, world-renowned, in the Dresden gallery. The first, that of the infant Saviour in the arms of his mother. (What could be more beautiful!) Second, the half-grown boy standing by his mother's side with a look of benevolence. (What could be nobler!) Third, Jesus on the Cross. But here is love. Seek a definition of love—what is it? Love is living for another, but here is love also dying for another. This is the grandest conception of God—Christ dying for human happiness.

The two ideas there presented are:

1. By nature we cannot be happy.
2. By grace we can be happy, anywhere, under all circumstances.

Even wealth, as great as Vanderbilt's cannot make us happy, for with all his millions he lay in his coffin no better than the beggar. But in Christ, living and dying, we are happy. Because this new birth means Christ in us, heaven in us. If you could suppose an unconverted, unredeemed soul in heaven it could not, in the nature of things, be happy, because there would be nothing in that soul in harmony with heaven.

On the otherhand, hell could not make the redeemed soul miserable. "If I make my bed in hell, behold! thou art there." Heaven in that soul! The very fiends would part their ranks and let the redeemed pass through them; the flames could not hurt him. Hell could not make the redeemed miserable.

With this the speaker closed, making a moving and tender appeal to his audience, especially the young ladies, to give their hearts to God.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

MANCHESTER METHODISTS

TO BUILD A NEW CHURCH.

The new Central Methodist Church is to be built at once.

The contract has already been awarded. Mr. R. G. Walker, a well-known builder of Richmond, is to do the work. His bid was $15,562. There were several other bids near this figure, but this was the lowest and the most satisfactory.

A prominent member of the Building

Committee of the Church said to the writer that the work would begin at once.

The committee makes its report to the Church this morning. This body is composed of the following gentlemen, all of whom are prominent in the Church's affairs and large givers to it: Messrs. S. Robert Perdue (chairman), J. C. Reed, W. H. Owens, A. D. Shotwell, M. A. Campbell, J. E. Redford, T. H. Betty, G. Scott McRae, and William L. Clopton.

There is no doubt that their work will meet with the approval and sincere appreciation of the entire congregation. Rev. J. C. Reed, the pastor, will preach this morning. His discourse will be appropriate to the occasion.

The Church will be a beautiful one. The style is Gothic, though not over pure. It is not plain, nor is it gorgeous. It will be built of red brick, with stone trimmings and slate roof. The auditorium and Sunday-school room are on the same floor. The seating capacity of the former is 450; gallery of this, 160; Sunday-school room, 380; gallery, 140; infant-class room, 160. All the compartments are partitioned by sliding doors and can be thrown into one, making a seating capacity of 1,230. The organ-stand is on a level with the pulpit, and to the right of it as one enters.

This is the entire interior arrangement and perfect. Every convenience is there. Besides the three auditoriums there are four vestibules, library, three class-rooms, ladies' parlor, and pastor's study. One excellent feature is that there are no columns in the auditorium to obstruct the view. The location will be the lot owned already by the Church at the northwest corner of Thirtieth and Porter streets.

The present Central Church is situated on Ninth street between Hull and Decatur. It is now a very old building and years have told on it badly. The people are warmly attached to it, but they realize that soon extensive and costly repairs must be made or a new Church built. The new Church is the third generation. The mother of Central Church was the old Plank Church, at Tenth and Perry streets. About two years ago it was razed to the ground. The lot is now unoccupied. When the congregations became very large and the old Church worn out, a new Church was built—the present one.—Sunday's Richmond "Dispatch."

NORFOLK ITEMS.

The regular weekly session of Methodist preachers was held Monday and was largely attended. Interesting reports were received from the different Churches, and a new feature was added to the meeting. It was determined to have in future the outlining of a sermon by one of the ministers. At this meeting the Rev. R. H. Bennett gave the initial sermon—"The Presence of the Supernatural About Us, the Blindness of Many to It and the Blessedness of Being Alive to It," delivered at McKendree Church Sunday night. It was greatly enjoyed by the members present.

Next Monday's "outline" will be given by Rev. L. B. Betty.

A new Methodist Sunday-school was organized Sunday afternoon on the Broad Creek Road, in East Brambleton, with between thirty and forty pupils. Officers were elected as follows: T. C. Williams, superintendent; C. C. Gunter, assistant superintendent, and B. H. Marsden, secretary and treasurer. Sunday school will be held every week at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, followed by preaching at 4 p. m. The school is a branch from McKendree M. E. Church, and the Rev. R. H. Bennett, pastor of that Church, will have charge of the preaching at the new mission—"Landmark."

ASHLAND ITEMS

Dr. J. A. Kern and family left Friday for Vanderbilt University, where Dr. Kern enters upon his new field of labor.

Dr. Edwards and family arrived Monday, and are occupying the Wingfield cottage on College avenue.

Randolph-Macon begins its session today with the usual number of students.

JOY IN THE MORNING.

A preacher friend of mine was asked one time why he preached. He replied: "To make people willing to live another week."

His parish was in the poorer part of a manufacturing city, and he was surrounded by people to whom life showed its seamy side. He rightly interpreted and fulfilled his office. His brave, strong words cheered many a drooping spirit, and roused to new endeavor men and women who were sinking under the burden of labor and care and unsatisfied desire.

In Pandora's box, whence countless ills had escaped to plague mankind, hope remained. All was not lost if the world still possessed hope. The old myth is full of meaning. It is the pectation of "joy in the morning" that makes our nights of sorrow and pain endurable.

It is the peculiar mission of the Gospel to inspire hope, because the Gospel is the revelation and pledge of God's good purpose toward humanity. This truth has often been obscured by narrow interpretations and faintheartedness, but it is the great, sweet, divine truth which Jesus Christ embodied, and which the true preacher must perpetually utter, that weary, worried and discouraged men and women may have courage and strength "to live another week"—to fight another battle, to bear another load, to endure another grief.

But hope is not alone for the sad and despondent; it is also for the aspiring—for those who strive to do tasks worth doing, and make plans that reach far into the future, and who for the sake of these ends are willing to spend themselves without stint. The "morning joy" is the fruition of their dream and endeavor, and it is hope that keeps their purpose steady and tenacious.

It was said of Jesus that, "for the joy that was set before him, he endured the cross, despising the shame." In this he is not singular, save in the heaviness of his cross and the breadth and depth of the joy that he coveted—a joy that was not his own, because it was to be also the possession of all whom he loved. How true to life and fact is this note of comment on the life of the Master! Of every brave and potent soul it is true that for the joy set before him he endures the cross.

We have a right to hope. Why? Because labor is meant to have result; aspiration is meant to have fulfillment, the patient endurance is meant to have reward. This is God's evident purpose. We have a right to hope also because evil and pain and weariness and disappointment are not finalities; they are not ends, but incidents and means. Nothing has a guaranty of perpetuity but that which is good. The good is the really only lasting thing, because that has in itself a divine reason of being.

But, more than this: we have a duty to hope. We often make false moral distinctions. We say: One must do right, and, One may hope. No, there is an obligation to hope if we believe in God. For, after all, hope springs out of trust. Faith in God is the basis of rational and enduring optimism.

However black and bitter our night, we must believe in the morning joy. It will come though it seem long delayed. There is no loss in God's wide and far-reaching economy. One of the last words that Jesus spoke to his disciples before his death was: "Believe in God and believe in me." It is as if he said, sorrow will come; it is near at hand; but believe and hope; with the morning joy will come.

This is not mere pitiful and pious exhortation; it is the soundest and deepest philosophy of life. We are not born to be forever fooled by shadows. Life is itself a pledge of progress and attainment. The darkness is the germinating time of the seeds of joy. "Light is sown for the righteous," but sowing is a sort of burying. The grave of a seed is the matrix of a new and larger Hope on, weary soul; toil is not in vain. Hope on, sorrowing one, grief is fleeting. Hope on, aspiring one; the dream foreshadows the divine and imperishable fact.

How often the morning brings to us not merely a new lease of life, but new life itself. We sink down on troubled pillows with dark cares brooding over us and with vague fears, magnifying dangers and ills; but at last sleep comes with its blessed unconsciousness, and then morning with its new vision, and gladness dawns with the rising sun. This experience is a parable of life. The night of sorrow will pass though it be dark and long. The night of ignorance with its tormenting alarm will vanish. Even the night of sin with its misery and shame will depart; and, with the morning, joy will flood our souls with the sweet, new meanings of God-given triumphant life.—PHILIP STAFFORD MOXOM, D. D., in "Baltimore Methodist."

NEW LIFEBOAT.

A Craft Which Will Right Itself When Upset.

The accompanying illustration represents a novel lifeboat which has been devised and patented by James Mitchell, Sr., of Arrow River, Manitoba, Canada. In general form the boat is cigar shaped, tapering from the middle to both ends, and is constructed either of metal or wood. The boat pictured in the engraving is formed of wooden staves, surrounded by hoops and strengthened from within by stout ribs. A large conical block at each end of the boat is provided with a passage or rope guideway, whose ends are at right angles to each other. A rope passes through these guideways, extends through the whole length of the boat, and is attached to a ship by the usual means. Within the body of each conical block and intersecting each rope guideway is a recess containing a spring pressed block. When the rope is removed, the block is automatically forced down so as to prevent the entrance of water. Should it be impossible to lower the boat in the orinary way by letting out the suspending rope, it may be launched upon an even keel by severing the rope from within.

Hatchways for the entrance and exit of passengers, a rudder and steering ropes operated from the hatchways or from within the boat, are all provided. A heavy keel gives the boat stability and rights it, should it be overturned. Ventilating pipes are provided which can be closed by valves to prevent the entrance of water.—Scientific American.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON I, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 1.

Text of the Lesson. Ps. cxviii—Memory Verses. 6-9—Golden Text. Ps. cxviii, 1—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

This is one of 15 consecutive psalms (cxxx to cxxxv), each entitled "A Song of Degrees" and associated with Jerusalem and the temple and the worship of God. They begin with trouble, but end with peace and victory through the Lord that made heaven and earth. In studying them we must let Zion, Jerusalem, Israel and the nations mean just what they say and take our own lessons from what is said concerning them.

1. "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." One who could truly say, "I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God, because I have set my affection to the house of my God," and who had, as an evidence of his affection, given of his own proper good 3,000 talents of gold and 7,000 talents of silver (the gold alone being equal in value to about $5,000,000), he might truly talk of rejoicing in the worship of God (1 Chron. xxix, 2-4). His prayer, recorded in that chapter, shows his heart toward God, his entire dependence upon Him.

2. "Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem!" There is ever a looking forward to the Jerusalem that shall never be plucked up nor thrown down any more, the city of truth to which all nations shall be gathered to worship the Lord in the days that are coming (Jer. xxxi, 38-40; Zech. viii, 3, 21, 23; xiv, 16; Isa. ii, 2, 3), for Jerusalem shall be the throne of the Lord, and all nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem (Jer. iii, 17). If we take the significance of the name, City of Peace, then we can receive some of the precious truths that are for all believers. Here our blessed God was to be and actually was in due time crucified for us, and one of the latest references to Jerusalem in the Bible is in these words, "Where also our Lord was crucified" (Rev. xi, 8).

3. "Jerusalem is builded as a city that is compact together." Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the Great King. God will establish it forever (Ps. xlviii, 2, 8). These and all similar words concerning Jerusalem must be taken as referring to the literal city where David reigned 33 years over all Israel and Judah (11 Sam. v, 5). The spiritual lesson for the church is found in Eph. ii, 19-22, including these words, "In whom (that is, Jesus Christ) all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord, in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit;" also in these words in Col. ii, 19, "The head from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered and knit together increaseth with the increase of God."

4. "Whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord, unto the testimony of Israel to give thanks unto the name of the Lord." Three times in the year all the males in Israel of a certain age were commanded to go up to Jerusalem to worship the Lord and to keep the feast of unleavened bread, the feast of weeks and the feast of tabernacles, always bringing an offering (Deut. xvi, 16). It is not easy to see in this a lesson for the church unless it be by contrast as to place, for there is now no city on earth where God specially reveals Himself, but wherever two or three meet in the name of the Lord Jesus He is always in the midst.

5. "For there are set thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David." Some of these thrones of judgment are mentioned in Deut. xvii, 8, 9; 11 Chron. xix, 8, and all kings who reigned righteously sitting upon their thrones for the Lord who placed them there may be included in the thrones of judgment. The onward look is to the triumph of Messiah, xix, 28, when the twelve apostles shall sit on 12 thrones judging the 12 tribes of Israel. The word for the church is found in Rev. iii, 21, where our Lord said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with My Father in His throne."

6. "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem. They shall prosper that love thee." A similar command is found in Isa. lxii, 6, 7, "Ye that are the Lord's remembrances keep not silence and give Him no rest till He establish and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." This can mean nothing else, in the light of the context and of all Scripture, than that we are ever to pray for the salvation of Israel and for the time when Jerusalem shall be a city of truth and Israel a righteous nation and a blessing in the midst of the earth to all nations.

7. "Peace be within thy walls and prosperity within thy palaces." This is what Isaiah, by the Spirit, says shall surely be. "Thy gates shall be open continually. They shall not be shut day nor night. Thou shalt call thy walls Salvation and thy gates Praise, and I will make the place of my feet glorious, and they shall call thee the City of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel" (Isa. lx, 11, 18, 13, 14). With many suchlike words is the future Jerusalem described when her name shall forevermore be Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there (Ez. xlviii, 35). But how exceeding glorious will be the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, which is to come down from God out of heaven and is described as having streets of pure gold, walls that seem to be of diamond, the foundations garnished with all manner of precious stones, every gate one pearl, the glory of God will lighten it and the Lamb be the light thereof (Rev. xxi).

8. "For my brethren and companions' sakes I will now say, Peace be within thee." When Israel shall have become a righteous people, it will be as life from the dead to the rest of the world as well as to themselves (Rom. xi, 15). Well may they sing "God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him" (Ps. lxxvii, 7), for it is written concerning them, "Gentiles shall come to Thy light and kings to the brightness of Thy rising" (Isa. lx, 3).

9. "Because of the house of the Lord our God I will seek Thy good." Not the temple at Jerusalem, but the presence of the Lord in it, was the glory of Israel. Neither the temple nor the ark of the covenant were anything apart from the presence of the Lord. In the New Jerusalem there shall be no temple for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb shall be the temple of it (Rev. xxi, 22).

A DESERTED MARBLE TOWN.

Gold Discovery That Built Bridgewater In a Canadian Wilderness.

"Up in Ontario," said J. W. Wheatley, a civil engineer of Montreal, "there is a deserted town called Bridgewater, which is built entirely of marble. About 25 years ago a farmer's wife was searching in the woods for a pig that had strayed from the family pen. In a particularly dense part of the woods she found a spring of crystal water. Being thirsty, she stooped over to drink. As she did so she slipped on a round stone which rolled from under her foot and fell into the water. Attracted by the peculiar color of the stone, she fished it out and took it home. It was found to be a 20 pound nugget of almost pure gold."

"Bridgewater at that time was about 40 miles from the nearest railroad, and the site of the town was a howling wilderness. But such was the effect of the accidental discovery of gold that within six months the wilderness had blossomed into a bustling, substantial city of 5,000 inhabitants and more a-coming. They came from every quarter. There were old forty-niners from the Pacific slope, amateurs from England and the United States, prospectors from every field. Shafts and tunnels were driven

"In sinking a shaft one mile south of the town on the claim of B. Flint, a life senator of Canada, a vein of white marble was found. At the suggestion of Senator Flint, who wanted little or nothing for the material, the town of Bridgewater was built solidly of marble. It has even to this day a courthouse, school, church, hotel, stores and private dwellings constructed wholly of white marble. One mile north of the town are an abandoned grist mill and an ax factory whose foundations are built of marble.

"While the town was booming the entire country adjacent was prospected. Some of the shafts and tunnels driven were more than 100 feet in depth, but, remarkable as it may seem, there was never sufficient gold found by the prospectors collectively to pay the cost of a single mine in the district. Still, the earlier disappointments only increased the virulency of the gold fever, which laid hold of the farmers around Bridgewater with a particularly tenacious grasp. In fact, so excited did they become that many of them actually employed armed guards to prevent trespassers from picking up the loose gold which they imagined existed on their places in vast quantities.

"The place where the original nugget was found by the woman in quest of a pig was christened Aladdin's cave, and land in its vicinity sold for fabulous prices. One farmer whose farm adjoined the cave sold five acres to an English syndicate for $100,000 cash. The syndicate spent another $100,000 in developing the claim, but never obtained a single ounce of free gold. In all it mined about 100 tons of quartz. In return the syndicate received a bill for about $375 smelting charges over and above the value of the gold in the quartz. It was the last shipment of quartz, for the cost of hauling, shipping and smelting was in the neighborhood of $150 a ton more than the rock produced.

"One old Irishman at Bridgewater, Patrick Kehough by name, received an offer of $125,000 cash for his farm, which consisted of 100 acres of rock piled, barren land. He promptly refused the offer, holding out for $150,000, which he never got. Today one could buy the property for almost anything over $1 an acre.

"Within a couple of years it became patent to all that mining in Bridgewater would never pay. So silently, one by one, the prospectors stole away from their marble residences, to be followed shortly by the owners of the marble stores, leaving the once thrifty town to settle down to a lonely, weed choked and futureless desuetude."—New York Sun

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers: Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Airongage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted a face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Men move up toward nobility and culture as they come to see Jesus for what he was.—Rev. William E. Danforth, Congregational, Chicago.

Prayer.

Prayer is not petitioning God, but harmonizing our souls with him.—Rev. F. E. Williams, Presbyterian, Baltimore.

Manliness.

Manly bearing is where the character of a noble soul reflects itself in the carriage of the person.—Rev. C. P. Bridewell, Presbyterian, Atlanta.

Earnestness.

Irritable earnestness is infinitely better than cheerful frivolity, but cheerful earnestness is incomparably better still.—Rev. Louis M. Waterman, Baptist, Upper Alton, Ills.

Value of Good Reading.

Reading is wisdom's widest open gate. Let us read the greatest books; read and think and grow, so numbering our days as to apply our hearts to wisdom.—Rev. David Utter, Unitarian, Denver.

Life in Abundance.

Christ not only comes that men may have life, but that they may have it more abundantly. He makes their life so large and full that they know it does not end with the physical accident of death.

Rills in Happy Lives.

Unnumbered rills flow into every happy life from as many lives that are simply faithful, who dream not how wide the ripples of a little rill may roll.—Rev. Louis M. Waterman, Baptist, Upper Alton, Ills.

Marvels.

There are marvels in nature all about us. There are marvels in chemists' laboratories, but the marvels in the realm of God's grace with human souls transcend all.—Rev. William Johnson, Congregational, St. Louis.

Men of Wealth.

Rich men will have to prove that they are of real social use, or else they will be destroyed. Appalling as is the wealth of this country it is not greater than the tremendous needs.—Rev. Dr. Peters, Reformed, New York.

Must Choose One Path.

There comes a time in every life when we are to choose a way in which to go. We are very watchful about that. So if we follow Jesus wherever he goes we will be very watchful to know what Jesus wishes us to do.

Immortality.

Immortality is a fact of nature. Co-existent with the universal belief and persuasion of a supreme being, of an infinite, all powerful and all wise governing power, has been the ever enduring idea of a life beyond the limit of physical death.—Archbishop Williams, Catholic, Boston.

Time and Eternity.

Be strong, loving, patient men; your homes are being built on sand or rock for time and eternity. Be strong, therefore, to show your manliness to the weak ones whom God has given you to love, cherish and protect. Prove your manhood by being in all things manly and kind at home.—Rev. Benjamin F. Fritz, United Brethren, Columbus, O.

Christ's Work.

Christ has committed his work in this world to his church. It is not the business of newspapers, magazines, clubs, theaters and commercial houses to specially look out for the spiritual welfare of mankind. They do not for a moment pretend to do this. This is not their mission. They are, however, bound, as is every man, to live aright and exercise a right moral influence.—Rev. Dr. Vohburgh, Baptist, Denver.

Conversion to Christ.

Becoming a convert to Christ is like crossing a river. If you follow a river up to its source, it grows narrower until at last you find only a little silver thread, winding through a meadow, on its way from its spring. You will in summer have to part the grasses to find it. A step, and you cross it. You may, indeed, cross it without knowing it. That step is like the "conversion" of most of Christ's followers.—Rev. Dr. John Clark Hill, Presbyterian, Springfield, O.

A Good Man.

A good man is not a man who occupies a cushioned seat in some fine cathedral, who offers long prayers or clings to old thoughts and old paths or subscribes to a church periodical or who takes his seat out upon some dead limb of the past and weeps over the sunrise of a brighter and better day, but a good man is he who deals in the goods of his Maker and makes himself and society better on account of the quality as well as the quantity of his goods.—Rev. Dr. H. C. Myers, Broadway Temple, Denver.

Superlative in Christianity.

The Christian religion does not deal with the good, with the first rate, but with the unqualified best. We find the superlative in Christ's gospel always. Jesus reveals the superlative to us. What he has done in your life, what he has done in my life, cannot be bettered. It will never have to be proped, improved nor tutored. The man who believes that he has it in his power to get all the character he needs now or all the blessings that he needs in the future has a narrow view of himself. We content ourselves with too little in this world. God meant us to have the unqualified best. Bring forth the best robe and put it on.—Rev. Reuben Haines Hartley, Presbyterian, La Porte, Ind.

Revivalism of Today.

Modern revivalism is almost inseparably associated with and based upon religious conceptions and doctrines that have become discredited and outgrown among the ablest and most scholarly and most devoted men.

TREASURES.

Friendship is a precious treasure—
Use it well!

Joy 'twill give you without measure,
Slight it not, and never blindly
Treat it coldly or unkindly—
Use it well!

Honor is a priceless jewel—
Use it well!

It is never cold and cruel;
It is warm, and kind, and cheering.
Noble, steadfast and enduring—
Use it well!

Truth's a treasure great and glorious—
Use it well!

It will make your work victorious;
Better far is riches olden
Than the wealth that's merely golden—
Use it well!

Courage is a mighty treasure—
Use it well!

It will give you strength and pleasure—
It will drive away all sadness
By the conquering power of gladness—
Use it well!

Hope's a gem with light undying,
Use it well!

While the hours are swiftly flying,
Let its talismanic beauty
Lead you on through paths of duty—
Use it well!

Moments are life's richest treasures—
Use them well!

They will bring eternal pleasures,
If we never trust them lightly,
But improve them ever rightly—
Use them well!

—Methodist.

Editorial.

IN NORTH MECKLEN- BURG.

On last Saturday evening Dr. W. W. Smith ran down to Blackstone from Lynchburg to go with the writer to North Mecklenburg. He reached the Institute in time for supper and spent the evening with us, holding the prayer service and afterward joining in the social evening given by the members of the Young Woman's Christian Association to the new girls, and making many friends among the students. On Sunday morning at seven o'clock we started for Shiloh Church, North Mecklenburg circuit, behind a pair of stirring horses, and at ten o'clock we drew up in front of Bro. Mullen's parsonage, 29 miles from Blackstone. After a pleasant hour of rest and conversation, the services began at the Church. A sermon was preached by the writer on Christian Education, then a recess taken for dinner. Dr. Smith delivered an address on the Thank-Offering movement, which was equal to any I have heard him deliver this summer, and which greatly pleased and instructed the people. At its close the writer said a few words in reference to the movement in the Farmville District, and in closing asked for some subscriptions to give the work a good start on the circuit. Brother Mullen, like a loyal and devoted Methodist preacher, started the subscription. He said that he had no bank account to draw upon, and he was not giving what he would give to an ordinary collection, but this was to him, in a certain sense, a monumental offering. He had never before made an offering of this kind and he thought he ought to give at least $50—$10 per year for five years. The second subscription was made by a young lady, Miss Mattie D. Ogburn, a B. F. I. graduate, who is teaching a public school. She subscribed $25, and paid $10 in cash. Then Bro. B. W. Ogburn, the patriarch of the Church in all that country, arose, and with a voice full of emotion, told of the mercies and blessings of God to him, and wound up by saying: "God has preserved me and blessed me for 67½ years, and I will give $1 a year for each of my 67½ years, as my Thank Offering." Then several other brethren subscribed, Bro. M. E. Johnson, $12.50; Bro B. W. Ogburn, Jr., $20; Bro. B. O. Johnson, $5; Bro. W. H. Blanch, $5; Bro. E. W. Blanch, $1. Two other subscriptions had been made on the circuit, one by Miss Helen Johnson and one by Miss Alice Jones. So with only ten subscriptions taken over $200 has been subscribed on the North Mecklenburg work. This beginning not only insures that the apportionment made by the Church will be met on this circuit, but it is to be hoped that it will be far exceeded, and it also indicates that if the subject can only be fully presented to our people throughout the Conference they will respond to the call, and we will have a monumental Thank-Offering, which will thrill the Church and astonish the unbelieving world.

At 5:30 we started back for Blackstone and after a pleasant drive and a delightful day with our brethren of the Mecklenburg circuit, we arrived home a little before nine. The writer goes to Halifax on the same mission next Saturday, and Dr. Smith goes to the Baltimore District Conference, at Arlington, Md.

JAMES CANNON, JR.

A GREAT DAY IN ATLANTA.

Atlanta has perhaps never had so great a day in all respects as was last Sunday. It was a day in the interest of the Twentieth Century movement, far-reaching in its meaning, and the exercises were of a magnitude commensurate with the occasion. The Methodist Churches of the city were closed in the morning and the members all invited to meet in mass at the Grand Opera House. The Sunday-schools were held early and then the crowds wended their way to the appointed mass gathering. The great Opera House was filled with the eager throng.

At the hour of eleven the exercises were opened with songs that were sung with spirit. An earnest and appropriate prayer was said by Rev. R. J. Bigham. Bishop Candler then delivered a few well chosen remarks.

The Bishop's discourse was one that will be remembered and one that must have had an elevating and glorifying influence on the vast congregation. Bishop Candler then proceeded to take a collection in the interest of the movement. The congregation began to respond at once to the appeals, each individual contributing as he was moved to give. The amounts ranged from one dollar to five hundred. There was no urging or waiting, but simply a presentation of the case and a voluntary response. The aggregate collection, including what was subscribed the Sunday before, amounted to $15,481.

On Sunday night Bishop Galloway preached at Trinity Church and Bishop Candler at First Church, each to a large congregation. It goes without saying that the discourses were to edification. We heard Bishop Galloway on the providential origin and development of Methodism, a very strong and inspiring discourse.

The sermon of Bishop Candler was commended in the highest terms. At the close of each sermon a collection was taken which amounted to $1,446, in addition to what had previously been contributed by those by those Churches. This gives an aggregate of $16,927, which will no doubt be increased to $25,000 before the end of many weeks.

The greatest results of the day, however, will not be told in money, but in higher conceptions of truth and duty, of the value of Christianity and Christian education, and of the important part Methodism has had in these and must have in them in the future in order to conserve the greatest interests of our country and the world. The revival power of the Church, the control of the aggressive agencies of the country, and harmonizing all of these for the glory of God and the good of men constitutes a great work for the Church of this day and the coming century which is worth the best and every effort of the Church.

—Wesleyan Advocate.

COURT-STREET'S PICNIC. We all know something about Sunday-school picnics and excursions, but the one given by Court-Street Church, Lynchburg, surpasses any of which we have any knowledge. It is said that every member of the Sunday-school was given a free ticket. The cost has not been disclosed, but it has been estimated that it was between six and seven thousand dollars. Tickets were sold to the members of the church and to the general public. The superintendent of the school is Mr. E. F. Sheffey, a man with remarkable organizing powers, which powers he has placed in the hands of the Master to be used for the glory of His name.

Bro. Sheffey is also an enthusiastic advocate of the new Church at Court-Street, and it is said that over five hundred of the membership are in favor of going ahead with the work at an early date. May this great picnic soon be followed by a great dedication.

The following extract from the "News" gives some account of the trip:

"On Tuesday morning, September 11th, the vision of the seer of the Lynchburg Sunday-school reached its fulfillment. As the light of day began to break, the few pale stars that still inquiringly lingered in the dull gray sky blinked in wondering surprise at the throngs of people, laden with boxes, baskets and other impedimenta, hastening from all directions toward a grand concentric focus at the Union Depot.

"There a scene of great preparation and expectancy was seen, the very magnitude of which hushed the vast assemblage into unvoiced stillness. The meaning of this an exoteric might have learned, had he listened to the sonorous voice of Mr. E. L. Akers, proclaiming 'Tickets to Niagara.'

"Upon the tracks of the Southern and Norfolk & Western railroads respectively stood two long trains, whose white banners, with the inscriptions, 'Lynchburg Court-Street Methodist Sunday-School' floated weirdly in the uncertain light, while here and there among this crowd might be seen the white caps and white satin badges, the insignia of office, of those in charge of the great expedition. Then the tourists consulted the blue cards accompanying their tickets, indicating the section, car and number of the seat reserved, and in a twinkling, without confusion or rush, each person was assigned by the polite doorkeepers to his special place.

"The make up of section No. 1, 'The Sunshine Special,' which stood upon the track of the Southern road, was as follows: Conductor-in-Chief, Mr. E. F. Sheffey, serene and smiling, and so well did he fulfill his duties, so attentive was he to the slightest detail of management that one might have fancied that he was in the habit of conducting mammoth excursions everyday. A worthy lieutenant was Mr. E. L. Bell, assistant conductor. Mr. George H. Poling proved himself a master in the baggage department. The other officers of this section were Major J. T. Yates, and Mr. W. R. Perkins, members of the committee, who were most efficient in the discharge of duties assigned them. There were sixteen doorkeepers, whose courtesy was unflagging. The medical staff were Samuel Lile, M. D., F. A. Lee, D. D. S., ready to minister to any ills of the flesh that might require their services.

The cuisine of the Sunshine Special was under the charge of Mr. W. A. Woodroof, Sr., and right nobly did he acquit himself of his duties. Such dainty luncheons and other attractiv refreshments as emanated from that car created the suspicion that there must be a woman somewhere there. Enquiry disclosed the fact that Mrs. Woodroof was the presiding genius; her efforts in behalf of the material needs were unremitting. Mr. E. H. Heard's service in this department and in assisting in the transfer of baggage were most valuable.

Section No. 2, or the 'Niagara Flyer,' was under the command of Colonel James B. Gregory, whose magnetism and general bearing inspired good will and confidence, a born organizer. In Mr. E. L. Akers he had a most able assistant. Mr. J. H. Broegess held the weighty post of baggage master. The other members of the staff of section No. 2 were Mr. E. C. Glass, whose very name on a committee is an inducement to embark on an excursion; Mr. Peter Ainslie, of whom more anon; Mr. W. T. Bigbie, Mr. J. W. Harvey, Mr. H. C. Sneed, Mr. M. H. Garland.

Dr. H. G. Latham, a medical advisor was a tower of confidence against sickness. Dr. Whitehead, of Chatham, had the chair of odontalgia.

The most important personage of this section was the caterer, Mr. W. O. Smith, from whose realm emanated all things that the appetite of the most critical tourist might desire.

"The engines were attached and the greatest excursion that Lynchburg, or indeed Virginia, ever organized, moved slowly out from the depot, bearing the precious freight of 800 souls.

"The pretty souvenir booklets that were distributed to all the excursionists will be treasured as charming reminders of the committee and Sunday-school in whose behalf this mammoth outing was inaugurated.

"An auspicious augury was it for the excursion that ere its departure it was committed to the Divine protection in a solemn service of prayer by the Court-Street Sunday-school, and the safe return was acknowledged with a service of praise and thanksgiving."

AFTER THE PICNIC—THE THANK-OFFERING. The following from the Lynchburg News will be read with interest. It tells a good way to follow up a picnic. Court-Street is pre-eminently the Church to begin the Thank-Offering movement in the Sunday-Schools of our Conference. Dr. Smith, the pastor, is the Chairman of the Board of Education, and Bro. Sheffey, the superintendent, is the lay member of the Executive committee of the board. This start at Court-Street should act as a bugle blast to bring the other schools of the Conference into line:

"Sunday was a record breaker at the Court-Street Methodist Sunday-school. The attendance was larger by far than for many months, though the excursions are past and the summer is ended. There was a smile of joy and satisfaction on every face and right earnestly did the teachers and scholars review the quarter's lessons.

"General interest centered in the report of the Niagara Excursion and City Park Picnic Committee. The gratifying announcement was made that the committee had conducted both to a successful finish, and while after furnishing tickets to the main school and home departments to Niagara and City Park, and deriving all revenues possible from the sale of tickets, reserved seats, dining-car service and other sources of income, there yet remained a deficit, which had, however, been paid by the Excursion Committee, while the other members of the committee had settled the expenses of the City Park outing. The obligations of the guarantors were cancelled in the presence of the whole school, which produced a profound impression, as many had expected to pay the full amount, or more than they guaranteed.

"Dr. A. Coke Smith, pastor of the Church spoke with great power on the subject of gratitude to God for all His goodness, and impressed home upon the hearts and consciences of his auditors the duty of making a substantial thank offering to God for mercies past and 'still His mercies seek.' Dr. Smith spoke as the chairman of the twentieth century movement of the Virginia Conference—the cause which is just now so near his heart. The superintendent of the school, Mr. E. F. Sheffey, requested the school to subscribe then and there a handsome fund, as a token of their gratitude to and love for God. Over $700 was subscribed in a few minutes' time, and it is expected that the sum will reach $1500 or $2000, as every member of the school will be personally requested to make a subscription. A handsomely bound book has been prepared, in which will be recorded the names of all who contribute. It will be preserved in the archives of the school as a perpetual roll of honor. In addition to this, the beautiful souvenir to be given to all who attend 'Rally Day,' October 15, will contain the name of every contributor and by classes the amount given named. Cards will be given to every member of the school, and the complete report must be in by Oct. 8th. Mr. W. T. Bigbie is the treasurer of the fund.

"Mr. J. Staart Hopkins, the sweet tenor singer of Richmond, sang one of his tender and touching selections, and the school, with unusual force and power, sang 'Onward, Christian Soldier,' bringing to a close an hour of joy, pleasure and thanksgiving, that will long live in the memory of those who were present."

$40,000 CHURCH BUILDING.

The third Quarterly Conference of Court-Street Methodist Church was called to order at 8 o'clock last night, by Rev. Paul Whitehead, D. D., presiding elder. Mr. Richard Hofard was elected secretary, and the following other members were present: Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., Judge Frank P. Christian, Rev. J. T. Wightman, D. D., Dr. W. B. Hatcher, Messrs. Carter Glass, Thomas P. Doran, R. H. T. Adams, Rev. T. H. Early, Camillus Christian, N. H. Lavinder, Eugene L. Akers, J. B. Gregory, Peter Ainslie, James W. Watts, E. L. Bell, W. R. Twyman, E. F. Sheffey, and Prof. J. L. Armstrong.

Dr. Smith; the pastor, reported encouragingly on the state of the Church, Epworth League, and Sunday-school. Mr. N. H. Lavinder, treasurer, reported, in addition to the regular collections, that about $800 had been raised in the Church and over $700 in the Sunday-school for the Twentieth Century thank offering fund, and for the education of Rev. K. Ashida, Japanese ministerial student at Vanderbilt, $221 had been contributed.

The Conference then took up the report of the special committee on new Church building. Captain R. H. T. Adams offered the following preamble and resolutions which were adopted without a dissenting vote:

"Whereas, This quarterly conference ordered a canvas of the membership of the Church to obtain the sentiment of the same on the question of the erection of a new Church building; and

"Whereas, Such canvas resulted in over 80 per cent. of the resident membership voting, and over 90 per cent. of the questions answered being in the affirmative, and 97 per cent. declared their willingness to contribute to the building should it be undertaken and

The PATENT RECORD, Baltimore, Md.

"Whereas, The Sunday-school has already outgrown the capacity of our present accommodations, therefore,

RESOLVED, 1. That a committee of nine be appointed to canvas the membership of the Church for subscriptions for a new Church building.

"RESOLVED, 2: That it be taken as the sense of this Quarterly Conference that such building shall not cost less than $40,000 exclusive of the site.

"RESOLVED, 3, That when three fourths of the amount definitely decided upon by the Quarterly Conference is secured in cash or good subscriptions the said committee shall proceed to the erection of the building.

"RESOLVED, 4: That the pastor of Court-Street Church, Captain R. H. T. Adams, Mr. Carter Glass, Dr. W. B. Hatcher, Colonel J. W. Watts, Messrs. R. P. Thornhill, J. P. Pettyjohn, E. L. Bell, C. Christian, and E. F. Sheffey be said committee."

It is understood that a meeting of the committee will be called at an early date by the pastor of the Church, and that active steps will be promptly taken to raise the necessary amount of money, which, of course, will be a comparatively easy matter, as this Church is known far and wide for its financial ability and strength. No definite site has been determined upon, as that will be considered after the committee shall have raised the funds necessary to build.—Lynchburg News.

PUBLISHING HOUSE WAR CLAIM.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE ACTION.

The committee on our publishing house trouble brought in an extensive report similar to that adopted by the Missouri Conference, of which the following is the substance:

WHEREAS, There are many members of the M. E. Church, South, who can never approve of the method by which the publishing house claim was collected; and,

WHEREAS, There seems to be no change left to the Church except by the action of the General Conference; and,

WHEREAS, A majority of our bishops have refused to call a special session of said Conference to attend to this important matter; therefore be it

RESOLVED: That the Illinois Conference now calls for a special session of the General Conference, to meet on the first Wednesday in May, 1900, to which body everything pertaining to said publishing house claim be referred for adjustment, and that all other Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, be requested to join us in this call. The committee further recommends that the said General Conference, when convened, shall so amend the rules that they shall provide for the return to the United States Treasury the sum of $288,000, which was appropriated by Congress to pay said claims, saying that, although they believe said claims to be just and right, a large majority of the members of the Church cannot approve of the means used to obtain the money.

The report was adopted by a large majority.

The delegates to the last General Conference at Baltimore were re-elected to this called session.

ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE ACTION.

The Committee on Memorials made the following report:

We beg leave to return the memorials referred to us from the St. Louis District Conference, the Farmington District Conference and the Washington District Conference. They all bear upon the same subject, viz: the procuring of $288,000 from the United States Government by our agents, Messrs. Barbee and Smith, and they unite in the request that you call a special session of the General Conference to deal with the case.

First—We reaffirm the position taken by this Conference at its last session of the General Conference to deal with the case, were we not convinced that the wiser course to pursue is to await the regular session of the General Conference, at which time we feel sure the church will right this great wrong:

We, therefore, recommend that the request contained in the memorial be not granted. We do this with the distinct understanding that this action does not indicate that we abate one jot or tittle of our dissatisfaction with the present state of the case. We would cease our agitation of this question only because it is evident we cannot reach the case until the regular General Conference convenes.

RESOLUTIONS OF LAST YEAR REAFFIRMED.

1. That the proposition made by the bishops and formally communicated to Congress to refund to the United States Treasury the entire amount of said appropriation as therein stated be approved.
2. That the resignation or removal from office of the book agents is required.
3. That under existing conditions and for the management of the business in its future development, it is advisable that another and different than the present Book Committee be constituted.
4. That it be taken under consideration, whether the excessive claims for commissions by the attorney for the publishing house, E. B. Stahlman, is legally valid, and if not having been paid, the return of the excess should be demanded and enforced at law.

FROM CUMBERLAND.

By invitation of P. C., Rev. W. W. Sawyer, the Fourth Quarterly Conference for this charge was held at Parsonage; the stewards, their families and friends all included. Though the day was inclement, there was a large gathering, every family bringing a full basket.

Sister Sawyer welcomed with accustomed grace the sisters and young ladies, and at the appointed hour all discussed with Methodist relish the bountiful supplies.

The W. M. S. and P. A. Societies transacted important business and enthused each with high purpose to bring things to pass. The regretful fact of our P. E. being absent was the only thing that marred the pleasure of the gathering. The Q. C. was held by Bro. Lawyer and the regular business transacted. The collections were behind, but all thought at that misnomer [of a Conference, the amounts would be brought up. By resolution the secretary was instructed to prepare suitable paper on behalf of the Conference, expressing their live appreciation of our dear P. E., Rev. J. F. Riddick, now serving his fourth year in this District. The following was prepared:

"Whereas, By the laws of our Church Rev. J. H. Riddick can no longer be our P. E.,

"RESOLVED, 1: That we, the official body of Cumberland Circuit, regret that we have to lose him as P. E.; that his Christian life and ministry among us have been of the highest type officially, socially and religiously, and have always been acceptable to us; and

2. That we shall ever remember his Godly life and example of pure living, and and will pray that the Divine Healer may restore his useful life, and that we would gladly receive him among us in any relation the Conference may assign him.

JAMES E. CLARK, Sec.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, By the law of limitation, the present year will end the service of the Rev. Joseph H. Riddick, presiding elder of the Farmville district; therefore be it

- RESOLVED, 1: That we, members of the Quarterly Conference of Prospect circuit, hereby testify to his efficient and faithful work as preacher and presiding elder and regret to part with him.
2. That we cordially recommend him to those whom he may be sent.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the R. C. Advocate and to the Recorder for publication, and a copy to Bro. Riddick, who is now confined to his bed in Richmond.

TO THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

The following suggestions are made to the several Annual Conferences, and affirmative action thereon solicited. The Board of Education is deeply impressed with the absolute necessity of a general and prompt movement throughout the Connection:

1. Organize a Twentieth Century Fund Committee in each charge, of which the pastor shall be chairman. This committee should be composed of one member for every fifty members of the Church, and in co-operation with the pastor should push the movement with all possible vigor. Through this committee literature should be circulated, and every member and friend of the Church solicited to make an offering to this fund. We suggest that wherever practicable, the committee be selected from those not already burdened with other financial Church work.

2. As the time is far spent—only one year remaining to complete this great work—pastors are urged to begin immediately after Conference the canvas for funds. Where there have been changes of pastors, they will get the roll books sent to their predecessors, and keep a faithful record of all donations and by whom given.

3. We earnestly request pastors to report monthly or oftener to the Conference Secretary of Education, who in turn will report to the General Secretary at Nashville.

NORFOLK PREACHERS' MEETING

In the absence of the president, Rev. L. B. Betty presided at the Methodist preachers meeting Monday morning. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. E. Shenk; of the Lutheran Church. Large congregations were reported at all the Churches Sunday.

Rev. W. T. Williams reported several new members received in the Sunday-school at LeKies Memorial Church and had a large gathering at the Sunday-school rally in the afternoon and a most delightful and interesting service.

Rev. R. H. Bennett stated that the Ladies Missionary Society of McKendree Church had raised $240 for the cause of missions—an increase over the former year's work.

Rev. Dr. W. J. Young addressed the Sunday-school Association at Park View Church, Portsmouth, Sunday afternoon.

Rev. W. R. Crowder, of the East Norfolk Circuit, received seventeen members on profession of faith at Denby's Church.

Rev. L. B. Betty gave a most interesting and instructive outline of his sermon at Monumental Church Sunday morning from the text, "Thou Shalt Be a Blessing." It embraced a review of the life of Abraham, his character and obedience to the command of God, and the lessons taught from his life opened up the largest field for God in our Christian lives. Abraham's life possessed the most attractive moral virtues. He was unselfish kind and liberal. In his life we are taught to have a just recognition of the rights of our fellow-men. Abraham's highest estimate of life was to follow the "Golden Rule." This same principle was most perfectly illustrated in the life of Christ. He gave physical bread to His disciples in order that they might partake of spiritual bread, and in order to measure up to the requirements of the divine rule we must have a character founded upon the teaching of God's word and to know how to use our privileges for the good of men.

Rev. R. F. Beadles was announced to give an analysis of one of his next Sunday's sermons at the next meeting.

A GOOD START.

First Methodist Church, of Atlanta, made a beginning on Sabbath last of her contribution to the Twentieth Century Fund. In a short time the congregation contributed $5,000 to this cause. "Every one seems eager to give," said one who was present. Dr. Lewis, the pastor, is pleased with this evidence of his people's interest in this great work. Judge Palmer is chairman of the committee of fifty to further press this collection among the First Methodist people, and it is thought that a much larger amount will be contributed.

Bishop Candler met with a cordial reception at Mulberry Street Methodist Church in Macon Sabbath before last, and raised a large sum as the beginning of Macon's gifts to this cause. Over $5,000 were contributed by this generous congregation, one thousand dollars being given by one individual.—Weekly Advocate.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1899.

WASN'T WANTED THERE.

She was a little old woman, very plainly dressed in black bombazine that had seen much careful wear, and her bonnet was very old fashioned, and people stared at her tottering up the aisle of the grand church, evidently bent on securing one of the best seats, for a great man preached on that day, and the house was filled with splendidly dressed people, who had heard of the fame of the preacher, of his learning, of his intellect and his goodness, and they wondered at the presumption of the old woman. She must have been in her dotage, for she picked out the pew of the richest and proudest member of the church, and took a seat. The three ladies who were seated there beckoned to the sexton, who bent over the intruder, and whispered something, but she was hard of hearing and smiled a little withered smile, as she said gently:

"Oh, I'm quite comfortable here, quite comfortable here."

"But you are not wanted here," said the sexton pompously. "There is not room. Come with me, my good woman, I will see that you have a seat."

"Not room!" said the old woman, looking at her sunken proportions, and then at the fine ladies. "Why I'm not crowded a bit. I rode ten miles to hear the sermon to-day, because—"

But the sexton took her by the arm, and shook her roughly in a polite, underhand way, and she took a hit. Her faded old eyes filled with tears, her chin quivered, but she rose meekly and left the pew. Turning quietly to the ladies, who were spreading their rich dresses over the spot she left vacant, she said gently:

"I hope my dears, there'll be room in heaven for us all."

Then she followed the pompous sexton to the rear of the church, where, in the last pew, she was seated between a thread-bare girl and an old man.

"She must be crazy," said one of the ladies in the pew which she had at first occupied. "What can an ignorant old woman like her want to hear Dr. Blank preach for? She would not be able to understand a word he said."

"Those people are so persistent. The idea of her forcing herself into our pew. Isn't that voluntary lovely? There's Doctor Blank coming out of the vestry. Isn't he grand?"

"Splendid! What a stately man! You know he has promised to dine with us while he is here."

He was a commanding-looking man, and as the organ voluntarily stopped, and he looked over the crowd of worshipers gathered in the great church, he seemed to scan every face. His hand was on the Bible, when suddenly he leaned over the reading desk, and beckoned to the sexton, who obsequiously mounted the steps to receive a mysterious message. And then the three ladies in the grand pew were electrified to see him take his way the whole length of the church, to return with the old woman, whom he placed in the front pew of all, its occupants making willing room for her. The great preacher looked at her with a smile of recognition, and then the service proceeded, and he preached a sermon which struck fire from every heart.

"Who was she?" asked the ladies who could not make room for her, as they passed the sexton at the door.

"The preacher's mother," replied that functionary in an injured tone.

How few remember that "while man looketh on the outward appearance, the Lord looketh on the heart."—Selected.

THE CONSUMPTION OF BEER.

With every tick of the clock £6 15s worth of beer vanishes down the world's throat; every minute £410 worth disappears; every hour the world pays £24, 651 for its beer; and every day it swallows the yearly income of 3,000 middle-class families in nearly £600,000 worth of the "brown beverage." Stupendous as these figures are, especially when we consider that the world's beer bill for a year amounts to £216,000,000 sterling, the figures which represent the quantity consumed are almost incredible. The beer which is consumed throughout the world in a single year would make a lake 6 feet deep, 3½ miles long, and a mile wide, or 2,319 acres in area. In this vast lake of beer we could easily drown all the English speaking people, to the number of 120,000,000, throughout the entire world; or we could give a beer bath to every man, woman, and child at the same time in the entire continent of America, while all the peoples of England, Scotland, Ireland, and France could find standing room on its bed.—London Home Magazine.

A SIGNIFICANT ADVANCE.

We note the statement that the Southern Pacific and the Union Pacific Railway Companies have issued orders prohibiting the sale of liquor in any of their eating houses or stations, or on any of their property along those lines.

These companies control a large number of miles of railway, and their action in this matter will have tremendous influence on the public mind. The example, too, will no doubt be followed by other railway companies and other business organizations. We learn that some brewing companies are making efforts to get the companies to rescind the above named orders, but no doubt the good sense that prompted their issue will secure their enforcement. These orders show the whiskey traffic is esteemed by the best business men of the country, and should be a lesson to the empty pates who are all the time prating about prohibition hurting business.—Wesleyan Advocate.

THE GREEDY BOTTLE.

A poor undersized boy, named Tim, sitting by a bottle and looking in, said: "I wonder if there can be a pair of shoes in it? His mother had mended his clothes, but said his shoes were so bad he must go barefoot. Then he took a brick and broke the bottle, but there were no shoes in it, and he was frightened, for it was his father's bottle. Tim sat down again and sobbed so loud that he did not hear a step behind him, until a voice said:

"Well, what's all this?" He sprang up in great alarm; it was his father.

"Who broke my bottle?" he said.

"I did," said Tim, catching his breath, half in terror and half between his sobs.

"Why did you?"

Tim looked up. The voice did not sound as he expected. The truth was, his father had been touched at the sight of the forlorn figure, so very small and so sorrowful, which had bent over the broken bottle.

"Why," he said, "I was looking for a pair of new shoes; and I want a pair of new shoes bad—all the other chaps wear shoes."

"How came you to think you'd find shoes in the bottle?" the father asked.

"Why, mother said so: I asked her for some new shoes, and she said they had gone in the black bottle, and that lots of other things had gone into it, too—coats and hats, and bread and meat, and things; and I thought that if I broke it, I'd find 'em all, and there ain't a thing in it! I'm real sorry I broke your bottle, father. I'll never do it again."

"No, I guess you won't," he said, laying a hand on the rough little head as he went away, leaving Tim overcome with astonishment that his father had not been angry with him. Two days after he handed Tim a parcel, telling him to open it.

"New shoes! New shoes!" he shouted. "Oh, father, did you get a new bottle, and were they in it?"

"No, my boy, there ain't going to be a new bottle. Your mother was right—the things all went into the bottle, but you see getting them out is no easy matter; so, God helping me, I am going to keep them out after this."—Arkansas Methodist.

A CONTEMPTIBLE ARGUMENT.

The last, lowest, and meanest appeal to human selfishness and greed that the saloon can make is: "I help to pay the taxes." Benedict Arnold sold his country for revenge, and Judas Iscariot his Lord for money. So everywhere, apparently decent men are proving traitors to morals and Christianity for the sake of revenues of sin. They consent to the work of procurers of vice in order that they may share its profit. If there is any especially hot thunderbolt in the arsenal of heaven, it doubtless is reserved for such sellers of decency and righteousness to their revenues for gain.

NEATLY PUT.

The "Interior" tells the story related by the late Dr. George P. Hayes of an infidel who was accosted by an old German. The former was about to speak at the school-house in the evening, and the German said:

"Is you de young man vot is to schpeak dis evening?"

"Yes, sir, I am."

"Vell, vot you schpeak about?"

"My subject, sir, is this: 'Resolved That I will never believe anything that I do not understand.'"

"O my! is dot it? Vell now, you shoost take von leetle example. There you see that field, my pasture over there. Now, my horse, he eats de grass, and come up all hair over he's pack. Teen my sheep; he eats shoots the same grass, and it grows wool all over him. And, now, vot you think! my goose he eats the grass, too, and sure's I tell you, it comes all over him feathers. You understand dot, do you? Heigh?"

The old German caught the idea exactly and expressed himself in a very clever way. Many persons assume the position of believing nothing they cannot understand, imagining that such a claim suggests an ability of comprehension, when in reality, they have not even a primary conception of infinity. The more a man knows the more clearly he understands how little there is to be known. We have respect for a man who reasons out conclusions and maintains them so long as the premises stand firm; but detest the egotist who will say that nothing is worthy of his belief that his mind cannot unravel.

President W. R. Harper, of the University of Chicago, is engaged in a task to which he is accustomed—the raising of $1,000,000 to secure a provisional gift of $2,000,000 from John D. Rockefeller. Nearly every gift made by the millionaire Standard Oil man to the University has had such a clause, and every time the University people have succeeded in gaining the prize. Only three months remain, however, to make up the amount required, and President Harper's efforts must be greater than he ever before exerted.

It has often been said: "Let liquor alone it will not touch you." But this is not by any means true. It touches the drunkard's wife and children in spite of all their efforts to prevent it.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., SEPTEMBER 28, 1899.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON II, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 8.

Text of the Lesson, Est. iii, 1-11.
Memory Verses, 5, 6—Golden Text, Rom. viii, 31—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. "After these things did King Ahasuerus promote Haman, the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, and advanced him and set his seat above all the princes that were with him." This wicked man and other wicked men, placed in positions of power and authority, make us think of Dan. iv, 17, "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever He will and setteth up over it the basest of men." We have seen in the book of Ezra how the enemies of God and His people were permitted to prosper up to a certain point, but were in due time overcome. In this book of Esther we see the enemy prospering wonderfully for a time, but sudden and fearful was his downfall.

2. "And all the king's servants that were in the king's gate bowed and revered Haman, for the king had so commanded concerning him, but Mordecai bowed not nor did him reverence." Here is a man who, like Daniel and his friends, fears not the face of man because he fears God, and to an enemy of God he will not bow, let the result be what it may. Because of Amalek's rebellion against God and His people it had been determined to blot out the remembrance of him from under heaven (Ex. xvii, 16; Deut. xxv, 17-19). Had Mordecai bowed to Haman he would have done so to an enemy of God, and this he would not do.

3. "Then the king's servants which were in the king's gate said unto Mordecai, Why transgressest thou the king's commandment?" These servants knew no king but Ahasuerus. Like the Jews in the time of Christ, they would say, We have no king but Caesar (John xix, 15). How many who bear the name of Christian would have to confess if they spoke truly? O Lord, our God, other Lords besides thee have dominion over us (Isa. xxvi, 13). Many there are who continually break the first commandment. Thou shalt have no other gods before me (Ex. xx, 3). Mordecai could truthfully say: The Lord is my lawgiver, the Lord is my judge, the Lord is my king. He will save me (Isa. xxxiii, 22).

4. "Now, it came to pass, when they spake daily unto him and he hearkened not unto them, that they told Haman to see whether Mordecai's matters would stand, for he had told them that he was a Jew." Mordecai was established and therefore unmoved by the continual words of the king's servants. He believed God, for that is the only way to be established (II Chron. xx, 20; Isa. vii, 9). The word for us is, Be ye therefore steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord (I Cor. xv, 58). We should say with Paul: With me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you or of man's judgment. He that judgeth me is the Lord (I Cor. iv, 3, 4).

5. "And when Haman saw that Mordecai bowed not nor did him reverence then was Haman full of wrath." Just so did Nebuchadnezzar act when Daniel's friends bowed not to him. It is all of Satan when any one wants to be worshiped or revered instead of giving all the glory to the Son of God to worship him (John 9), and his followers have the same spirit, making out that they are the ones to whom others must bow down (Acts v, 36; viii, 9). This spirit, which has been so fully seen since they said at Babel, Let us make us a name (Gen. xi, 4), shall be finally and most fully seen in the antichrist, or man of sin, or lawless one of the last days (Dan. xi, 33, 37; II Thess. ii, 4, 8, et c.).

6. "And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, * * * wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews." Death is the devil's weapon (Hab. ii, 14). Therefore Cain killed Abel, Pharaoh killed the male children of Israel, Herod killed the babes in Bethlehem, and so it goes and will go till the last enemy, death, shall be destroyed (I Cor. xv, 26). It is the nature of the wicked to watch the righteous and seek to slay him, but the Lord will not suffer it unless it is for the highest good and greatest glory of the righteous (Ps. xxxvii, 32, 33).

7. It would seem from this verse, when compared with chapter ix, 24, that for about a year Haman was plotting and planning the destruction of the Jews. It is said of the wicked that they devise mischief upon their beds and set themselves in a way that is not good (Ps. xxxvi, 4). It is bad enough when enemies speak evil of us, whisper together against us and devise our hurt, but it is worse if those who were our familiar friends turn against us, yet even that is but a phase of our fellowship with Christ (Ps. xli, 5-9; John xv, 20, 21).

8. "And Haman said unto King Ahasuerus, There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of the kingdom, and their laws are diverse from all people; neither keep they the king's laws. Therefore it is not for the king's profit to suffer them." Thus were the Jews slandered to the king when the temple was being builded (Ez. vi, 12, 13). The testimony against Paul and Silas was, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city and teach customs which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans (Acts xvi, 20, 21). But nothing was ever said about any one quite so bad as that which our Lord's enemies said about Him, the pure and holy Lamb of God.

9. "If it please the king, let it be written that they may be destroyed, and I will pay 10,000 talents of silver to the hands of those that have the charge of the business to bring it into the king's treasuries." What a truly devilish plot this was to destroy thousands of people so as to be avenged upon Mordecai!

10. "And the king took his ring from his hand and gave it unto Haman, the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the Jews' enemy." Thus the doom of the Jews seemed about to be accomplished by their enemy, but God was watching and saying: Thus far shalt thou come. Kings and rulers may set themselves and take counsel together against the anointed of the Lord, but He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh. The Lord shall have them in division (Ps. ii, 1-4).

11. "And the king said unto Haman, The silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee." Shall God allow His people thus to be given into the hand of the enemy? Sometimes He does, for He said concerning Israel, I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies (Jer. xii, 7).

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 8, "Work Where Christ Tells You to Work"—Text, John xxi, 1-8.

"Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find."

By the lake of Galilee, in the mists and dim light of early morning, Jesus hails the fishermen who have worked all night without success and now, tired and hungry from toil, are break-fastless.

At his suggestion they make one more cast of the net and inclose a great school of fish. The point of value in this lesson is not the question of Jesus' knowledge or of His power, not the matter of miracle or natural course of events, but rather the spirit of readiness to receive suggestions and to work however and wherever there is prospect of results.

Dullness and apathy in personal experience and in the life of a church or chapter is not usually because of no field of work at hand nor the lack of workers, but most usually comes from indifference and obstinacy. Some fish may be caught by accident by a listless fisherman, but usually it needs one who is alert to know their haunts and habits to make much success.

It is no easier to catch men than fish. Many of them are wary creatures, easily scared at the mention of religious topics. They need to be sought as skillfully as brook trout are hunted by the true sportsman. Oftentimes when every device has been used and all resources of labor and ingenuity exhausted and fishing time seems over and the workers all worn out, then comes the great haul, and a multitude of great fishes is inclosed and safely landed and the net not torn.

It will ever be so. Strive with whatever skill we may, there will still be long nights of taking absolutely nothing. But there are fish still uncaught, and they will swarm somewhere. If we are alert instead of disheartened, the Master will be heard as He hails from the shore. One more cast, made as He directs, then fish in abundance and a morning feast in His presence.

A Leader Among Men.

Daniel H. Hastings, ex-governor of Pennsylvania, has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church since boyhood and for 20 years past a trustee of his home church at Bellefonte. He is an orator whose addresses are in great demand because of their eloquence and breadth of thought. He is 50 years of age. Born on a farm, educated in the public schools, he has made his mark as a teacher, as a lawyer and business man. At the time of the Johnstown flood he had charge of the relief operations.

It is gratifying to see the men prominent in business and military and governmental affairs increasingly known as religious men. The world moves upward in these years. The power of the

UNWRITTEN RHYMES

BY S. B. M'ANUS.

DOZEN times a day or more,
A little foot comes to my door,
And tho' I bid "come in" "stay out"
A little face, with smile or pout,
With eyes as blue as gentian bells,
And cheeks as pink as sea-loved shells,
And hair that strays where e'er it lists,
And hands with dimples kissed and kissed,
I see—and countless baby charms,—
And then my queen is in my arms.

* * * * *
They fall so fast I cannot speak,
The kisses on my eyes and cheek,

And tangled hair weaves in the brown,
And dimpled hands hide smile or frown,
And then with "hug" and kiss the last,
The tribute paid for service asked,
I stop to tie a wanton shoe,
Or vexing knot in string undo,
Or braid a strand of straggling hair,
To save my lady from despair,
Put here and there a pin or two
To make a rent as good as new,
Or kiss a hurt on hand or face,
Or brush away a trouble trace,
Or find her Noah for his ark
(Bent doubtlessly upon a lark),
Or "tell" Bo Peep or Nimble Dick,
Or Witch who rode a bramble stick,
Or mend a wheel in some old "shay"
That days ago had had its day,
Or rock her Simple Simon lad
(Who when he's bad is very bad),
Or do a hundred things and one
That never "stay" when they are done,
And then she's down and off again,
And I take up my waiting pen.

But O, my thoughts; where have you flown?
And O, my rhymes; where have you gone?
And where my place and where my plot
That I so diligently had wrought?
And where my hero? where my maid?
And cunning schemes so deftly laid?
They're gone, and tho' my ink wet pen
Is waiting for those maids and men
To render their account to me,
I only see and see and see
My little girl within the door,
And hear her footfall on the floor.

And be it thus: my callow rhyme
And halting verse, half out of time,
The world will never want or miss,
And ignorance shall be its bliss,
And other men with happier way
Will say the thoughts I tried to say,
And other lips with songs shall ring,
That I could feel but could not sing.
But tho' the world stood still as might
To hear the verses I might write,
And tho' my songs should always live,
I would not give—I would not give

For all of this and kingdoms more, the joy I feel when at the door
The little one I love I see; that face is paradise to me.

PRAYER HEALED HIS PARALYSIS.

The Instantaneous Cure of Major T. G. Lennox, Once Officer in the British Army, Famous Archeologist, World-Wide Traveler, Expert Linguist.

HAVE been asked for an example of my personal knowledge of answers to prayer.

Two years ago I was present at a camp meeting extending over two weeks. One night during that time, after a hard day's work, I retired to rest. I had my quarters in an old wooden building, and was that night alone, my companion having been away during the day, and had failed to return.

About midnight I was seized with such intense pain in the side as to be completely paralyzed, even to speech. I tried to attract the attention of some of the numerous tenters who were encamped all around me, and get their help, but was unable, although I could hear every movement in that still summer night. However, my left hand and arm were hanging over the edge of my cot, and by a tremendous effort I managed to extend my fingers a matter of an inch or so and then continued to drum on the wall of the building, thus hoping to obtain assistance.

For a long time—it seemed weeks to me, I was in such agony—no one took any notice excepting to grumble at my persistent tap, tap, tap, which in the intense stillness of a semi-tropical night, sounded like drum beats.

At last a good, motherly soul suspecting there must be a cause for the continued tapping, left her bed and came over to investigate, but all I could do was to look at her. I could not even moan, the only parts of my composition over which I seemed to have any control were the two first fingers of my left hand, and, indeed, I don't know if I had control of them for, automatically, they still continued their tapping on the wall, until the dear sister had taken matters into her own hands, and had carefully tucked me into bed, after telephoning for a doctor to aid me.

After what seemed an endless time, he arrived, and quickly diagnosed my case as a severe attack of pleurisy, needing great care.

For two days I received his care, as also the kindly ministrations of all the camp, but I still remained in dreadful pain and unable to move my limbs, although I had recovered my voice. This took place on Friday.

The big pavilion was quite close to my quarters, and, as I lay there, I could distinctly hear almost all that was said there, and I could follow many of the testimonies, prayers and talks.

Sunday morning at 11 o'clock a general holiness and consecration meeting was being held, and as I listened to one after another testifying to the all-sufficiency of Christ for time, as well as eternity, the inspiration flashed over me, "Why not trust Christ to heal my body?" I commenced to tremble so that my nurse thought I was about to have another and more severe attack, but it was not that. It was the mightiest spiritual struggle I ever had, and its very intensity shook my body.

This lasted some little time, when I distinctly heard a voice say, "Lay your hand in Mine," and, behold! I stretched forth my hitherto-helpless right arm and hand to grasp that Hand I felt, knew was held out to help me, and as I held my hand out, my faith grew, and I said quite loudly and distinctly, "My All and in All."

I was healed. Wasn't it marvellous, wonderful? I rose, dressed and announced my intention of joining the brethren at the pavilion, and already the news had gone forth that I was healed, and numbers came to see the thing that God had done. Some of the doubting said I must not venture out, it would result in a relapse and terminate fatally, perhaps, but I said, "Brothers, the Lord has healed me, and I believe He can keep me healed."

To this day, my Heavenly Physician does keep me, body and soul. Praise His name!

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

It is said that during the inaugural ceremonies at Austin, Tex., and at the ball which followed at night, that not one drop of intoxicants was on tap—that neither the outgoing nor the incoming administration drank anything.

One of the members of the Massachusetts Board of Pharmacy is reported to have said that the sales of liquor in drug stores have decreased 60 per cent since the board has certified to the fitness of applicants for druggists' licenses.

A temperance demonstration is to be made at the Paris Exposition, by opening on the grounds a very large temperance restaurant together with what are termed "Kiosques de Temperance," from which all alcoholic drinks will be excluded.

The wonderful progress made in New Guinea is thus stated by Rev. James Chalmers, in a letter to The Christian: "Here we have been opening a chapel which cost $1,200. The people paid for it all themselves. A few years ago these men were savages and cannibals."

Dr. Samuel Smiles, author of "Self-Help," is now nearly 86 years of age. He lives at Kensington, and every day drives to the Serpentine, where he gets out and enjoys a little walk. Dr. Smiles has written his autobiography, but does not seem to want it published during his life.

The Rev. Frank P. Parkin, D. D., has been elected corresponding secretary of the Twentieth Century Thankoffering Commission, composed of bishops, clergymen and laymen of the Methodist Episcopal Church, whose object is to raise $20,000,000 during the years 1899, 1900 and 1901.

Rev. C. A. Owens, the missionary sent to Manila by Bishop McCabe, speaks English, French and Spanish. He is now, in company with his wife, at his appointment. He will have a good opportunity to test self-support, having arrived at his destination with only $50 in his pocket.

Anxious Mother—Enforce the law and protect my boy!

Saloon-Man—That's all right, but don't you forget my business interests.

Politician—Can't please both. One votes, the oth doesn't—which can I afford to lose?

GENERAL HASTINGS.

gospel is being realized not alone in the salvation of the individual, but in the regeneration of society and the reformation of all life.

Breaking the Net.

One of the things which John speaks of with surprise is the fact of the untorn net when so many strong fish had been caught. One of the surprising things about church nets in the past has been the rents which have let out such a multitude of those once inclosed. How often has the cry been raised: "How can we hold our young people?" "What can we do for our young men?"

It is a fact, all too true, that in many places the half grown boys drift out of the Sunday school and never come back to the church. What is the cause? What is the cure? Much has been written and spoken about this evil, and wisdom is not yet exhausted, nor has the complete cure been yet found. Nets still break and boys get away into deep waters and are lost.

Some few items we have learned about this business. Old nets are apt to be rotten. New ones hold best. Don't rush or frighten the fish or try to do everything in a minute. Slow and sure is a good rule in working a seine. But don't be so slow that the fish all get away before you begin to "purse up the net." Keep all nets in repair. You can't tell which one will be needed next, nor how soon. Fish whenever you get a chance, and not just when you feel like it. You must study the fishes' feelings more than your own if you are to catch them.

The Beautiful.

Appreciation of the beautiful in nature and art and in human character and action is as desirable as integrity, honesty and purity. Harshness is no proof of holiness. One may be so absorbed in some line of work as to neglect many others very desirable. The great scientist Darwin made this mistake. Up to the age of 30 he devoted himself to poetry, and especially in the science of poetry, music and pictures, and his mind became a machine for collecting several laws out of collected facts.

THE DEVIL'S FRIEND.

INGERSOLL'S SCATHING DENUNCIATION OF ALCOHOL.

Rum's Awful Work Portrayed In Vivid Words by the Great Orator. Characterized as God's Enemy and Satan's Agent and Friend.

One of the greatest temperance orations ever delivered in the English language was delivered by Ingersoll in a case where he was defending a liquor dealer. It was as follows:

"I am aware that there is a prejudice against any man engaged in the manufacture of alcohol. I believe that from the time it issues from the coiled and poisonous worm in the distillery until it empties into the hell of death, dishonor and crime it demoralizes everybody that touches it, from its source to where it ends. I do not believe anybody can contemplate the subject without becoming prejudiced against that liquor crime.

"All we have to do, gentlemen, is to think of the wrecks on either bank of the stream of death; of the suicides, of the insanity, of the poverty, of the ignorance, of the destitution, of the little children tugging at the faded and weary breasts of weeping and despairing wives, asking for bread; of the talented men of genius it has wrecked, the men struggling with imaginary serpents, produced by this devilish thing, and when you think of the jails, the almshouses, of the asylums, of the prisons, of the scaffolds upon either bank, I do not wonder that every thoughtful man is prejudiced against this stuff called alcohol.

"Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affections, erases conjugal loves, blots out filial attachments, blights parental hope and brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends and all of them paupers and beggars. It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, misery and crime. It fills your jails, supplies your almshouses and demands your asylums. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels and cherishes riots. It crowds your penitentiaries and furnishes victims to your scaffolds. It is the lifeblood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman and the support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, respects the thief, esteems the blasphemer. It violates the obligations, reverences fraud and honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue and slanders innocence. It incites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, helps the husband to massacre his wife and the child to grind the patrician ax. It burns up men, consumes women, detests life, curses God and despises heaven. It suborns witnesses, nurses perjury, defiles the jury box and stains the judicial ermine. It degrades the citizen, debases the legislator, dishonors statesmen and disarms the patriot. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness, and with the malevolence of a fiend it calmly surveys its frightful desolation, and, unsatisfied with its havoc, it poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, slays reputation and wipes out national honors, then curses the world and laughs at its ruin.

"It does all that and more—it murders the soul. It is the son of villainies, the father of all crimes, the mother of abominations, the devil's best friend and God's worst enemy."

A Wife's Devotion.

There is one woman who believes with Emerson that the prayer of the sower is when he sows his seed. She does things when she wishes them done. She does not believe in alcoholic drinks, and the man who wanted to be her husband was put on probation for some time before the wedding day was set. For six months he must not touch anything alcoholic, and as far as she knew he did not, and the wedding came off. Then after a time there was a relapse; not a very serious relapse, but no one could tell what it might become, and the woman decided to act. Breakfast and dinner the man took at home, and there was no danger then, but at luncheon there might be. Hence, without regard to the inconvenience it might be to her, the wife who believes in deeds, not words, goes down town every day to take luncheon with her husband.—New York Times.

A Temperance Island.

In the island of Anticosti, in the gulf of St. Lawrence, a Frenchman, M. Henri Menier, has established what is regarded as the largest private game preserve in the world. He bought the island, which is 140 miles long by 28 broad, for $32,000, or 6 cents an acre, and then opened up negotiations with Canadian hunters and trappers for stocking it with red deer, caribou, moose, beavers and various specimens of the American fox. M. Menier is also developing the agricultural resources of his possession and is encouraging Frenchmen to go out and settle on his property. These have to renounce alcoholic beverages and be strict teetotalers.—League Journal.

Varying Effects of Drink.

It is a noteworthy fact that, while the more boisterous form of intemperance in England leads to private brutality and public disorder, the continental system of small dram drinking, before meals in the shape of tonics and appetizers leads to insanity.—Exchange.

Occasionally a bright man who drinks gets a good job, but you soon hear that he has lost it. The boozers cannot long keep responsible positions. No man who drinks can hope to advance. There is no doubt of this. It is a wonder that so many men monkey with the buzzsaw.—Afton Globe.

In Belgium the Antialcoholic league issued a few months since a set of school copy books, the covers of which were illustrated with temperance pictures and statistics. They have proved so popular with schoolmasters that a second series has had to be published.—Union Signal.

OBITUARY.

Sister Mary Ann—familiarly called "Polly Ann"—Wilkinson, the devoted and beloved wife of Brother B. J. Wilkinson, was born Nov. 12th, 1827, was married April 11th, 1849, and died July 28th, 1899.

Sister Wilkinson was born and brought up in a Christian home and was a member of the Methodist Church from her youth, and never moved in her faith in Christ, which continued to the end as simple as a little child's.

In her marriage she chose a devoted and godly companion. Like Zacharias and Elizabeth, they were both righteous before God, and for a half century walked together in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

They commenced their home life by erecting a family altar, from which daily, when possible, sacrifices of prayer and praise ascended to God for fifty years. As the children of this home came to years, at her knee they were taught to pray to mother's God and to trust in mother's Saviour. It is almost as natural for children to be pious in such a home and atmosphere as for flowers to bloom and fruits to grow and ripen in the tropics. Hence, no one is surprised to learn that the five children, all grown to manhood's and womanhood's estate, are members of their parents' Church, devout followers of their parents' Lord, and those that have families are bringing up their children, too, in the nurture and a monition of the Lord.

Her stricken and sorely bereaved husband says: "Her death has made a vacant place in our family that can never be filled on earth, but we all hope to meet in heaven where tears and parting are unknown." No husband ever had a truer wife, no child ever had a more affectionate mother, and neighbors of all classes never had a more sincere friend.

The 11th of last April was the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Brother and Sister Wilkinson, and they prepared to celebrate the event with appropriate ceremonies and to lay a special thank-offering on God's altar for foreign missions in remembrance of His multiplied mercies to them through their long wedded life, but sickness in the family prevented. Soon after this she was stricken down with the fatal malady. Improvements and relapses followed each other till her sufferings ended in that rest that remaineth for the people of God.

After skillful physicians and tender nursing had done all that could be done, and the end drew near, she told her loved ones that she did not fear death, but only regretted the separation from friends and loved ones.

Our sister was devoted to her pastors and greatly enjoyed their visits to her home, and earnestly and fervently entered into the worship when they led the family to the throne of grace around the family altar.

Being of a nervous and sympathetic temperament the little troubles that happened to members of her family or friends became burdens to her for the time being, but she was almost always cheerful in the presence of her pastors, entirely at ease in their society, was quick at harmless repartee with them, amused them with her wit, and was a "pet" with them, as she was with all her intimate friends. She was one of the most perfectly guileless persons I have ever known. Farewell, simple, open-hearted child of God. Adieu, Christian mother, till we meet again on the eternal shore. JOHN O. MOSS.

CHURCH CORNER STONE LAID.

The corner-stone of the New Methodist of Clover, was laid last Thursday with Masonic honors. The address was delivered by Rev. F. M. Edwards, of South Boston, and the music was rendered by the South Boston band. The ladies of the church served a sumptuous dinner to the large crowd assembled, and the receipts for the dinner added to the amount raised in public collection, netted a neat little sum to further the business enterprise.

MORE OR LESS SUNSHINE.

The French Bureau of Agriculture has made a report upon the relative amount of sunshine and rain in Europe. Spain enjoys about three thousand hours of sunshine in the year; Italy two thousand and three hundred; France two thousand two hundred; Germany, one thousand seven hundred; England has but one thousand four hundred.

NOTICE TO CATTLE MEN.

The State and Federal authorities have made arrangements to the effect that the cattle quarantine in Virginia will be raised this winter for two months, beginning the 15th of November or the first of December.

The exact date has not as yet been definitely settled.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 1, "Our Own Church"—Text, Ps. cxxii, 1-9.

"Peace be within thy walls and prosperity within thy palaces."

The motto given by Bishop Matthew Simpson to the Epworth League at the time of its formation is the sentiment given for consideration this week.

"We live to make our church a power in the land while we live to love every other church that exalts our Christ."

It is advised that every chapter have a meeting, led by the pastor, to discuss denominational work. One of the first things which impresses an observer in meeting a live Christian worker is his denominational loyalty. That was a characteristic mark of all the best workers of both Old Testament and New Testament times. Love of one's own church—true love—is apt to be coupled with respect for every other true church.

Every Leaguer should make himself acquainted with the outlines at least of the history of the Methodist Episcopal church and should be intelligently acquainted with our special views and customs and know why we hold to these peculiarities. We should also have a good knowledge of the characteristics of each of the other great denominations in our own community. Besides this, we ought to be well posted as to the connectional benevolent societies, their past history and present standing.

The most thrilling romances ever written are not more fascinating than the facts frequently coming to the surface as we study the progress of our church in different lands.

The more we learn of the noble men and women who are associated with us in the work of our church around the world, the more we meet with rank and file from various localities as well as with the leaders of the host, the more we shall appreciate the grandeur of our calling, the heroism of the workers, the pressing needs on every side, the call for steadfast courage and diligence on our own part.

Boasting and pride are at a great discount. Mere numbers are of small value. The spirit which impels us is the point of great value. Loyalty to our associates, our denominational mission and our personal opportunities is a grand way of cultivating allegiance to Jesus Christ.

Walls of Defense.

There is danger as well as helpfulness in the spirit of liberality which is so influential at the present time. The wider the circle of our acquaintance the more do we find diversities of views on vital points. We are often surprised to find men of much experience and education holding opinions we had supposed were erroneous and doing things we have been taught were wrong. Our own belief and practices are put to severe tests as we enlarge our world of observation until it sometimes makes us wonder if, after all, there is any fixed standard of truth and any real rule of right.

Then comes the plausible explanation that all depends on personal conviction and sincerity, that every one has a right to his own opinion, and the test of all right and truth is your sincerity in holding to it.

But there are truth and right and duty, and their test is not the opinion of any one nor his imperfect practice. Differences of belief and habits only show the many sidedness of life, the imperfections of the best judgments and the need of diligence and care to learn the real way and train our powers to do the best.

The value of the doctrines of our church lies at this point. They should be known by our young people and, if known, will prove a wall of defense against assaults of ignorance and bigotry and doubt. These doctrines are not the utterances of any one man or company of men, but are the great foundation principles of divine truth, holding firm through all ages and worlds. They are the prominent teachings of the Bible and are the sure facts on which faith can rest securely. Every chapter should spend some time in the study of our foundations of belief and practice, know what it is to be a Methodist and be one from conviction and intelligence. There is no defensive protection so valuable as conviction based on knowledge.

Barriers and Boulevards.

The old fortifications which formerly surrounded Paris were some years since leveled and made into a grand boulevard. At the same time wide and beautiful avenues were cut through some of the oldest and most densely populated parts of the city, opening up the slums and letting light, air and publicity into quarters which were previously filled with squalor and crime.

In the progress of the present century much the same thing has occurred in the churches. It is not so long ago that loyalty to one's own church and creed was supposed to necessitate the denial of the truth of all other beliefs and the withholding of fellowship from those who did not agree in all points. Each church seemed to hedge and wall itself in from all others and from the world. The change in these things has been one of the marked improvements of recent years. Beliefs have been modified by wider knowledge and are no longer so narrow as formerly. Men as a whole believe no less firmly, creeds are no less clearly held than before, but they are more reasonable and more inclusive.

Exclusiveness in fellowship has been greatly modified. People of all creeds and peculiarities of worship meet, debate, worship and work together. The walls of separation have been thrown down and made into thoroughfares for service of God. Barriers are made boulevards, and blocks of defense are pavements over which chariots of human progress roll freely. Put your prejudices under foot and find your best defense in fraternal love and co-operation.

TO FIGHT INTEMPERANCE.

Europe Aroused to the Danger of the Drink Habit.

The king of Italy is a total abstainer, as is also practically the Grand Duke of Baden, and Emperor William of Germany has several times expressed himself forcibly on the drinking habits of the army. He recommends to his officers that they set a good example to the men in the ranks, and the emperor is said to be alive to the dangers from the growth of child drunkenness in Germany. Other sovereigns are apparently awakening to the situation, and the young queen of Holland especially so.

In Russia the government monopoly of the drink traffic has proved so successful in the provinces, where it has been on trial for several years, that Czar Nicholas II is extending the system to decrease drunkenness. The Greek church of Russia is using its paramount power for temperance, and an association of the Catholic clergy of Europe has just been formed to push the church work for this cause, as is being done in America.

For the first time in the history of European expositions there will be a temperance building at Paris next year. Plans have been drawn and stock is being subscribed for by prominent French people for a handsome structure, which will serve as a soft drink cafe on the ground floor. It is intended to use the 1900 exposition as a vehicle for widely spreading the movement.

On the continent the most powerful temperance association is the Blue Cross, which has a membership of over 23,000 and operates in Switzerland, Belgium, France and other countries. In Germany there are 40,000 people enrolled for temperance, many of whom are total abstainers. A powerful organization is the German Temperance association of 12,000 members, made up in considerable part of the mayors of towns and other officials who are using their influence to restrict the sale of drink. In 12 years the consumption of alcohol per German capita has decreased one-third, and the use of light beers is notably growing instead.—Selected.

Enough Are Enticed.

Many boys and young men pass daily dozens of gilded saloons and never enter. Theoretically all might do the same. The fact remains that enough are enticed to keep up the procession of 100,000 who yearly go down to drunkards' graves. And what the multitudes actually do, not what the individual may, can or must do, settles the case against the saloon.—Union Signal.

ALCOHOL AS A FOOD.

DOUBTFUL VALUE OF PROFESSOR ATWATER'S EXPERIMENTS.

The Whole Record of Arctic Exploration Proves Alcohol to Be of No Value as a Heat and Muscle Converter—Destroys Blood Corpuscles.

Dr. T. Alexander MacNicholl of New York, whose success in critical surgical operations performed without resort to alcoholic stimulants has attracted national attention, in a letter to The New Voice discusses the recent experiments of Professor Atwater to determine the food value of alcohol. It says:

The series of experiments recently made at Wesleyan university by Professor W. O. Atwater are of peculiar scientific as well as public interest, bearing as they do upon a question which has agitated the world for well nigh a century.

The published result of these experiments is surprising, coming as it does from such an able investigator, and certainly warrants comment.

It is unnecessary to say that such experiments can hardly prove conclusive. The many factors entering into the problem make the most careful investigator's work liable to error. Many questions upon which negative deductions are made must be shadowed in doubt.

The professor observed three important results.

First—"Extremely little alcohol was given off from the body unconsumed." This corresponds with the reports of the ablest French and English investigators. The subsequent statement, "Indeed, it was oxidized, burned as completely as bread, meat or any other food," bids us pause. Because all of the ingested alcohol is not recovered in the excrements or that little or no alcohol is found in the tissues of the subject was immediately killed would not prove the value of alcohol as a food. By robbing the tissues of oxygen alcohol may be decomposed into certain secondary products which are fit neither for construction nor heat. Nitric acid, morphine, strychnine and other toxic agents are useful in small doses and in certain conditions of the system. These agents cannot be recovered entirely in the excrements—ergo they are oxidized, ergo they are foods. Then let us denounce the law-makers for limiting their sale to professional orders and pour our contempt on pulpit, Sunday school and textbook for classifying them with other toxic agents and heralding their baneful influence! Yet this is where a similar reasoning would land us.

Second—"In the oxidation all the potential energy of the alcohol was transformed into heat and external muscular power." The apparent increase in temperature immediately after taking alcohol is undoubtedly due to the transference of heat from more important structures, while the general body temperature is lowered.

The apparent increase in strength during the first 20 minutes after taking alcohol may be chargeable not to the energy derived from it, but to the mental exhilaration due to an increased flow of blood to the brain, together with a benumbing influence upon the nerve centers. In the examination of nearly 2,000 cases Dr. Kellogg of Michigan found that two hours after taking one-half the quantity of alcohol given in these experiments muscular strength diminished nearly 1,500 pounds.

Were the conclusion correct that alcohol increased heat and muscular power we would expect to see it practically demonstrated under conditions calling for heat and energy; yet the whole record of arctic explorations proves alcohol a deceiver and a curse. Nansen's verdict is: "Alcohol reduces the power of endurance and exercises a directly injurious influence by lowering the temperature of the body. Alcohol destroys energy and lessens the spirit of enterprise." The hard common sense of the votaries of athletics banishes alcohol as an enemy. The director of one of the foremost athletic clubs in New York city says, "An athlete should never drink even moderately if he expects to reach the highest success of which he is capable."

Third—"The alcohol protected the body material from consumption." In a series of experiments conducted by the writer during the winter of 1890 and 1891 the way alcohol protected, or rather did not protect, the materials of the blood was clearly demonstrated. It was shown that even such small quantities of alcohol as those employed in the "Atwater experiments" have a destructive action upon blood corpuscles. By reason of a strong affinity for water and albumin alcohol robs the hemoglobin of the blood of much of its power to take oxygen from the air cells of the lungs. By this same influence it retards all molecular changes in the several tissues. That the paralysis of all molecular changes and a consequent saving of body material would be productive of increased vital energy and conducive to the more rapid development of soul life I doubt if even Professor Atwater would care to maintain.

It is held by the professor that alcohol is not a poison when used in moderate quantities, but this can be claimed of all poisons—only dilute them properly and regulate the dose. Nature has provided two liquid foods for man and beast—water and milk. When the intemperate use of either turns fathers into brutes, husbands into fiends incarnate, children into paupers and leaves a heritage of disease, idiocy and crime, then the writer will be one of the first to advocate the placing of these two beverages upon the poison list.

Whisky In Boston.

It cost Boston $115,802 last year just to care for the drunkards that were arrested.

Don't Want Drunkards.

It is evident in many ways that managers of large moneyed interests and capitalists are taking up the temperance question practically in demanding total abstinence of all responsible persons who handle property. Business managers, responsible clerks, partners and persons occupying places of trust are regarded with increasing anxiety, particularly if they are club-men and are known to be users of spirits. The first qualification of an aspirant for a good position is, What are his habits? Is he a total abstainer? Often inferior men secure positions because they are abstainers, while men, brilliant, capable, talented, who are moderate drinkers, fail.—Journal of Inebriety.

The Most Pressing Enemy.

In a recent speech before the English Army Temperance association Lord Wolseley said: "There are yet some battles to be fought; some great enemies to be encountered by the United Kingdom, but the most pressing enemy at present is drink. It kills more than all our newest weapons of warfare, and not only destroys the body, but the mind and soul also."—Selected.

THIS COLLEGE

is now located in its grand new building, e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond Va. Constructed of iron granite, and gray brick 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the state, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

For thirty years this school has been preparing for young people a practical business life. It teaches Single, Double Entry and Joint-Stock Book-keeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English, &c. Send for catalogue, showing its splendid methods in preparing its students for business, and its success in securing positions for them, and for new building discounts.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers: Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding School than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted a full value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practical School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gleaned From the Teachings
of All Denominations.

One of the surest proofs of friendship is seen in a willingness to sacrifice.—Rev. Harry R. Graves, Baptist, any.

Spiritualism.

No facts on which spiritualism is based are revealed to us in holy Scripture.—Bishop Moreland of Sacramento.

Life.

Life is still real and earnest. New possibilities of life are revealed to us in this world.—Rev. H. I. South, Presbyterian, Auburn, N. Y.

More Brotherliness Needed.

What we greatly need in this world is to mellow up our hearts by more love for each other, more brotherliness, more Christlikeness.—Rev. Dr. Neilus H. Patton, Congregational, Louis.

Prove All Things.

Let the name of the great and eleventh let us wake up and try to be ourselves. Let us prove all things, holding nothing too sacred for our testing and hold fast only the good.—Rev. B. Fay Mills, Evangelist, Boston.

Better to Return to the Beginning.

When a man gets to where he is sinking constantly of besting his fellow man and making a fortune, he had better go back to the beginning. He's in the plains.—Rev. Dr. Frederic B. Myer, Congregational, Madison.

The Religion Needed.

The unhappiness in men's lives demonstrates the necessity of religion, not religion of dogma, but the religion of childlike faith, the religion which Christ taught and lived.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregational, New York.

Lesson Taught by the Lily.

What the lily does under the blind duct of natural forces we can do under the direction of a pure and simple religion. The lily tells us how to reach the highest success and shows that it can be done by itself doing.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregational, New York.

Conscience.

Conscience is the alarm clock of our everyday life. If we neglect to obey conscience, in time it fails to affect us just as when we at first refuse to heed the alarm in the morning. After while we do not hear the clock and experience delays and sustain losses of consequence.—Rev. Dr. Cortland Myers, Baptist, Brooklyn.

Men That Are Needed.

We want men who realize that their opportunities are greater now than ever before and their responsibilities greater than in any past generation and so, with grateful hearts and souls filled with heroic purpose, will devote themselves undimly to the duties of the present hour.—Rev. E. Simon, Lutheran, Denver.

Working Out Salvation.

A man's salvation is wrought out as an artist works out a picture. Just as the crystal is transparent and lets the light flash through its close, flinty body until it is a gem of light, so with the Christian. But remember it is Christ that works in you to will and to do his good pleasure.—Rev. James McFarland, Hyde Park Church, Denver.

Power of Silence.

We often speak when we ought to keep silence and are silent when we ought to speak. Here, as everywhere, Jesus is our perfect example. That flawless and majestic character rises solitary over a noisy and brawling age, hushes our clamor and makes us to know the divine power of silence.—Rev. Alfred E. Myers, Marble Collegiate Church, New York.

Moneyed Men's Interest In Churches.

Why do moneyed men hold by the churches? I will tell you. The human mind is a curiously complex machine, and one of its mainsprings is fear. It exists in every animal, from the lowest to the human, and we need not be ashamed of it. This fundamental principle of the human mind is the basis of moneyed men's interest in the church.—Dr. Arthur Houghton, Spiritualist, Chicago.

Valued For Our Appearance.

Men and women are valued everywhere, not for what they are, not for what they do, not for what they are worth, but for whatever of appearance they make in the society of the world. Character is lost beneath the glitter of gold, the sparkle of stone, the rattle of silk and the price paid for dinner or the cost of a carriage ride. Labor and character should be the ruling capital of the world.—Rev. H. C. Myers, Denver.

The Second Best.

In one of his shorter poems, entitled "The Second Best," Matthew Arnold speaks of one who falls short of nature's highest attainment by yielding to manifold trivial though useful pursuits. Not only in nature, but likewise in business, in art, in religion, in life, there is a "Second Best." One may be almost in possession of his ideal, but still fail because one thing is lacking.

Ingersoll said: "There may be a God—I don't know. There may be an eternal God, but I don't believe it—I do not know." This he said in the city of Washington a few years ago. Ingersoll was an atheist, not a theorist—simply an agnostic. Agnostic is an adjective and simply means "I do not know." There are wise agnostics and foolish agnostics. It is the custom of foolish agnostics to say, "I don't know, and I know that nobody knows." Ingersoll was a wise agnostic, because he merely said, "I don't know." Many erroneous impressions were abroad regarding him. Take the correct reports of his addresses, and you will find the foolish mingled with the sublime.

A NEW POEM BY KIPLING.

The following stanzas are part of a new poem by Rudyard Kipling which will appear in the next number of McClure's Magazine. They are taken to be specially apropos of the Transvaal crisis:

All we have of freedom—all we used to know—
This our fathers bought us long and long ago.

Ancient right unnoticed as the breath we draw—
Leave to die by no man's leave, underneath the law.

So they bought us freedom—not at little cost—
Wherefore must we watch the King, lest our gain be lost.

Over all things certain, this is sure, indeed,
Suffer not the old King, for we know the breed.

Howso great their clamor, whatso'er their claim,
Suffer not the old King under any name.

Here is naught unproven, here is naught to learn;
It is written what shall fall if the King return.

Cruel in the shadow, crafty in the sun,
Far beyond his border shall his teaching run.

Sloven, sullen, savage, secret, uncontrolled—
Laying on a new land evil of the old.

Here is naught unproven—here is nothing hid;
Step for step and word for word—so the old Kings did.

Step by step and word by word; who is ruled may read.
Suffer not the old Kings—for we know the breed—

All the right they promise—all the wrong they bring,
Stewards of the Judgment, suffer not this King.

Editorial.

DR. COKE SMITH BETTER.

Dr. A. Coke Smith has greatly improved, and on last Friday looked better than for a year. He fully expected to preach next Sunday at Court-Street, and to take up his work regularly thereafter. Some say that the decision of Court-Street Quarterly Conference to build a new Church was one of the tonic elements, which have cured him.

DR. BROWN WORSE.

Dr. Brown has had another elapse, and while the acute symptoms have disappeared, he is much weaker than before. As the session of the Conference draws near, we begin to realize more keenly what it will mean not to have Dr. Sledd, the chairman of the Mission Board, and Dr. Brown, the chairman of the Joint Board, present to direct the work as for so many years.

KENTUCKY CONFERENCE ACTION.

THE Kentucky Conference, Bishop Jos. S. Key, presiding, passed a resolution calling for the resignation of Barbee and Smith "because of the opprobrium" brought upon the Church by their conduct in procuring the $288,000 from the United States Government.

South-West Missouri reaffirmed the resolutions of last year, in which they called for the resignation of Barbee and Smith.

SWINGING 'ROUND THE CIRCLE.

Acting presiding elder is new work to the editor, but at the request of Bro. Riddick, who was detained at home to perform the marriage ceremony of his daughter. I started for Halifax, via Lynchburg, to preach at the Quarterly Meetings on the South of Dan and Hyco circuits. Friday night I spent in Lynchburg, and on Saturday I went out to the Woman's College. It is always a pleasure to walk about the grounds and go through the spacious halls of this our still surprisingly new institution. Our people have not yet gotten used to the fact that the Church owns a College for women, the only one in all the South land, with suitable building equipment, and an endowment of $100,000. And yet it is there, and it is ours, and will be more and more a pride to our people and power in our Church. Already the capacity of the building has been overtaken, and improvements and additions are the order of the day. The macadamized road from Lynchburg has already reached the College, and the great mud-hole, right at the gate, in which the horses struggled and strained, has been filled up. On alighting from the car, the eye is struck at once by two massive ornamented columns, which indicate that the new gateway, given by the Class of '99 as a Twentieth Century Thank-Offering, is in course of erection. It will evidently be in keeping with the character of the grounds and building, and will render more striking the approach thereto. Within the grounds the improvements begin at once. A few feet from the gate, the walk to the building is crossed by a path which runs all around the front of the building, just skirting the brow of the hill, and after running around the eastern wing, and following several terraces down the steep ravine, returns to the broad walk, which extends the whole length of the building. Leaving that at the western end of the front, it follows the new wing and then curves around until it reaches a rustic bridge which has been built over the deep ravine on the west. On the bridge are benches which will give a walk of nearly a mile, and by its windings and curves, brings one from one pleasing prospect to another. At different points rustic chairs and benches give convenient places to rest. The walk is to be made even more attractive by dividing it into sections, and erecting tablets to commemorate great men and events, thus making an "Historical Walk." Later on, as it is possible to do so, the tablets will give place to busts and statues of the great and noble of the past.

But I referred to the "new wing." Yes, the new wing is a fact. It is five full stories high, and by its erection the original design of the architect has been carried out. It adds new lecture-rooms, a reading-room, rooms for professors and additional dormitory accommodations. It will be ready for occupancy about Oct 15th, and already nearly two-thirds of the rooms have been engaged. There will after that date be room enough to accommodate the applications which may naturally be expected the present year, but if the future is to be judged by the past, it is likely to be crowded next year.

The new professors are in place, and from all I could learn, seem to be giving satisfaction. As always in the past, it was a great pleasure to meet the B. F. I. girls who had come to the College to carry on their work.

Back to Lynchburg to dine with Bro. Christian, who is certainly an exception to the rule of a "prophet not without honor save in his own country." He is a Hill City boy, and his pastorate at Centenary has been his most successful one. He has had the training of Randolph-Macon and Vanderbilt, but there is nothing of the pedant or martinet about him. He believes in a practical religion, which helps to care for the lambs and the sheep by fighting the wolves. He and Dr. Coke Smith, and other Christian leaders, had been out at the Fair Grounds the day before and had appeared in court to secure the conviction of the gamblers and swindlers generally, who had been running "wide open." They convicted them, too. Whenever intelligent, law-abiding Christian people turn out in force and show that they are in earnest they carry the day. But "eternal vigilance is the price of safety," and they so easily fall back and let things take their course.

Speaking of Dr. Coke Smith's presence, I might say he is no elsewhere, that his health has greatly improved. I had the pleasure of half an hour with him. I had not seen him since last April, when he addressed the Epworth League Convention, at Blackstone. It was a pleasant surprise to find him looking so well. He seems to be in better health than at any time during the past year, and says that he feels better than for eighteen months or two years past. Speaking to him about the discouraging reports of his physical condition, I was greatly pleased to hear him say that he had been carefully examined by three physicians, and that all of them had said that he had no organic trouble. He said that he expected to preach next Sunday morning and continue with his work at the conference. This will be of immense benefit to the church. The new church to be built at Court-Street. The minimum of cost is to be $10,000. It is thought that the committee will recommend that both Church and parsonage be taken down and that a small strip of land on the back be bought from the city, and that a modern Church and lecture-room be built, opening into each other. If there is not sufficient room left, a lot will be bought elsewhere for the new parsonage. It is a source of no little joy to Dr. Smith that this decision has been reached before the end of his pastorate. Court-Street is a great Church—great in its resources, and therefore equally great in its responsibilities.

SOUTH OF DAN.

On Saturday afternoon I left Lynchburg, via L. & D., for South Boston. A sudden drop in the temperature made a fire very comfortable, and when I got off at South Boston, at 8 p. m., and found a keen north-west wind and a drive of ten miles ahead of me, I was truly glad that I had brought my overcoat with me. Bro. Emmett Crowder, of Cedar Grove Church, was on hand to meet me with a good horse and comfortable buggy, and with a cheerful face and a pleasant voice, despite the upper left at home and the hour's wait for the delayed train. We soon made the ten miles to the hospitable home of his mother, who gave us a warm fire and plenty to eat. Bro. Carson was also there, and after supper, the pleasant fire-side talk soon stretched on to the midnight hour.

The next morning Bro. Carson drove me to Cedar Grove, about half-mile away. I was very pleased to find a large and active country Sunday-School at work. Col. W. J. Clark has been the superintendent for forty years. Bro. S. L. Adams, of Alton, had come over that morning, and Bro. Clark had put him in to lead the school that day. Preachers exchange sometimes. It might help superintendents to do the same.

I had never preached or even visited before in Halifax county, and I wish to express my pleasure at what I saw and heard. The South of Dan circuit has been steadily advancing under the leadership of Bro. A. L. Carson. The membership has grown, the Churches have been improved and the average contributions per member has nearly doubled. Sunday-school and Epworth League work is carefully fostered and young leaders are being trained to take up the work of the old leaders pass away.

The house was well filled at the service, and I do not think I ever spoke to more attentive hearers. They have been well trained, and the consequence was that I preached the longest sermon I ever preached. At the close of the sermon, which was on Christian Education, the Twentieth Century

Thank-Offering was presented, and the congregation manifested much interest. Bro. Carson made the start himself for $25, and more if possible, and stated his purpose to take up the cause and press it privately, with vigor and to a successful issue. When the names are entered on the South of Dan roll-book I believe the average will be more than the call of the Church.

At Cedar Grove, Bro. Carson took me to Cherry Hill, on the Hyco circuit. We did not have time to go to any house for dinner, but Miss Eloise Crawley had filled a box with a luncheon that gave an ample meal in the buggy on the way. Although I had never been there, I felt that I knew some of the people. John Bruce, our missionary to Brazil, is from this circuit; also Bro. W. R. Crowder, and Dr. Ragland, of Randolph-Macon. It was a real pleasure to preach, both Sunday afternoon and Monday morning. On both of these circuits I found the brethren deeply regretful that the time had come for the departure of Bro. Riddick from the district. He is greatly beloved and his spiritual sermons have been much enjoyed. They all wish him a hearty blessing, wherever his lot may be cast.

SOUTH BOSTON.

As the sunset glow was beginning to fade, we started for South Boston, and arrived there in time to rest a little before the night service. Bro. Edwards and myself had been associated, during his pastorate at Boynton, in an educational campaign through the southern part of the district, and we had learned to know each other well. I had not, however, had the pleasure of stopping in his home before, and I truly enjoyed it. Sister Edwards knows how to take care of folks, as the happy, contented face of Bro Edwards plainly shows, and she certainly took good care of me. After her thoughtful attention I went into the pulpit feeling able to preach another hour, and so I did—and something over—to a large and inspiring congregation. An announcement was made for a Thank-Offering meeting on Monday night, and Dr. Smith was telegraphed to come. He did so, and spoke strongly. At the close of the address cards were distributed through the congregation, and Bro. Edwards will push the canvass personally. As our preachers are doing everywhere, he led off, by giving $70, one-tenth of his salary for the present year.

CHERRY HILL AGAIN.

On Tuesday morning we started back to Cherry Hill. Brother Parham was there, and a goodly number of his people. The Hyco circuit is also improving and Bro. Parham is working faithfully and is loved by his people. A Thank-Offering meeting had been announced, and after devotional exercises Dr. Smith spoke. I am inclined to think it was the best address I have heard him make on the subject. The people were much interested, and the pastor and the secretary of the board wished that all the circuit had been there. At the close of the address, I followed with an exhortation and called on the brethren to testify. Bro. Parham arose, pledged himself $25, and urged us to get all the responses we could. The cards were passed around, one being given to everybody in the Church. They were then collected and it was found that $160 had been subscribed. Of this amount the greater part was subscribed by the ladies, the young ladies taking the lead—a number of them giving $5 a piece. One lady, after subscribing, went to tell others and induced them to do likewise. The congregation was not large, and the service comparatively a weak one, but with only Cherry Hill well represented, and a few from Shady Grove, over one-half of the minimum assessed was pledged. A proportionate response throughout the Church will result in a great spiritual uplift, as well as a great educational advance.

We could not wait for the dinner and to hear Bro. Edwards' address in the afternoon, but having been supplied with a bundle of chicken, ham, pie, cake, pickles, etc., we started to catch the train at South Boston. Dr. Smith ate and I drove, and we managed to get in three minutes ahead of train time. I got on the train with a homely looking parcel. Dr. Smith says that he frequently does not know what he is eating, and I can now believe it. He ate up about all there was, and wrapped up the remains of the chicken and ham in the soft batter of a lemon pie.

BURKEVILLE.

I reached Burkeville on time, and having nearly two hours, went out to see the improvements. Burkeville has a new factory. It is to manufacture bridges, wagons, etc., and it is said to have a capital of $20,000, and it will employ from 25 to 40 men. This is expected to be quite a help to the place.

But the improvement which is of most interest to the Methodist reader, especially the preacher, is the new parsonage. It is right next to the Church, on a lot costing $175, which lot has been paid for. The house will cost about $1,250. It has a good elevation, six rooms and a kitchen, front and back porches, and will be a joy and a comfort to many an itinerant and his family. Bro. Berger, with whom I talked at length, says that Bro. Baughn is the hardest worker he ever saw, and that this great blessing of a preacher's home is due entirely to his patient and persistent efforts. He has certainly done a great thing for the Burkeville circuit.

But the train has come and I must get aboard for the last step back home. Soon Crewe and Nottoway are past, the lights of the Institute shine out in the darkness, and a pleasant swing around the circle is ended.

JAMES CANNON, JR.

INVITED TO NASHVILLE.

Rev. Dr. W. J. Young has received a pressing invitation to visit Nashville, Tenn., this Fall to preach and conduct a meeting at the West End Church, near Vanderbilt University, in that city. This is the Church where the theological students stately worship. The pastor and official board leave it with Dr. Young to select his own time as to when he will begin the meeting. He has not yet decided whether he will accept the invitation.

JOSEPH RABINOWITZ, OF KISCHINOW, NEW RUSSIA.

One more faithful witness gone from earth to be forever with the Lord. No greater loss than this could have befallen the Jewish mission, for there seems no one to take his place in East Europe. Joseph Rabinowitz passed peacefully away on May 17th, at 1 o'clock in the morning.

The name of Rabinowitz was perhaps especially widely known among Jews in Russia, for his position and testimony were unique. He was brought up in Kischinew, adopted the profession of law, and became a man of eminence and commanding influence among his own community as a scholar, a philanthropist, and a lover of his nation. He became also a remarkable Hebraist and a painstaking student of the Scriptures, and of Jewish literature. He seemed to live in the soul of the Hebrew language. He interested himself in all matters affecting the well-being of his own community, was instrumental in founding Jewish schools in his city, and was beyond reproach among his Hebrew brethren as a noble and respected member of the Synagog. During the time of the persecution of the Jews in South Russia, in 1882, Rabinowitz became the zealous advocate with his compatriots of the repopulation of the Holy Land. In order to discover ways and means for this he set out himself for Palestine, and from the time of his return there commenced a complete revolution of his religious convictions. Before starting on this journey he equipped himself with a number of books, among which was a copy of the New Testament. While walking about Zion and gazing upon its historic sites, he carried this treasure in his pocket unopened. Going one day to the brow of Mount Olives, he sat down on that sacred hill and began to contemplate the city as it lay at his feet. Then came this train of reflection and questioning: "Why this long desolation of the city of David? Why this scattering of my people to the ends of the earth? Why these fresh persecutions breaking forth against my people in almost every country of Europe?" While he pondered over these sad questions he gazed toward the reputed Calvary, where that Holy Prophet of his nation had been crucified. As he did so his eyes were opened. He looked upon Him whom his nation had pierced. In a flash the truth entered his heart: "We have rejected our Messiah! hence our long casting off and dispersion by Jehovah!" He believed; he cried out to Jesus: "My Lord and my God!" and, almost as suddenly as Saul to Tarsus, Joseph Rabinowitz, from being a Hebrew of the Hebrews, had become an Israelite of the New Covenant, a disciple to Jesus of Nazareth. He took out his New Testament, a guide-book in a sense undreamed of, and read the first passage that fell under his eye: "I am the vine, ye are the branches * * * WITHOUT ME YE CAN DO NOTHING." "I saw in the twinkling of an eye," said he, "That our Jewish bankers with their millions of gold, can do nothing for us; our scholars and statesmen, with all their wisdom, can do nothing for us; our colonization societies, with all their influence and capital, can do nothing for us; our only hope is in our brother, Jesus, whom we crucified, and whom God raised up and set at His own right hand. WITHOUT HIM WE CAN DO NOTHING."

Thus he became converted to Christ. And his conversion was remarkable, first of all, that it was not produced by the influence of any Christian missionaries, but by force of circumstances and of the Holy Spirit on the written Word. Second, that it was a man of note and influence, and of undoubted honesty, who transferred all that influence at once to the cause of his newly-found Lord, making his watchword, "Our Brother Jesus." His testimony of faith was made openly, and, as one would expect, became the signal for persecution from every quarter. The Jewish press generally anathematized him; they of his own household became his foes. But he joyfully and boldly maintained his testimony, preaching with much power and eloquence, till little by little the enmity was softened, and one after another of his own family joined him in confession of Christ. In 1885, he was baptized by Professor Meade, of Andover, Massachusetts, resident in Berlin. It was arranged that he should be held free from all official connection with any organization, that his testimony might be more powerful and acceptable to his brethren in Russia.

The work of Mr. Rabinowitz in Kischinew may not be striking in itself, but it has been much further reaching than the limits of Somerville Hall, his preaching chapel. The name and the testimony of Rabinowitz are well known among the Jews in Russia, fresh faces are to be seen in the hall every Sabbath, and the printed sermons and tracts are widely circulated. The last booklet by Mr. Rabinowitz is entitled "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews."

Spiritually and mentally, Rabinowitz was a remarkable man. His love to the Lord was intense. "To us," said he at table, "Jesus Christ is a reality. He is not a creed, a form, a religion. He is our King, our all. We must not live or work for men, we must seek only to please Him." He dwelt much in conversation upon the passage, "that through patience and comfort in the Scriptures we might have hope." "To have patience in our life in the world," he said, "we must derive our comfort from the Scriptures, and both working together give us hope." His illustration of the lost wheel to the carriage, which was sought for in front, not behind, setting forth how the Jewish nation is seeking for a Messiah still to come, instead of going back to Him who has come, and the loss of whom to the nation has caused them such a painful history, is well known. Another equally forceful picture of the Jewish nation's suffering is that of the internally wounded man. The doctor passes his hand over the body, he presses the arm, the chest, but the patient makes no complaint, till at last he touches a spot which makes the sick man cry with pain. "I speak to my people," says Rabinowitz, "of their fanatic adherence to the Talmud, I show them their love of Mammon and the world; they raise no objection, they agree these things are so; but when I mention the name of Jesus Christ, lo! they shrink with horror. There—there, in their rejection of Him—is the cause Israel's pain."—The Jewish Missionary.

Now that the beloved man of God has been called away from earth, his own personal ministry finished, it is well to reflect on the significance of that form of testimony to Israel that was associated with his name.

When the London Rabinowitz Council was first formed in 1887 to supply Mr. Rabinowitz not only with material means, but with sympathy and counsel, Dr. Saphir wrote:

"The importance of the movement in South Russia must be estimated, not by its numerical strength, but by its intrinsic character. It must be viewed in connection with the present condition of the Jewish nation, and in the light of the Prophetic Word. A crisis is evidently approaching. Talmudism and the attempt to modernize Judaism, and to reduce it to rational Deism, have both failed and proved themselves to be without vitality, and yet the national consciousness has been roused and strengthened by the recent experiences of the antisemitic movement. The Jewish mission has been abundantly blessed, to a greater extent than is generally believed, not merely in numerous conversions, but in spreading the knowledge of Scriptural and vital Christianity among the Jews, and circulating the New Testament. But in our missionary efforts among the Jews we have dwelt almost exclusively on the conversion of individuals, who found a spiritual home in Christian churches. The consequence of this has been that we have not impressed sufficiently on the Jews that the Gospel does not come to them, so to speak, AB EXTRA; that the question, 'Is Jesus the Messiah and Lord?' is not so much a question between the Christian church and the Jews as in the first instance a JEWISH question; and the prevalent feeling among the Jews is that to become a Christian is to become as it were a Gentile. It seems to them like being broken off their old tree and grafted into another tree.

"It appears, therefore, as an indication—a foreshadowing of a national movement—when we hear of Jews (however few in number) who have come to the conclusion that their dispersion and condition during the last eighteen centuries is the consequence of their rejection of Jesus—that Jesus is the promised Messiah, Son of David, and King of Israel; that the writings of evangelists and apostles are the continuation of the Divine Record entrusted to the Fathers; that salvation is by grace and righteousness—not by the works of the law, but by faith in the crucified and risen Redeemer.

"We must regard it as the Lord's doing, and an answer to our prayer, to see Israelites to call themselves Israelites of the New Covenant, and to hear the Gospel proclaimed in Hebrew by Jews, who, in the spirit of Zechariah, Mary, and aged Simeon, bless the Lord God of Israel, who has visited and redeemed His people, and raised up a horn of salvation in the house of His servant David; and, in the spirit and very words of the Apostle Peter, declare unto their brethren: 'Unto you first God having raised up His Son Jesus, sent Him to bless you.'"

About the same time, Professor Delitzsch, in his "New Documents of the South Russian Movement," expressed himself thus:

"Rabinowitz seems to us a Church historical phenomenon, which revives our hope of Israel's ultimate conversion to their Messiah. His sermons, which mostly treat an Old and New Testament passage, taken in conjunction, suggest most important thoughts. His declaration of Christianity is almost throughout the immediate echo of the New Testament scripture from a Jewish heart. Tho' not unacquainted with the dogmatic confessions of Christian churches, his type of teaching is Jewish-Christian, and his whole mode of viewing and expressing truth is original, being drawn directly from the apostolic Word with individual freshness.

The movement at Kischinew is certainly a prelude to the end. No doubt the final conversion of the nation will be preceded by such testimony proceeding from individuals raised up by God and filled with His Spirit. Voices will be heard in Israel calling to repentance, to a return to God and His Anointed (Hos. vi. 1-3, iii. 5); many shall awake to new life, and from that portion of Israel to which blindness is happened a Jewish-Christian congregation will be gathered. The religion of the Messiah will then prove the Divine power which penetrates the spiritual and social life of the nation.

"Joseph Rabinowitz is a star in the firmament of the people's history. God keep this star in the right path and continue its light in truth and brightness! One thing is certain, the history of the Church cannot reach its consummation until the prophetic and apostolic Word predicting the conversion of the remnant of Israel is fulfilled, an event which will bring an abundance of spiritual powers and gifts for the revival of the whole world.—Missionary Review.

The cost of Solomon's Temple has been estimated by an eminent old Testament student to exceed $5,000,000,000. In the first place, the value of the materials in the rough is estimated at $12,500,000,000, and the labor at $3,000,000,000. The vessels of gold were valued at $2,326,481,015; the vessels of silver at $3,231,715,000; the vestments of the priests and the robes of the singers at $10,950,000 and the trumpets of gold at $1,000,000.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, Our pastor, Rev. E. V. Carson, who has so faithfully served us for four years, will have to be sent to another field of labor after this Conference year, therefore,

RESOLVED, That his four years of service on Amelia circuit has resulted in a marvelous upbuilding of the charge; that every interest of the Church has prospered in his hands, and that he will leave the charge in better condition materially and spiritually than it has been for many years.

2. That we commend Bro. Carson most heartily to those to whom he may be sent, and pray that his ministry may be always and everywhere crowned with the same success it has been on the Amelia circuit, and that he may at last receive a crown of righteousness as the reward of his labors.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the R. C. Advocate, and the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER for publication.

R. E. BRIDGEFORTH, Sec'y.

These resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Fourth Quarterly Conference of Amelia circuit.

—o—

Whereas, By the law of the Church, our faithful, much-beloved P. E., Rev. J. H. Riddick, cannot be returned to us after this Conference year, therefore,

RESOLVED, By the Quarterly Conference of Amelia circuit, that his upright walk and conversation, his consecrated life, his deeply spiritual sermons, and his kind and courteous manner to all while in the Chair will be to us a benediction and sweet savor throughout all the years to come.

2, That we heartily commend him to those among whom his lot may be cast, and though our hearts are sad at the parting, our prayers will follow him wherever he may be sent.

3, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the R. C. Advocate, and the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER for publication.

R. E. BRIDGEFORTH, Sec'y.

These resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Fourth Quarterly Conference of Amelia circuit.

RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE.

The readers of the RECORDER will be gratified to learn that the 68th session of Randolph Macon College opened with more students this year than it has had for eight years.

The students have settled down to work, and College matters are quietly progressing. It is safe to say that a better average set of students never before matriculated.

The new president, Dr. Starr, owing to previous engagements, has been at the College but little yet, but he has already ingratiated himself with the students, and will more fully do so after he gets down to work regularly. His family have taken up their residence in Ashland. He is very hopeful of securing larger patronage for the College, and increased endowment.

Dr. W. E. Edwards, who succeeded to the chair of Dr. J. A. Kern, has settled down to work, and has a large class. New seats are demanded in his room, and also in several other rooms.

The friends of the College are in good spirits and predict great things for it the coming year.

The I. N. Van Han Memorial Aid and Loan Fund has enabled quite a number of worthy young men to take their places at the College. This will doubtless prove a blessing to hundreds of deserving men, who will rise up and call the founder of the Fund blessed.

Only the interest of this Fund is usable and therefore the principal, which is invested in bonds and mortgages, will remain untouched.

We congratulate the B. F. I. on its great and continued success.

TWENTIETH CENTURY CANVASS.

LYNCHBURG, VA., Sept. 30, 1899.

ED. RECORDER—Dear Bro: Please announce to Preachers in Charge that I shall be glad to assist, by addresses and otherwise, so far as I may, any who are in position to begin their canvass for the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering before Conference. This is in harmony with the spirit of circular No 3, recently issued.

WM. W. SMITH.

SUSPENDED FROM MINISTRY.

From Greensboro, N. C., it is learned that the committee in charge of the investigation in the case of immorality charged against Rev. J. W. Lee, known as the Irish Evangelist, made their report on Sept. 28. They found him guilty of one of the charges, untruthfulness, and suspended him from preaching until the Quarterly Conference.—Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

THE POOR RICH PEOPLE.

How they do need our sympathy, the poor rich people. No class of persons are less satisfied nor more helplessly deceived than the rich of this world. It is the poor, and with but few exceptions only the poor, who have the Gospel preached unto them. How few people have the courage to deal honestly with the wealthy by faithfully warning them of the dangers to which their souls are continually exposed. How few trumpet tones come sounding from the watchman's tower against "the root of all evil." How seldom does the arm of the man of God strike through the breastplate of gold! In the humble cot of poverty the pastor feels free to read from the sacred Book, and to lift his voice in prayer; but it is far easier to kneel upon a puncheon floor than upon a Brussels carpet. The coachman has more opportunities to hear the plain truth concerning his responsibility to God than do any of the children of the children of worldly fortune whom he serves. The poor blacksmith or lowly-minded carpenter is approached far more easily, and hence more readily, by the Christian worker than is the rich lawyer, banker or merchant prince. The chances are, first, that the rich will not have the pure Gospel; and second, should they have it, they will shrink from the cost of discipleship and purchase a cheap counterfeit religion as a substitute for genuine Bible salvation which is freely offered to all. May God pity the poor rich people who vainly imagine they are "increased in goods" and know not they are poor and wretched, naked and vile. Again I say, God pity them. Who would envy them their few worldly pleasures so soon to be exchanged for the walls and tortures of the damned? How soon will the mould of their mother's garments witness against them and set up their flesh a fire, and will the cry of the poor who have reaped death upon them the righteous wrath of a justly offended God. God help us to deal lovingly and faithfully with the poor rich people, for they are the neglected class.—R. O. SMITH Evangelist, in "Zion's Outlook."

Many a man who would not for any money go into the kitchen at 7 o'clock in the morning and say to the cook: "Do you know it is half past 7 o'clock? Well, it is, and more—it's just 35 minutes past 7—and my train goes in 25 minutes!" will quietly and in cold blood put the clock up to telling this lie for him. This isn't fair to the clock. It is bad enough when a man, or even a woman, in a sudden gust of anger swears at a tramp or peddler or irritating caller with a slamming door or a banging window. That is done in a quick frenzy of temper and has sometimes the excuse of great provocation. But lying by the clock is always done with calm deliberation and malice aforethought, and it is persevered in day by day. It's too mean on the clock. Vocal as the big clock at Dr. Blimber's, speaking to poor little Paul, these martyred clocks should sit heavy on the conscience of the teacher, saying all day long in staccato tones: "My, mas, ter, makes me, lie. My, mas, ter, makes me, lie."—Robert J. Burdette in Ladies' Home Journal For August.

ISLANDS OF THE SEA.

Suva, Viti.—News comes that at the first stations of the Rhenish Mission, where the work is practically altogether among Mohammedans, there is spiritual blessing in great measure. The total of baptisms from Islam at the stations in 1897 was 69; while during the first half of 1898 already 97 were reported. In Bungabondar, Rev. M. Schutz has led a successful battle against Mohammedanism for the last thirty years. He has met with strong opposition and can now rejoice over Christian Church of nearly 2,000 members. Eight entire families of Mohammedans were baptized at an outdoor last year, and another family who had fallen away returned to Christ. The work among the Battak people by the Rhenish society has been marvelous blessed. There are now 19 mission stations, 22 European missionaries, and about 100 native workers, of whom about 100 are paid. The Church members number 21,779. Dr. Schreiber, secretary of the society, says, "I do not know of any other part of the mission field, with the exception of some parts of Java, where such large numbers of Mohammedans have been won for Christ as among the Battaks of Sumatra."

Philippines.—At least two of our Churches have actually opened work on these Islands. In Manila the Presbyterians have rented a small room for services, and contemplate opening a medical dispensary. Preaching services have begun, Rev. J. B. Rogers in charge, and Filipinos attend in fair numbers. Churches at home have contributed so far expressly $10,000 for the Philippine work. The first Episcopal work was organized in Manila on Dedication Day. A church house has been established. It is a two-story building opposite the main barracks in Malate. There is a medical dispensary and a class in English instruction. The lower floor, which will seat 100, has been fitted as a church. Lumber is $60 a thousand, and so dry goods boxes of finished material for altar. There are about 50 Episcopal and Church of England families in Manila, and 2 Chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew have been organized, one in the Fourth and the other in the Fifth Artillery. Some Christian Alliance workers are in the field, and the Salvation Army has sent from England men and women to organize an army post to work among the natives, intending to transfer them to American allegiance after peace is declared.

Hitherto we, in America, have occupied the position of outside critics of nations dealing with the opium evil. Now, however, we must deal with it directly ourselves, for it comes to us as one of the many troublesome questions involved in the possession of the Philippines. The collector of customs in Manila states that the habit of the Spanish was to sell the monopoly of the importation of opium. The last concessionaire under Spanish rule paid $650,000 for this privilege for a period of three years. This indicates the enormity of this evil, even in the Philippines.—The Missionary.

New Hebrides.—For fifty years our missionaries have labored in the New Hebrides, and the first single woman missionary has just gone to that field. She will assist Dr. and Mrs. Annand in their training institution on Tanna. She is supported partly by the women in Canada, and partly by the women in Australia. Her bright, cheery picture with a bright, cheery letter, giving her "first impressions" to a girl friend, is in a recent issue of the Australian Presbyterian, and signed "Daisy Symonds," to which others add B. A. In stating the above we do not forget the splendid service of the daughters in some of our mission families, Geddies, Mackenzies, Robertsons.—Presbyterian Review.

Rev. John C. Paton's reports for the past year tell of 1,102 South Sea Islanders won from cannibalism to Christianity, 1 missionary alone receiving 200 adults into church membership. A translation of the New Testament into another of the Island languages has been finished by Mr. Patton, and will soon be issued.

THE MAN WHO DRINKS.

In the Race of Life the Abstainer Beats Him Every Time.

The business world recognizes that no man who drinks is as good as he would be if he never drank. Time was when in certain lines of business it was considered necessary to drink. Quite the contrary is the case now. Even saloon men prefer barkeepers who do not drink the liquids they sell.

All the fairy tales about the great things people do when under the influence of liquor have been exploded. The orator who must be intoxicated in order to make a speech is no longer here, and he has never been here. The lawyer who cannot plead a case or cite an authority without spending the night before in a barroom has gone to visit the pale glimpses of the moon, and he has always been gone. The writer who produces a great poem or a great essay while maudlin was removed from this planet before the command, "Let there be light," was given.

The bookkeeper, clerk, mechanic, salesman, artisan, young or old, is not at his best while he is under the influence of liquor, and he is not as valuable to himself, his employer or society. In the race of life the temperate man has the best of it. The drinking man is handicapped. Great things have been done while the brain was excited by stimulants, but greater things would have been done had there been no artificial stimulation. The sober man is always an improvement on the drunken man.—Memphis Commercial-Appeal.

No Drinking Man Employed.

Some years ago a large manufacturing firm suspended, due to the bad management of a moderate drinking president. Since then they have started again and have become very prosperous. One of the rigid rules is no drinking man shall be employed in any capacity.

Every year this fear of drinking men is increasing, and every year capital is demanding that total abstainers only should be employed.

In this there is no sentiment or theory, only cold, hard experience, which brings only one conclusion, repeated over and over again—namely, that moderate drinking men are dangerous, untrustworthy and unreliable.—Journal of Inebriety.

LAW FOR INEBRIATES.

How Some of the States Provide For Drunkards.

Since inebriety has been recognized officially by some states as a disease laws have been passed for the treatment or care of inebriates. In a few states the law provides that they may be committed to the hospitals for the insane. In Vermont they may be placed in such institutions or in private institutions for the cure of drunkenness. Massachusetts has a state institution for the treatment of such cases. Pennsylvania authorizes the counties to establish hospitals in connection with the workhouses and to commit all inebriates for a course of treatment of from six months to two years, the indigents at the expense of the county.

In Michigan and Wisconsin indigent inebriates are committed at public expense to some private asylum, the commitment in the former state being for not more than 30 days and the cost of treatment in the latter not to exceed $130.

In Louisiana the judge of the district court, upon the application of the relatives of an indigent drunkard who has lost the power of "reasonable self control," may commit him at the expense of the parish to some institution for treatment, provided that it will agree to cure the inebriate at a cost not to exceed $100. California has authorized certain counties holding lands reserved for the purpose to build hospitals for the inebriate. Minnesota has provided for the commitment of drunkards to a special department of the State Hospital For the Insane and also authorizes the county judge to commit drunkards to such a special department at a cost not to exceed $100.—New York Press.

ANTIDOTE FOR LIQUOR.

Fresh Fruit Overcomes the Desire For Strong Drink.

A writer in a European temperance journal calls attention to the value of fruit as an antidote to the craving for liquor. He says: "In Germany, a nation greatly in advance of other countries in matters relating to hygiene, alcoholic disease has been successfully coped with by the adoption of pure diet and natural curative agencies. I have said that the use of fresh fruit is an antidote for the drink crave, and this is true. I have met men who have told me that fruit has often taken away the craving for drink. It may be asked, How can fruit and pure diet do all this? The explanation is simple.

"Fruit may be called nature's medicine. Every apple, every orange, every plum and every grape is a bottle of medicine. An orange is three parts water—distilled in nature's laboratory—but this water is rich in peculiar fruit acids medicinally balanced, which are specially cooling to the thirst of the drunkard and soothing to the diseased state of his stomach. An apple or an orange eaten when the desire for liquor arises would generally take away that desire, and every victory would make less strong each recurring temptation. The function of fresh fruits and succulent vegetables is not so much to provide solid nourishment as to supply the needful acids and salines for the purification of the blood. Once get the blood pure, every time its pure nutrient stream bathes the several tissues of the body it will bring away some impurity and leave behind an atom of healthy tissue until in time the drunkard shall stand up purified and in his right mind."—Christian Work.

rum in Great Britain.

Drunkenness is said to be on the increase in Scotland. Last year there were 5,000 more committals by the courts than the average for the five previous years. In Ireland the number of licensed liquor shops has great-

HERE IS THE PLAN A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideal is: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price."—Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine."—Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its variety and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work."—Bishop E. K. Hendrix.

"A periodical absolutely solitary in the field it occupies. It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart. It ought to find a place as once in every family circle in the land."—Bishop W. A. Candler.

"A gem among the monthlies of our land."—T. Berry Smith, Central College, Fayette, Mo.

W. T. Harris, of Washington, D. C., United States Commissioner of Education, has this to say of a recent number: "It is one of the most remarkable magazine numbers that I have seen for a long time, and I beg leave to enclose two dollars for two regular subscriptions. I congratulate you."

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none."—Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate."—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus."—The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Nathaniel Lucecock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning."—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

"We most heartily commend it to our people as a high-grade periodical, worthy to take its place in every Methodist home."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"It will aim to advocate and magnify the things which world-wide Methodism holds in common, and especially to be a factor in the cultivation of fraternal relations between the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."—Central Christian Advocate.

"The letter press is superb, the illustrations first-class and the reading matter thoroughly instructive, entertaining and edifying."—Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"We welcome it, relish it and recommend it."—Western Christian Advocate.

"It takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."—Western Christian Advocate.

"We cannot but give to the Magazine our best wishes, and hope for its great success."—Texas Christian Advocate.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

ly increased, but a royal commission which investigated the question was unable to determine whether or not drunkenness had increased. In England there has been a large increase in the consumption of beer, but as to drunkenness there are no facts on which to base a conclusion. There has been no improvement apparently, and that is leaving the case in a bad light.

Legislation in the interest of temperance does not seem to meet with much favor. Sir John Austin, a Liberal, who voted in parliament against local option, was called to account by some of his constituents. As a result he resigned and was then re-elected by an increased majority. The opposition of certain temperance advocates seemed to help rather than hurt him.—Philadelphia Press.

SLAVES OF ALCOHOL.

ALARM IN EUROPE OVER GROWTH OF DRUNKENNESS.

France Now the Most Intemperate of Civilized Nations—Physicians Moving For Reform—Temperance Work in Europe.

Publication is being forcibly directed just at present to the aggressive campaign against intemperance which is being carried on in nearly every country on the continent, and especially in France. The advance in this country is unique of its kind, as there never before has been any general movement of a national nature. The French have been wont to look upon themselves as good examples of moderation, while they gave their pity to Germany and England as horrible examples of people who drink too much. But now Dr. Laborde has informed the French that they are the most intemperate of all the civilized peoples on earth and gives science and figures to prove it.

When this announcement was made, the French told the doctor that he was mistaken, and the newspapers published columns of indignant protest against the charge—and investigated as a second thought. Then they changed their confident note, for in a series of articles prepared by M. Cornely of The Figaro it is shown that close to 15 liters, or about 16 quarts, of alcohol are consumed every year for each of the 38,000,000 people in the republic. The French find that, instead of heading the alcoholic list, Germany and the British islands come third and fourth, as Belgium takes second place after France, but with nearly one-third less in its per capita consumption. Fifth in the list is Switzerland, the home of absinth, and then, in the order named, there follow Italy, Holland, the United States, Sweden, Norway and Canada. Norway is the most temperate of any European country. Canada leads the world in its moderation with a per capita average of over two litres a year.

Most reform, of whatever kind, may be counted upon to have a humble beginning, thence to work upward among the people. But this movement reverses the almost established order, for it has started at the summit of intellectual France. Heading the movement is Dr. C. Grain, one of the best medical authorities in France, who is president of the National Antialcoholic league and editor of a temperance monthly, called L'Alcool. His active adjutants are 42 doctors, nearly all of whom are men of wide reputation and independent means, several being total abstainers in common with their president. Under the stimulus from their distinguished leaders, it is not strange that the students throughout France should take up the campaign. They have organized a league and are pushing the work into all parts of the country under the leadership of Georges Barbey, who is an advocate at law actively connected with the defense in the Dreyfus case. To such proportions has this movement reached that it is extending to other countries, notably to Switzerland, where students' leagues have been established at Lausanne, Basel and Zurich.

The evils of absinth drinking are growing. It is only a few years since two old women living in a secluded mountain in Switzerland gave out their secret for brewing a drink of rare quality from wild, but now absinth is known in the world. Nowhere has its sale grown to so threatening proportions as in France, where its excessive use annually drives many to insanity.

Senator Le Jeune of Belgium says: "I have a bill before parliament to gradually decrease the number of public drinking houses throughout the country in the next ten years. At present we have 298,000 of these to a population of but 6,000,000 of people, or one to every 24 persons. My plan is to make the proportion one drinking place to every 200 people, but the proposal is too radical to carry without material amendment."

Some of the continental governments are posting temperance lithographs in public places as a warning to the people on the effects of intemperance, and the temperance societies in France display posters labeled, "Absinth Poison!" with a skull and crossbones.

Not alone are the present French efforts educational, but they are aiming at national legislation as being the only permanent cure. There is a group of temperance legislators in the chamber of deputies and in the senate who are pressing for constitutional relief from the present desperate conditions. Senator Siegfried will shortly present a bill to reduce the number of drinking places in the republic as the beginning of an extensive legislative reform. There are more than half a million of public drinking houses in France, and in some of the departments the consumption of alcohol now amounts to 20 litres per person yearly.

A redeeming feature of French intemperance is that next to no drunkenness is seen upon the streets. Practically everybody drinks, and rich and poor alike take the "little glass," or its multiple, with every meal and between meals. Only among the poorest do they follow the American practice of bracing up against a bar and drinking on an empty stomach. As it is, they may be in a continuous fuddle, but never drunk.

An unexpected indorsement of the temperance movement has developed since the first of the year in the friendly attitude of the socialistic press of France and other countries. These papers, as the organs of the powerful workingmen's societies of the continent, say that they can co-operate with this propaganda as tending to lessen the opportunity to drink, which they plainly say is the workingman's greatest enemy.—New York Sun.

OUR DUTY AS A NATION.

What Will Be the Effect of Our Final and Complete Victory Over Spain?

Many of us deplored the Spanish war, many of us now look forward with anxious solicitude concerning the effect of victory on the victor, but still as we survey the movements of human history in the large we cannot fail to see in all that is occurring the inevitable grist of the mills of the gods and the irrefragable judgments of the Weltgericht. Spain and the middle ages could not tarry in the west. We, on the other hand, could not shut ourselves within the walled gardens of our pleasant domesticity and shun responsibilities that the commerce and intercourse of the larger world exact of those who stand for order and equal justice in the affairs of men.

While, then, we may well be called upon now to readjust our conception of national purpose and duty to the new order and our new position, we dare not be false to ourselves or our past. Our charter and creed we must interpret, if no longer in the letter, then all the more scrupulously in the spirit. However the letter and the form may fade and vanish away, there are some things that must needs abide. A nation proclaiming government of the people and for the people cannot impose on conquered peoples a foreign sway or one that finds its supreme motive in the benefits accruing to others than the governed.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 124; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of a high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted as a fair value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Let us not forget, friends, that all departments of human activity are sacred. Let us drop that word secular in this consideration.—Rev. George W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City.

Treatment of Children.

Treat the boys and girls alike, and heaven will have as many of the one as of the other.—Rev. R. L. Davidson, Baptist, Kansas City.

Elements of Statesmanship.

Righteousness is the first element in statesmanship, capacity is the second, patriotism is the third, and there are no others.—Rev. W. J. Lahmon, Christian Church, Pittsburg.

The World's Only Hope.

Simple faith in Jesus Christ is the world's only hope, and he who dies without this faith dies without hope and without God.—Rev. B. W. Wiseman, Baptist, Kansas City.

Millennial Glory.

The soft hand of Christian charity can wonderfully accelerate the coming of the millennial glory. Nature is too rich for mankind to be mean.—Rev. Dr. R. B. Mansell, Methodist, Pittsburg.

Christ the Perfect Man.

The difference between the mountain trees and the perfect tropical specimens is the difference between crude and sinful men and Christ, who is the perfect type.—Rev. Richard E. Sykes, Universalist, Denver.

Cure For Trouble.

Vital trust, active faith in God, as our father and friend, able and purposing to make all things work together for good, is a sure preventive and perfect cure for trouble.—Rev. Dr. T. C. Carleton, Baptist, St. Louis.

Life as True Men Regard It.

To the true man life is self realization—that is, realization of those deep and divine possibilities which God himself has placed within the human soul.—President William F. Slocum, Episcopalian, Colorado College, Denver.

Too Suspicious.

There is no reason why a Protestant should not be permitted in a Catholic pulpit and preach the truth which he sincerely believes. We are still too suspicious of one another.—Rev. Charles H. Eaton, Universalist, New York.

Beauty and Truth.

As beauty is the expression of man's senses in answer to the appeal of God, so truth is the answer to the address made to man's intellect. As beauty is the complement of the senses, so truth is the complement of the intellect.—Rev. Dr. W. H. Milburn, Methodist, St. Louis.

Opportunity of the Present.

The opportunity of today is immeasurably great, for the country is not to be saved by one bold stroke of strategy or valor, but by the multitude of faithful patriots who make her integrity their daily thought.—Rev. Charles F. Carter, Congregationalist, Lexington, Mass.

Sense of Immortality.

The sense of immortality is as innate as is the sense of cause and effect out of which science rises to higher and higher peaks of knowledge; innate as is the consciousness of the existence of a supreme being, bare of which no tribe has yet been met with.—Rev. M. Jastrow, Hebrew, Philadelphia.

Intimacy With God.

Wonderful is the thought that God and man can come together on terms of intimacy, father and child, the helper and the helpless, and if man wills to have it so make common cause of the varied interests of man's life.—Rev. J. W. Righter, Methodist, Mount Washington, Md.

Function of Education.

It is the function of education to enlarge the sphere of influence of the human conscience. We have a right to demand of the educated man that he shall bring to the discussion of the larger and more complex questions of modern civilization a mind so disciplined as to bring order out of chaos.

Life Made Up of Moments.

As life is made up of moments character is molded in those moments. The thinking and the doing and the spirit of the doing of these humble ministries determine character. Character is the resultant of our everyday thinking and doing. It is with it as with a painting which is perfected touch by touch. It is not a bronze statuary cast in one piece, but marble which grows into form by innumerable strokes.—Rev. Dr. J. D. Rankin, Presbyterian, Denver.

Courage.

Courage is one of the requisites of a free country. Many good and intelligent men fail to become useful because they lack courage to put themselves where they belong. A nation, though great so far as its army, navy and commerce are concerned, might still fail to rise to the height of its opportunities through want of courage to stand for justice and mercy lest it in some way lose some mercenary advantage.—Rev. Harry Blackford, Universalist, Cincinnati.

Labor and the Church.

I believe that the church must help solve the great problems that now confront the American people. A spiritual life consists not only in meditation and prayer, but in bringing spiritual principles to bear upon the community and state. We cannot ignore the fact that under present social conditions it is becoming more and more difficult for the masses to earn a livelihood. The large corporations in this country have been enabled to add greatly to their wealth during the past year. By shrewd business methods they have succeeded in strangling competition and thereby decreasing the number of wageworkers—

DEAD MEN SPEAKING.

D. E. Converse, a large mill owner of Spartansburg, who died a week ago, left one-third of his estate, valued at $500,000, to Converse College, an institution for the higher education of women, founded by him in Spartansburg ten years ago.—Virginian.

"He, being dead, yet speaketh," is what every man should long to have said about him in the same way that it was said by the writer of the epistle to the Hebrews. Is there any better way to ensure this than by following the noble example of Mr. Converse. To strengthen a Christian college so that it can send out hundreds of young women to do better service for humanity is indeed to multiply one's voice an hundred-fold, and speak years after death. Are there not Virginia Methodists who will multiply the usefulness of our schools and colleges by giving them more building and equipments, by establishing scholarships, and loan and endowment funds?

UNCHRISTIAN ILLOGICAL AND ILLEGAL.

"Among the donations already received by the ladies in charge of arrangements for the Catholic Fair, to be held here in November, is a lot at Ocean View, together with the material necessary to erect a cottage thereon. The cottage will be built and the property raffled during the fair."

It is a disgrace that such a statement as the above, taken from the Norfolk Landmark, can be published in reference to anything called Christian. It will probably be said that the money raised from this gambling will be used for the benefit of the Church. This is false, both relatively and absolutely. It is detrimental to the Church of Christ to encourage evil. Christ "was manifested" "to destroy the works of the devil." Gambling is a work of the devil, and raffling is nothing but gambling, spelled differently. It is foolishly illogical to talk about raffling for the benefit of the Church or any Christian work, for raffling is un-Christian.

It is also illegal. The law of the State and of the United States forbids gambling. Churches should be made to keep the law. The courts should show the Church no mercy when the law is deliberately violated. The officers of the Church, or those responsible, should have the severest penalties of the law imposed upon them for carrying on a lottery. If the officers of the law do not arrest the persons, Christian parents who do not wish their children to believe that gambling is right, ought to bring charges and cause the arrest of the gamblers, whether they are men, women, or children, Roman Catholics (as in this case), or any other so-called Christians, who engage in this un-Christian, illogical and illegal practice of raffling.

ORGANIZED DRUNKARD- MAKERS.

Below is given a series of resolutions adopted by the State Liquor Dealers' Association of Virginia. They are published that our readers may see from this the great progress of temperance sentiment by the activity of the Drunkard-makers to protect themselves. Why have they organized? Because they are so odious to the best people in the State, because even many who buy of them have no respect for them, because every true mother looks upon them with horror. The force of public opinion is so great that they have banded themselves together that by calling each other fine names they may have some kind of comfort. But all their effort is in vain. No man believes that the Drunkard-Makers think their occupation is "honorable." Can anybody believe that they are in the business for the profit, the benefit, the good of anybody but themselves? Suppose a bar-tender were to say to his customers that he is selling liquor because he knows that his business is as necessary and as helpful to the community as any other business? Would not even those who drink realize the insincerity of any such thing? Does not everybody know that if a man could make the same amount of money with as little work in any other business he would not sell liquor? If the making of drunkards is "honorable" and "necessary" let us invent some new adjectives to describe other occupations. This description of their good qualities by themselves is almost grotesque in their assumptions. Hear these men resolve: "We yield to no class of men in our DEVOTION to true temperance and regard for sobriety and uprightness of life and deportment, and our denunciation of drunkenness, vice and crime." What great injustice has been done these honorable gentlemen. How foolish in railroad companies to imagine that to use liquor (which these "honorable" gentlemen sell) is damaging to the value of their employees! How timid for great business houses to be watchful and distrustful of clerks who frequent bar-rooms! How uncharitable for people to have no confidence in the preacher, or class-leader, or Sunday school superintendent who walks to the bar and takes a dram with all the other drinkers. How silly are the father and the mother and the wife who are troubled and sorrowful when their loved ones make the saloon-keepers their companions and spend their evenings in the rum shops! Why should the young man who takes his dram, and slaps the bar keeper familiarly on the shoulder, and spends his evenings in the saloon, not be as much in demand as one who spends his evenings at home, and is not seen in the company of dram-sellers or dram-drinkers? Do not these dram-sellers tell us that their business is "honorable," and that they are DEVOTED to temperance, sobriety, and uprightness of life? Will they not do everything possible to keep our boys from being drunkards, fully as much as the mothers or preachers of the land? THEY SAY SO. IS IT TRUE? NO! IT IS AN ABSOLUTE FALSEHOOD, and there are few persons who will not say that it is a deliberate falsehood.

But they continue to resolve. Hear them again: "We point to the fact that the foremost and most liberal contributors to charitable, educational, religious, and other benevolent and philanthropic funds are—(mirable dictu)—the men engaged in the liquor traffic, who thus exemplify by their acts their moral and charitable dispositions!" Now let the men who have founded and endowed colleges and universities hide their heads, and let the Methodist Church especially, which does not allow a liquor dealer to be a member of the Church, cease its hypocrisy. The liquor dealers have done more for education, religion, and all charitable enterprises than any other class of men!!! What a miserable set of hypocrites this convention of Drunkard-Makers was! Who can doubt that the most of them smiled in derision as they heard all these Pharisaical falsehoods? Their resolutions, complimenting themselves, don't alter one single fact. They are Drunkard-Makers still. They live on the bread of other men's wives and children. Their hands and houses and clothes are stained with the blood of assaults, suicides and murders. They are the devil's best helpers on earth. I would prefer my boys to be associated with a red-handed murderer rather than with a Drunkard-Maker. One separate the soul from the body and it would go to the Mansion of Light; but the other, for the sake of money, will try to ruin both soul and body in hell.

These resolutions of the Drunkard-Makers do not change the facts. They simply show that the great temperance sentiment is forcing them to combine and make common cause.

The resolutions adopted by them follow:

To the State Liquor Dealers' Association of Virginia, in convention assembled at Richmond, Sept. 22, 1899:

Gentlemen,—In reviewing the work accomplished by the temporary State organization during the past year, in bringing together representative merchants from every section of the Commonwealth, for the purpose of advancing, elevating and protecting their best interests, this convention feels called upon to congratulate the liquor trade of Virginia upon having effected a permanent State Association. The success met with illustrates the value of organized effort and proves conclusively that every liquor dealer in the State should become affiliated with this Association.

This convention declares that, Whereas, the manufacture, sale and use of wines, strong liquors, and fermented beverages has existed from the very earliest dates of recorded history, both as a necessity as well as a luxury, therefore

RESOLVED: That we hold the manufacture of spirits, wines and malt liquors to be in itself as right and honorable as any other industrial pursuit in life; its sale as necessary and therefore as lawful and proper as the sale of any other commodity of common requirement. We have no special favor to ask but simply insist upon such treatment, at the hands of our Legislature, to which we as honorable business men and prompt tax-payers, are justly entitled; and therefore advocate the amendment or repeal of such laws, which have a tendency to lower the moral standard of our business, thereby making it odious to self-respecting citizens to pursue such a vocation.

RESOLVED: That we yield to no class of men in our devotion to true temperance, and regard for sobriety and uprightness of life and deportment and our denunciation of drunkenness, vice and crime. We point to the fact that the foremost and most liberal contributors to charitable, educational, religious and other benevolent and philanthropic funds, are the men engaged in the liquor traffic, who thus exemplify by their acts their moral and charitable dispositions.

We are unalterably opposed to the principle of the present local option law, particularly in such parts of our State, with proper police regulations and means to enforce them and deny the right of a majority of people dictating to the minority what they shall eat or drink and look upon such attempts as an unwarrantable infringement upon personal liberty, which constitutes one of the fundamental principles of our government.

While we are willing to bear our just share of the burden of taxation, we demand a more equal distribution of such burdens, and our business is suffering considerably from the evils of overtaxation.

Therefore, be it Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to the National Association of Retail Liquor Dealers of the United States our hearty co-operation in all their efforts to secure a reduction of the Internal Revenue tax on spirits recommended by Secretary Gage of the Treasury, from $110 per gallon to 70 cents per gallon or any immediate figure that may be agreed upon. We also pledge to the United States Brewers' Association our moral and material support, and will use every effort in our power to assist them in securing a reduction of the extra war tax on beer $1 per barrel.

Resolved, That we recognize the great work of the National Association of Retail Liquor Dealers of the United States, and pledge them our united support in whatever measures they may advocate or adopt for the protection of the trade at the Congress of the United States.

Resolved, That the delegates of the National Convention be instructed to urge upon that body the necessity of co-operating with legitimate distillers and wholesalers in securing the enactment of a law which will prevent the duplication of warehouse receipts by which the liquor trade has been frequently victimized in the past.

Resolved, That we congratulate the officers and the executive committee of this Association upon the efficient work done by them, whereby the best interest of the entire trade was watched during the past year.

WILL THE CHURCH NOW HUSH IT UP.

Agitation Has Never Hurt A Righteous Cause.

STAHLMAN'S FALSEHOODS.

BARBEE AND SMITH OUGHT TO BE PUNISHED.

METHODIST LAYMEN'S HONEST PROTEST.

(The following article was written by Hon. F. C. Robins, member of Congress from North Carolina, and a member of our Church. As he was not allowed to express his views in any of the PUBLISHING HOUSE ORGANS, although they are said to belong to the Church, he was obliged to repudiate the acts of his agents, Barbee and Smith, by writing in the "Raleigh News and Observer, the leading paper of North Carolina. Dr. Hoss and other editors of his stripe have done their best to muzzle the preachers and laymen who have repudiated the deception of their agents, Barbee and Smith, but, like all Bosses and Rings, they will find that there is a limit to their power: What a merciful providence it was that saved the Church for even four years from a bishop who uses his office as editor to prevent those who disagree with him from using their own Church paper to show the dangers which beset the spiritual life of the Church. Bro. Robbins is not alone in this matter as our editorial on Rings and bosses shows.)

To THE EDITOR:—I have recently received through the mail a circular entitled a "Statement from the Book Committee," on the Publishing House Claim, and addressed "To the Methodist Church, South," sent out, I presume, by that committee, or with its knowledge and consent. This circular having reached me, I take for granted it is sent out generally over the church.

Having appeared in print more than once on the subject of that claim, I had hoped to see this circular noticed by some one else, but since the committee have sent a copy to me, and silence might be construed as acquiescence in or approval of what they say, I take occasion to dissent from all its important points and make some comment thereon.

Our Church press where this ought to appear, having declined to allow any answer to this circular or other discussion on this subject in their columns, I ask the insertion of this article in your widely-read paper. We ought not to have been driven to the secular press to discuss this subject.

After the committee's suggestion to wait "until the next General Conference when, if deemed desirable, these affairs may be passed under review by the legislative body of our Church, the chief source of power and influence, all agitation of the subject, especially of an acrimonious and bitter spirit," shall come to an end," what is their purpose in sending out this circular to the Church? Do they think it fair to send forth their opinion and version of this matter and wind up with the suggestion that "all agitation come to an end?" Why want agitation stopped? Is it because discussion will reveal the weakness of their position? Does not the very fact that they depreciate agitation, imply conscious weakness? The truth never gets hurt by candid and manly discussion. Moreover, the General Conference, whatever its powers, is only a representative body; and without discussion how are the conscience and judgment of the membership of the Church to be brought to bear so as to make that Conference representative on this subject? Our Church papers having published the contents of this circular and then closed their columns to further discussion, followed by the committee with this distribution of the circular, will not the effect—I will not say purpose—of such action be to forestall public opinion in the Church and shape and fix it on their side—the wrong side—of this question? The words, if deemed desirable," taken in the connection in which they appear are very significant; and from this hint and the suggestion that all agitation cease, together with what will appear further on, it is evident that this committee think this whole matter is closed out and ought to be hushed up. If they so think, it is sad; and if the Church should finally agree with them, that will be sadder, in fact about the saddest thing this writer has ever contemplated.

The committee reiterates their opinion expressed in their statement of last year "that the Book Agents, in the communications addressed to Senators and complained of as deceptive and misleading had not intended to mislead the Senate of the United States." I submit that such an opinion ought not to have much, if any, weight with intelligent men who have examined the plain evidence on that point. Even their chairman, Dr. Denny, who heads the list of signers to this circular, when before the Senate Committee, said in reference to the telegram to Senator Bate, "I think that the telegram misled them. I do not hesitate to say that. I think it would have misled anybody. Our committee say they do not believe it was intended to deceive." If the men were sane then to say "it was not intended to deceive," and yet "it would have misled anybody," is a feat in metaphysical leg-erdmain very surprising, coming from an intelligent source. No candid man can examine the evidence as to the correspondence between Senators and the Book Agents and not come to the conclusion the Senate Committee does, "that the replies of the Book Agents to this letter (Pasco's) and telegram (Bate's) make it manifest that the policy of silence with reference to the contract was maintained to the end even to the extent of withholding the truth and misleading and deceiving those who made an earnest effort to obtain it."

The Book Committee further say that the "sole legitimate conclusion we can reach is that the charge against the agents is res adjudicata," and as one among other reasons for this conclusion they cite the action of the Tennessee Annual Conference last Fall in "passing Dr. Barbee's character without a dissenting vote," and yet staring this committee in the face was this further action of that Conference on the same day: "We feel it our Christian duty to put up on record a minute concerning the collection of the Publishing House claim and the difficulties which have arisen out of it. We record our deep sorrow for the things done by our Book Agents and condoned by our Book Committee in collecting this money, feeling that in the disputed points they are wholly indefensible, and we deeply regret that there has been no expression condemning the same by any official body before whom the matter has been considered. We accept the methods to which the bishops have pledged themselves for returning the entire sum, and we pledge our hearty co-operation in carrying them into effect. But we prefer that the money should be returned without conditions. We believe that the disciplinary dealing with the brethren implicated in the matter is, just now, a subordinate question. Their dismissal or their voluntary withdrawal from official position will not settle any great part of the difficulty. The supreme duty of the Church is the return of the money and the unqualified disavowal of the wrongs done in collecting it. Inasmuch as our bishops have pledged themselves to the return of the money, we leave the whole matter of the details of that work entirely to their discretion, with the hope that the matter may be accomplished at as early a time as practicable." That paper was adopted by 167 yeas to 33 nays. Let it be noted, too, that this action of that Conference was taken after this committee had published in July of last year its "deliberate and unanimous judgment that the Book Agents had not intended to deceive and mislead United States Senators," and after the "presiding elder" they refer to had made his investigation. Let it be further noted that this Tennessee Conference, according to the committee, is one of the "regularly constituted Church tribunals which has unanimously held that he (Dr. Barbee) has not been guilty of misconduct in office." Taking the whole action of that Conference together, I would ask this committee what res is adjudicata? Besides striking a blow at this Book Committee, that Conference says expressly that the action of the Book Agents is "wholly indefensible" and that "the supreme duty of the Church is the return of the money and unqualified disavowal of the wrongs done in collecting it."

It is painful to write about the misconduct of those agents. But these wrong-

Church unless disapproved and disowned, involve the fair name and honor of the Church, and in fact when known and not disavowed, they become in every ethical sense the acts of the Church herself. It is not therefore a personal matter and cannot be treated as such. If, after time for reflection and review of their conduct, they had ever expressed any sense of its wrongfulness and compunction for it, the case would be greatly mitigated so far as they are personally concerned. But that has not been done. We hear something about the obligation to exercise charity, forgiveness and love. Those are great virtues in their proper place. But it ought to be remembered that love cannot forgive sin unrepented of. Almighty power and Infinite Love never undertook that task. If it were thinkable that love could forgive sin unrepented of, then love itself would become the most hideous monster in the moral universe.

Strange as the committee's opinion is in reference to the Book Agents, their conduct and attitude toward their agent, Stahlman, are, if possible, more so. In fact, it is a matter of amazement. When making the contract with him as to his fee for collecting the claim, the committee say in their statement of 1898, that "Mr. Stahlman was explicitly instructed that nothing should be done in the prosecution of the claim which would even in the slightest degree compromise the good name of the Church, and that rather than compromise the Church the Book Committee preferred not to have the claim paid." That was well said and wisely done. What a pity those instructions were not observed! So far from it, in order to procure the passage of the bill through the Senate, Stahlman, agent of this Book Committee and therefore quasi-agent of the Church, told falsehood upon falsehood to Senators, as he admits and they swear, thus proving himself to be an unscrupulous lobbyist, having no regard for the truth. And yet neither in this circular nor in their "statement" of 1898 does this committee utter one single word of condemnation or even the slightest disapproval of his disreputable conduct. Because forsooth the Senate says "that no injury has come to the United States," does this committee seriously think the Church can keep that money so obtained, and that "nothing has been done even in the slightest degree that compromises the good name of the Church?" Instead of condemning him in unmeasured terms for his disgraceful conduct, they run off into a long argument to show the contract was right and his fee reasonable. Who cares whether his fee was one cent or $288,000 in the presence of such a record-bringing reproach and shame upon the Church, if not promptly disapproved and condemned. I wish to be respectful, but the least that can be said is that such a method of taking care of the honor of the Church shows the incompetency of this committee to deal with any phase of this subject.

The committee also enter a somewhat warm protest against the Senate's claim of right to protect the beneficiaries of this fund. What has that to do with the vital point in this case? It only befogs the subject. Suppose the Senate has no right, does their claim of it justify the Book Agents in sending those telegrams which would have "misled anybody," and Stahlman in his numerous falsehoods, to get for the Church $288,000? That is the point, and all these other matters are wholly irrelevant.

Can it be that our great Church will allow this matter to drift on and finally be hushed up without decisive action to vindicate her honor, and thus commit herself to and become particeps criminis in the wrongful acts of her agents and officials? If she does, while the voice of an humble layman cannot reach far, yet he ventures to say she will become a fit subject for the taunts and sneers of the outside world, who already express amazement at her apathy on this subject and point to her as a believer in the grand maxim of these times: "Get money—no matter how—get money." If she consents to take this humiliating position that humble layman, feeling as deep interest in the usefulness and true glory of Southern Methodism as any man in it, ventures further to say that she will become a hollow ecclesiastical hierarchy, henceforth useful to the world only as a conspicuous warning against the sin and folly of tampering with the truth.

MR. SCHOOLFIELD'S DENUNCIATION.

WINSTON, N. C., Oct. 10.—Evangelist James Schoolfield, of Danville, Va., who is conducting a meeting here, stated in his sermon last night that he did not believe God would bless the Southern Methodist Church until it repudiates the whole transaction of the Southern Publishing House, by which it obtained money from the United States Government.

The evangelist added that he had given the matter careful study and consideration, and he meant what he said.

The Sentinel this afternoon endorses Mr. Schoolfield's views, and editorially says the Publishing House deal "ought to be denounced by every Methodist preacher in the land. It is a blot on the fair escutcheon of the Church, and all the whitewash in Christendom cannot hide it. It ought not to be covered, and no attempts should be made to cover it. It should be removed, and the work of the Church will be hampered until it is removed. We cannot reconcile consistency and the action of any preacher who denounces the sin of prevarication and dodging the truth, and yet undertakes to exonerate the agents of the Publishing House in this matter. Drive the money changers from the temple not so much to punish them as to remove the defilement they have placed upon it. Millions of dollars would be no recompense for what has been done, because no amount of money is comparable with a Church without blemish."

TRUE CHARITY.

This world is full of religion, but it is sadly lacking in piety. We crowd our fashionable Churches imagining that the world considers us very good people, while around the corner perhaps a group of actors are standing around a member of this class who is dying, poor fellow; he is ostracised by the Church, but not the less tenderly cared for on that account. If any great institution is destroyed by fire, or otherwise, we plunge our hands to the very depths of our pockets in order to raise it. It is a sin to help a dying actor, but what a broad charity is exercised by us in restoring a hospital like the St. Vincent that was burned down here a short time ago. We have a perfect right to love a Roman Catholic, but we are not requested to give one cent to their institutions. Every penny bestowed on them contributes toward destroying liberty of conscience, and pulls down that altar erected to the Being who alone is our refuge and strength. No man occupies a negative position. If we are not for God we are against him, and if we gather not with Him we scattereth abroad.

FALSE REPORTS.

MR. EDITOR:—In view of the false reports that have been widely circulated in reference to the recent meeting at Bethel Church, conducted by Rev. L. L. Banks, we desire through your paper to make a few corrections and give the true condition of affairs.

Bethel has been, comparatively, a dead Church for many years, and its former pastors have been unable to arouse it from this state. There has been strife, discord, disunion, contention, evil surmisings and uncharitable speeches, which were inconsistent with true worship. We have been formal Christians, but not fervent ones, a fire-brand to burn up God's house—not a "tongue of fire" to inspire and swell its melodious praises. There has been great difficulty in paying our pastor and raising his missionary collections. It was not possible to maintain a large and thriving Sunday-school. The greater number of the members would collect under the trees in the yard and discuss politics or some business matters, while a few were in the house trying to study God's word. We have not heretofore been able to maintain a prayer-meeting during the week.

Now, because of this precious meeting in August, held by Rev. Leroy Lee Banks, our Church has been aroused from its former condition, and the hearts of the people filled with a greater love for Jesus. The Church is now alive, not from excitement, as reported, but through the operation of the Holy Spirit to its privileges in God and its obligation to man.

As a direct result of the meeting, we were able to pay the pastor in full at the end of the Third Quarterly Meeting, and have succeeded in buying a parsonage. At present we have a large Sabbath-school, and find ourselves able to secure a library. Then we have a sweet time at our Wednesday afternoon prayer-meeting. But the most important of all, the greater number of the members have established a family altar, where we enjoy the sweetest peace. These glorious results are not confined only to Bethel Church, but to all the Churches where Mr. Banks has held meetings on West Buckingham circuit.

We are glad to close by saying that we have a minister that not only preaches theology but testifies to a personal experience of an indwelling Christ, and knows the "joy of the Lord" in soul-saving. His pulpit is a flaming witness stand.

"THE MAN WITH THE HOE."

(AN ELUCIDATION OF MARKHAM'S POEM FOR MRS. DOBLEY'S BENEFIT.)

"I might just as well resign at once!" exclaimed Mrs. Dobley. "I had no idea that joining a literary club meant that one had to perform in public. I simply can't do it."

"What do they want you to do, my dear?" asked Mr. Dobley. "A song and dance or a cakewalk? I wouldn't mind a little thing like that. You can pick it up in no time."

"It's nothing like that," said Mrs. Dobley, passing a typewritten document over the breakfast table. "And you needn't make any fun of the matter, either. The frivolous way in which you look at everything is tiresome. Now, what am I to do?"

"I am sure, my dear"—began Dobley. "Just read it—read it!" commanded Mrs. Dobley, and her husband read: "HONORA COOMBS DOBLEY.

Dear Madam: At the next meeting of the literary club the topic of discussion will be Markham's poem, "The Man With the Hoe." As you have been selected as chief speaker of the evening, you will kindly be prepared to recite the poem and give a short sketch of the author's career. Also give your opinions as to the idea contained in the work, as well as the general style and literary construction of the poem."

"Well, my dear," said Mr. Dobley, trying to conceal the fact that he was quite as perturbed as his wife by the letter. "Well?"

"Well? Why didn't they select you? What did they send that to me for? What do I know about farming?"

"You forget, my dear, that this is not an agricultural club, but a literary society. Of course, they refer to the famous poem."

"What poem?"

"Is it possible that you haven't heard of Markham's masterpiece, The Man With the Hoe?" asked Dobley, with a reproachful look over the top of his egg.

"Why, I haven't read anything but Quo Vadis this summer, and I only half read that. You see it hurts my eyes, and besides that I'm too busy. Who was he?"

"The Man With the Hoe? He has become one of the most typical of"— "What was the matter with him? Why didn't he hoe? Where did it happen?"

"It began with a picture, my dear. An artist made a picture of a man in a field with a hoe."

"Hoeing corn, I suppose; well, what of it?"

"Well, it was a great picture—filled with depth and feeling and life"—

"I suppose it seemed as though he were really hoeing, did it? I've seen a picture like that—a girl gathering roses. You could just see the stems snap."

"No, it wasn't exactly that. The man had stopped"—

"Stopped hoeing? What did he do that for?"

"He'd stopped to rest and was leaning on the hoe."

"Gracious! A hoe isn't a bit comfortable to lean upon. Why didn't he sit down?"

"Why—er—it was just the artist's idea, you see. The man stopping to lean on his hoe—the laborer in the field—don't you see?—typifying the workman of the ages—the 'empty ages,' Markham wrote."

"Was it Markham who had the hoe?"

"Oh, no! Markham was a poet, and he saw the picture and saw the poetry in it. Then he wrote the poem and called it 'The Man With the Hoe.'"

"Was it pretty?"

"It was a magnificent idea—the figure of that man as typical of the workman—the patient slave plowing in the field"—

"What did he have a hoe for if he was plowing?"

"You don't understand. Don't you catch the idea? Labor—the farmer at work—plodding along without an idea—sweating over his work."

"You just said he stopped to rest."

"Er—yes—but when you read it you will see the splendid picture Markham drew"—

"Excuse me, John; was Markham the artist, or was he the man who had the hoe, or the man who just wrote about it?"

"He was the poet, my dear; he wrote the verse."

"I suppose he was paid for it, wasn't he?"

"I suppose so, my dear."

"Then what was the trouble? Really, John, I can't seem to understand what all the fuss was about."

"Markham wanted to show the miserable condition of the hard working farmer—the slavery of the toiler—the fetters"—

"Why John Dobley, you know you have often said you'd like to be a farmer, because they have everything so easy. Hoeing and raking is child's play, and as for plowing, it's just like riding a bicycle nowadays. You sit in a sort of sulky and the horses know just where to go. I suppose they will have automobiles after awhile."

"He spoke," went on Mr. Dobley, "of the 'emptiness of ages.' There's a grand thought. The emptiness"—

"What did he mean by that?"

"Why—er—so much of that is metaphor—you see. The main idea is that the lot of the workingman is hopeless. 'The Man With the Hoe' was a poor wretch, bent with toil—a farmer whose life was"—

"Why didn't he get one of the farm hands to do the hoeing?"

"He probably was a farm hand himself working for a pittance"—

"Well, he ought to have been glad he was working, I think. The idea! What did he want? A steam hoe?"

"No, my dear; but the idea is what did life hold for him? Of what was he thinking as he stood there leaning on the hoe—that humble implement of toil?"

"Probably he was thinking of his dinner. I am not a bit sorry for that man. He had nice open-air work and he could stop to rest when he wanted to, and probably his wife brought him his dinner every noontime, and he had nothing to do but to hoe. And he wasn't even doing that!"

"Wait till you read the poem, Honora. Markham calls him brother to the ox."

"What for?"

"The ox, you see, is the beast of burden. When the poet spoke of the laborer as a brother to the ox, he placed him as low in the intellectual scale as it was possible to get him. He asks, 'who blew out the'—"

"Gas?"

"No—no! 'Who blew out the light within this brain?' asks Markham."

"Well, who did?"

"It was just a metaphor—a figure of speech"—

"Why didn't he say what he meant?"

"Poets never do that, my dear."

"Well, what did he mean?"

"That the workman was a miserable creature, whose life was like an animal's—a"—

"Don't he believe in men working?"

"Yes—but"—

"I suppose he likes ramps, then? Those men that sit around the parks? 'The Man With the Tomato Can' would be his idea of the ideal man."

"Poets look at these things differently."

"Well, I think it is silly to pity a man because he has a job. Think of all the men that can't get work. Suppose you didn't work? Where would we be?"

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON IV, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 22.

Text of the Lesson, Ez. viii, 21-32. Memory Verses, 21-23—Golden Text, Ez. viii, 22—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

21. "Then I proclaimed a fast there at the river of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to seek of Him a right way for us and for our little ones and for all our substance." In the seventh year of Artaxerxes, the king of Persia, Ezra and some 1,800 of his people went up to Jerusalem to see to the welfare of those who were there, to carry up much silver and gold, a free will offering from the king and his counselors unto the God of Israel, for the temple and for sacrifice and for the will of God, as Ezra might be directed (chapter vii). Ezra was a ready scribe in the law of Moses and had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord and to do it and to teach it (chapter vii, 6, 10). Notice the order of doing and teaching and compare Acts i, 1; Mark vi, 30. Our lesson begins with Ezra about to start on the journey and making final preparation by a season of special waiting upon God.

22. "For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way, because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him." See his references to the hand of the Lord upon him in chapters vii, 6, 9, 28; viii, 18, 31; also Neh. ii, 8, 18; Ezek. iii, 14, 22; viii, 1, etc. It is no use to say that we trust in the Lord if we don't do it, and, while there would have been no sin in Ezra's having a band of soldiers, he would not thus have shown as much faith in God.

23. "So we fasted and besought our God for this, and He was entreated of us." Esther and her people fasted and prayed, and God heard and delivered (Est. iv, 16). Our Lord said concerning the evil spirit which He cast out of the child after His transfiguration, Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting (Math. xvii, 21). Barnabas and Paul were set apart to missionary work with prayer and fasting (Acts xiii, 2, 3). It is true that overindulgence of appetite does not tend to spirituality, yet there is no special credit in doing without food, but when we want something from God for God's glory more than we want anything else we will be very apt to give ourselves heartily to prayer and fasting. See Dan. ix, 3; x, 3.

24, 25. "Then I separated 12 of the chief of the priests * * * and weighed unto them the silver and the gold * * * which the king and his counselors had offered." These two verses tell us that these offerings included also that which was given to all Israel there present and that all was for the house of God. I do not know of any giving on record that can compare with the gifts of Israel, both rulers and people, for the tabernacle and the temple (Ex. xxxvi, 6, 7; xxxviii, 24-31; I Chron. xxii, 14, 16; xxix, 1-9). If there was the same zeal for the house of God today—that is, the church of God, composed of all true believers—to complete it, what an abundance of missionaries and of money there would be seen to the glory of God.

26, 27. In these two verses we see the exact weight of the silver and gold of the vessels, and, knowing the value of a talent of gold or silver, the current value of all could be estimated, but among men and value before God are ten two wholly different things, though we make no reference to this particular case. We know that in the temple one day our Lord saw the rich people casting in of their abundance, and He saw a poor widow cast in 2 mites, which make a farthing, and He said that she had cast in more than they all. She cast in all that she had, even all her living.

28. "And I said unto them, Ye are holy unto the Lord; the vessels are holy also, and the silver and the gold are a free will offering unto the Lord God of your fathers." As the Lord who called the priests and Levites to their office was holy, so they were to be holy also—set apart wholly for Him (Lev. xxi, 6, 8). The Lord chose them to stand before Him, to serve Him, to minister unto Him, and it is even so with true believers now, for all believers are priests, and all are chosen vessels to be holy unto Him and to bear His name (II Chron. xxix, 11; I Pet. ii, 5, 9; Acts ix, 15).

29. "Watch ye and keep them until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests at Jerusalem in the chambers of the house of the Lord." We think of our Great High Priest who will never lose any vessel which the Father has given to Him, for no power can ever pluck us out of His hand, and we may gladly say, I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day (John x, 28; xvii, 12; xviii, 9).

30. "So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver and the gold and the vessels to bring them to Jerusalem unto the house of our God." In verses 33 and 34 we read that all the silver and gold and the vessels were safely delivered by weight and number at Jerusalem, and thus their work was successfully performed. Not at Jerusalem, but at the judgment seat of Christ, we will give account of our stewardship of all that with which He has intrusted us in His service, and it may help us to remember day by day that the Lord weigheth actions and spirits and trieth heart and veins and will give every one according to his ways and the fruit of his doings (I Sam. ii, 3; Prov. xvi, 2; Jer. xvii, 10).

31. "The hand of our God was upon us, and He delivered us from the hand of the enemy and of such as lay in wait by the way." When we become children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, we have from that time the world and the flesh and the devil as our enemies, but we need not fear, for He who is in us is greater than all, and victory is sure while we rely upon Him and cry, "Thine is the power." We may say, God, who raiseth the dead, delivered us and doth deliver and will deliver. The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work and will preserve me unto His heavenly kingdom (II Cor. i, 9, 10; II Tim. iv, 18). He is able. We will trust Him.

32. "And we came to Jerusalem and abode there three days." On the next day they gave in their report, and burnt offerings and sin offerings were offered for all Israel. There is no blessing and no safety apart from Him who is both sin offering and burnt offering, but in Him, by His precious blood, there is perfect safety and the assurance that as we have been justified we shall also be glorified (Rom. v, 9; viii, 30).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 22, "An Old Time Missionary." Text, Jonah iii, 1-10.

"Let them turn every one from their evil way. Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from His fierce anger, that we perish not?"

A populous and wicked city, an impassioned preacher and a righteous God are three factors which have more than once in history been found in close association. The relations of each to the other two may be varied with great changes in the results.

The unwavering note of all Hebrew prophecy from the earliest time has been the rulership of a righteous God in the affairs of men and the disastrous effects of wickedness. Clearer and yet more clear has it sounded from Noah to Moses, from Samuel to Malachi.

Not Israel alone, but all nations, all individuals, are bound by the eternal law of right. Whoever disobey must suffer. The incorrigible must perish.

In the midst of the most luxurious and licentious city of the times there suddenly appears a strange man of rude speech and with a most startling cry. He offers no goods for sale, he seeks no friendships, but walks the street with solemn tread, robed as a prophet of the Hebrews, and cries continually, "Forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed." To its profoundest depths the whole population is stirred. Whence he came no one knows. On what side the danger impends none can learn. He offers no explanation. He answers no inquiries. Is it from the clouds above, from the earth or the river? Who can tell? What armed enemy has arisen, and what force can he muster? The very uncertainty adds to the terror of the message. What is the escape? From the king to the slave, every one seeks to avert the disaster. Evil and luxury are laid aside. Acts of devotion and piety are practiced. Vice is replaced by virtue. All cry to God to avert the blow.

The people have found the clew of safety. God, who was angry with the people for their evil and determined to punish their wrongdoing, has reached the end He desires when they turn from their wickedness and violence and do right. The lesson is for all people and all ages. Whoever does the evil shall suffer for it. Whoever turns and seeks God and righteousness shall be prospered and blessed.

Constancy Better Than Curiosity.

Peter asked Jesus about John, "Lord, what shall this man do?" The reply gave no satisfaction to Peter's inquisitiveness. It was as if Jesus had said: "That is none of your business. Enough for each man to attend to his own affairs."

The need for every one is constancy in doing his own appointed work rather than curious prying into God's things with others.

Many complain of the hard work of

FIVE MINUTE SERMONS

PLOWING.

IN one of my rare vacation trips, I was entertained for several days by one of the friends of my boyhood who has a large farm in the far West. It was plowing time, and he had employed several men to work for him in getting the soil ready for his crops. One afternoon he asked me if I would not accompany him in his rounds of his farm and see what progress his men were making with the plows. We soon found one team of horses standing under the shade of a little tree busy keeping the flies away and blinking lazily with their sleepy eyes. We strolled over to the tree, and the man who had been placed in charge of the team was stretched on the grass fast asleep. The dry ground of the last upturned furrow indicated that he had not been taking a "cat-nap," but had been there sound asleep for perhaps some hours. He aroused himself rather sheepishly and went back to his work, while we walked on. Another team was standing by the roadside when we first saw it, and a buggy was standing in the road. It did not take us long to discover that the plowman had found some friends and that they were all sitting on the grass telling Western stories and passing the time very delightfully. When our hired man saw the proprietor heave in sight, he quietly gathered up his lines, shouted to his team and was off. Another man I must tell you of. We surprised him in the middle of a large field. He was a man of great ingenuity, and was skillful in the use of his jack-knife. He was in the habit of whittling out ingenious wooden puzzles and setting them up inside of glass bottles. These things he could always sell to the people who congregated about the village store. Now, he was standing between his plow handles with his back to the horses, whittling one of his puzzles from a pine stick which he had carried in his pocket that day. I do not mean to say that the hired men were all engaged in this way, for there were many whom we saw that day who toiled early and late and did as honest a day's work as men ever do or can do. But I wondered if our Lord had seen some men plowing when He wrote, "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

And there do appear to be some such men in the kingdom of heaven. There was my brother in the ministry who said that he should have to seek a new field or write some new sermons, and it was easier to candidate. And there was another concerning whom his people said that he fitted his rocking chair better than he did the pulpit, and that he feared any change in the methods of his church work for fear it would require some labor. And there was another, who, in the West left the ministry and opened a real estate office because there was less work and more money. And there are those good people who used to be such faithful church attendants. They have discovered that it is too much exertion to rise in time for the morning service and the wife finds that she cannot bring herself to dress and get out in the evening. And there are half a dozen others who used to teach in the Sunday School who left when the lessons were in the Old Testament, because it took too much work to get the lessons. And men and women are dropping out of the working force of the Church continually, they have no time for working for God and the church. There is so much of the latest literature brought into the house that the essay, and the magazine, and the novel take up the time which ought to go to the needs of the Lord's cause. They have forgotten to work while it is day, and have left the plow standing while they are pleasantly passing their time with the gay.

Other still have been sent to plow, and are using their time for something else. Ministers assume the pastorate of a church to furnish them a little income while they devote their time to writing novels or lecturing. Men and women use their position in the Sunday School or the Church or some of its committees to advertise themselves or their occupation. They make a pretense of serving the Lord and His church, but leave the plow standing while they whittle out toys for themselves. The confectioner was a Sunday School teacher, but he doubled his money because they find the work hard, sometimes. They leave the plow in the furrows while they lie down and sleep.

"HE WAS STANDING BETWEEN THE PLOW HANDLES WITH HIS BACK TO THE HORSES, WHITTILING A STICK."

Others there are who find other things more interesting. They have become so engrossed with the round of parties and receptions, and clubs, and festivities, that on the Christmas candy he bought for the school out of his own store. The book seller was superintendent, but he worked off a lot of unsalable books on the library of the school at list price of ten years ago. Are you really plowing, or are you merely standing between the handles?

THINGS TO BE REMEMBERED

By C. F. WILLIAMS

- That in all that happens to me, God is dealing with me; and that in all that I do, I am dealing with God.
- That I have but one life to live, and that the thing that is worth more to me than anything else is to live that one life well.
- That in the highest sense life can only be a success as I accept the guidance and receive the help that comes from above.
- That by Works is faith made perfect; that if I live the truth, the truth will live in me until I become the embodiment of truth.
- That if I refuse to walk in the light as God gives me to see the light, I shall die to the truth; and the lie that I live, I shall come to believe.

WAYS . OF . PRAISE!

BY EZRA KELLER FAIRLOR.

Loud voice'd in pray'r without the heart's accord—
Condemn'd as but lip service to Earth's King.
Veil not thine eyes to Nature's charms; but look!
And not alone with eyes shalt view: the soul
Hath wider vision. Use both eye and soul,
For widely scanning, lo, Her God appears!
The Father of thy soul, who seeks thy praise.
Yet, fairer praise than love of Nature thou

WHEN Nature, to thy soul, through pow'r of love
Is clothed with beauty and majestic mien,
Or sits enthron'd thy queen, then God is near!
The sky in rainbow tints He paints, or clears
And decks with heaven's starry hosts; His voice
Is heard in songs of birds; the low, soft notes
Of stirring leaves He grants thy list'ning ear,
Or lulls to rest thy worn and troubled soul
With mingling waters' soft and liquid tones,
Or crickets' chirp and beetles' drone, and all
Of Nature's rare and sweetest melodies.
To love the mountains' towering rocks; to seek
The vales which hide between, and gaze with glad
And filling eyes upon the sunlit heights;
To stand in awe 'neath trembling trees, and trace
The ramblings of the rills, is fairer praise
Of Him who made them all, than fair form'd words

Canst give to please thy God. 'Tis but to love Thy fellow man and give of aid to such
As need, from out the store He granteth thee—
E'en like the Man who yet was God, that Man
Of Galilee! He, living, taught us how
To live: we, living thus, shall please and praise
Him most, and, meeting Death, will safely die
Into the Spirit's form and mighty pow'r.

THE . IMPREGNABLE . WORD

By N. A. VILLUS

HERE was a song of praise and gratitude to Almighty God in the heart and on the lips of Mrs. Goodwin when her beloved son, Benjamin, returned home a graduate of the celebrated seminary at Knowville.

This was the moment to which she had looked forward for many years. Her ambition—or, perhaps, we would better say, her heart's desire—was that her little Bennie might take up the mantle of his dear, departed father, and continue the glorious work of gospel ministry from which her beloved husband had been called. She had striven earnestly and faithfully to instill this idea into the mind of her only boy; for this purpose she had pinched and saved in order that he might be thoroughly equipped, from an educational standpoint, to meet all the demands of his chosen profession. The time of waiting had seemed long, but all was ended now; Benjamin had come home.

It was early dusk when he reached the house, and mother and son had barely time to greet each other, before a number of neighbors came in to visit and welcome their young friend home. As he stood chatting easily with one or another of the visitors, or moved gracefully about from group to group, the mother's eyes rested lovingly on him and she thought, with a sigh: "How proud his father would be, could he see him as he is tonight."

When the last of the visitors had gone, bowed out at the front door by the smiling young graduate, he returned, full of animation, to the parlor and found the dear old mother sitting serenely happy in her arm-chair with the old, familiar Bible open on her lap. She looked up at him with a fond smile of love.

"Ah! I see you still have the same old Bible, mother," he remarked, as he rested

"OH! I SEE YOU STILL HAVE THE SAME OLD BIBLE."

against the mantel. "What a wonderful book it used to seem to me. 'The infallible guide,' I remember you used to call it; and taught me to believe every story in it."

"Certainly, I did," said the surprised mother. "Why, it is God's Word!"

"Oh, yes, I know! But then, my dear mother, don't you know that the best, in fact, the most cultured authorities have agreed that your Bible can no longer be regarded in that light. There are altogether too many unreasonable, illogical, irrational and incredible passages in it. Besides, after all, what we need is the Living Christ. He is all-sufficient, and we may trust securely in Him."

"God forever bless you, my son," replied Mrs. Goodwin, "that last sentence sounds like my own boy. All we can ever need is more than supplied in the Living Christ; but where, outside of this dear Book, can we, or a sinful world, learn of Him? Where else can we find the story of His blameless life, and the sacrifice of His shameful death? You call Him, truly, 'the Living Christ,' yet, the only authority for such a title is based on the story of His resurrection as we find it in this Book among many other passages which the worldly-wise are pleased to call unreasonable, irrational and incredible.

"My heart is sore, my dear son, to think that you, for a moment, should be deceived by the false teachings and self-sufficient knowledge of those who highly esteem the wisdom of man. But He hath declared in this same Book by the mouth of His servant, that 'the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men,' 'and He hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise.'"

"This dear old Book needs no defender. Through all the ages those who have opposed it have come to naught. And as for you, my son, I am sore at heart but not afraid. I have the comforting assurance that the intense abiding faith of your dear, dead father will surely be your portion, and the superficial impression made on your mind by these false teachers, will utterly fade away before the warmth and love of a true Christian home."

their own lots, not so much because the load laid on them is excessive as because they see others whose burdens they fancy are lighter and tasks more agreeable. No amount of envy ever was able to make an interchange of lot with others. Fretting only increases the irritation. After all, suppose things are not all evened up; make the best of things as you find them.

Meditation.

This is one of the most difficult of Christian duties, but one of the most important. We can more easily read a dozen books than think properly and meditate upon the contents of one. But our inner thought is the matter of moment and not the recreation which came in reading. We may become intellectually dissipated and incapable of proper mental digestion unless we exercise great care. Read less and that of the best and think carefully of what is read is a good rule. Mental dyspepsia is one of the most prevalent complaints of the time. We devour much and digest little and lose power of enjoying the really good by pains of indigestion, loss of appetite and vitiated taste.

Not the number of chapters of Bible read, but the nourishment of soul derived, is the important question. Read some. Think much.

With Cords.

It is the strength of the weakest lines of the net that is the measure of its worth. If a few are old and worn, there is danger of a break and loss. Fix up the lines of your private devotions. Read the Bible, think about it, pray and worship God in quiet.

Fix up the cords of family prayer, the lines of church attendance. How is the string to the purse adjusted? Fix that all right for God. How about personal testimony? Are you talking for Christ wherever you can? What are your habits? Any little vices, common things you think are not very bad, but a little bad? Got any secret corners with a little rubbish, a little darkness? Better fix all up. Mend the old nets, clear the dark corners of the soul. It is easier to live a whole souled Christian life than a half hearted one. It pays better too.

Not Worthy, but Willing.

Not worthy, O Lord, of Thy pardon,
Not fit to partake of Thy grace;
Not worthy, my Saviour, but longing
To live in the light of Thy face.
Not worthy to cling to the promise
Of cleansing and life in Thy name,
But eager to come at Thy bidding
And claim all Thou givest as mine.

It is not because I have asked Thee,
Though Thou hast pardoned in Thy mercy,
But Thou, who dost love me, has pardoned
My sins and my sorrows to bear.
God offered, and I have accepted
The cleansing, the joy and the light,
And into my life there is flowing
A wonderful beauty and might.

Still higher, as onward I journey,
My will rises toward Thine own.
For God has accepted a sinner,
And I have accepted a throne.
There never was soul more unworthy
To meet with compassion like Thine;
That I should be heir to a kingdom,
And God, the eternal, be mine.

THE DEVIL'S FRIEND.

INGERSOLL'S SCATHING DENUNCIATION OF ALCOHOL.

Rum's Awful Work Portrayed In Vivid Words by the Great Orator. Characterized as God's Enemy and Satan's Agent and Friend.

One of the greatest temperance orations ever delivered in the English language was delivered by Ingersoll in a case where he was defending a liquor dealer. It was as follows:

"I am aware that there is a prejudice against any man engaged in the manufacture of alcohol. I believe that from the time it issues from the coiled and poisonous worm in the distillery until it empties into the hell of death, dishonor and crime it demoralizes everybody that touches it, from its source to where it ends. I do not believe anybody can contemplate the subject without becoming prejudiced against that liquor crime.

"All we have to do, gentlemen, is to think of the wrecks on either bank of the stream of death; of the suicides, of the insanity, of the poverty, of the ignorance, of the destitution, of the little children tugging at the faded and weary breasts of weeping and despairing wives, asking for bread; of the talented men of genius it has wrecked, the men struggling with imaginary serpents, produced by this devilish thing, and when you think of the jails, the almshouses, of the asylums, of the prisons, of the scaffolds upon either bank, I do not wonder that every thoughtful man is prejudiced against this stuff called alcohol.

"Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affections, erases conjugal loves, blots out filial attachments, blights parental hope and brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends and all of them paupers and beggars. It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, misery and crime. It fills your jails, supplies your almshouses and demands your asylums. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels and cherishes riots. It crowds your penitentiaries and furnishes victims to your scaffolds. It is the lifeblood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman and the support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, respects the thief, esteems the blasphemer. It violates the obligations, reverences fraud and honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue and slanders innocence. It incites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, helps the husband to massacre his wife and the child to grind the patrician ax. It burns up men, consumes women, detests life, curses God and despises heaven. It suborns witnesses, nurses perjury, defiles the jury box and stains the judicial ermine. It degrades the citizen, debases the legislator, dishonors statesmen and disarms the patriot. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness, and with the malevolence of a fiend it calmly surveys its frightful desolation, and, unsatisfied with its havoc, it poisons fidelity, kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, slays reputation and wipes out national honors, then curses the world and laughs at its ruin.

"It does all that and more—it murders the soul. It is the son of villainies, the father of all crimes, the mother of abominations, the devil's best friend and God's worst enemy."

A Wife's Devotion.

There is one woman who believes with Emerson that the prayer of the sower is when he sows his seed. She does things when she wishes them done. She does not believe in alcoholic drinks, and the man who wanted to be her husband was put on probation for some time before the wedding day was set. For six months he must not touch anything alcoholic, and as far as she knew he did not, and the wedding came off. Then after a time there was a relapse; not a very serious relapse, but no one could tell what it might become, and the woman decided to act. Breakfast and dinner the man took at home, and there was no danger then, but at luncheon there might be. Hence, without regard to the inconvenience it might be to her, the wife who believes in deeds, not words, goes down town every day to take luncheon with her husband.—New York Times.

A Temperance Island.

In the island of Anticosti, in the gulf of St. Lawrence, a Frenchman, M. Henri Menier, has established what is regarded as the largest private game preserve in the world. He bought the island, which is 140 miles long by 28 broad, for £32,000, or 6 cents an acre, and then opened up negotiations with Canadian hunters and trappers for stocking it with red deer, caribou, moose, beavers and various specimens of the American fox. M. Menier is also developing the agricultural resources of his possession and is encouraging Frenchmen to go out and settle on his property. These have to renounce alcoholic beverages and be strict teetotalers.—League Journal.

Varying Effects of Drink.

It is a noteworthy fact that, while the more boisterous form of intemperance in England leads to private brutality and public disorder, the continental system of small dram drinking before meals in the shape of tonics and appetizers leads to insanity.—Exchange.

Occasionally a bright man who drinks gets a good job, but you soon hear that he has lost it. The boozers cannot long keep responsible positions. No man who drinks can hope to advance. There is no doubt of this. It is a wonder that so many men monkey with the buzzsaw.—Aitchison Globe.

In Belgium the Antialcoholic league issued a few months since a set of school copy books, the covers of which were illustrated with temperance pictures and statistics. They have proved so popular with schoolmasters that a second series has had to be published.—Union Signal.

It's the idea of man earning his bread by the sweat of his brow—the use of laboring for hire—for”—

Why, this man with the hoe probably had a good, steady place on the farm. Perhaps he owned it. He probably had stopped to figure out the crop. Maybe his wife took boarders and they had plenty of money."

"When you read it, my dear, you will be able to"—

"Oh, pshaw! I might just as well start in to idealize the cook, and call her 'The Girl With the Frying Pan' or 'The Woman With the Rolling Pin.'"

"Really, my dear, I think you will be able to talk before the club if you keep on."

"It's the very same thing. The cook is a laboring woman, but she is a great deal freer than I am. She has no social obligations and no calls to make or to receive. She doesn't have to spend her time dressing and talking to folks when she doesn't want to. She has a comfortable home and just as good things to eat as we have. She has two days off every week. Suppose I began to keep over her sad condition and called her 'sister to the ox.' Why, she'd give the very first thing."

"But a poet would never write about a cook."

"Well, a good cook is a lot better than a farmer who only hoes and looks sthenetic. Anyone could hoe. Why I most believe you could hoe."

"I haven't a hoe, my dear."

"That's another thing. Suppose the man didn't have a hoe? He'd have been worse off, wouldn't he? A hoe represents capital. Do you know, John, I'm pretty sure, it gets sillier every minute to think of all the sympathy that you are wasting on that man. It is 'The Man Without the Hoe' you should be sorry for."

"You are getting me around to your way of thinking, Honora. I recall now the story of a rich man who said that he started in business picking rags, but for a week or two he nearly starved because he had no money to buy a rag to pick with."

"What did he do?"

"He borrowed money enough, I believe, and 25 years after he told the story of the trouble he had getting some money to lend the money. The funniest part of it was that he said he had never said it back."

"I wonder if that man really owned the hoe, or had borrowed it?"

"Perhaps that is what he was thinking of."

"He was probably too mean to buy a hoe of his own! You know, John, I think that man was no good."

"Honora, your logic is so convincing that I am beginning to agree with you that 'The Man With the Hoe' was considerable of a gold brick."—New York Sun.

HERE IS THE POEM.

"THE MAN WITH THE HOE" AS PROF. MARKHAM WROTE IT.)

Not often, among the verses that achieve their first appearance in the columns of the daily press, do we find anything that commands such attention as Prof. Edwin Markham's "The Man With the Hoe" has aroused. The poem is an interpretation of Millet's famous painting known by that name, now in California. We quote the lines as they appeared in the San Francisco Examiner:

Bowed with the weight of centuries he leans

Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face,
And on his back the burden of the world.

Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,

Stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox?
Who loosened and let down his brutal jaw?

Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?

Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?

Is this the thing the Lord God made and gave

To have dominion over sea and land;
To trace the stars and search the heavens for power;

To feel the passion of Eternity?
Is this the Dream He dreamed who shaped the suns

And pillared the blue firmament with light?

Down all the stretch of hell to its last gulf

There is no shape more terrible than this—

More tongued with censure of the world's blind greed—

More filled with signs and portents for the soul—

More fraught with menace to the universe.

What gulfs between him and the seraphim!

Slave of the wheel of labor, what to him

Are Plato and the swing of Pleiades?
What the long reaches of the peaks of song,

The rift of dawn, the reddening of the rose?

Through this dread shape the suffering ages look;

Time's tragedy is in that aching stoop;

Through this dread shape humanity betrayed,

Plundered, profaned and disinherited,
Cries protest to the Judges of the World,

A protest that is also prophecy.

O, masters, lords and rulers in all lands,

Is this the handiwork you give to God,
This monstrous thing distorted and soul-quenched?

How will you ever straighten up this shape;

Give back the upward looking and the light;

Rebuild it in the music and the dream;
Touch it again with immortality;

Make right the immemorial infamies,
Perfidious wrongs, irredeemable woes?

O, masters, lords and rulers in all lands,

How will the Future reckon with this Man?

How answer his brute question in that hour

When the whirlwinds of rebellion shake the world?

How will it be with kingdoms and with kings—

With those who shaped him to the thing he is—

When this dumb Terror shall reply to God

After the silence of the centuries?

The name of the author if not altogether unfamiliar to readers of the Century and Scribner's Magazine, but never before has he aroused so much enthusiasm. Some of the Western papers are particularly zealous in praise, one of them, the San Jose Mercury, going so far as to term it "the strongest, most meaningful and most striking poem, with the single exception, perhaps, of Kipling's 'Recessional,' that has been written in any country in the last quarter of a century."—Literary Digest.

A Great Combine

Trusts and Combines in many lines of production, and controlling the output of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

WE HAVE ENTERED A COMBINATION

HERE IS THE PLAN

A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideals are: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price." —Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing." —Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine." —Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work." —Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it." —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none." —Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate." —Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundance of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus." —The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Naphthali Lucecock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West." —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning." —Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

PROFITABLE DUCKS.

THEY GENERALLY COMMAND HIGHER PRICES THAN CHICKENS.

Superior Points of White Pekins—Utility of Incubators in Hatching Ducks—Necessity For Green Food—Water For Drink and For Swimming.

Of all the varieties of ducks that we commonly consider profitable, writes E. O. Roessle in The Country Gentleman, the Imperial Pekin is by far the best. They are very hardy, grow fast and at 10 weeks of age should weigh five pounds. There is no secret about the process of raising them thus rapidly to such a satisfactory weight. In comparison with chickens, it will be seen how much faster they grow and consequently how much less it costs to mature them. A chicken, forced to the utmost, should weigh 1½ pounds dressed as a broiler at 12 weeks. On the other hand, a duckling forced will weigh five pounds in ten weeks. The chicken will bring in a fancy market probably 75 cents to $1 in March or April. The duckling in the same months and in the same market will bring from $1.50 to $2. In an ordinary market the chicken will bring 50 cents and the duckling at least $1. In the July market the chicken will bring 30 cents and the duckling still $1 or at the lowest 90 cents. Without going into a comparison of feed, it is self evident that it costs more to feed a chicken 12 weeks to marketable size than it does to feed a duckling ten weeks to its marketable size of five pounds, which is over three times the weight of the chicken. Even if it costs the same we produce 1½ pounds of weight on the chicken as against five pounds of weight on the duckling and in two weeks' less time.

Ducks are very prolific layers when they begin laying, which is about the first part of January. For example, a flock in full lay, say in February, should lay about 20 or 22 eggs daily for every 25 ducks. After they have been laying three weeks their eggs show a very high percentage of fertility, and it is not an unusual thing to rest a machine at 85 and 90 per cent.

WHITE PEKIN DUCK.

In an incubator—and the artificial method has almost entirely usurped the natural—ducks' eggs require more airing than hens' eggs, for the reason that their shells are thicker, and hence it is a little more difficult to develop the air cell. In other respects they are treated exactly like all hens' eggs. They may be tested on the third or fourth day, and it is surprising how strong the germ will then appear. They take 28 days to hatch, but usually begin to pip on the twenty-fifth day, and by the twenty-eighth all are out. They hatch lively and seldom stick or die in the shell. The result is that much more satisfactory hatches are obtained than from hens' eggs. I consider it quite as imperative with ducks as with chickens to leave them at least 36 hours in the bottom of the machine after all are hatched.

Brooding ducks artificially is much easier than brooding chickens. The heat in the brooder should be started at about 90 degrees, but the second day may be reduced to 80 degrees. Ducklings, unlike chickens, do not crowd in the hover, preferring to lie well separated. Where it is necessary to have fringe in front of the hover for chickens the ducklings do without it. During April, when the weather is usually milder and the brooder house is warm throughout, they will soon prefer to rest at night outside of the hover.

If they are overfed, they will receive a setback in their growth which may stunt them for a week. If by accident, therefore, they are overfed, it is best to skip a feed or two until they become hungry again. When the ducklings are 4 weeks old, four feeds a day are quite sufficient. When 6 weeks old, three feeds will be enough, but the cornmeal should be increased a little and the bran diminished. When 8 weeks old and intended for market solely, they should be fed three parts cornmeal and one part bran. After the sixth week the beef scraps may be increased, and this increase continued slightly until they have attained full weight.

Water is more important for ducklings than feed. In fact, it is a good plan to give them water first before feeding. Teach them to find the water fountain as soon as they are placed in the brooder. If they appear stupid, take a few, one at a time, and dip their bills in the water. They will soon learn the road, and the first taught will teach the rest. Water to drink must be kept before them day and night. They will drink and waste great quantities. They must have water close at hand when feeding, as it is absolutely necessary for their digestion. For young growing market ducklings water to swim in is more of an injury than a benefit. The food which is given them to convert into flesh must not be hardened into muscle by exercise in the water.

Green food is the natural food of the duck. If you have not sown rye in the fall, so that your ducks can obtain the fresh young growth early in the spring, you must substitute something in place of it, and I know of nothing better than young tender cabbage. After they are 3 weeks old they will soon strip a whole head if thrown in to them in their yards.

No one who has not raised ducklings can form any idea how fast they will grow. They seem to double their size every week.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED ?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is attended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Man does not believe in immortality because he has ever proved it, but he is ever trying to prove it because he cannot help believing it.—Rev. M. D. Shutter, Universalist, Minneapolis.

Most Manly Life.

That life is to all intents and purposes the most manly, however brief and protracted its term, into which the most usefulness is crowded.—Rev. C. P. Bridewell, Presbyterian, Atlanta.

Revelation of God.

The revelation of God as we have it in the Bible should help us to see God everywhere—in the world of nature and in the world of human life.—Rev. W. A. Wasson, Episcopalian, Brooklyn.

Living Creeds.

A living creed is the creed of a living man. The creeds of our churches are dead unless they represent what the people actually believe.

We want an international court of final appeal—the court of reason and brotherly love—with the golden rule as its code and law of action.—Rev. M. A. Matthews, Presbyterian, Jackson, Tenn.

Voice of Approbation.

No man can hope to secure the approval of his fellow man or his God without some great sacrifice, and then it is that the voice of approbation falls pleasantly on the ear.—Dr. W. F. Glenn, Editor of Wesleyan.

What We Want in Christ We Will Find.

All we want in Christ we shall find in Christ. If we want little, we shall find much, and if, in utter helplessness, we cast our all on Christ he will be to us the whole treasury of God.—Bishop Whipple, Atlanta.

True Religious Watchword.

"Upward and onward" is the true religious watchword; upward in generosity and hope and holiness; onward to the illimitable prospects of enlightened faith and the unshadowed brightness of eternal love.—Rev. W. Francis Irwin, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Mission of Christians.

The chief mission of Christians is to make men like Christ. All the light of beauty was held in the soul of John Ruskin to be used for others until the civilized world had become beautiful in his light.—Rev. George H. Perkins, Methodist, Gloucester, Mass.

Best Work.

The best work in the world was done by the men who were most keenly aware of its imperfection. God's smiles were for those who felt, though doing their best, yet felt how badly they had done. Men should be sorry not because they had failed, but because they had misrepresented their Lord.—Rev. James Mursell, Baptist, London.

Man's Debts.

The first debt of every man is a debt that he owes to himself. The second is a debt he owes to society. The third is a debt he owes to his God. Necessary to the payment of the third debt the payment of the first is an absolute necessity. To pay one's debt to himself he must think and think independently and not be frightened at the angel of doubt.—Rev. Dr. H. C. Myers, Broadway Temple, Denver.

First Church of Christ.

When the first church of Christ was organized, a love such as the world had never dreamed of or seen took possession of its members. "and the multitude that believed were of one heart and one soul, and not one of them said that aught of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common, for neither was there any among them that lacked."—Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Christian Church, Chicago.

Sacredness of Citizenship.

Oh, that Christian people could feel the sacredness of citizenship. It's the one need of the hour. With Christ as our model we would have a solution for all the ills that confront our country today. This is "Jesus Christ socialism." It's the only hope of our times. It would bridge the chasm between labor and capital. It would bring together the interests of the world. It would solve our race problems. It would give us an ideal government, and with it we could save the world.—Rev. Dr. Broughton, Baptist, Atlanta.

Use of Books.

A wise discrimination in the use of books is a valuable aid to helpful meditation. Superficial reading is a crime of the age. We ought to read hard or not at all, making the thoughts of great books pass like iron atoms into our mental constitution. Mental elevation amid material pursuits is always possible. Nor need this be an aimless reverie, which is only the vagary of thought. It is the emancipation of thought from lower levels to the nobler and the eternal. It is only when the door of the heart is closed on the human side that it becomes the oratory of heaven.—Rev. Dr. W. H. W. Boyle, Presbyterian, Colorado Springs.

True Patriot.

The true patriot is not the one who contents himself with glorifying the past. As noble as any one who dies for his country is the man who is willing to live and labor in her behalf.—Rev. Dr. George L. Perin, Every Day Church, Boston.

FREELY GIVE.

(A SONG OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY THANKSGIVING FUND.)

Give! for the past with its vast weight is pressing,
Like a full stream on the wheel of thy soul;

Back to thee swelleth a centurie's blessing,

Growing in volume with thee for its goal.

Give of thy power for down from their sources,

On thee have fallen ten thousands of prayers;

Mightier far than the lightning's swift forces,

The currents potential, thy spirit that shares.

Give! for the bright suns of summer have yellowed

Fields furrowed in anguish, and planted in tears;

Once bitter the fruitage, now sweetened and mellowed;

Full plenty has come in the wains of
the years.

Give, as the Great God above thee has given,

Scattering His bounties from tropics to pole;

Give as the Christ who surrendered all heaven

To ransom and succor the prodigal soul.

Give! Hark! the din of the world's crisis struggle,

God's hosts and Apollyon's are locked in the brunt;

List to the call of our Captain's shrill bugle—

Hurry reserves to the wavering front.

Give, and the greed which this mad world is blasting,

Blood-stained, clench-fitted, and frenzied for gold—

Cowering, rebuked by the Love Everlasting,

Shall hide its hard face from the Christ it has sold.

Give! and the century lying before you,
Nerved by your deeds shall your triumphs prolong,

Shall catch up the cries that in battle
upbore you,

And storm the last strongholds of Mammon and Wrong.

Give! and the fire that thy zeal shall engender.

Shall flame like a beacon through years that shall come,

And mariners many shall joy in its splendor,

When thou dost rest with the Father at home.

tian Guardian," Toronto Can.

OVER $1500:

The Court-Street Sunday-School
Thank-Offering has already gone over $1500. Who will follow this lead?

LOVEST THOU ME MORE THAN THESE?

There have been substantial pledges of money to make the Dewey arch permanent, and it is believed that the scheme will go through. The work will cost $500,000, and probably as much as $1,- 000,000.—Baltimore Sun.

It is said by the papers that the Dewey arch is a magnificent artistic creation, and that it ought to be made a permanent memorial of the great Admiral and his work. To do so will cost about $1,000,000, and it is confidently hoped that the money will be raised by the admirers of fine art and the Admiral.

It is said that probably 2,000,000 people went to New York to the Dewey Triumph. Putting the average amount of expenditure at the small sum of $10 each and $20,000,000 is the total. Thousands of these persons were professing Christians, who spent their money for a "good time," and to indicate their patriotism, and their admiration of Dewey. And this is but an illustration of what is being done on a smaller scale continually, and all over the country. Fairs, expositions, excursions and circuses cause great expenditure of money. Have the newspapers stressed the self-denial required, or the great tax upon the people to furnish the money to do these things? Is there great surprise expressed, or is it improbable that such things will succeed? Certainly not. They are looked upon in a matter-of-fact way, as proper and natural.

The Church today is calling upon its members to make a Thank-Offering to our gracious Heavenly Father for His wondrous care over us, and all his manifold blessings. It is intended to stand as a monument at the meeting place of the centuries. It is also to be used as the capital for the great work, which lies ahead of the Church in the third millenium, since the birth of our great Master. The amount proposed for the united Methodism of the world is about $30,000,000 less than has been spent in the one celebration of the victory of Manila Bay in honor of a man—Admiral Dewey. Is there a man anywhere who calls Jesus Christ Lord and Master who can say without disgrace to his faith and love that the amount is too great, that it cannot be raised. The daily press gives the answer to any such statement. WE CAN IF WE WILL."

If any committee of the Methodists of Richmond will put forward any such effort to make the Twentieth Century Thank Offering a success, as the committee of citizens are putting forward to make a success of the celebration of the launching of the Shubrick, the Richmond Churches could EASILY give $50,000 or $75,000 as a monument of their love and devotion to their Lord. It is not so much a question of ability. It is largely a question of love and devotion. It is almost a reflection upon our love that the leaders of the Church feared to call for over $1,500,000 from nearly 1,500,000 members. There is no real test of our consecration in an offering of that amount. We must go far beyond it. This is a test of the love to Christ of the people called Methodists. It will stand as a great fact in Church history. We can make it to be a monument of gratitude and love or a monument of ingratitude and stinginess—a monument of devotion to our Master or a monument of devotion to self! Which shall it be? "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." If we may give a double-edge to the question of our Lord to Simon: "Do we love Him more than the children of the world love their masters and heroes? Do we love Him more than we love our fleshly pleasures and our material success? Do we recognize Him as the source of all our blessings and as the winner of all our victories, both material and spiritual? Shall not our monumental offering far exceed any monuments built in honor of national achievements, or of naval or military heroes? Surely they must. And every man, woman and child must amen, and then every individual do his part in this great work shall not Virginia Methodism lead the way?"

JAMES CANNON, JR., Sec.

LOUISVILLE ACTION.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Louisville Conference at its recent session. The Conference organ has been trying to prove that nothing more can be done. The associate editor, Dr. J. W. Lewis, has actually had the rashness to assert that the whole matter was fully understood by the members of the last General Conference, and with all the facts before them, the delegates re-elected Barbee and Smith by a practically unanimous vote. Dr. Lewis, who was a member of the last General Conference, may brand himself as much as he pleases, but he must produce better proof than his own bare assertion that all the facts were known to the members of the General Conference. He knew them, and he did not rise in his seat and repudiate the despicable falsehoods of the agents, but accepted their conduct as his own; but that does not prove that others knew the facts. It is encouraging to note that his Conference was not convinced by his statements, but adopted these resolutions:

"Whereas, There has been much dissatisfaction and disturbance to the Church on account of the methods employed by our agents in collecting the Publishing House claim; and

"Whereas, We believe the conditions are such as to demand an explicit deliverance on the part of this Conference therefore

"RESOLVED, 1: That while we believe in the justness of the claim of our Church against the Government, we cannot endorse the methods by which said claim was collected. That we condemn in measured terms the duplicity of Mr. Stahlman, and deplore the misleading telegrams and other evasions of Dr. Barbee

"2: That we do not pass judgment upon the intentions of our agents, but believe their actions in this matter was not according to New Testament standards.

"3: That we believe that the best interests of the Church would be conserved by the resignation of the agents.

"4: That we are willing to leave the final settlement of this question to the next regular session of the General Conference, content for the present, to express our conviction that said General Conference action will relieve the Church, as far as may be, from any suspicion of complicity with wrong doing."

The resolutions of the Louisville Conference, given above, may have appeared in Dr. Hoss' organ, the "Nashville Advocate," but the editor has not seen them up to this writing. Why delay the publication of such important news? It is the duty of the great central organ to publish the news while it is fresh,—but it might influence the action of other Conferences against the Book Agents. Our own Conference, although keenly interested in the matter, as shown by its vote last year, would not find out from the Richmond Advocate that anybody was taking action in this matter. The following letters illustrate how men feel about this matter. The following is from a leading minister of the Baltimore Conference:

REV. JAMES CANNON—Dear Bro: I want a Church paper that gives both sides of the affairs of Church questions. I am told that you publish such a paper. If so, I want to become a subscriber. Our Conference paper and the "Nashville Advocate" suppress everything on one side. I refer specially to the Publishing House matter. The "Nashville Advocate" refers to a warm debate on the subject in the Missouri Conference, but gives no facts. If you have them in print, please begin my subscription with that number. I will send the amount of subscription when I know what it is.

Fraternally yours,

The following is from a layman in a Conference not far from Nashville:

"I am convinced that the Church is ready to welcome a paper that will encourage free speech on live subjects from the rank and file of the ministers, as well as the laity. So far as I am familiar with the Church press its mission seems to be to suppress public opinion. Instead of expressing it, the Nashville Advocate being a conspicuous example of suppression as compared to expression."

These letters, from loyal, intelligent Methodists, make one blush with shame—that is of Southern papers that these words are written. Many men have expressed surprise that every Conference in our Church has not called for the resignation of the Agents. The reason is that the people have not been informed. Men like President Carlisle have been denied the right to express their opinion in Conference organs on this, the greatest question before the Church since the war, and so the facts, in all their hideous hypocrisy, have not been revealed. But both sides will get a hearing at last.

DEMANDS IMMORTALITY.

The editor having referred in public addresses to the pathetic incidents connected with the death and funeral of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, was requested to publish the facts in the RECORDER. After some search, he found the following press dispatch in the Columns of the "Virginian" of July 26:

"New York July 25.—The funeral of the late Robert G. Ingersoll occurred this afternoon from Walston, Dobb's Ferry, where he died on Friday last.

"No clergyman was present to conduct the services; there was no music, no pallbearers. The body lay on a cot in the room where Col. Ingersoll died. It was shrouded in white and one red rose was placed on the breast. About the cot were banks of floral tributes sent by friends.

The services were held at four o'clock. Mrs. Ingersoll sat beside her dead, and with her were her daughters, Mrs. Walston H. Brown, and Miss Maud Ingersoll. They wept almost continuously. Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Farrell were present, and Charles Broadway Rouss, Col. Ingersoll's oldest friend, occupied a chair by the side of the bier. There were some forty others present.

The intense silence was broken by Dr. John Clark Ridpath, who, in a voice full of emotion, said:

"My friends, It is a very sad duty to read, in the presence of the dead, the last poem written by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, entitled, 'Declaration of the Free.'"

"This poem Col. Ingersoll read and altered a few hours before he was stricken down.

"Major O. J. Smith, who resides in Dobb's Ferry, and who was a close personal friend of Col. Ingersoll, read another extract from Col. Ingersoll's writings, entitled 'My Religion.'

"Dr. John Elliott, of New York, read the funeral oration delivered by Colonel Ingersoll over his brother's body.

"This concluded the services. Nearly all present then took a parting look at the dead and passed out. After they had gone Mr. Rouss arose and, as he is blind, passed his hand over the face of his departed friend, and said:

"Perhaps he is better now. No one can understand it."

"Mrs. Ingersoll said to him;

"The Colonel wanted you to put your hand upon his heart, and suiting the action to the word, she directed his hand to the left breast of the deceased.

"Mr. Rouss asked what she was going to do with the remains.

"I cannot give him up," she said, "I cannot put him in the ground. I can't bear to think of it. We're going to bring him back home."

"The body was cremated."

Who can read the above without feeling that the human heart DEMANDS IMMORTALITY for its dead, and cannot be satisfied with any mere dirt philosophy. God has made us, and has implanted within us the hunger for a future life. We may do violence to our nature, we may have fine-spun theories of materialism, agnosticism, and what not, but matter and spirit will continue to be different in their nature, and the spirit will never be satisfied with a death that destroys itself or another spirit. Our own hearts combine with God's revealed Word, and demands immortality.

"SHE LOVED MUCH."

Our Lord, in the incident of Simon, the Pharisee and the woman, who washed and anointed his feet, shows us very clearly that in His opinion, love will certainly manifest itself by its acts of service toward the loved object. If there are no deeds, there is no love; if few deeds, little love.

The Church today is on trial before Heaven and earth. God has providentially brought before His children an opportunity to manifest the sincerity and depth of its professions of gratitude and love. Many, who, like Simon, the Pharisee, have been blessed with social position and this world's goods, are sitting off in a critical, half-scornful spirit and have done nothing at all to indicate any gratitude, devotion or love to their Lord. Some are saying that they do not believe in all this talk about gifts and money until they see some signs of spiritual revival. That was just like the Pharisee. He did not want to see the loving service of this woman. She was a sinner. She must not bring gifts. But the Master, looking through both the heart of Simon and of the woman, said: "She Loved Much." She has shown it by her service to me. So, today, the gifts are the evidence of the spiritual revival. Those who give little for their means, love little; and those who love much, give much.

The following from Bishop Hendrix in reference to the Brazil Mission Conference deserves to be carefully read and absorbed by our people. These Brazilian Methodists "love much," and they are showing it by their gifts:

"The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Brazil in ten charges having contributed during forty days the sum of over $10,000 for their thank offering for the Gospel and its untold blessings, some of the details attending the visits and services preceeding this noble liberality may be alike interesting and instructive. The entire membership of the Church in Brazil being less than 2,400, of which 400 were added this year, it will be seen that their thank offering, if equalled by the entire Church, would give us over $6,000,000. But inasmuch as the members of our Church in Brazil are aiming to increase the sixty-two contos of reis to one hundred contos, which is some $16,600 in our money, or an average of $7 per member, should they succeed, and be followed by the entire Church, our thank offering would exceed $10,000,000. They have already nearly reached the guinea ($5 25) per member that is being sought for by our Wesleyan brethren, and there seems such an intelligent and widespread enthusiasm as to justify the belief that by the time these lines are in print the subscription in Brazil will have reached nearly a pound, if not a guinea, per member. If they reach only $5 per member, they challenge the entire Church to do as well, and thus raise the sum of $7,500,000. This means that they contribute $12,000, with already $10,300 secured in good subscriptions, and advances of fresh subscriptions being made daily."

Shall not Virginia Methodists equal the contributions of these converts on the mission field, and so have the Master say of our Conference, "She Loved Much."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

COURT-STREET'S RALLY.

The attendance on the fifth annual Rally Day service of Court-Street Methodist Sunday school Sunday morning was the largest recorded in its history. The benches were placed very close together and scores of chairs were crowded in the aisles and every available nook and corner of the room. Major J. Yates and his corps of able lieutenants most graciously received and seated the vast throng.

Mr. E. F. Sheffey, the superintendent, presided, and read at intervals during the rendition of the splendid program "tidings from the field," in the form of messages from former members of the Sunday-school, now residing in distant parts of the country.

The program began with a selection by the orchestra, composed of Prof. G. Ottiano, conductor. Piano—Prof. W. Saunders Adams. Organ—Miss Henrietta M. Pettyjohn. Violins—Mr. P. O. Adams and Prof. G. Ottiano and pupils. Clarinet—Mr. R. Funi. Flute—Prof. H. L. Farmer. Cornet—Mr. G. Foythress. Trombone—Mr. W. E. Braton.

After prayer by Mr. R. Pollard, other features of the program, interspersed with hymns by the school, were rendered as follows: Responsive scriptural reading; roll call by Mr. Geo. H. Pollard, secretary; missionary offering and written lesson reviews; flower song, orchestra; recitation, Susie Dawson; "Sixty Years of Sunday-school Work and Growth," by J. T. Wightman, D. D.; "The Sunday-school Not a Substitute for Home Instruction," by Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D.; quartette, "Lord, We Pray Thee," sung by Mrs. W. J. Seabury, Marion Y. Jackson, Mr. D. T. Walker, and Mr. Walker Pettyjohn; "Some of the Needs of Our Sunday-school," by Mr. E. C. Glass; "Looking for Court-Street Church," reading by Col. J. B. Gregory; department recitations, primary, Frank Gilliam; intermediate, Nannie Glass and Murrell Alexander; senior, Miss Mary Patterson and Mr. Wm. R. Perkins; veteran class, Captain James Franklin, Jr.; Home Department, Mrs. E. S. Brown. Then came a distribution of souvenirs, and the benediction by Rev Dr. R. M. Saunders.

It was announced that the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering of the school already amounted to $1,580.85, 441 members of the cradle roll, main school and Home Department having contributed on average of 23.58 each, every officer and teacher making an offering. The name of every contributor was found printed in the lovely twenty page brochures distributed as souvenirs to all who were present. These booklets are believed to be the handsomest ever given by any school to its members and friends. On the first page of the cover was printed "Souvenir Fifth Annual Rally Day of the Sunday-School of Court-Street M. E. Church, South, and the Excursion to Niagara Falls, Sept. 14-16, 1899." A beautiful wood cut monogram (C. S. S. S. M. E. C. S.) appears on second page of cover; while beautiful cabinet-size half-tone pictures of Dr. A. Coke Smith, pastor, and Rev. J. T. Wightman, D. D., associate pastor, appear on the first page proper. Following these come in the order named, "A Sketch of Court-Street Sunday-School, 1851-1899, by Miss Cornelia W. Brown; a lovely primary page with class picture of 100 or more of the "tiny tots;" a page devoted to thy various societies of the Church, officers, time of meeting, etc., the officers of the Sunday school and its organization, with a half-tone picture of a lovely Junior Class of 1897. The history of the new Church movement, by a member of the Building Committee followed by the poetry read by Col. James B. Gregory, "A Stranger in the City Looking for Court-Street Church."

Two superb half tone cuts of Niagara Falls are printed also.

Then follows a history of the school's great outing to Niagara Falls, September 14; a large picture of the fourteen committeemen who conducted the great excursion; Mrs. E. D. Gregory's splendid account of the unprecedented trip as printed in the news of September 19th; poem, "The Maid of the Mist," by Mr. H. C. Snead and a fac simile page from souvenir distributed aboard the "Sunshine Special" and "Niagara Flyer," September 16, on which is produced a distinct picture of over 500 members of the school.

The most remarkable scenic effect ever produced in the decoration of the Sunday-school room was brought about through the genius of Mr. John H. Seay, chairman of the decoration committee, who was ably aided in the execution of his idea by Mrs. Peter Ainslie, Miss Ruth Jennings, Miss Annie L. Forsberg, Miss Josephine Murrell and Major J. T. Yates.

The reproduction of the "horse-shoe" falls of Niagara was so real, (rainbow cliffs, rapids above the falls, etc.) that Dr. Wightman was led to remark in his address that sixty years ago Niagara Falls was a great ways off and difficult of access. Now the Falls had been brought to the school.

In the language of one who has passed the age of three score and ten and why has taught consecutively in this school longer than any other "Court-Street never gave such a grand rally before," and a tremendous impetus was given to the general work of the school, and the building of the new Church, which the Quarterly Conference recently determined upon.

The school is now larger than ever before and numbers in its various departments 690, ten new scholars having been added to the roll Sunday morning.—News.

MEMORIAL WINDOW.

Rev. Dr. W. J. Young, pastor of Epworth M. E. Church, has been presented by his congregation with a beautiful memorial window, which has just been placed in memory of his two daughters, who died at Ashland while the Doctor was professor at Randolph-Macon College. These most interesting and lovely girls, Marguerite and Jessica, died just two days apart of diphtheria. The window to their memory has been placed on the northern side of the edifice and has on it the following inscription:

"This window is here placed by this congregation in memory of Marguerite Young, January 2d, 1885—November 2d, 1891; Jessica Young, May 10th, 1886—November 2d, 1891, children of Rev. W. J. Young, D. D."

The subject of the window is the angel Raphael, known as the Guardian Angel. The following condensed account of Raphael is taken from Tobit and the Book of Enoch: Raphael (meaning Divine Healer or Medicine of God) is one of the seven Holy Angels who presents the prayers of the saints, the conductor of Tobit and Chief Guardian Angel; also Guardian of the pilgrims and wayfarers. His dress as depicted in the window is that of a pilgrim; sandals on his feet, the pilgrim's staff, with water bottle in one hand while in the other he carries a fish, "the fishy charm" against evil spirits.—Virginian-Pilot.

THIRD ANNUAL RALLY.

The third annual rally of the Centenary Methodist Sunday-school took place Sunday morning in the Sunday-school room, which was well-filled with friends and members of the Church. After singing by the school, prayer by the pastor and Bible reading by Mr. John P. Bell, an interesting programme was well carried out. Among the principle numbers were a speech on "Sending Missionaries," by Edmund Burge, a selection by six little girls entitled, "What Would You Do For Others?" a recitation by Miss Ethel Offerding, and a missionary song by Miss Florine Maloney. The topic, "How a scholar may help his or her teacher," was discussed by the scholars, while a number of interesting short talks on "The requisites that go to make up an all round good teacher," were made by the teachers, participated in by both ladies and gentlemen.—News.

BRETHREN, LET US STOP IT.

I mean this flattering, fulsome resolution business at the close of Annual Conferences to bishops, at the close of presiding elders' terms to presiding elders by District and Quarterly Conferences and at the close of pastoral terms by Quarterly Conferences to pastors. We have run the thing in the ground. We are doing even worse—positive harm.

1. This whole complimentary resolution business is contrary to the spirit of our Lord's teaching. If he were in our midst today He would condemn it. Listen: "Doth He thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him. I trow not. So likewise ye, when you shall have done all those things that were commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants: We have done that which it was our duty to do."—Luke 17, 9-10.

If our Lord should appear on the scene sometime when we are standing upon some of these fulsome resolutions, and we were to hear Him tell of our short comings, of our sins of omission, and even actual transgression, I expect that we would all soon be down in the dust and ashes of humility, crying to Him for mercy.

The Pharisee stood up in the temple and told God of his good character and good deeds and justified himself—passed some resolutions on himself, and I expect his neighbors would have stood upon some eulogistic resolutions had somebody offered them on this Pharisee; but God passed him by and justified the Publican that smote upon his breast and said, "God be merciful to me, a sinner."

It is an exceedingly difficult thing for bishops and presiding elders and pastors to feel that they are unprofitable when a great Conference of preachers and laymen stand up and say that they are not. We are most certain to take the flatteringunction to our soul that we are profitable—very profitable.

2. And then we sometimes say things in these complimentary resolutions that we do not really mean.

A bishop presided over one of the sessions of our Conference. Judging by the criticisms that were made on the outside, he made a most unfavorable impression on nearly everybody. I heard the severest criticisms of his sermon. Members of the Conference said it was not worthy of the occasion or of a Bishop. His address to the candidates for deacon's orders came in for a lot of the same sort of criticism. A brainy brother, now a presiding elder, told me that it fell far below any address of the kind that he had ever heard. Members complained that his rulings were arbitrary—that his whole spirit was censorious. I am confident that nine-tenths of the members of the Conference, in private circles, had some adverse criticism to make on his preaching, his address, his rulings or his spirit.

But we are in the resolution business and resolve we must, and resolve we did, and said among other complimentary things that "We will always welcome him heartily among us."

I do not know how much mental reservation each man kept out of his vote, but I do know that the resolution and the criticisms varied greatly, and the minutes say "the resolution was adopted by a UNANIMOUS rising vote."

We have had bishops to preside over our Conference that came up to our ideal of what a bishop should be, but the bishop under consideration was not one of them by far, but we resolved on him all the same.

Within the last half of the present century a certain brother, that shall be nameless here, came almost to the close of his term as officer in a high place in the Church. He had been in the office for a number of years. It is generally admitted that he was well-nigh a dead failure in the chief thing that pertains to office. But his time was about out. To resolve was in order. To resolve that he had met the most important conditions of his office was out of the question. So they resolved on his manners. To those who could read between the lines of that resolution it was positively amusing.

That resolution recalled the preacher at the old-time funeral—in the days when they preached the funeral of saint and sinner, and it was expected that something good ought to be said about the dead—the friends and family would be offended if the good words were omitted. The preacher had a tough subject to eulogize. There was no good trait in the deceased man's character. Custom, however, demanded that something good be said. The sermon was drawing to a close. The time for the words of praise to be spoken had arrived. The preacher cleared his throat and said: "Our friend was not so exemplary in his life as he should have been. He did not measure up to the demands of God's law, but all must admit that he was a good MATHEMATICIAN."

I say again brethren, let us quit those who deserve these compliments, if any deserve them, do not need them, and those that need them do not deserve them. But if the deserving ones do receive them, then the others think they ought to have them, too. And it cannot be denied that some need them very much.

Of course somebody is going to offer these complimentary resolutions, and the only way to stop them, as I see it, is for those who oppose them to sit politely down on them.

I do not mean by anything in this article to intimate remotely that a word of cheer, on one's own individual responsibility, is always out of order. If a brother's message has been a blessing to our hearts, let him know it. But a word of good cheer, at an opportune time, is altogether different from these made-to-order, fulsome resolutions that we have run in the ground.

The session of the Conference at which I was admitted some resolutions were offered complimenting the venerable bishop who presided. He said he generally suppressed resolutions of that sort, but he did allow those to pass. I devoutly wish that he had suppressed them. I regret exceedingly that he allowed them to pass for a precedent was set and a precedent is a powerful law. We can abolish it, however, if we steadfastly set our faces against it.

YOUNG CHRISTIANS ADRIFT.

No one thinks of studying any subject without a text book. But many a young man or woman determines to be a Christian, and unless they get into the word of God, they so often take the wrong road and lose the way, for a short time at least, because they have no guide book. Many a young man or woman is welcomed into the Church and then turned loose on the sea of life without chart or compass, so far as making the work of the voyage is concerned. In large Churches, and even in small ones, the pastor does not have time to keep in personal touch with young Christians. Until the acceptance of Christ many are solicitous for the welfare of young men and women, but strange as it may seem, all or nearly all of this interest dies out as soon as they surrender.

To meet these needs "Chats With Young Christians" has been published. There are a dozen chats, the reading of each requiring about ten minutes. The author is Dr. Louis Albert Banks, the widely known author of many spiritually helpful books. The talks were delivered to a class of young men and women, about eighty in number, who had accepted Christ during some special services.

It is the only book of the kind published recently, and any pastor putting a copy in the hands of a young Christian will be doing him a helpful service.

"I HAVE CALLED FOR YOUR BOY."

Five millions of boys in the United States between the ages of ten and twenty. The saloon needs 2,000,000 of them to continue business.

"I have come for your boy!"

"Can't you afford one?"

This drunkard factory is a great industry, established and protected by the Government of the United States, and most of our State Governments. It cannot run unless the owners can get raw material. "Pass along your red-cheeked boy, please!" "Which one of your boys will you send?" "The saloon wants your boy!"—Exchange.

NO CHOICE.

An old Scotch spinster, being very ill, sent for her minister to pray at her bedside. "Aweel Janet," said the worthy man, "you'll soon be in heaven the noo." "Yes, meenister," replied Janet, "I'll soon be layin' in Lazarus' bosom." "Abraham's bosom, Janet," remonstrated the minister. "Hoots, mon!" said Janet, ruffled. "Gin ye had been a lone single woman for ower seventy years, ye'd no' be that particular about the bosom."

NOT UP TO EXPECTATION.

A small Chicago girl ended her evening prayer as follows:

"And please, O Lord, take care of yourself, too. If anything should happen to you, we couldn't have anyone but McKinley to depend on, and he isn't doing as well as pa expected."—Woman's Journal.

Bishop Ninde, in speaking of the utter lack of any knowledge of warfare among the Chinese, says: "Imagine one going to war with a bird cage in one hand and a fan in the other." Many make an inadequate preparation for Christian warfare.

In the late war of Japan with China, complaint was made that Christians (converted Japanese) served a King, so we would not make such loyal, interested soldiers, but they proved the bravest of the brave; they were not afraid to die.—Bishop Ninde, in Current Anecdotes.

LESSON V, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 29.

Text of the Lesson, Ps. lxxx and cxxvi. Memory Verses, Ps. cxxvi—Golden Text, Ps. cxxvi, 5—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

I suppose the safe journeyings of Ezra and his company in the lesson of last week suggested these songs of deliverance as a suitable topic before entering upon the study of Nehemiah, but why these two psalms the committee probably know. As they all speak of Him, however, we shall have a profitable meditation. Spurgeon, in his "Treasury of David," suggests the following division of Ps. lxxxv: In verses 1-4 the poet sings of the Lord's former mercies and begs Him to remember His people; from 5-7 he pleads the cause of afflicted Israel, and then, having listened to the sacred oracle in verse 8, he publishes joyfully the tidings of future good—9-13. Praise to God is always comely, and we read in Neh. xii, 46, "In the days of David and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God." The sons of Korah mentioned in the title had great reason to praise God and lead the people's praises, for when Korah and the others were swallowed up the children of Korah died not (Num. xxi, 11).

1-4. There is on earth a land and a people which, above all other lands and people, are specially the Lord's. He calls them His peculiar people, a holy people unto Himself, a people near unto Him, the dearly beloved of His soul and many other endearing names (Deut. vii, 6; xxvi, 18; Ps. cxlviii, 14; Jer. xii, 7). As to the land, it is called the holy land, the Lord's land, a delightful land, Immanuel's land, etc. (Zech. ii, 12; Hos. ix, 3; Mal. iii, 12; Isa. viii, 8). They were naturally few, stiff necked, laden with iniquity, rebellious, lying (Deut. vii, 7; Ex. xxxiii, 3, 5; Isa. i, 4; xxx, 9), but He redeemed them from Egypt and gave them the good land, yet they understood not His wonders nor remembered His mercies, they despised the pleasant land and believed not His word, so that many a time He saved them for His name's sake and redeemed them from the hand of the enemy (Ps. cvi, 7, 8, 10, 24). He will yet redeem them from all lands, blot out all their sins and make them a righteous nation forever (Mic. vii, 19, 20; Zeph. iii, 19, 20). Meantime He will accept every penitent sinner who comes to Him and will, for Jesus' sake, blot out all their sins and make them righteous in His sight (John vi, 37; II Cor. v, 21).

5-7. Then shall Israel say when He shall have redeemed them, Thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me. Behold God is my salvation (Isa. xii, 1, 2). Salvation is of the Lord (Jonah ii, 9) in its beginning, development and consummation. See this in the words, Turn us, revive us, shew us (verses 4, 6, 7). We would never turn to Him if He did not draw us by His Spirit. It is all His mercy and His salvation (verse 7) which we receive as His gift and gratefully enjoy, so that we may well rejoice in Him, saying, "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God (Isa. lxi, 10; Hab. iii, 18).

8. If we will listen only to the voice of God, we shall have naught but peace, for He is the God of peace, and the Son of God is the prince of peace (Heb. xiii, 20; Isa. ix, 6). All His thoughts to His people are thoughts of peace, for He is our peace, and any one whose imagination is staid on Him will have perfect peace (Jer. xxix, 11; Eph. ii, 14; Isa. xxvi, 3). It is all because of His righteousness which we by faith receive (Isa. xxxii, 17; Rom. v, 1). Peace with God is His gift in Christ Jesus, but the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, depends upon our allowing nothing to come between Him and us, casting every care and anxiety upon Him (Phil. iv, 6, 7). If we know Him who is our peace, we are bound to make the good news known to all people (Luke ii, 10, 14).

9-13. The writer has his heart upon what he calls "our land" (verses 9, 12), for it is to that land and to the holy city that all nations are yet to go up from year to year (Jer. iii, 17; Zech. xiv, 16). There mercy and truth, righteousness and peace, heaven and earth, met in Him who was and is true God and true man. There He shall yet reign as King of Israel and as King of kings and Lord of lords, and then when God has blessed His people and His land His saving health will be known among all nations (Ps. lxxvii). The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will do it. These are not David's thoughts, but God's thoughts, for he said, "The spirit of the Lord speaks by men, and His word was in my tongue" (II Sam. xxiii, 2). The Lord Himself has said that He will not rest till Israel's redemption is manifest before all nations, and He calls upon His people to give Him no rest till He does it (Isa. lxii, 1, 6, 7).

Ps. cxxvi. Many a time did the Lord deliver His people from their oppressors in the days of the Judges when He raised up and used such men as Othniel, Gideon, Jephthah, Samson and Samuel. After the time of David He delivered them from Babylon, and soon now will He deliver them from all the nations among which they are scattered, and their prosperity and source of blessing to all nations after their restoration is fully described in such passages as Isa. xxxv, 10; Jer. xxxii, 41, 42; xxxiii, 5, 6; Ezek. xxxvii, 21-28. All these things will He do to them and for them, not for their sakes, but for His own name's sake.

2, 3. It is becoming in us not only to consider how great things He hath done for us, but also to talk of all His wondrous works (I Sam. xii, 24; Ps. cv, 2), for if we do not tell how great things He has done for us (Mark v, 19) is it not, to say the least, very ungrateful? Israel shall yet say one to the other, "Praise the Lord, proclaim His name, declare His doings among the people, make mention that His name is exalted" (Isa. xii, 4). And every saint should be continually doing this.

4. What He purposes to do He wishes us to ask Him to do. It may seem strange, but it is His way. See Ezek. xxxvi, 37; Isa. lxii, 1, 6, 7. It is His pleasure that we should desire Him to do that which He proposes to do, and, if we do not desire it earnestly, where is the fellowship with Him which is our privilege? And yet indifference to Him and His affairs is a common characteristic of so many who bear His name.

5, 6. There is no end of weeping here, but there will be no end of joy in His kingdom. All our sorrow shall be turned into joy (John xvi, 20). Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 29, "Giving a Measure of Love." Text, Mark xii, 41-44.

"She threw in two mites."

The widow's gift has become historic. The duty to give in proportion to one's possessions is becoming more clear to many Christians. Some are giving one-tenth of their income. Others are finding that they are able to live on less than nine-tenths of their income and are gladly using a larger proportion for the direct work of God in the world. There are many who have found themselves greatly prospered in material as well as spiritual lines since they adopted a course of systematic and proportionate giving. It is certain that the Scriptures commend and in many places command this practice.

The chief obstacles to the adoption of the practice by all the people of the League and church lie in the dislike of binding oneself down to rules and general carelessness in regard to methods and means of grace.

A still more serious difficulty lies in the taste for luxuries and dislike of sharp self denial. Many young people and workingmen with large families find the expenses of living and the small wages received make it very hard work to lay up any surplus. To give away cash when there are so many things they want themselves is asking too much. So the collection box passes unnoticed. These are the people who will always feel uncomfortable when subscriptions are asked for. Some will resent it as "continual begging."

But the widow who gave the two mites belonged to the class of the poor workers. She found her soul hunger for God's service more imperative than the need for food. Her tribe has never become extinct. There are multitudes of the poor, some very poor, whose hands are always open to the needy and who will give to others even if their giving means the halving of their last loaf. Covetousness is no more a matter of quantity than is generosity. Stinginess is not a matter of dollars and cents, but of inner spirit. We need to cultivate generous feeling toward others and to let our sympathy get into our purses.

"The Leakage and How to Stop It."

Such is the title of a small pamphlet by Rev. Thomas F. Rawlins published by the Wesleyan Book Room, London. It is a prize essay and deals with a problem similar to the one which has been agitating the Methodist Episcopal church for some months past. All denominations have awakened to the fact that additions to their membership have decreased rapidly and alarmingly. Search has been made diligently for the cause. Many defects have been pointed out, and the fault has been variously ascribed and many remedies suggested.

Jonathan's case. He has to be driven into doing anything good," replied Mrs. Rose.

"My dear sister, God blessed just such means to the conversion of my husband, and I know He will do the same for you, if you only trust Him. Promise me, dear sister, you will try this 'better way.'"

She reluctantly gave a part promise. The next day Mrs. Gray departed.

Mrs. Rose felt the truth of her sister's words. She had, indeed, magnified her husband's faults. Then she suddenly remembered that he had never spoken a harsh word to her, and she determined to try a portion of her sister's advice.

"But just to think of kissing him, makes me feel foolish," she said to herself. "And as to praying audibly in his presence every night, I don't see the use of it."

It was a hard matter at first, to curb her tongue, for at every petty annoyance the harsh words sprang to her lips, but she did restrain them, and the result was marvellous. Jonathan quickly noticed her changed language and manner, but said nothing, though it produced more effect upon him than all the scourgings he had received. He became more attentive to her desires, and frequently surprised her by anticipating them. The next spring, he took a day and cleaned up the unsightly yard. A few months later, a neat iron fence replaced the dilapidated wooden structure. In the fall, the house seemed fairly to smile in a new dress of paint. Their hearts were both softened, and their lives sweetened by the Spirit of Love.

Each new step into the kingdom of love made the next one easier. Frequently caresses were exchanged. By successive stages, Mrs. Rose led the way to the new life. She began reading aloud from the Bible, a chapter before retiring. A few nights later, she ventured an audible prayer, short and broken, but none the less effective on that account. A tremulous complaint of being lonesome evenings without him, caused a permanent vacancy in his chair at the grocery.

One Sunday morning he surprised her by accepting her invitation to go to church. Although he did not become a steady church-goer at once, the habit grew.

Having acquired the habit of remaining at home evenings, he found himself lonesome on the night of the weekly prayer meeting, so he accompanied his wife, rather than to be left alone. When a person begins to accustom himself to visiting the house of God, he is surely approaching God's kingdom.

Mrs. Rose's happiness was completed when the victory in that battle for a soul was won, and her husband acknowledged Christ as his Savior, and united with the church. Her sister, also, was delighted to receive the following letter from her:

My Dear Sister Eliza:

I am so glad to tell you that as a result of the revival meetings now in progress here Jonathan and many others have come out on the Lord's side and taken the Savior into their hearts. "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The gift of a Buddhist temple to the Ningpo Mission is an unprecedented incident in the history of missions. The villagers were not only willing it should be used as a preaching hall and school, but would convey it by a legal deed of gift.

ANSWERED PRAYER.

There is now in Crozier Seminary, studying for the ministry, a young man whose faith in God is positive in his life as will be seen in the following incident:

Three or four years ago he passed through the severest test that occurred in his college life. Dependent entirely upon his own efforts for finances, there came a time in his Junior year when cash became very scarce, and fifty dollars was necessary to finish the year. Unless it came from some unexpected source he could only see before him the prospect of dropping his studies at a critical time. He told his troubles to none but God. He was willing to quit college and work, but to borrow he would not. Still he was impressed that God wanted him to remain in school, and it would be useless to attempt any other way.

At last his funds were exhausted. Instead of going to his classes he spent the entire forenoon in his room mostly in praying for Divine direction and help. His mind was about made up to leave in the afternoon in search of employment, but there came to him an important letter in the noon mail. It was from a wealthy Christian lady to whom he had some months before been introduced. Her letter read as follows:

"Dear Brother—Mr. B. recently told me of your heroic struggle to obtain an education. The Lord has created in my heart a desire to help you, and I therefore enclose a check. May God Bless and keep you."

The check was for fifty dollars. Having been merely introduced to her, and she being of a different denomination and having so many demands upon her benevolence, the young man has never doubted but that her action was a direct answer to his prayer.

THE FATHER'S LOVE.

There lived in western Pennsylvania a family whose eldest son left home and became a wanderer, nearly twenty-two years ago. At first, letters came often from him; then less frequently, and finally not at all. As he moved frequently from place to place, all trace of him was lost. Somewhat more than a year ago, the father and mother finding life's sun sinking low, and desiring to see the lost boy again, sent his youngest brother in search of him.

The parents being aged, and in poor circumstances, this expensive journey of the younger son, meant great sacrifice to them. At the same time it was genuine proof of their love for and devotion to the prodigal. All the important towns and cities of Washington and Oregon were visited, but seemingly in vain. Concluding that if still alive his brother had gone to the Klondike, the search-year was turned his face homeward.

Six months later a stranger alighted from the train and walked up the street of the Pennsylvania village. Nobody seemed to know him. He carried in memory for over a score of years, the scenes of joy and rejoicing that followed his return. He was a humble home and stepped across its threshold. He was a humble home and stepped across its threshold. He was a humble home and stepped across its threshold.

GOD ANSWERS PRAYER.

A well-known evangelist in an exchange of letters of a most remarkable conversion.

Just out of Boston a young girl came to me to say: "Do you believe that God would save my mother, if my mother and I should pray all the night for him?"

"I told her I believed that God had put the question in her mind, and that I should advise her to put Him to the test."

She told me afterward that they returned from the meeting at 10 o'clock, and that they began their prayer at that hour. They continued in prayer until midnight, and until 2 o'clock, and almost 3. Then, believing that God had heard, and would answer, they went to sleep.

That young man was converted that night, and has ever since been a consistent member of the church.

POINTED FACTS.

Love lifts us up to the lowliest tasks in His name.

It is those who live nearest Him who have most power to wound their Lord.

When the affections are on things above the heart receives a heavenly gravitation.

Some church collections seem to treat God as though He were Dives at the gate.

Even the sounding brass has its place in life's great orchestra; the trouble is, it usually thinks it is the whole band.

If God could have His picture taken, some people with creeds would think Him homely.

If other folks were what we know they ought to be, and we were what we think we are, how changed the world would be.

A WORD SPOKEN IN DUE SEASON

THE RESULT OF SISTERLY ADVICE

"H, dear, I do get tired sweeping up the dirt that you track in. Why can't you change your shoes at the door?" and Mrs. Rose grabbed the broom and proceeded to sweep the floor, all the while continuing to scold.

The cause of this outburst was the entrance of her husband, Jonathan Rose, who had brought in some traces of the dampness of the weather, on his shoes.

"There you are spattering water all over everything? Can't you even wash without making a spraying machine of yourself?" and as the husband moved toward the towel, his energetic wife seized a cloth and proceeded to remove the signs of Jonathan's ablution.

They were seated at the dinner table, when Mrs. Rose exclaimed:

"That fence is a disgrace. A man that had any sense of decency wouldn't have such a fence around a barnyard. I should think you might build a new one, and look at our yard! It is perfectly awful."

During the entire meal time, Mr. Rose was compelled to hear an harangue about old fences and untidy yards. When his meal was finished, he arose from the table, seized his hat and hastily departed to his afternoon's toil.

Supper was a repetition of the dinner scene. Immediately after supper Jonathan inquired if there was anything needed from the stores, but his spouse began a philippic against loafers, and a plea for forsaken wives, which Jonathan did not want to hear. Arrived at the grocery, he spent the evening discussing the day's happenings with neighbors who congregated there.

Such was a typical day in the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Rose. They had been married ten years, and were childless. He was a farmer's son, and she a farmer's daughter. Upon their marriage they had settled in the neighboring village of K—, Mr. Rose doing such work for a living, as he could find. By economy they had become owners of a small home, the appearance of which was a constant vexation to the tidy housewife, though Jonathan made such improvements as his scanty earnings would permit.

Mrs. Rose had implicit confidence in the power of a sharp tongue. She believed that that instrument, properly worked, would infuse some of her energy into her easy-going husband, and she seized every opportunity to demonstrate the truth of her theory.

Sunday morning she had a different theme. She was a very active church worker, and when energetic service was required, she was ready to perform her part. However, she accompanied her services with pungent observations respecting the disposition to shirk displayed by others. Did the church need cleaning, she was there with mop and brush, and such as assistance as she could rally. Were there but I think you yourself, are the cause of your own defeat. Don't take offense, dear, if I say you magnify Mr. Rose's defects too much. Better far to magnify his good qualities. When he comes home, greet him lovingly with a kiss; pray unceasingly for his salvation and every night let him hear you pray. Ask him kindly to attend church with you, and be persistent in your invitations. Many opportunities will be found for winning him to Christ, if you will only seek them in the Master's loving spirit."

One thing that troubled her greatly was her husband's lack of religious sentiment. He could not be driven into a serious veneration for holy things. His wife had applied her sovereign remedy, but, instead of driving him into a religious frame of mind, it had driven him away from it.

Sunday morning she would begin thus: "I wish I had a husband to go to church with me. You're too shiftless to get ready. I might as well have a dummy from the dry goods store for a husband. I wish you would have a little snap about you, and do something decent once in a while."

Usually Jonathan would cut her tirade short by leaving the house. To his credit, he never vouchsafed a reply to her pointed disquisitions.

One night, when Mr. Rose came home from work, he handed his wife a letter. Upon reading it, she gave an exclamation of pleasure, and, for the moment, forgot to look for foot-prints on the floor.

"My dear sister, Eliza is coming," she said. "She will be here tomorrow evening. We haven't met for ten years. Oh, how glad I am." And for once in her married life she really forgot to scold. The next evening Mrs. Rose met her sister at the depot, and the two, who had been so long separated, looked into each other's faces once more.

Mrs. Gray was a rare Christian woman. All her life seemed dominated by the Master's loving spirit. Sympathy for the suffering, and a ready hand to aid the unfortunate, were the means by which she kept her life in accord with heavenly things. The two weeks that the sisters spent together were delightful weeks.

The day before they were to part, they were exchanging confidences.

"I am completely discouraged," said Mrs. Rose. "I have been trying to get Jonathan to attend church ever since our marriage, but success seems farther distant than ever."

"Have you tried, my dear sister?" inquired Mrs. Gray. "Was the plan you employed last Sunday a sample of your missionary work?"

She acknowledged that it was.

"Don't you think dear, that you ought to try another plan? I would so like to see you succeed in accomplishing your desire."

"But I think you yourself, are the cause of your own defeat. Don't take offense, dear, if I say you magnify Mr. Rose's defects too much. Better far to magnify his good qualities. When he comes home, greet him lovingly with a kiss; pray unceasingly for his salvation and every night let him hear you pray. Ask him kindly to attend church with you, and be persistent in your invitations. Many opportunities will be found for winning him to Christ, if you will only seek them in the Master's loving spirit."

"That might do in some cases, but I don't believe it would be of any use in

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The growth of Young People's societies has been rapid and their work prominent at the time of this difficulty in the church. This writer gives the causes of decline as—

1. Premature reckoning of persons as full members.
2. Absence of public recognition of new members.
3. Dissatisfaction with class meeting.
4. Neglect of leaders to visit absentee members.
5. Lack of assurance of acceptance with God.
6. Removals without letters.

In his remedies he suggests no new methods, but a working of the present machinery, a return to earnest working of Methodist rules. He declares from happy experience that it is entirely adequate. The tract would do our Leaguers good.

A Modern Missionary.

Distance is needed to see many objects in due proportion and proper setting. So of men. Too near to them, we often miss some essential features and miscalculate their worth as too great or too little. After a century has solidified and settled the work he did John Wesley looms up in history, grander in proportion and finer in mold than ever before. The Spectator of London, one of the most ably conducted and influential publications of the world, recently had a long article on Wesley and his work, in which higher estimate is placed upon his character and influence than has been usual in the highest literary circles of Britain.

WESLEY CENTENARY STATUE.

Shakespeare and Wesley are named as the greatest of Englishmen. As the labors of the latter were religious mainly and the former is known only in his literary work, the Methodist of Epworth and Oxford must ever rank superior to even the bard of Stratford-on-Avon.

It is not too much to say that but for the Wesleys and their associates in the last century there is little doubt that England must have suffered from a revolution more bloody and brutal than that which deluged France with blood in the mad struggle of the masses with the privileged classes. The Methodist revival worked an almost complete reformation of manners and morals and led to a political revolution but little less radical and complete than that across the channel, only it was accomplished by parliamentary methods and without bloodshed and violence.

The centennial statue of John Wesley stands in London in front of his chapel in City road.

"DARE TO BE A DANIEL."

A Young Man's Moral Courage Under a Trying Circumstance.

The son of a president of one of our oldest and most prominent eastern colleges was about leaving his native town for Paris to enter upon a special course in surgery. He had just attained his majority, and the simplicity and freshness of his boyhood still lay upon his soul. Many of his comrades had gathered at the depot to wish him bon voyage, among whom was his sweetheart. The last goodbyes had been uttered when, obeying an impulse, she sprang to his side upon the platform and, bidding him hold his ear to her lips, whispered, "Charley, dare to be a Daniel!"

"Only that old saw," said he, while a look of disappointment shadowed his face.

"That only, Charley, but it may mean much to you," was her answer.

The bearer of a letter of introduction to a distinguished nobleman and scientist in Paris, the young American was soon received with marked kindness.

In a few days he was the recipient of an invitation to a small banquet at the count's residence, at which were present some of the savants of the great city. Unaccustomed to the table etiquette of the cultured Parisians and "the cynosure of all eyes" when seated at the right hand of his host, Charles was mentally disturbed. He soon noticed that before each plate were grouped four wineglasses the colors of which were respectively, ruby, purple, pale amber and white. In various decanters were wines of a corresponding hue, of which each guest indicated to the waiters his or her choice by simply touching a glass. The white ones, alone, and those before Charles were left undisturbed.

During the progress of the feast the host, filling his ruby tinted glass (an example which his guests followed), proposed a toast, "To the wives, daughters and sweethearts of America," to which he invited a response from his youthful guest, motioning a servant meanwhile to fill his glass with the red wine.

What followed can best be told in the young man's own words: "Mother (he wrote), for a moment I was in an agony of trepidation. I would rather have faced a cannon. All had risen, and in the hand of each was the cup of wine which I had been pledged from my childhood not to touch, taste nor handle.' My head swam. Suddenly I heard the words, 'Dare to be a Daniel!' They shot through my brain like an electric flash. Instantly my resolution was taken. Touching my white glass, a servant filled it with water. Rising, I said as well as I could for the great lump in my throat:

"I beg leave to say that to the typical wife, daughter and sweetheart of America the purity of this, nature's own beverage, illustrates the lives they aim to lead and the dangers which they seek to avoid. Permit me to use it in their dear name."

"Following the example of Count B., every white glass was instantly raised and the toast drunk."

THE DRUNKARD.

Enjoys Advantages Which Are Denied to Other Delinquents.

There is absolutely no comprehensive legislation against drunkards themselves. No other delinquents enjoy to the same extent the advantage of being "let off." It is easy to give example after example of injuries they can cause to other people by willful drunkenness without being themselves much interfered with by law. What Alsatia was to Captain Peppercul the condition of drunkenness is to the drunkard.

The conventional temperance advocate rather deprecates the idea of punishing drunkards more carefully than at present, although eager enough to punish publicans in any manner which can be thought of, from confiscation of property to increased penalties and forfeitures.

Under his teaching the public, which is merciless toward a thief tempted by the necessities of hunger, cannot be induced to be stern toward a drunkard tempted by the luxury of drink. Accordingly, suggestions for penal legislation against common drunkards instead of receiving any of that careful consideration necessary in order to appreciate their weight are encountered by irrelevant commonplaces which none deny about the advantages of improved homes and other moral influences.—Fortnightly Review.

The Drinks of Nations.

France drinks more wine than any European country, the annual quantity per head being 29½ gallons. English people drink only 1¼ gills of wine a year, while our cousins in the United States drink rather more than half that quantity. Beer is the drink most largely taken. The Bavarians are the world's champion beer drinkers, for they absorb no less than 50 gallons a head a year. The Belgians drink 43 and English people 30 gallons of beer every 12 months. Uncle Sam only drinks 12 and M. Froggie five gallons of beer a head. The average for the whole of Germany is 25½ gallons of beer.—Exchange.

Makes Paupers and Lunatics.

In a recent treatise on alcoholism by Trull it is stated that in England 75 per cent of all cases of pauperism are due to drink and in Germany 90 per cent. In Germany drink leads to 1,600 cases of suicide a year and supplies the insane asylums with 3,000 victims.—Selected.

The Beer Guzzlers.

Out of every 100 gallons of beer drank throughout the world Germany supplies 28, the United Kingdom 27, the United States 18 and Russia, with all its millions of people, only 2½.

DAIRY AND CREAMERY.

MACHINE MADE COLD.

Mechanical Refrigerating Plants Becoming Popular in Butter Factories.

We are of opinion that machines for lowering temperature and for making ice will come into general use. In the south where ice is not found naturally they are invaluable. We believe indeed that in not many years private houses will be cooled in summer by some of these refrigerating devices. By their use butter and cheese factories can regulate the temperature of rooms to a degree. The dry storage room which the mechanical refrigerating machine will enable the factory to possess is a great consideration.

The only objection to these cooling machines at present is their cost. Una system of apparatus consisting chiefly of ammonia receiver, evaporating coils, compressor and condenser. The ammonia receiver is a small cylindrical vessel, connected with the condenser coils, as described below, which serves for storage of the liquid ammonia used for operating the system. The ammonia in this cylinder is in liquid condition, to which it has been reduced by heavy pressure. From this receiver the ammonia passes into the evaporating coils. As it escapes from the heavy pressure of the receiver and expand to many times its original volume. These coils are placed in the room or box to be cooled. The evaporation of the ammonia within them cools the pipes to a very low temperature, which in turn cool the atmosphere surrounding them. The ammonia is drawn from these pipes by the means of a compressor or pump and is forced into a second series of coils or pipes under heavy pressure. A considerable heat is developed in the ammonia by this process of compression, as will be readily understood, and this heat is removed by doubtedly the manufacturers will in time be able to make them cheaper, so they can be enjoyed by common butter makers. If the machinery could be brought in price to a point where it would be cheaper to buy a refrigerating plant than to purchase natural ice, every creamery and milk dealer in the land would go in for it.

COOLING MACHINE IN FACTORY.

We have received from the manufacturers a catalogue with illustrations of several of the leading styles of cold producing machines. The picture here given shows a butter factory equipped with the mechanical refrigerating plant. After the machinery produces the cold air it is circulated where it is wanted by three different systems, called respectively direct expansion, storage and brine circulating systems.

The lowering of the temperature is produced by the evaporation and expansion of condensed ammonia. That is the principle of the plan.

As to the mechanical devices which bring about the result desired, the circular of the firm describes them as follows:

The operation of artificial refrigeration, therefore, consists ordinarily in the use of a liquid, such as ammonia, which is evaporated in pipes distributed in the room to be cooled, again condensed into liquid form and again evaporated, the process of evaporation and liquefaction following each other in regular order and being continuous. In ordinary practice this operation is performed by submerging the condenser coils containing the compressed ammonia in a tank of water, or, better, by so arranging them that a stream of water can flow over them. The united action of the compressor and of the cooling by means of the water restores the ammonia to its original liquid form and delivers it a second time to the receiver, from which it passes a second time through the same process, and so on as long as the compressor is kept in operation.

A Great Combine

Trusts and Combines in many lines of production, and controlling the output of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

WE HAVE ENTERED A COMBINATION

HERE IS THE PLAN A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout the broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and geographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazines are to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purpose are of the highest. Its motto is: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE BEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church in all its aspects.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. It is a joy to the eye, the odist family. Many a member will exclaim, 'I want to find a place articles worth ten times the subscription price in every family circle in the land.'"
—Bishop Charles C. McCabe.
—Bishop W. A. Candler.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."
—Bishop O. F. Fitzgerald.
"A gem among the monthlies of our land."
—T. Berry Smith,
Central College, Fayette, Mo.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine."
—Bishop John F. Kuster.
"It takes rank with the best for its variety and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work."
—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured."
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none."
—Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate."
—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus."
—The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Nathaniel Lucecock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning."
—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

"We most heartily commend it to our people as a high-grade periodical, worthy to take its place in every Methodist home."
—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"It will aim to advocate and magnify the things which world-wide Methodism holds in common, and especially to be a factor in the cultivation of fraternal relations between the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."
—Central Christian Advocate.

"The letter press is superb, the illustrations first-class and the reading matter thoroughly instructive, entertaining and edifying."
—Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."
—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"We welcome it, relish it and recommend it."
—Western Christian Advocate.

"It takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."
—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"We cannot but give to the Magazine our best wishes, and hope for its great success."
—Texas Christian Advocate.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

BENTLEY BUTTER.

Product Made From Pasteurized Cream Finds a Ready Sale.

Much has been said of Mr. Bentley's system of making butter from pasteurized cream, throwing together various lots of cream, putting them through his process and bringing the whole out a first class finished product. John Gould of Ohio has visited the Bentley creamery and reports his observations in Hoard's Dairyman. They will interest our readers:

The machinery of the creamery is not unlike that found in other concerns that make 150,000 pounds of butter a season. Only two things attract especial notice, a peculiar "cooler" for the rapid cooling of the cream and the "germicide" or pasteurizer for heating the cream.

When I went into the establishment—3 p. m.—the cream wagons were just backing up to unload their cream freight. The jacketed cans were taken in at the cream room and two of the cans emptied into the cream vat. Then the pasteurizer was made conspicuous. Over the vat was an inverted T steam pipe and cross-piece, and on the two ends of the T were two short pieces of hose just reaching the top of the vat, one on each side. On the ends of these pieces of hose was a nickel plated steel three-fourths inch pipe, terminating at the bottom of the vat by being joined with another 2½ inch nickel plated pipe about 18 inches long, open at both ends.

The smaller pipe opens into the larger one some three or four inches from one end, with an elbow turn toward the opposite end. The steam is admitted to the small pipe at a pressure of 55 pounds. It "blows" out of the large pipe in one direction and at the same time draws a strong current of cream through the tube and heats it at the same time.

The two pasteurizers are placed in the vat, one on each side, and discharge in different directions, so that a strong and rapid current gives the cream a violent agitation, and I should say that the cream in the vats would each five minutes re-enter the pipes and so receive an additional increase of heat and slight increase of water, and the heat is increased about 6 degrees at each revolution or repassage through the pipes, or germicides. Additional cream was being strained into the vat, and at the end of about 20 minutes from the beginning the contents of the vat—now about 200 gallons—were at 155 degrees, with an estimated increase of about 7 per cent by the contact and condensation of the steam. It was observable that the acidity of the mixed cream on arrival, by the alkaline test, was close to 4 per cent, and after pasteurizing it was reduced about 1½ per cent.

One of the features that were marked was that the cream by being warmed up by the introduction of steam direct into its content did not have the usual cooked taste incident to cream that is warmed by being put into vessels and warmed up by outside heat. As soon as the 155 degrees were reached the cream was run through the cooler. A length of lead pipe 140 feet long is coiled on the inside walls of a box some four feet long and three feet high, and so leave as much interior space as possible. In this interior space is an agitator, run from a belt pulley, which keeps the ice water in constant agitation about the coil, so that the pipe is kept uniformly cool and a uniform coolness of cream when delivered from it. The cream is forced through this coil by a sort of steam jet and was being delivered at about 60 degrees, and the 200 gallons required about 30 minutes to go through the coil into the starter vat. Where ice and salt are used the cream is forced at a more rapid rate.

Mr. Bentley is emphatic that this cream shall be immediately cooled after heating, and is pretty sure that the germs which most do beset butter and cream are all killed in this process, the grain of the butter not injured and better keeping qualities given to it. In fact, he is pretty strong in his belief that souring cream and ripening it are two distinct conditions. The starter is added at once to the cream and the ripening is made the next "move." The cream is only collected twice a week, and some customers only furnish cream once per week, so that it is seen that Mr. Bentley must have bitter cream and some which must be positively stale, but when this mixed cream goes through the pasteurizing vats and has been cooled down it seems to have lost its individuality and its sour taste and become wonderfully homogeneous. The bad germs seem to have been all annihilated, and we are of the opinion that the contact of the live hot steam to the cream itself has much to do with this matter.

The flavor of the butter was pleasant, but not so active as very fine Elgin, though we would suspect that it would hold its flavor intact longer than Elgins would retain their bouquet aroma.

Dairy and Creamery.

Dairy bulls and cows have thin hams.

Besides the ordinary wire strainer, milk should also be strained through a cloth, if you have no separator.

Rinse milk vessels in cold water, then wash them in warm soda water, then scald them. Just before using rinse them in cold water again.

Calves can be trained to drink buttermilk as well as sweet milk. We have read of a boy, 14 years old, who raised a Jersey heifer calf largely on buttermilk. It thrived handsomely and when it became a cow the enterprising lad refused $55 for it and the first calf it produced.

Butter exports from the United States amounted in 1897 to 31,000,000 pounds, a large increase.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED ?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted a face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings
of All Denominations.
Love the Hub of Life.

If society ever endures out of its entanglements; if man ever lives at peace with his fellows, it will be because of love.—Rev. Dr. J. E. Sentry, Presbyterian, Denver.

Best Patriot.

The best patriot, the most faithful servant of the republic, is he who makes himself the noblest part of his country's citizenship.—Rev. W. J. McKittrick, Presbyterian, St. Louis.

Value of Purpose.

The secret of all happiness, of all nobleness and of all true success lies in our willingness to purpose noble things and then living up to our purpose.—Rev. Fuller Bergstresser, Lutheran, Alleghany.

Power of God's Love.

When we love God and are conscious of it, we are changed from lead to gold, from winter to summer, from bare branches to branches laden with fruit.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregational, New York.

Justice.

Give men justice and you'll find there will be few men that need clothing. Let justice reign between man and man and there will be few people going hungry.—Rev. Dr. George O. Lorimer, Baptist, Boston.

Spirituality.

Spirituality is not a matter of tears and tones. It is a fixed mental and moral habit, recognizing the three great verities—God, the soul, the judgment.—Rev. Alton House Cowles, Presbyterian, Akron, N. Y.

Faith a Matter of Growth.

Faith is not a gift; it is a something developed within us, a matter of growth. That some have more faith than others is as natural as that some soils are more productive than others.—Rev. R. F. Eakes, Atlanta.

Home Training.

Let us never forget the vital part that home training plays in the development of the race. As parents we must work with God's plan rather than against.—Rev. Thomas Robjent, Congregational, Braddock, Pa.

The New Understanding.

The one thing that God never creates—character—is here being formed by the co-operation of God and man. This new understanding puts a new and better face on life.—Rev. Dr. J. M. Pullman, Universalist, Lynn, Mass.

Note of a Nation's Greatness.

The note of a nation's greatness is not its wealth, for that may bring luxury, arrogance and all vices. Nor is it liberty, for that may be corrupted into license. It is its Christ-like spirit of self giving.—Rev. J. S. Kortley, Baptist, Kansas City.

Every Flower a Token of Immortality.

Every bouquet cast upon a soldier's grave is a token of his immortality, and a voiceless sentiment within us tells us that they know what we are doing for their memories.—Rev. John A. B. Wilson, Methodist, San Francisco.

Best Friends of Boys.

We Christian men should get so close to those boys' hearts and in sympathy with their fun loving natures and be so helpful to them in every way that they would think of the church as the place where their best friends go.—Rev. A. M. Harvuot, Christian Church, Cincinnati.

How to Be Known by Our Fruits.

If we live always with a proper appreciation of our dignity and our destiny and keep in mind the pleasures of a good conscience, then shall we be known by our fruits, and through them, enriched by the merits of Christ, shall we reach life everlasting.—Rev. Donald McKinnon, Catholic, San Francisco.

True Religion.

True religion is no mere excitement of the sensibilities, now harrowed by fear and now jubilant in hope. It is no mere delight of the understanding in the doctrines of our faith, but a warfare and a work—a warfare against sin and a work for others and for God.—Rev. Olin Scott Roche, Episcopalian, New York.

Men's Chances.

God has given us every chance in the world to be men. And this would be a better world and men would be better than they are if we had not surrendered our right to live the life of men by permitting some to secure a monopoly of the chances which God has given to all.—Rev. Herbert S. Bigelow, Congregational, Cincinnati.

Drawing People to Church.

Within the last few years we have made great efforts to draw the people to the house of God. We have built fine churches, secured talented musicians; we have shortened our sermons; we have chosen practical themes; we have treated the problems uppermost in the public mind. Still the drift toward our churches is not as strong as it should be, and we are to discover the reasons why people do not go to church.—Rev. H. E. Foss, Methodist, Bangor, Me.

Perfect Life.

The way to build a perfect life is to quietly do each day's work as it comes to our hand.—Rev. Dr. J. D. Rankin, Presbyterian, Denver.

Love and Health.

From love comes health to men and angels, because to love others is the moral state of man as God made him.—Rev. Philip B. Cabell, Episcopalian, Wilmington, Del.

Suffering.

Suffering that burns the dross from human life brightens and strengthens every virtue and makes life more divine.—Rev. A. M. Harvuot, Christian Church, Cincinnati.

"LUCK."

The boy who's always wishing
That this or that may be,
But never tries his mettle,
Is the boy that's bound to see
His plans all come to failure,
His hopes end in defeat;
For that's what comes when wishing
And working fail to meet.

The boy who wishes this thing
Or that thing with a will
That spurs him on to action,
And keeps him trying still,
When efforts meet with failure,
Will some day surely win;
For he works out what he wishes;
And that's where luck comes in!

The "luck" that I believe in
Is that which comes with work!
And no one ever finds it
Who's content to wish and shirk.
The men the world calls "lucky,"
Will tell you, every one,
That success comes, not by wishing,
But by hard work, bravely done.

TWENTIETH CENTURY MEETINGS.

Meetings have been held at several places by Dr. W. W. Smith and the secretary of the Board. At Farmville by Drs. Coke and W. W. Smith. The movement is pressing on. At Keysville and Meherin nearly $200 was subscribed; at Blackstone Church about $2750, and at Farmville about $1250. These subscriptions were made at the public meetings, and the pastors have now to take up the individual canvass. The secretary intended to give a more extended account of the meetings, but while returning from Crewe on Sunday night, a strap on the breast yoke gave way, causing the yoke and pole to drop to the ground. The pole broke into two pieces, and it was not possible to guide the buggy. The horses were trotting at a good pace when the break occurred, and the breaking of the pole caused them to swerve from the road and carry the buggy against a tree. The shock threw me from the buggy, but at such an angle that I fell in the road, striking my hip, ribs and head. The force of the fall came upon the hip, which was badly bruised; two ribs were considerably bent, and my head was severely shocked. In about ten minutes three gentlemen, Messrs. Ingram, Bradshaw, and Goodman, came by on their way home and took me to Blackstone, and also led the horses which were standing quietly by. These young gentlemen showed me great consideration, which I highly appreciate. I have been laid up for a few days, but hope soon to be all right.

SMALL COLLEGES.

The following are true words. The small college with two hundred students or less will always have a place in the great educational field. Dr. Patton was himself, I think, educated at Knox college, Canada. The small college is better than the university for purely college work. Randolph-Macon is one of the best of this class.—(ED. RECORDER.)

The friends of the larger institutions of learning cannot afford to depreciate the work which the colleges are doing. For it must be remembered that these institutions were once small colleges, and that some of the brightest names on their lists of graduates belong to the early period of their history. We must not despise the day of small things. If, therefore, the student is bent on acquiring knowledge, let him be assured that he will have no lack of opportunity in the small college. One does not need access to a large library in order to secure a good training in Latin and Greek. Meager as the college library may be, it in all probability will give him opportunity for pretty wide reading in philosophy or history if these happen to be the studies that interest him. One may at least be trained to think, may have his mind disciplined, may get an insight into some of the great problems of the cosmos, and some of the great questions in philosophy, and may come into close and familiar relationship with some of the masterpieces of literature, even though the institution he attends be not blessed with large endowments and cannot boast of having a long list of learned specialists in its faculty.—From an address by Dr. F. L. Patton, President Princeton University.

The story, "What a Lie Cost," begun in this issue of the JUNIOR, will be completed next week.

ACTION OF THE CONFER- ENCES.

The following is taken from the Wesleyan Advocate, a paper which has not failed to let its readers hear both sides. Dr. McGehee was a member of the last General Conference, and this editor well remembers that Dr. McGehee offered a resolution calling for a special committee of fifteen to ascertain the exact status of the "war claim," and it was opposed on the ground that it was in the hands of an able committee, and it would be a discourtesy to appoint a special committee. Dr. A. G. Brown, who was on the committee, arose and said that he would be very glad to have it taken out of the hands of the Committee on Publishing Interests and referred to a special committee, but the Conference did not realize the gravity of the case and refused to raise the committee. This article by Dr. McGhee effectually denies the statement that the members of the General Conference all understood the facts in the case.—(ED. RECORDER.)

"The last session of the South Georgia Conference 'felt called upon to put on record and condemn the methods used in collecting the Publishing House Claim. In our opinion, the best interests of the Church call for the resignation of the Book Agents, and the retirement of the Book Committee. It also 'endorsed the express purpose of the bishops to return this money, and hoped that they would take speedy steps to tender it unconditionally.'"

"The action of the North Georgia and many other Conferences was similar, and equally as strong as ours.

"So far as we know matters remain in statu quo. We are not aware of any 'resignations,' 'retirement,' or 'unconditional tender.'"

"The object of this communication is to secure the end desired without additional agitation. Of the latter we have had enough for the present. As to action, that is painfully tardy and conservative.

"In view of the action taken by North Georgia and South Georgia, and the seeming disregard of the same, what, if anything, should be done at LaGrange and Dublin? Looking to the future of Southern Methodism, and the overhanging cloud, what course best fits the M. E. Church, South?"

"There are the plans. The first is found in expressions like these: 'We have had all necessary investigation,' 'let the matter drop.' To these we enter an emphatic 'never!' Nothing has been settled. There has been no investigation of methods by the only authorized body—a General Conference in special session, or regular session assembled.

"That the question of 'methods' was not investigated by the Baltimore body is painfully remembered. Many had not read up. The majority, suspecting no crookedness, and fearing agitation would be hurtful, labored to keep the question of 'methods' in the background. A resolution calling for a special committee of fifteen to ascertain 'the exact status of that fund' was defeated by the statement, 'it is in the hands of an able committee.' And so it was, and the committee held it (the question of 'methods') with a giant-like grip. Had the Conference re-considered, and raised that 'independent' special committee, it would have investigated 'methods,' and the Church would have been saved the shame that abides, and will abide until the whole matter is thoroughly and religiously investigated.

"Till this is done and made manifest to men and angels, the thought of 'dropping the matter' cannot be seriously considered. The great M. E. Church, South, cannot go before men—and go up to God—without taking steps in terms of the Law. It goes, or should go, without saying that agitation allayed a measure of the divine blessing. An interim of an hundred years of restored harmony are powerless to cancel debt or condone crime.

"The other plans are embraced in the question 'shall we call a special, or prayerfully await the action of the regular General Conference session?' The Missouri, Illinois, and other Conferences stand for the special, and have elected delegates. The St. Louis 'reaffirms position taken at its last session in reference to this most unfortunate affair,' and, is 'convinced that the wiser course to pursue is to await the regular session of the General Conference, at which time we feel sure the Church will right this great wrong.' It is added, 'we do this with the distinct understanding that this action does not indicate that we abate one jot or tittle of our dissatisfaction with the present state of the case."

"We respectfully submit that the LaGrange and Dublin Conferences reaffirm their positions, and refer 'this great wrong' to the regular session of the General Conference. If possible, 'let us strengthen emphasis on 'we abate not one jot or tittle of our present dissatisfaction.' In the meantime let us be prayerful, patient, and give ourselves to winning souls and edifying the Church."—Dr. J. B. McGhee, in "Wesleyan Christian Advocate."

TORONTO'S THANK- OFFERING.

The following brief summary of the great Twentieth Century Thank-Offering at Toronto stirs one's blood. What an example these Toronto Methodists have set the Methodist world.—(ED. RECORDER.)

Dr. Potts came forward to announce the progress of the Fund, especially its prospects in the city of Toronto. This meeting meant, he said, much for Toronto, but far more for the outlying circuits, which were looking to Toronto for inspiration. He then read the list of estimated minimum gifts from the city Churches as given below. In the course of his running commentary on this list, he referred to the gifts for Victoria of $25,000 from Mr. Flavelle, $10,000 from Mr. Ames, and announced an additional $10,000 from Mrs. Cox, which, with the Senator's previous gift of $30,000, brings their offering up to the full endowment of the chair, namely, $50,000. As he announced the offering from the Central Church, he called on the pastor, Rev. W. H. Hincks, to read a letter from Mr. W. E. H. Massey, which we quote only in part, as Mr. Massey requested that it be not given undue publicity:

"MY DEAR PASTOR:—In humble recognition of the countless blessings, in both temporal and spiritual matters, we have received at the hands of our Heavenly Father, myself and family esteem it a privilege and a duty to make a subscription of thirty thousand dollars ($30,000) to the Twentieth Century Thanksgiving Fund of the Methodist Church."

Of this amount, $11,000 goes to Victoria University, $7,000 to the Missionary Society, $5,000 to the Superannuation Fund, $6,000 to the Central Methodist, and $1,000 to Hope Methodist Church, East Toronto.

A telegram received from Belleville announced that Bridge-Street Church would raise $6,000.

CORRESPONDENCE

WE CANNOT.

(BY REV. F. M. EDWARDS)

The Church has been asked by the Book Committee to be silent two and a half years upon a very grave matter of morals. The action relative to which silence is requested is that of the distinguished brethren composing the said committee, by which they declared the payment of over $100,000 to a lobbyist, was reasonable and right. The adage, "silence gives consent," has never been abrogated. We suppose the mass of our intelligent and pious membership can give no other verdict than that of unqualified condemnation to the transaction, now famous, by which the said lobbyist filled his coffers. Nor can it be supposed that any honorable citizen would give even applied approval to the manner in which this enormous sum was taken away from its proper owners.

Hence, it is easily seen that too much is requested when the Book Committee says "let the matter rest until the next General Conference." In the long months intervening how much the wicked one would triumph, how much injury would be done to the souls of men can hardly be imagined. Our honored brethren must have written the request for silence thoughtlessly. Are they themselves willing to be thought conniving at such prevarication as was proved in Washington? Are they willing to approve what they know to be contrary to the law of veracity? Can they consent to a reputation such as the lobbyist has gained in the Congress of the United States? Of course a negative reply is expected. How, then, can they request a million and a half of members of an organization claiming its mission to be the spread of spiritual holiness, to give, by silence, an approval of a deed put by its perpetrator upon a par with Peter's horrible crime, but, so far as we know, without Peter's weeping and restoration?

If the person who has caused so much trouble to the Church will return the funds he holds, retaining for himself a just, even a liberal, compensation for services, it will be then time to say "silence." But in the present condition of things, it can but accord with every legitimate view of the responsibility of the Church and the demands of truth to give the caption of this article as a reply to the request for silence.

The publication made by the Book Committee is far from satisfactory to the larger part of our membership, clerical and lay, because it gives no outspoken condemnation of a mode of business as inconsistent with a religious profession as contrary to the code of honorable law practice. From the Mason and Dixon line to the Mexican Gulf, and from Cape Hatteras to California's golden gate, we suppose there is among our members an abhorrence of just such a thing as was proved upon (and after proof confessed by) the lobbyist employed to look after the Publishing House claim.

The reputation of Southern Methodism has heretofore been such as an honorable and pious membership and ministry could be gratified in possessing. We trust character and reputation have been identical. Continued usefulness, continued reception of God's blessing in efforts to spread the "news of salvation" must depend upon strict adherence to those noble, Divinely approved principles of action that have given character and reputation. It is asking too much of us to request us to forfeit or even endanger for a MOMENT both character and reputation? What can we say about two years and a half of such risk of forfeit?

Better throw into the sea every dollar, every book and every piece of machinery owned by our Publishing House than have the least impediment placed in our pathway of saving the souls of men. Now, it is quite evident that silence on the part of the Church press, or on the part of Annual and District Conferences after the publication of the Book Committee's extended and ingenious argument (defending the course pursued by the Agent, and giving no positive condemnation of the lobbyist's confessed violation of moral as well as civil law) would be to give consent to things known to be wrong. Hence, it is sincerely hoped that Conferences and editors of religious papers will not fail to let an enlightened public know that the Southern Methodist Church does not depart from her time-honored and Scriptural code of morals, nor will she consent to cover up or excuse any business transaction on the part of her Agents not in accord with the law of pure Christianity.

The reasoning of the gifted brother who wrote the plea of the committee, while exhibiting great ingenuity, is very far from convincing those minds in our extended connection at all, acquainted with the history of the case and with the laws of the nation pertaining to fiduciaries.

No attorney has a right to make an illegal contract; and, of course, no one has a right to make an illegal contract with an attorney. Mr. Stahlman, then, had not a particle of right to make a proposition requiring the sum named for his services, nor had the Book Committee any right to engage to give that amount, if the laws of our country forbid such contract.

That such prohibition is fact ought to have been known to the parties mentioned. If they were ignorant of it, they should have learned before engaging. Ignorance of law is not taken as sufficient to excuse a violator of law. The General Conference itself will not claim the right to make an illegal bargain.

Contracts for lobbying are known to be contrary to public policy in the United States. In Georgia a lobbyist is put down as a felon by positive enactment. The excuse of usualness in Washington is too purile to be entertained for a moment. Christian men must see that if a wrong is prevalent anywhere, that fact but adds to the plainness of duty to cry out against it.

But if the engagement was made supposedly with a high-tone honorable lawyer to prosecute a matter before the Court of Claims in a legitimate way, then it is at once seen that there is no law for such payment as was made, or for the contract specifying such a sum. A high legal authority gives the equivalent of the following: "No contract made with an attorney for an exorbitant sum is valid in law, nor can the amount be collected by law."

From all this, it is plain that our committee had no right to give Mr. Stahlman a sum equal to the average salary of Church employees multiplied by two hundred or perhaps three hundred.

But passing all this by, how can a payment be reasonable when its recipient had done exactly contrary to stipulation? Does the committee suppose that the insertion of the words "he is to do nothing dishonorable" meant that the list of dishonorables would not include lack of truthfulness? Of course, we have no idea that the trusted men on the Book Committee will make such a supposition. What, then, can be the reason of the assertion of reasonableness in the payment? What is the dishonorable thing that would have forfeited the fee?

Brethren, this whole matter must be examined, and no tarnish on the honor of our beloved Church be allowed to go into history.

The refusal of the editor of our connectional organ to admit any reply to the Book Committee (as is stated by an honored layman) cannot but be regarded a great misfortune. It, however, makes the declaration of our dissent the more important through other channels. If the owners of the "official" are denied the use of its columns to give expression to their sentiments, they must employ other means to have made public the true position of the Church. Editors make a great mistake when they suppose that their patrons are pleased with silence on matters of honor and truthfulness. It has been said that "a thing is never settled until it is settled right."

The only way to induce silence on this grave matter is to undo the wrong as far as practicable. It is practicable, it seems to us, to have a Court of Equity pass upon the recovery of the funds that were wrongly paid.

South Boston, Va., Oct. 19, 1899.

WEST BUCKINGHAM.

(BY REV. LEROY LEE BANKS.)

This has been the most successful year of any that God has given me, and I wish to record, not only His manifold goodness to me in every way, but also the rich answer He has given to our prayers for the success of His work.

"A large number of the membership," said Bro. Riddick to me after I had been assigned to this work, "are not converted, and must be brought back to God." So we found experimental religion at a low ebb, but the real heart hunger that we found in our people during the pastoral work has given us great joy, and we rejoice that God has led us to minister to them. In every meeting, and the fifth one has just closed, sinners have been led to a deep repentance and acceptance of God, which was followed by the witness of the Holy Spirit, and believers who have been living in a conscious knowledge of salvation were led into perfect love, or entire sanctification—"The Heritage of faith," as Bishop Potter calls it. As those who have been blessed, and many others can testify, we have dealt carefully and personally with nearly every soul at the altar, except those that my wife labored with, to insure careful teaching, and consequently many services have lasted four or five hours. As the truth has been held up, and saint and sinner have seen their privileges and the commands of God relative to themselves, they have come to the altar with cryings and tears, seeking the need of their souls. The result of such deep conviction was that when the souls came into the light they gave vent to their feelings with shoutings and praises, wholly indescribable.

In the midst of a sermon at Centenary Church, a remarkable interruption occurred, when an old colored member, held in high esteem by all, began to shout and move from one person to another, beseeching them to come to Jesus, until people were crying all over the building, and soon the altar had many at it under the pressure of deep need. Many at the different Churches have professed to be saved and to be wholly sanctified. The rich scenes that have occurred in this summer's campaign of revival work remind me of the accounts given in Bishop McTyeire's "History of Methodism." The evident results of this work are:

1. Family altars have been established in many homes.
2. Old quarrels and Church troubles have been settled.
3. Prayer meetings have been established.
4. Sunday-schools will run where it has been impossible to have them.
4. Bibles are being read all over the work, and Wesley's sermons have been pulled down from their hiding places.
7. Thirty odd have joined our Church, with a number more to come in before Conference.
8. A parsonage has been bought and deeded to the circuit, and a nice subscription received, and a greater part of the purchase money will be subscribed hereafter. It will be paid for and furnished fully by another year.
9. One Church did the almost unheard of thing of paying up in full for the year at the Third Quarterly Conference, when before it has been hard to pay out at the last Quarterly Conference, and sometimes let it go unpaid until sometime after, or never.

I am serving a loving, appreciative people, who have ministered to us so lovingly in the little parsonage that the burden of the wherewithal has been lifted, and we have gone continually during the year unhindered. Because of these dear people, and for the truth's sake, and because our beloved Bro. Riddick very much desired it, I have written thus explicitly. Praise be long to God.

Buckingham, Va., Oct. 20, 1899.

WHERE SHALL WE FIX THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE CRIMINAL CLASSES?

The Pharisees held to the old heresy that calamity of any sort is conclusive proof of exceptional iniquity in those upon whom it falls. Hence they believed that the victims of the tower disaster were sinners above all men in Jerusalem. How startled they were by the divine announcement that Jerusalem was full of sinners as deserving of destruction as those upon whom the tower fell.

For six thousand years the world has been pouring its invective upon Cain the heads the world's long procession of murderers. But in every age and country there have been greater criminals than Cain. We are wont to visit the extremest contempt upon Esau, who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, but in this proud, boastful land there are millions of men and women who have sold their birthright for less than a mess of pottage. Ananias was smitten with sudden death because he lied, but if all the liars in this country should fall down and die today, the civilized world could scarcely furnish undertakers and grave diggers enough to bury them decently in the next six months.

Our criminals are symptomatic. They are the boils and carbuncles on the body politic which indicate its fearfully diseased condition. They are the outgrowth of a moral depravity which covers the land from boundary to boundary.

One cause which produces criminals is to be found in the lack of wholesome parental teaching, example and discipline. For many years there has been but little of that wise and virtuous domestic economy which was common fifty years ago. There has not been that steady and faithful inculcation of great moral ideas and principles which marked the domestic life of other days.

Children of this generation have been educated to believe that the household discipline of their grandfathers and grandmothers was puritanical and cruelly rigid, and that boys and girls who have entered their teens are competent to govern themselves. Such false teaching and laxity of discipline is sure to yield a harvest of corruption and crime. The boy who does not regard parental authority will not respect the authority of the State and represents the material out of which criminals are made.

The pulpit has not done its duty. It has had unworthy conceptions of the spirit, purposes and scope of the Christian religion. Its application of Gospel truth to human affairs has been too limited. Thousands of ministers have been frightened by the current cant about political preaching. The prostitution of the pulpit to the service of the political party cannot be too severely condemned, but the minister of the Gospel who is afraid to preach the truth of God as it relates to the politics of this country is unworthy of his vocation. Christ's sermon on the Mount deals with great social and political questions, and proclaims the ethical principles which should guide every

THURSDAY, OCTOBER

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

DR. SMITH'S SERMON.

One of the most powerful, pungent and practical sermons Dr. A. Coke Smith has preached to the congregation of Court Street Church during the four years of his pastorate here, was delivered yesterday morning from the text, Extra 5:2: "Then rose up Zerubbabel, the son of Sheretiel and Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, and began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem, and with them were the prophets of God helping them."

Dr. Smith traced the history of God's chosen people from the beginning and clearly showed that the estimate they placed upon their religion as exhibited in their manner and form of devotion determined their national life. "Abraham worshipped God with the canopy of heaven as his covering and unhewn stones for his altar and sacrifice; Moses worshipped in the presence of the burning bush, David in the tabernacle, the pattern of which had been given him by God himself, and which was made from the finest material obtainable. Then came the magnificent temple, the finest and most costly the world had ever seen. In all of these God manifested himself, but let it be noted that each in turn was better than its predecessor, and that it was the best possible in the day and time."

Dr. Smith noted particularly and answered the chief objections urged against beautiful and expensive Church buildings.

"First, we are told they promote pride. By no means. The estimate we place upon God's house is the value we attach to His worship and to himself, and not ourselves. It is one thing to humble ourselves and another thing to humble our religion. Pride may dwell in home span as well as in broadcloth, and often does.

"Second, we are told it will drive away the poor. Never! The people of a Church may be unfriendly and show a lack of Christian courtesy and love, and the poor may not return, but the good Church building will not be the cause of it. Do you have trouble in getting the poor to attend your elegant new school building. No! They enjoy and appreciate it.

"Third, they diminish the contributions to benevolent causes, missionary operations, etc. I deny this. Examine the statistics and you will find that the congregations having splendid Church houses contribute more liberally to these causes than those charges which, though able to have better buildings, deny themselves the comfort thereof. Examine the treasurer's books of any Church and you will find that the most liberal contributors to missions, etc., are not those who do not desire comfortable and elegant Church buildings.

"We need a Church building here. Our fathers wrought well, for a generation and more this building has stood, but we have outgrown it. The Sunday school is crowded beyond the capacity of the room, and besides the room is not suited to the work. We ought to build, and I ask you to pray God to direct you every one in making your subscriptions when the committee calls."

The sermon was by special request of the Board of Stewards and Building Committee, and preliminary to the sermon Dr. Smith stated that the Building Committee would this week wait on the congregation and take subscriptions to the new Church building, recently authorized by the Quarterly Conference.

It is understood that about one-third of the amount deemed necessary to build has already been subscribed without a general canvas of the Church having been begun, and it is expected that the balance will be reported raised at an early date.—Lynchburg News.

NORFOLK PREACHERS' MEETING.

The largest Methodist preachers' meeting since the adjournment of the last Annual Conference, was held yesterday morning. All the charges in this city, with one exception, and every Church in Portsmouth, were represented, as well as several Churches from the circuits. Rev. W. H. Edwards, presided, and prayer was offered by Rev. R. B. Beadles, of the Norfolk circuit.

Rev. J. W. Baker, of Oaklette and Gilmerton, reported eight conversions at the latter Church.

Rev. R. H. Bennett had a pentecostal time at McKendree Sunday morning. One hundred members gave testimony of wonderful growth in spiritual life. There were two conversions at the night service.

Rev. W. R. Crowder reported eighteen conversions and eleven accessions at Bethel Church on the East Norfolk circuit.

At Central Church, Portsmouth, Rev. R. F. Beadles had one conversion Sunday, received eight on profession of faith, and reported eighteen conversions at the mission, none of whom had joined the Church there.

At Liberty Street, Berkeley, Rev. Paul Bradley received seven new members.

Two were received by Rev. Lloyd T. Williams at Trinity and one by Rev. Geo. H. Spooner at Lambert's Point.

Rev. R. T. Waterfield reported two received on profession of faith at Owen's Memorial, Portsmouth.

Rev. V. W. Bargamin reported a revival in progress at Churchland.

At the other Churches there were large congregations and pleasant services.

Mrs. R. H. Jones presented two petitions for individual signatures of the preachers—one for the introduction of physiological and temperance instruction in the public schools, and the other to Congress, urging the passage of the "anti-polygamy act," to prevent the seating of Brigham H. Roberts, Congressman-elect from Utah. Both petitions were signed by members of the Conference.—Virginian.

The revival services at Laurel-Street Methodist Church continue to grow in interest at each service.

Three services were held yesterday by the pastor, Rev. R. Finley Gayle, and fifteen conversions were the outcome of the meetings. Three joined the Church at the morning service by certificate. The meeting will continue during the week.—Richmond Leader.

A most successful revival is being held at Barton Heights Methodist Church. Sunday Rev. G. E. Booker conducted the services for the pastor, Rev. J. S. Peters.

These services have resulted in fifty conversions and reclamations, and yesterday sixteen additions were received in the Church.

All the meetings have been largely attended, and the results are very encouraging.

At the meeting of the Methodist ministers held yesterday morning, Rev. J. T. Mastin suggested that at the convocation of the Annual Conference, an increased appropriation should be made for the support of a city missionary.—Richmond Times.

SOUTH AFRICAN THANKSGIVING FUND.

The Thanksgiving Fund campaign is in active swing in South Africa. The amount aimed at £50,000. The Methodist Churchman, of Capetown, in the issue of August 24, gives an account of the enthusiastic inaugural meetings held at Queenstown the preceeding week. At the evening meeting the Rev. Philip Tearle, General Secretary of the Fund, told of the progress of the movement up to date. Some eight circuits have already supplied estimates of their minimum gifts. Among these," said the General Secretary, "was Queenstown, which had a sum of fifteen hundred guineas. Ilton and Whittlesea had indicated that they were safe for 200 guineas, Cathcart for 250, Lady Frere 100, Dordrecht 300, Kamstone 500, Mt. Coke 100, Tsomo 500 guineas. This made a total of 5,000 guineas already. Of the 1,500 guineas promised by Queenstown, 1,015, have been contributed."

SACRIFICING A KEEPSAKE.

Mr. A. Aroadbrook writes from Leith: "In connection with this Fund a circumstance occurred this week which I feel to be unique.

"A poor woman who has been a widow for a long time (her husband having been drowned about fifteen years ago) was anxious to have her name placed on the 'Historic Roll.' Before leaving for sea on his last voyage her husband handed her two sovereigns, which she had treasured in memory of him ever since, although many times she had been pretty low financially, and even now, for several months, her son, who is her only support, has been out of employment. In her love for the Church, and her desire to have her name on the 'Historic Roll,' she has parted with one of her precious keepsakes, and retained only one as a souvenir of her beloved although departed husband."

THANKSGIVING FOR FAMILY MERCIES.

Mr. Morris, who, it will be remembered, has so generously helped City Road through all its recent struggles, under an inspiration of gratitude, conceived a new and ingenious way of memorializing his own family mercies. He wrote to Mr. Westerdale that as he had just celebrated his jubilee birthday he wished to present as a jubilee offering to Almighty God for fifty years of precious life and for His protecting care during many years of travel fifty guineas. But he also desired to give a guinea for every year represented in his family.

Mrs. Morris	44	44
George Harry	13	13

Mr. Morris attributes his success in life to what he learned and received and felt in the little Wesleyan chapel in the village of Adderbury, Oxfordshire. He never forgets the debt he owes the local preachers who brought life and salvation to his native village.—Methodist Recorder, England.

SCRIPTURE ADAPTED TO OUR DAILY NEEDS.

At the close of a meeting in Newburyport, where Bible study had been the subject, a woman told me her experience in being led to a passage of Scripture that fitted perfectly into her peculiar need. Her home was on the edge of town; her husband out of the city much of the time, leaving her alone in the house; she was in the habit of attending the Church prayer meeting, but felt very timid about being out at night because she knew from past experiences that there was likely to be one or more tramps in the barn on her return. About the same time she had been asked to take a class in the Sunday-school, but hesitated, feeling incompetent to teach. One day, while quietly reading in Isaiah, thinking

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 5.

Text of the Lesson, Neh. i, 1-11—Memory Verses, 8-10—Golden Text, Neh. i, 11—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. The twentieth year refers to the reign of Artaxerxes (chapter ii, 1), and Young in his concordance thinks that Ezra and Nehemiah speak of three different rulers bearing this name, this one being the Longimanus of profane history, contemporary with Herodotus and Thucydides, great historians, both of whom mention him. Ezra and his company went up from Babylon in the seventh year of Artaxerxes' reign (Ez. vii, 6, 7), 13 years before the time of our lesson. Nehemiah signifies "comfort of Jehovah" and brings before us the Father of Mercies and God of all comfort, who loves to comfort His people (II Cor. i, 3; Isa. xl, 1). Hachaliah signifies "hidden of Jehovah" and makes us think of all who, like Nehemiah, are safely hidden in His hand (Isa. xlix, 2).

2, 3. When certain brethren came from Jerusalem to Babylon, Nehemiah inquired as to the condition of affairs there and learned that the wall and its gates were broken down and the people in great affliction. Even after the wall was finished and they had kept the feast of tabernacles with great gladness, they were compelled to testify that they were only servants in the land and that it yielded much increase to them who had dominion over them and that they were in great distress (Neh. ix, 37, 38). They were honest enough to confess that they deserved it all because of their sins.

4. "And it came to pass, when I heard these words, that I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days and fasted and prayed before the God of heaven." This is the conduct of one who has a matter very much at heart, and the matter in this case was the condition of affairs at Jerusalem. But Judah and Jerusalem were hundreds of miles distant from Babylon, and Nehemiah had a position of some honor and was well cared for. Why should he care much how matters were going at Jerusalem? The same might be asked of Daniel (Dan. ix, 3; x, 2, 3) or of Moses (Heb. xi, 26).

5. "I beseech Thee, O Lord God of Heaven." With reverence and yet with confidence he looks up to God in heaven. To Him only will he look (verse 4 and chapter ii, 4, 20) and on Him alone rely. Like Jeremiah in chapter xxxii, 17 and the apostles in Acts iv, 24, he looks to God as the creator of heaven and earth, the faithful covenant keeping God, full of mercy for all who truly look to Him (II Chron. xvi, 9). There is nothing we need so much while here on earth for God as to wait only upon Him (Ps. lxii, 5).

6. When we come to God, we can come only as sinners, pleading our guilt and our need and His mercy in Christ. It is good pleading to pray as Jeremiah did: "O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do Thou it for Thy name's sake. We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness. Do not abhor us, for Thy name's sake. Do not disgrace the throne of Thy glory. Remember, break not Thy covenant with us." (Jer. xiv, 7, 21.) God's covenant faithfulness is always a sure resting place. David found it so (II Sam. xxiii, 5). In all our Christian life it is helpful to remember, "Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it," and "It is God who worketh" (I Thess. v, 24; Phil. ii, 13).

7. "We have dealt very corruptly against thee." When we see our sinfulness and are willing to acknowledge it, we are on the road to blessing, for "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but who so confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy" (Prov. xxviii, 13). In pleading with Israel through Jeremiah the Lord said: "Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God. Turn, O backsliding children, for I am married unto you." Also through Hosea He said that if they would turn to Him He would heal their backsliding and love them freely (Jer. iii, 13, 14; Hos. xiv, 2, 4). Nehemiah was doubtless familiar with these words and was acting upon them.

8, 9. "Remember, I beseech thee, the word that thou commandest thy servant Moses." In Isa. lxii, 6, margin, the Lord's people are called His remembrancers and are urged to give Him no rest until He does what He promises to do. In Isa. xliii, 26, He says, "Put me in remembrance, let us plead together." That which God says He will do is as good as done, for "the words of God shall be fulfilled." (Rev. xvii, 17.) There are those today who say that they yield to no one in reverence for the Bible, and at the same time they say that the great body of the Messianic predictions has not only never been fulfilled, but cannot now be fulfilled and that some doctrinal statements of Scripture are not authoritative and some of its revelations are not credible. Such teachers would have given Nehemiah no comfort. He believed, with Jeremiah, that there was nothing too hard or wonderful for the Lord, who made the heaven and the earth (Jer. xxxii, 17).

10. "Now, these are Thy servants, and Thy people, whom Thou hast redeemed by Thy great power, and by Thy strong hand." Thus pleaded Moses, the great intercessor of Israel. "O Lord God, destroy not Thy people and Thine inheritance, which Thou hast redeemed through Thy greatness," and confessing their stubbornness, and wickedness, and sin, he says, "Yet they are Thy people and Thine inheritance." (Deut. ix, 26-29.) Daniel also, while confessing the sins of his people, pleads with God that they are His people whom He has brought out of Egypt (Dan. ix, 15, 16). Our Lord Jesus prayed, "Keep through Thine own name those whom Thou hast given me" (John xvii, 11).

11. Having laid the case honestly and fully before God, he now asks for special favor in the sight of the king, whose cupbearer he was and from whom he was now about to ask permission to assist his people. "Prosper, I pray Thee, Thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man." Such was his concise and definite request from God, and when he appeared before the king and made known his request to him, the record is, "And the king granted me according to the good hand of my God upon me" (chapter ii, 8). While he had to make request of the king for leave of absence, it was to God that he looked to control the king. In all his service we shall see that his mind was staged upon God, and he looked to God alone (Ps. lxi, 5; Isa. xxvi, 3).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 5, "A New Name"—Text, Gen. xxxii, 24-29; Rev. ii, 17.

"What is thy name?"

We give names and titles to things to express the qualities we see in them. Names of persons are used in the simpler forms of society in the same manner to describe and identify the individual. Some physical peculiarity or action often impresses us and is instantly recalled when we think of the person. The two are well nigh inseparable in thought. The force of names and their inner significance are largely lost to sight in our more complex civilization, where children are named after parents or friends without reference to anything peculiar to the person bearing the name. We reach somewhat of the original result by our nicknames. In school and college life the primitive tendency asserts itself. The newcomer is scarcely settled in the seat at school before his measure has been taken by curious eyes and some characteristic seized upon by quick witted critics, and the stranger finds a new name at the first recess which no resentment will shake off.

Jacob began life as a substitute. He was always getting into somebody else's place. He knew the family traditions and had deeply religious impulses. He was quiet and thoughtful by nature. The stories of God and his ancestors, so different from the ideas prevalent among the people who lived around them in the land, impressed him from his early youth as he listened to his father, Isaac, under the black tents of the camp, or lying on the green hillside watching the sheep, or stood in awe near the altar on which upon some rare occasion this father as the tribal priest offered sacrifice. His brother as the elder of the two by the arbitrary law of the times was heir to all his father's honors and God's promises of Messianic hope. Jacob coveted these things more than he did his father's wealth. His life was a strangely diversified one of deception and penitence, sorrow and success. No romance surpasses it in dramatic interest. He learns by sharp experience the uselessness of trying to hasten or improve God's plans for himself and the world.

He earnestly seeks divine favor and finds it, as every earnest seeker has in every age. The brook Jobbok witnessed the all night struggle against his lower nature and the triumph of faith and godliness. The morning dawns upon a man transformed in insight and purpose. He is now Israel, "God's prince."

In some such way the struggle for mastery of one's own powers goes on in every life. We enter the world as bundles of physical weakness with mental and moral possibilities. The years bring interaction of the outer world and the inner life. Both are developed in the process, and soul growth remains the permanent product of value. Events occur and pass. The abiding results are

A PRAYER FOR TRUTH.

(For thy mouth shall utter truth. PROV. 8:7.)

O Father! God! To Thee we pray;
Guide Thou our footsteps, lest we stray
From paths of Truth and Right.
Preserve us from the tempter's wile,
And purge our hearts and lips of guile;
O, lead us into light.

WHAT A LIE COST.

By SIDNEY STANTON.

IT WAS into a large and handsomely fitted retail grocery establishment, resplendent with mirrors, which reflected the dazzling brightness shining from many suspended bulbs of light that a young man, some twenty-five years of age, entered, in reply to an advertisement for a "first-class clerk."

The store was situate in the aristocratic quarter of a metropolitan city, and as the proprietor was well known as a man of unswerving integrity, actuated in his dealings, always, by Christian principle, and withal having a thirty years' experience, gathered from both sides of the Atlantic, behind him, it was considered no mean privilege for any young man to be in his employ.

Standing near the door, as the young man entered, Mr. P. bowed slightly, asking what he could have the pleasure of doing for him, when the young man removed his hat, and with a radiant smile, which seemed to suit him well, and in tone of voice which gave good evidence of refinement, said: "I have called, sir, in reply to your advertisement for a 'first-class clerk.'"

Being questioned as to whom he had served, or was now serving, and replying satisfactorily, Mr. P. was so favorably impressed by the young man's bearing and manner that, without demanding "references" as to character or ability, or both, he, at once, engaged him to enter upon his new service at the beginning of the following week.

Promptly at the hour appointed Sidney Stanton was at his post. He soon sprang into favor with Mr. P., who warmly congratulated himself that, at last, he had found what he had so long been seeking, a young man who was quick in his every movement, a thorough salesman and with an "address" as natural as it was pleasant. He was, indeed, his beau ideal of a counter-hand.

It was not long, however, before a kind (?) friend whispered to Mr. P. that Stanton was addicted to drinking, and that he had lost more than one situation by it. But it made no difference to Mr. P. His only reply was that he had found in him a young man of superior ability, and that, so far, he was well satisfied with him, and that even if the story were true, he should, here, have another chance given him to retrieve his character.

Nothing was said to Stanton about this, and he had probably hoped and persuaded himself to believe that Mr. P. knew absolutely nothing.

He had held his position for about six months, to the most perfect satisfaction of his employer, when, one morning, a telephone message came to Mr. P., stating that "Sidney Stanton was unable to come to business on account of an injury sustained by falling from the street car in going home last night; the roads were in a slip-

Mr. P. could not forget altogether what had been told him about his drinking habits and wondered if, after all, Sidney Stanton could possibly be playing a trick on him. In order to confirm the truth or otherwise of his story, Mr. P., the same evening, dispatched a junior clerk to the house in which Stanton boarded, giving him particular instructions not to allow the message, with which he was entrusted, to be delivered second-hand, but to see Stanton and deliver it himself.

And so he did. As he was ushered into his room he was amazed to see Stanton reclining upon his bed, with both arms thrown up, resting on the pillow, his fingers locked within each other, rested across his head.

It was nearing the end of the week, and a part of the message the junior clerk was given to deliver was for him to "make every effort to be at business on Saturday. If you cannot use your arm for taking orders or for parcelling, you can take the office and act as cashier, and the cashier will assist us at the counter."

A question which Mr. P. had instructed his messenger to put to Stanton, was: "What doctor did you go?" His reply to the question was reported to be prompt and positive, as if it had the ring of truth in it; but, unfortunately, it had not, rather was it—the death-knell of disappointed hopes.

Between then and Saturday morning there was ample time for making full inquiries as to the truth of Stanton's statement. H

"MR. P.— WAS SO FAVORABLY IMPRESSED THAT HE ENGAGED HIM AT ONCE."

pery condition after the rain, and, in alighting, he had fallen."

About two hours later Stanton himself telephoned, stating that he had "just returned from a visit to the doctor and that the injury he had received was a dislocation of the shoulder blade and the doctor's orders were that he must rest himself for some days."

had given the name of Dr. M—, but— as there were two doctors whose names were so nearly alike as to be somewhat confusing unless very distinctly pronounced, and as they resided in very close proximity to each other, Mr. P telephoned to each, in turn asking if a young man answering to the description given, had called in their

CHRIST OR BARABBAS! —WHICH?

YOU people," said the Indifferent Young Man, with a wave of his hand at Uncle Bez, which was meant to include all teachers and preachers of the Christian Church, "you people have such a brutal way of putting things that you make out the world to be a great deal worse than it really is. Now take myself, for example. I'm not exactly what you'd call a Christian, I suppose, and yet I'm far from a ranting, blasphemous Bob Ingersoll sort of a fellow. I've never made any 'profession of faith,' but on the other hand, I never did the opposite. And yet, I suppose you count me among those who 'reject Christ.' Now, tell me honestly, do you think that's fair?"

"My son," replied Uncle Bez, "I haven't a bit of respect for the loud-mouthed, skeptics who go about trying to convince their neighbors that there is no hope in this world or the next, but I want to say that the honest skeptic—and I suppose some of them really think they are honest—the honest skeptic, I say, has more of a chance for happiness in the hereafter, than that nonsense, who's neither hot nor cold, who neither accepts nor rejects, who tries to dodge the responsibility.

"That sort of a man is a regular Pontius Pilate, and I have just as much respect for him as the world at large has today for Pontius Pilate.

"You can't wash your hands of the whole affair, my son. You either do or you don't. There is no one upon whom you can throw the responsibility. The question comes home to you, to me, to every-one of us, every day anew, what are you going to do with the Lord Jesus Christ? And too many of us, who haven't the nerve and the courage that the blind and bigoted old Jews had; too many of us who can't bring ourselves to cry with the blasphemous, 'away with Him! Crucify Him!' try to do as Pontius Pilate did, and take refuge in questionings. 'Who are you?' we ask. 'Are you really the Son of God?' comes our question. 'How can You be both Divine and human? Are You the King, indeed? What is truth?'

"Over and over again, hundreds and thousands of Pontius Pilates have been asking the same question for nineteen hundred years; over and over again have they tried to dodge the issue, and to them all has come the same answer:

"My kingdom is not of this world. I came to bear witness of the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth My voice."

"And then, with perhaps a little dreamy speculation, a little hazy philosophizing upon what is Truth, we turn and deliver Barabbas, a robber, and by that act crucify the Lord again."

"Oh, come, now, Uncle Bez," said The Indifferent Young Man, "what do you mean by that? You don't believe that anybody, hardly, who is living today, would set a robber free, in place of Jesus, no difference whether they believed Jesus was the Savior of the world or not. You're too hard on us."

"Did you never hear of a robber being set free, in this nineteenth century?" asked Uncle Bez. "When a respectable church member gets up Sunday morning and gets so interested in the big Sunday paper that he decides to stay at home and read instead of going to church, he steals a part of God's day. Whom does he release, Christ or Barabbas?"

"When an active church worker finds track and a locomotive comes 'round the bend at a sixty-mile-an-hour gait, there's only two things to do. You must either get off the track and save your life, or stay on and get killed. There's no middle ground. You can't be indifferent. You may wash your hands in fifty basins of water, but that locomotive will get you if you don't get out.

"When you're in the middle of the ocean, there's only two places where you can possibly be. You must either stay on board, or get out into the water. There's no middle course. And on life's ocean, my boy, if you're wise you'll remember that Christ's ship is safe and sound, and that the Barabbas ocean is a mighty wet place, and it's a long way to the shore. And if you remember that, if you fully realize it, I don't believe you'll hesitate very much longer about whether you are responsible for making a choice or not. When the ship heaves in sight—and, my that her new bonnet is going to cost a little bit more than she expected, but she pays the price and leaves nothing for her church contribution, she robs God of a part of what is His. Whom does she release, Christ or Barabbas?

"When a respectable young man makes up his mind that he will give none of this year to God's service, he robs God of what is truly His. Whom does he release, Christ, or Barabbas?"

"When a young man decides that he will allow himself to get through this world without the help and guidance of that friend who sticketh closer than a brother, he robs one of God's children of God's best blessing. Whom does he release, Christ or Barabbas?"

"No, no, my boy, the old, old question, Christ or Barabbas, comes into every life. We can't dodge. If you're on a railroad boy, it's always in sight—you'll climb aboard without stopping to ask too many questions.

"It seems to me," Uncle Bez said as he turned to go, "that this one thing is what the world needs to learn today above all others: We can't escape responsibility; we must accept or reject. What will you do?"

not so much the material possessions accumulated as the personal character achieved. The greatest change wrought by the years of exile is not the increase in flocks and herds, tents and trappings, but the alteration in feeling and nature in the man who seeks his father's house and brother's face after years of alienation. In deepest truth, no one knows our true name but God. In the coming kingdom the Master will give us the title we have earned in the years of earthly toil. Shall it be "God's man-Israel?"

Shirking.

That was the sin of Jonah. It is the fault of many at the present time. He knew Nineveh was wicked. He knew that unless it was stopped Nineveh was doomed to speedy destruction. He knew he ought to give the warning. He did not want to do it. No matter why he shrank from the task—he may have had many reasons to dread it—the duty still remained, and no shirking could shift the responsibility from him.

You see some one doing wrong. You know that evil consequences must follow. The impulse comes to warn the evildoer of danger. You hesitate and refuse. It is the Jonah act of fleeing to Tarshish. It is dangerous for you and deathly to the unwarned one. Better go the way you are sent and give the message God has given you. Don't shirk. It's bad business.

Most Urgent.

Whatever else is done or left undone, the care of the religious nature should not be neglected. Better go without breakfast, dinner or supper than without prayer. It is a good thing to read the daily paper, but not good to neglect the Bible. Read both if possible, but be sure to read the Bible anyway. It may be urgent that the club meetings be attended; it is more necessary that the prayer meeting be sustained. You may get good in the first; you are sure to get good and do good in the second, if you will. Work well during the week, but be sure and spend the Sunday well. The family need food and clothing, but they also need family devotions. Be a good student, farmer, merchant or whatever your calling is, but be sure and be a good Christian. This is most urgent.

The Satisfier.

We taste Thee, O Thou Living Bread,
And long to feast upon Thee still;
We drink of Thee, the fountain head,
And thirst our souls from Thee to fill.

Jesus, Thou joy of loving hearts,
Thou fount of life, Thou light of men!
From the best bliss that earth imparts
We turn unfilled to Thee again.

Thy truth unchanged hath ever stood,
Thou savest those that on Thee call;
To them that seek Thee Thou art good,
To them that find Thee, all in all.

Our restless spirits yearn for Thee
Where'er our changeful lot is cast,
Glad when Thy gracious smile we see,
Blest when our faith can hold Thee fast.

O Jesus, ever with us stay,
Make all our moments calm and bright;
Chase the dark night of sin away,
Shed o'er the world Thy holy light.

SLAVES OF ALCOHOL.ALARM IN EUROPE OVER GROWTH OF DRUNKENNESS.

France Now the Most Intemperate of Civilized Nations—Physicians Moving For Reform—Temperance Work in Europe.

Publication is being forcibly directed just at present to the aggressive campaign against intemperance which is being carried on in nearly every country on the continent, and especially in France. The advance in this country is unique of its kind, as there never before has been any general movement of a national nature. The French have been wont to look upon themselves as good examples of moderation, while they gave their pity to Germany and England as horrible examples of people who drink too much. But now Dr. Laborde has informed the French that they are the most intemperate of all the civilized peoples on earth and gives science and figures to prove it.

When this announcement was made, the French told the doctor that he was mistaken, and the newspapers published columns of indignant protest against the charge—and investigated as a second thought. Then they changed their confident note, for in a series of articles prepared by M. Cornely of The Figaro it is shown that close to 15 liters, or about 16 quarts, of alcohol are consumed every year for each of the 38,000,000 people in the republic. The French find that, instead of heading the alcoholic list, Germany and the British islands come third and fourth, as Belgium takes second place after France, but with nearly one-third less in its per capita consumption. Fifth in the list is Switzerland, the home of absinth, and then, in the order named, there follow Italy, Holland, the United States, Sweden, Norway and Canada. Norway is the most temperate of any European country. Canada leads the world in its moderation with a per capita average of over two litres a year.

Most reform, of whatever kind, may be counted upon to have a humble beginning, thence to work upward among the people. But this movement reverses the almost established order, for it has started at the summit of intellectual France. Heading the movement is Dr. C. Grain, one of the best medical authorities in France, who is president of the National Antialcoholic league and editor of a temperance monthly, called L'Alcool. His active adjutants are 42 doctors, nearly all of whom are men of wide reputation and independent means, several being total abstainers in common with their president. Under the stimulus from their distinguished leaders, it is not strange that the students throughout France should take up the campaign. They have organized a league and are pushing the work into all parts of the country under the leadership of Georges Barbey, who is an advocate at law actively connected with the defense in the Dreyfus case. To such proportions has this movement reached that it is extending to other countries, notably to Switzerland, where students' leagues have been established at Lausanne, Basel and Zurich.

The evils of absinth drinking are growing. It is only a few years since two old women living in a secluded mountain in Switzerland gave out their secret for brewing a drink of rare quality from wormwood, but now absinth is known around the world. Nowhere has its sale grown to so threatening proportions as in France, where its excessive use annually drives many to insanity.

Senator Le Jeune of Belgium says: "I have a bill before parliament to gradually decrease the number of public drinking houses throughout the country in the next ten years. At present we have 298,000 of these to a population of but 6,000,000 of people, or one to every 24 persons. My plan is to make the proportion one drinking place to every 200 people, but the proposal is too radical to carry without material amendment."

Some of the continental governments are posting temperance lithographs in public places as a warning to the people on the effects of intemperance, and the temperance societies in France display posters labeled, "Absinth—Poison!" with a skull and crossbones.

Not alone are the present French efforts educational, but they are aiming at national legislation as being the only permanent cure. There is a group of temperance legislators in the chamber of deputies and in the senate who are pressing for constitutional relief from the present desperate conditions. Senator Siegfried will shortly present a bill to reduce the number of drinking places in the republic as the beginning of an extensive legislative reform. There are more than half a million of public drinking houses in France, and in some of the departments the consumption of alcohol now amounts to 20 litres per person yearly.

A redeeming feature of French intemperance is that next to no drunkenness is seen upon the streets. Practically everybody drinks, and rich and poor alike take the "little glass," or its multiple, with every meal and between meals. Only among the poorest do they follow the American practice of bracing up against a bar and drinking on an empty stomach. As it is, they may be in a continuous fuddle, but never drunk.

An unexpected indorsement of the temperance movement has developed since the first of the year in the friendly attitude of the socialistic press of France and other countries. These papers, as the organs of the powerful workmen's societies of the continent, say that they can co-operate with this propaganda as tending to lessen the opportunity to drink, which they plainly say is the workman's greatest enemy.—New York Sun.

about these difficulties, she came to the sixteenth verse of the fifty-first chapter, when these words seem to stand out on the page, "I have put My words in thy mouth." "That," she said, "WAS FOR THE CLASS" And then the next line seemed to stand out similarly, "And I have covered thee in the shadow of My hand." "That," she said, "WAS PLAINLY FOR THE TRAMPS." So does the Holy Spirit fit the words of Scripture into our particular needs.—Current Anecdotes.

RESOLUTIONS.

PRINCE EDWARD CIRCUIT.

Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held at Beulah on Oct. 7th. All regretted the absence of Rev. Jos. H. Riddick. Rev. A. B. Sharpe preached, to the delight of all present. The following resolutions were passed:

Whereas, Under the law of our Church our presiding elder, Rev. Jos. H. Riddick, cannot be returned to us after this year; and

Whereas, We have always gladly welcomed him in our homes and our pulpits, and have profited by his consecrated public ministrations and private example, be it

RESOLVED, 1: That the fourth Quarterly Conference of Prince Edward circuit parts with Rev. Jos. H. Riddick with sorrow, and pray Almighty God to long spare his useful life, and cordially commend him to the love and esteem of all Churches in the work to which he may be assigned.

2: That a copy of this paper be spread upon our minutes, a copy be sent to Rev. J. H. Riddick, and copies sent to R. C. Advocate and SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER for publication.

G. W. REDD, Chairman,
T. T. PETTUS, SECT'Y.

CHARLOTTE CIRCUIT.

Whereas, Under the law of our Church, the office of the Rev. Jos. H. Riddick, as P. E. of the Farmville district, expires by limitation at the approaching session of our Annual Conference, and

Whereas, We desire to express the sincere pleasure with which we have always gladly received his official visits, and put on record the entire acceptability with which his consecrated ministration in the pulpit and at our firesides have been rendered, and

Whereas, We believe that his labors under God have been blessed to the good of the entire charge, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, 1: By the Quarterly Conference of Charlotte Circuit, that we part with him with sorrow, and most heartily bid him God-speed in his labors, and cordially commend him to the affection and esteem of all Christians in the new work to which he may be, in God's providence, assigned.

2: That a copy of this paper be spread upon the minutes, and copies be forwarded to the R. C. Advocate, and the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER with request for publication.

JAMES A. BAILEY, Chairman,
J. P. PURCELL, SECT'Y.

HYCO CIRCUIT.

Whereas, According to the pastoral limitation of our Church, the term of our presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Riddick, expires with the Conference year, therefore,

RESOLVED: That we desire to put upon record our appreciation of him both as a man and a preacher of the Gospel, whose services have been beneficial to us.

2: That we assure our esteemed and beloved brother of our good wishes and prayers for his success wherever, in the providence of God, he may go to labor in the future.

3: That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Quarterly Conference and a copy be sent to Bro. Riddick.

social and political movement and on which all political government should be based. The mission of the Gospel preacher is to leaven all thought with the thought of God, all government with the law of God, and all life with the life of God. The minister who is afraid to discuss Christian truth in its relation to educational systems, commercial enterprises and political parties and measures is a mere negation of a true ambassador of Jesus Christ. If the pulpit had been faithful in the application of the ethics of the Gospel to the commercial life of our people, to the conduct of their political leaders and the methods and movements of their political parties, such corruption as we have seen in business, politics and government could not have existed.

Every man who is guilty of any sort of commercial or political fraud, or who winks at it in others, or who fails to smite it when it is uncovered, is responsible for the crimes of our country. You think it an awful thing to steal. You believe that such conduct deserves to be branded with disgrace and severely punished by the civil authorities. But while you are fulminating your wrath against thieves, do not neglect to see whether wrong lies at your own door. Every merchant who gives short measure, or deals in fraudulent goods, or deceives his customers in regard to the quality and value of his goods, has helped to make the villains who rob money drawers, bank vaults and State treasuries. These superlative thieves, upon whom we fasten the felon's badge and consign to the State's prison, are the creations of a vast army of comparative thieves that go unwhipped of justice. Think ye that the Tweeds, Wards, Vincents, and Polks are sinners above all of the men of this land? Nay! I say to any man who has taken advantage of his neighbor in a business transaction, to any man who hides his property from the sheriff to avoid the payment of his debts, to any man who deceives a tax assessor about the value of his taxable possessions, that he is as guilty before God as the culprit who has been convicted of crime and sentenced to hard labor. It is the low standard of integrity in business circles generally that has helped to make the vast army of thieves now in

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.
The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practical School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

the custody of our government.

Recently a candidate for a municipal office declared, in a public address, that "a city government could not be run upon Sunday-school principles." What did he mean by that? He meant that in the administration of civil government the morality of the Bible should be repudiated or ignored. He meant that if he should be elected to the office which he coveted, he would adopt a standard of official integrity that would accommodate bar-keepers, gamblers, harlots and every class of moral lepers. Every such office-holder is a breeder of crime, and if the people fail to move him from the position which he holds, it is because their own moral standard is disgracefully low.

We have upon our State and municipal statute books laws which forbid bar-rooms to do business on Sunday. Why are they not enforced? One reason is to be found in the lack of moral integrity in those who are charged with the responsibility of executing them; and who doubts that the failure to execute the laws of the land is prolific of crime. Another reason is to be found in the fact that the love of the great moral principles expressed in our legislation for the protection of the Sabbath is not rooted and grounded in the hearts of the people.

If you allow bar rooms to do business on Sunday, you not only license the lawlessness of these dens of iniquity, but you license the lawlessness of every other class of evil-doers. If the bar-keepers can defy the State with impunity, why may not bigamists, counterfeiters, and thieves attempt it?

What is the remedy for this condition of things? Some would say, "punish the culprits, expose their knavery, proclaim it from the housetops, publish it to the world, hold them up to universal scorn and reprobation." That is only a part of the remedy. That alone will not suffice. There must be reformation in the family, in the common schools, in the colleges and universities, in the editorial sanctum, in the Church and in the pulpit. In all of these places greater emphasis must be given to the everlasting distinctions which God Almighty makes between right and wrong. There must be a genuine revival of honesty and honor among the masses of our people. We must build up a public sentiment that will make falsehoods infamous, and that will pronounce any sort of dishonesty in business or politics a crime against country, humanity, and God. Teach your children that the truest patriotism is to do right, and that the worst treason is to corrupt the morals of the country. Teach them to hate the breath of the drunkard as they hate the stench of the charnal house. Teach them to dread the door of the gambler's den as they dread the gates of hell. Teach them to regard the political trickster as the worst of enemies to the peace and welfare of his country. Let our mothers, wives, sisters and daughters come to the rescue by combining to make the intelligence, virtue, refinement, and honor the passports to respectability. Let them illustrate an uncompromising fidelity to the things that are pure, lovely and of good report. Let us do these things, and a better dispensation will dawn upon our country.—Dr. J. B. Hawthorne.

THE MAN WITH THE HOE.

DEAR RECORDER:—After reading your re-publication of the "Elucidation of the 'Man With the Hoe,'" I concluded to send you the enclosed clippings. "Love is all," is from the Richmond "Times" of Sept. 16. My criticism of the unscriptural doctrine assumed by the poem in its reference to Genesis, was published in the "Times" of Sept. 22. "Labor" and "work" mean the same thing in the poem. And the notion that Genesis teaches that God placed on man "labor," or "work," as his "great curse," is more wide-spread than some imagine. If you care to do so, you can publish the clippings I send.

Yours fraternally,
J. R. STURGIS.

LOVE IS ALL.

This poem was written by Ella Wheeler Wilcox as a protest against the sentiments expressed in "The Man With the Hoe."

Let labor boldly walk abroad
And take its place with kings,
For who has labored more than God,
The maker of all things?

The time has come, aye, even now it is,
To rank that parable in Genesis
Of God's great curse of labor placed on man,

With other fairy tales. Why he began
All work Himself! He was so full of force

He flung the solar systems on their course
And builded worlds on worlds, and, not content,
He labors still; when mighty suns are spent,

He forges on his white-hot anvil—space—
New stars to tell his story and his race.

Who most achieves is most like God; I hold;
The idler is the black sheep in the fold.

Not for the hardest toiler with the hoe
My tears of sorrow and compassion flow
Though he be dull, unlettered and not fair

To look upon; tho' he is bowed with care
Yet in his heart if dear love folds its wings,
He stands a monarch over unloved kings.

One sorrow only in God's world has birth—

To live unloving and unloved on earth;

One joy only makes life a part of heaven—

The joy of happy love received and given.

Down through the chaos of our human laws

Love shines supreme, the great eternal cause,

God loved so much his thoughts burst into flame,

And from that sacred source creation came.

The heart which feels this holy light within

Finds God and man and beast and bird its kin,

All class distinctions fade and disappear,

Death is new life, and heaven he sees a near.

Brother is he to the "ox" and "seraphim,"

"Slave to the wheel," mayhap, yet kings to him.

And millionaires, seem paupers, if from them

Life has withheld its luminous great gem.

Or if his badge be scepter, hoe or hod,

POETRY VS. LOGIC.

of The Times:

—In your issue of the 16th instant for the first time and with much rest the strongly-written poem, "Is All," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox. The logic of her protest is not strengthened by her depreciation of Genesis. She avers—

"Time has come, aye, even now it is, Frank that parable in Genesis God's great curse of labor placed on man, With other fairy tales."

According to this, Gen. iii: 17-18-19, part of a fairy tale, a myth. It seems consistent to brand a record of the Mosaic record as mythical, then turn immediately to that record for foundation facts, with which to buttress her poem. She goes on to say for her only and sufficient authority, that—

"...began all work himself, as so full of force, turning the solar systems on their course, and building worlds on worlds."

Genesis tells us, but if a part of the record is mythical, why not its ascription of God with creation be another of its myths? How are we to distinguish between its literal and historic and its "fairy tales?"

And if we "rank that parable in Genesis with other fairy tales," what can we gain thereby? The facts remain unchanged. Surely, "the ground" does not forth "thorns also and thistles." The harvest is the result of long-continued warfare. Man compels nourishment from earth's reluctant breast. He marshals her forces to undo his work. He builds, she destroys. He sows, she wastes. And if the declaration, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" did not find its fulfillment in Adam's experience, it does in the experience of his descendants. And surely, it is not thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," echoes daily its bitter truth around each new-made grave. If we reject "the parable" we do not get rid of the facts. We only reject the only explanation ever given concerning the origin, the "genesis" of the stubbornly abiding facts. Furthermore, Mrs Wilcox assumes the book, and then assails, a theory which is not recorded in Genesis, and is nowhere taught in the Bible. When she writes—

"God's great curse of labor placed on man," she writes of something that cannot be found in Genesis. "In the beginning," "work" is exalted as worthy of God, and living its origin, and illustrious first example in Him. As she so aptly says

"He began all work Himself."

The first picture, on the first page of the Bible, is that of Deity at work. The first picture of man after his creation represents him with his work. The Lord God took the man and put him in the garden of Eden to dress it. In the second picture, he is engaged in a special, a tremendous work of giving "names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field." God sets the example, and He sets Adam to a following of his example, in working. It may yet appear that the first temptation to which Eve yielded was idleness, as she loitered at the tree of life. Adam was evidently busy somewhere at the time, and the tempter knew it was useless to approach with his fallacies a very busy man. True, when man "fell" he dragged everything down with him. But no "great curse of labor was placed on man. Idleness placed on man would have been a curse. Work was a blessing. "Because" man had sinned and fallen, the ground was cursed. It was cursed for man's sake. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake" is the plain signature. Holiness no longer inspired to activity. The existing conditions without primal holiness were conducive to idleness: Idleness would be a deadly danger. To lessen the possibilities of its curse, man must be placed "in labors abundant." "Six days shalt thou labor" was essential to man. But it was not a curse. The "thou shalt" of labor, was to be uplifted, side by side, with the "thou shalt love the Lord thy God." But the ground must be cursed that man's labors may be increased. Heretofore, its tilling was pure pleasure, performed with ease, and always without weariness. But now the earth would no longer produce its fruits spontaneously, while the generic "thorns and briars" would increase the difficulties and work of the tiller. And man could no longer work without weariness. Sin had sown the seeds of physical decay. There would be weakness, disease, age death. Hence the words, "In toil—or sorrow—shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." But in all this, "work" and "curse" were not equivalents. He retained the blessing of work after he fell. Our motive is that of the divine when he says, that—

"Satan has his mischief still,
For idle hands to do."

Not labor, but idleness, is anathema. To bury the talent, to do nothing, is to be accursed.

"Ye did it not," is a knell of doom. We are to "work while it is called day." Be "diligent in business" is the divine injunction. The blessed Christ set his seal of nobility and example on this question of work. He chose only workers into apostleship. Casting a net, or collecting "custom," it mattered not, so the man was a worker. He seemed to have no use, no place for a lazy man. In his kingdom labor is the law of progress. An early article of Christian faith and practice was that "if any man would not work neither should he eat." Nowhere in the New Testament is labor represented as God's curse upon man. On the contrary, it is God-like, ennobling to work, and this God-assigned labor is ever to have its reward. And the teachings of the Old Testament, including the third chapter of Genesis, are all in harmony with the teachings of the New Testament, on this important subject.

According to the Scriptures, in the future we shall be delivered from the presence and dominion of the curse, but nowhere in the Bible do we read that we shall ever be exempt from the presence, the duty and the blessedness of work. Indeed, every intimation in the word of God hints at an increase of work—with this vast difference. There will be no unfavorable conditions, there will be no weariness. "Take thou au-

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings
of All Denominations.
Mission of the Church.

The church is not to seek self support as an end, but is rather to seek and save that which is lost.—Rev. R. W. Lewis, Presbyterian, Denver.

Clear Thinking.

In order to think clearly, one must avoid the labeling habit, avoid thought ruts, have and adhere to one's own views.—Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

The Soul's Immortality.

How many people really know as to the immortality of the soul? Some argue we are bound to accept it because God's word says so.—W. J. Colville, Free Thinker, Philadelphia.

Attainment.

The one condition of attainment is submission to a higher will and a wider wisdom than you can ever possess of yourself.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Richest Person in the World.

"All things are yours." This text is for God's child, and it makes him the richest person in God's universe. It is not how much we possess as what use we make of it.—Rev. Dr. Bacon, Independent, Indianapolis.

Christianity's Influence.

Under the influence of Christianity, which has taught the sacredness of life, if the most depraved mother abandons her child it is placed in the care of Christian guardians.—Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Christian Church, Chicago.

Aim of Human Existence.

Human existence has a purpose. A mighty purpose is being fulfilled thereby. God is to be made manifest. This is the aim and end of human existence, the destiny of the human soul.—Mrs. Gestefeld, Christian Scientist, Chicago.

Final Command For Christians.

Christians must obey that final command of their risen Lord to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This does not mean that every Christian should be a foreign missionary.—Rev. E. A. Woods, Baptist, San Francisco.

God Is Source of Life.

We entirely mistake when we make life in God and life in man to be different. Life in the soul is the tide of the Divine ocean flowing through the narrow channel of human nature. It is the direct gift of God.—Rev. Dr. James D. Rankin, Presbyterian, Denver.

Christian Character.

There is only one thing under the sun for this day and all coming days, and that is Christian character. That is the only thing that will endure out of the wrecks of time and that we can carry with us on the morning of eternity. We may sell and get gain. If we have nothing more to live for, life is failure.—Rev. S. A. Northrop, Baptist, Kansas City.

Religion Not All Form.

Whenever we regard religion as a round of ceremonies and formalities, divorcing it from the idea of helpfulness, then we overlook the plain teaching of the parable and leave undone the things that most need to be done, the doing of which would not only relieve suffering, but would also be a means of spiritual growth to us.—Rev. Richard E. Sykes, Universalist, Denver.

God's Loving Care.

All nature is filled with the testimony of God's constant, loving care for the world. The heavens spoke of God's power, the earth of fullness, and the sea was a testimony to God's majesty and mystery. The redemptive power of the sea was illustrated by its qualities as a constant purifier of the atmosphere. Its pervasive power was exemplified by the tides which crept into every corner on the shores.—Rev. Edward M. Noyes, Congregationalist, Newton Center, Mass.

Divinity of Christ.

A proof of his divinity is that he declared himself to be divine, and this declaration is shown to be true by his character. Christ's character, mental and moral, is shown in his words and acts, in his teaching and practice. His Divine intellect shines out on every page of the New Testament. He spoke as never man spoke before. He speaks of divine things as one coming direct from God's palace and accustomed to them.—Rev. Henry A. Brann, Catholic, New York.

The New Theology

The new theology means to get back of all theories and traditions, creeds and dogmas, to the Divine revelation in the Scriptures and in Christ. It seems to the popular mind a shockingly revolutionary measure to advocate a new theology, inasmuch as theology and religion are generally confounded with each other. But they are no more the measure of each other than a man's clothes are the measure of the man. A new suit of clothes is a good thing at least once a year. So a new theology at least shows a man to be interested in his intellectual and religious clothes.—Rev. Robert McDonald, Baptist, Brooklyn.

Bible Teachings.

The teachings of the Bible, superior as they are, are surpassed by the lives it records. Take these as a whole, and where will you find a nobler group than the Old and New Testament characters? Has Joseph been excelled among the prime ministers of nations? In statesmanship has the world surpassed that of the old prophets? "Why," said Henry Ward Beecher, "I am disgusted when a man thinks as he reads Isaiah and Jeremiah that his business is to see whether what they said came to pass. These were moral statesmen. Geniuses of rectitude were they that rose in times of distemperature and bore witness for truth and right. Magnificent men they were. Their heads were lifted high above the age in which they lived."—Rev. H. R. Rose, Universalist, Auburn, Me.

BY FAITH.

The night is dark, and alone I tread
The way—yet not alone;
The clouds that lower overhead
Across the moon are blown;
I onward go and do not fear,
With footsteps firm and light;
I whisper words of sweetest cheer—
By faith, and not by sight.

Oh how I thank Him that the way,
Though unto me unknown,
He knows! And through the clouds the ray
Of light is o'er me thrown.
I simply hold his guiding hand,
And although dark the night,
I trust—nor care to understand—
For faith surpasses sight.

Oh! could I know each ill that waits
Upon my onward road,
I'd bow beneath the heavy weights
Of sorrow's weary load.
His grace suffices every need,
And nothing can afright
The soul that on His manna feeds,
And walks by faith, not sight.

God's way is always the best way;
His will I now make mine;
His peace doth fill my heart each day
With harmony divine.
I simply trust because I know
God's plans are always right;
And willingly, where'er I go,
I'll walk by faith, not sight.
—St. Louis Advocate.

Editorial.

The editor desires to express his appreciation of the many kind letters he has received from his brethren. Unexpectedly to himself, he is still confined to his room, but hopes to be out soon.

Bishop Candler will represent the General Board of Education at the coming session of our Conference. He will receive a hearty welcome from our preachers and laymen.

Cornelius Vanderbilt left $50,000 to Vanderbilt University in his will.

Bishop Key is reported to have said recently that, in his judgment, the Twentieth Century movement will demonstrate the value or want of value of the presiding elder as an officer in the Church.—Midland Methodist.

This is certainly an opportunity to magnify the office. May it be heartily embraced.

NONE LEFT OUT(?)

The Midland Methodist reports that the four-year term expired with five of the ten presiding elders of the Tennessee Conference. The Midland Methodist also reports that on the third day of the Conference a gold-headed cane was presented to one elder and a gold watch to another; on the fourth day a handsome umbrella was presented to another; on the fifth day a gold watch was presented to another, and a gold pen to the last of the five. On the sixth day the appointments were announced, and none of them were reappointed by Bishop Galloway.

CONFERENCE THANK- OFFERINGS.

The Holston Conference is reported in the Nashville Advocate as having subscribed $5,000 to the Twentieth Century Fund. The Tennessee Conference is reported in the Midland Methodist as having subscribed $10,000. We are glad to see these reports. It insures the success of the movement among the charges of the Conferences. The pastor is pre-eminently the leader of the flock. If he is not interested in a movement his people are not likely to be. Every dollar he subscribes increases his own interest in the cause, and so fires the enthusiasm of his people. Then it gives the pastor freedom to speak. His people know the cost of living; they know his salary. When he rises up and says, "Brethren, I have no money to invest in stocks and bonds, or in houses or lands, but when once in my lifetime the Church says, 'Come, join with your Methodist brethren all over the world and lay a Thank-Offering on the altar of the Lord, which shall commemorate His past blessings and provide a fund to carry on His vast work with greater efficiency and power,' then I cannot answer nay. I owe all I have to Him, and the joy of my life is to see His cause prosper." When the pastor talks this way and then gives $25, $50, or $100, or $1,000, as the case may be, his people know that he is in earnest, and he can talk to them freely as to their own privileges in the matter.

This writer believes that when the last subscription has been made at the Virginia Conference that over $20,000 will have been subscribed by the members of the Conference. He is judging largely from his experience on the Farmville District. Already $2,000 been pledged by the presiding elder and fourteen preachers, and nine preachers are yet to subscribe. And this in a district where there are only three salaries as high as $1,500. When the districts with the large salaried stations begin to subscribe, the amount will doubtless be much greater, and as we have eleven districts we may reasonably look for $20,000. This will be an inspiring start with which to enter upon the year, and when we consider the wonderful mercies of God to us, what can be sufficient to show our appreciation of them.

JAMES CANNON, JR., Sec.

A MUDDLE?

The following letter from a prominent member of the Tennessee Conference, seems to indicate a muddle, to call it nothing worse. It is a sad fact, but it is true, that many persons are not surprised at anything which may happen in reference to the Publishing House under the present Agents and Book Committee.

The volume of business for the Nashville Publishing House for the first six months of this year was $16,500 larger than for a similar period or last year.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Notwithstanding the above, the annual distribution of funds for the benefit of Conference claimants is suspended this year. Dr. Barbee, when before the Tennessee Conference, stated that there was plenty of money on hand to make a dividend to these worthy claimants, but that it had been the custom of "The House" to make no appropriation every fourth year.

The chairman of the Joint Board of Finance later stated that the failure to receive aid for these claimants would cause suffering, as it was unexpected, as there had been no such failure since 1888, except 1894, following the drouth and panic of 1893. He gives as authority the "Year Book," published by "The House."

MEMBER OF TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

BY RAIL, BOAT, AND BUGGY.

To go to sleep, to sleep soundly, and to wake up at a definite time, before the regular time, has always been to the writer one of the impossible things. I had an appointment in Mathews, and in order to go via Richmond and Newport News, must catch the early train. I went to bed and tried to sleep, without remembering all the time that I was asleep, and that I must wake up. But I could not do it. I caught the train, in my sleep, three times by less than a minute, and finally waked up, with my hand in my vest pocket, feeling for my watch. A hasty glance revealed that the train was due at the depot, three-quarters of a mile away, in thirteen minutes. A fire and a train will reduce the time for a toilet to fully one-fifth. The open watch showed three minutes occupied in preparation to make a tolerably presentable appearance for the outside world, the wash bowl and hair brush being entirely neglected. During these three minutes a message was sent to the stable for the buggy to be at the door in five minutes, and in about that length of time, with overcoat, umbrella, telescope, tie and cuffs in my hands, I climbed into the buggy behind "Patsey" and started for the train. I do not know whether I would have made it had it been on time or not, for when I reached a certain spot in the road from which I knew I could beat the train after it blew, I slacked up and drove slowly to the depot, to find that it was thirty minutes late. I found Bro. Campbell at the depot, returning home from West Brunswick circuit, and we had a pleasant hour to Petersburg. Arriving there I found that my train to Richmond was late also, and I was able to go up in the city and take breakfast with Bro. Campbell.

PETERSBURG.

The Petersburg brethren were busily at work securing homes for members of the Conference, and it is likely that most of the entertainment will be in private families. The last Conference in Petersburg, in 1891, had many striking incidents. Bishop Keener presided, and his appointments will never be forgotten by many. His utterance that "men began on missions and they may expect to go out at the same door," was severely criticised. He set his face like a flint against the admission of Dr. Geo. W. Carter, and prevented his application from being made that year. The scene at the reading of the appointments was a study in human nature. One brother wept. One presiding elder, after one or two appointments on his district had been read, could not restrain his amusement, and openly laughed. When the Bishop finished reading the district, the elder stepped forward and whispered a few words in his ear. Within ten minutes of the close of the reading of the appointments, two were changed. To me, who had always looked upon an appointment as an unchangeable fact, this was a revelation, and gave me courage three weeks later to join in a request for a change of my own appointment from Central, Portsmouth, to Farmville, which request was granted, and which has been one of the greatest factors in shaping my life since. It is stated that another elder, who had pressed a certain arrangement, and thought that he had fully convinced the Bishop, was standing in the aisle, hat in hand, ready to catch the train, but desiring to hear his own district read out. His own name was read, then, the leading Church on his district. But the brother appointed was not the one for whom he had laid his plans. He turned and passed down the aisle without waiting for any more, and when asked by one of our prominent preachers where he was going, said: "I am going home. That is a most remarkable man." The old Bishop was a great slate smasher, and did not allow the Conference to be dominated in the appointments by any particular man or men.

He is undoubtedly a man of strong prejudices, but he is a great man nevertheless. He loves the Church of Christ, and especially that branch of it to whose upbuilding his life has been given. One of the truly great sermons I have heard was preached by him at Memphis, on the text, "And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass than one title of the law to fail." Another incident of the Conference which impressed me was a scene in Washington-Street church, on Sunday night. The house was crowded, and we were waiting for the preacher to arrive. Suddenly an old man arose from the front pew, and turned, facing the congregation. He had a short circular overcoat around his shoulders, and long flowing gray locks. I thought he was going to address the congregation. But instead of that he began at once to sing "The Old Ship of Zion. It was a striking scene, and was a fitting closing testimony to the saving power of the Gospel by one who had preached it from early youth to hoary age, for in less than one month Dr. Rosser passed away from earth, and was borne safely home on the "Old Ship of Zion." I remember this Conference for another reason. I offered my first resolution and made my first speech on the Conference floor. It was with grave doubts as to whether I would be able to speak, and with quivering nerves, and throbbing pulses I rose to my feet and called upon the stern old Bishop to give me a part of the precious time of the body. I think I would have been speedily squelched, but I had carefully secured the names of Drs. R. N. Sledd and A. B. Brown as signers to the resolution, and I knew that anything signed by these honored names must have a hearing. The resolution was adopted without much debate, but it brought forth quite a newspaper discussion later on. My immediate reward for my first speech was the remark of an elderly preacher, "That young fellow had better shed his ecclesiastical pin-feathers before he attempts to teach us what to do."

When we last met in Petersburg the membership was 75,708, a decrease of 1,338, in comparison with the year previous, owing to the loss of the country beyond the Chowan. Since that time we have lost the balance of the North Carolina territory, involving a loss of over 4,000 members, and yet at the last Conference we reported 88,693 members, a recorded gain of 13,000 in seven years, and a real gain of 17,000. It is likely that the next Conference will show a total membership of nearly 90,000, or a real gain in the eight years of nearly 19,000, or twenty per cent.

Those of us who have seen the changes going on from year to year will not be so vividly impressed, but to a resident of Petersburg who has not attended a session of the Conference since the last one held there, the change in the personnel of the Conference will be so great as to make it seem almost like another body. The noble face of P. A. Peterson is gone from his place at the secretary's table. His voice no longer leads the brethren in sacred song; and, if missing him, the eye roves around to catch the familiar face of Bledsoe or of Southall, both are gone. Vanderslice also, who, with less melody, but with equal power, sometimes led, is gone. Sledd and Brown, the chairmen of our great Conference boards, will not be there. E. M. Peterson, Rosser, Reed, Manning, Wills, Laurens, Boggs, Twitty, E. P. Wilson, W. E. Payne, Martin, Beckham, Hildrup, Spencer, Smithey, Booker, Christian, Mitchell, Proctor, and Robins are some of the 45 or 50 preachers who have been removed by death, or transfer, or other causes. And these in the short space of eight years!

The call of the districts will be one of the things that will sound somewhat familiar. Garland, Whitehead, Amiss, Campbell, and Hunter occupied seats on the bench of the elders of that Conference, and will do so again at this one, although the last named has been in the pastorate one-half the time since.

APPOINTMENTS.

And speaking of the eldership brings to mind the appointments. At the last session in Petersburg there were over one hundred changes. At the coming Conference there are comparatively few changes required by the time limit—about 25 all told. But, strange to say, considerably over one-half of these are in our prominent city charges and in the eldership, so that there will be more noise and talk about them than one hundred changes in the circuit work would cause. Broad-Street, Trinity, Park-Place, St. James, and Centenary, Richmond; Epworth, McKendree, and Chestnut-Street, Norfolk; Monumental, and Park-View, Portsmouth; Farmville, Charlottesville, Court-Street, and Main-Street; the Charlottesville, Farmville, and Petersburg districts all must have a change. How many other churches and how many other preachers will think this a good time to change and will cast in their lot with these, no one can say till the Conference adjourns. The adjustment of the appointments is one of the most delicate and difficult functions that can be assigned to any man or body of men. If any men have need to be filled with the Divine spirit, they are the Bishop and his council. They should literally "know no man according to the flesh," but the work of the Lord should be first and foremost above all other considerations. If, after earnest prayer and consultation, a brother is truly believed to be unfit for certain work it ought not to be given to him. No matter who is offended, no considerations, no claims, should be allowed a place in the decision, but the glory of God should be the only rule of judgment. Much of our power has been lost by allowing other motives to influence the appointments. When one preacher writes to another one and asks him to let him know what appointment he would like to have, that he will get it for him, or try to get it for him, it looks as if appointments were regarded by such persons as a matter of spoils to be picked over and divided out, and it also looks as if there is an attempt to play the role of dictator, or to make persons believe that such power is possessed, that no appointment can be made without the approval of the self-constituted bishop. It is the test of the Christian manhood of any Conference to have in it those who, instead of pressing forward the great movement of the Church and leading in revivals, give their time and thought to planning and scheming how to apportion out the appointments. The tendency as strong to "fight the devil with fire," and to make counter plans. And too often the point is reached that the talk and thought of the preachers become centered upon the appointments instead of upon the salvation of souls, the growth of Zion, the development of the great educational and missionary enterprises of the Church. How is such an evil to be met? Self-respect, to say nothing of Christian uprightness, will not allow the use of the same methods in meeting it. The only possible way is to openly and positively denounce such things just as other sin is denounced, and to have the courage to risk all the taunts and stings which may follow. Anything is better than the conversion of the Church into an arena for the display of the abilities of the ecclesiastical politicians. It is far better for the good of the Church to have the issue clearly defined and fought out, than to have it remain hidden from no one, but tolerated, lest a discussion of it will give offense. To tolerate it too often results in the spread of the poison and the tainting of many, especially of the younger men. It has to be met sooner or later in every church, and we are meeting it now in our Methodism. Stated broadly, the question resolves itself into, "Does the Church exist for the sake of the ministry, or the ministry for the sake of the Church?" "Are the Churches called in order to support the preachers, or the preachers called to minister to the Churches?" The Church politician, while broadly asserting the latter, acts directly on the basis of the former, and so, in such eyes, the Churches are simply spoils for distribution.

It is sometimes asserted that certain ones will be well taken care of because they are favorites of Bro. —, or because they have a friend at Court, or it is said that Bro. — will not let him get hurt, or a reason given for an unexpected appointment is that Bro. — does not like him, or that he is too independent and Bro. — has dropped him and left him to shift for himself. How one is reminded of the contention of the disciples as to who should be the greatest, and the reply of the Master, "For he that is least among you all the same shall be great." Many an humble brother, who has never been a favorite of the powers that be, or been puffed by the newspapers, or sought after by "High Steeple," will be great in the kingdom of Heaven.

May the Lord so direct the presiding Bishop at the coming Conference that the development of the principles of ecclesiastical politics may be effectually and permanently arrested in our midst.

NEWPORT NEWS.

But my train, which was nearly three hours late has come, and I must bring my pen to a halt and go on my way. I spent the night at Newport News with my friend, Bro. Lipscomb, and after supper we went by moonlight to see the site for the new Church. I also saw a fine drawing of the completed structure. It will be a handsome building, costing about $20,000 with the furnishings. The Sunday-school room and the parlors will be in the basement, and the main auditorium on the upper floor. The lot has a front of 75 feet and the main building is sixty-two feet wide, which, with the towers on the corners, fills up the street front, and allows several feet on each side behind the towers for light and air. The best of it is, it will be built with little, if any debt. How vividly I remember my feelings, when ten years ago, Bishop Wilson, at the Richmond Conference of 1889, sent me to Newport News. We had a little band of about fifty-five members, and a neat chapel with a considerable debt. Now, at the expiration of ten years, we have two independent charges—one with nearly five hundred members, the other with nearly two hundred members, and a new, handsome and commodious chapel on Forty-fifth street which will need a young man to serve it the coming year. Three new Churches with seven hundred members and a little debt is not a bad record for ten years in a city like Newport News. For although I have had no experience with other city charges, except my brief three weeks pastorate at Central, Portsmouth, yet I feel sure that the conditions at Newport News have been very different from those elsewhere. For years there was a great lack of home-owners, and few persons were sure that they would settle there as a final home. The experimental stage was a factor in all plans for Churches as well as business, and it was hard to develop the feeling of responsibility for the maintenance of Christian fellowship and discipline. No matter what kind of methods were proposed there were some who never heard of that way. New comers attended the Church every Sunday and thought the people did not show them much attention and perhaps the persons they complained of had only been there a month themselves. The greatest difficulty was to get any time for earnest, thoughtful consultation. It was impossible to fix upon a night when every member of the official board could be present. Sometimes, like some of our modern presiding elders, they would have three engagements on one evening, and my favorite text was, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," etc. And yet the people were liberal, and quite responsive. Nowhere in the Conference was there a more inspiring audience, over two-thirds being strong, vigorous men. The best investment we made that year was the purchase of three hundred copies of the 25 cent hymn-book, which we piled up on the back bench, and gave out to the strangers. They not only appreciated the courtesy, but they used the books and added greatly to the interest of the service. But I must hasten along, or I will never get to Mathews.

I took the first morning car to Old Point to catch the steamer "Mob-Jack." On the way I passed crowds of men on their way to the ship-yard. They come to work from a radius of eight or nine miles, and the city is largely dependent for its prosperity upon one industry, although there are some few small plants besides.

MATHEWS.

The wait at Old Point was brief, and the ride of about five hours on the steamer was delightful. Brother Deshazo and Brother Jethro Thomas met me at the wharf, and I was soon at Bro. Thomas' house, and seated at a table that had been prepared for the appetite sharpened by the salt breeze. Winter Harbor oysters, however, do not admit of any rivalry, and goose, and beef, and ham were bound to be slighted. I found that a sermon had been announced for Bethel that night. This church is perhaps the strongest on the circuit, and the membership being between three and four hundred, and the amount raised for pastoral support being about one-third of the whole. The question of the division of the circuit has again been raised, and there is a proposition to make three appointments—Bethel to be a station, Central and Salem to be one circuit, and Beulah and St. Pauls another. The membership of the charge was 1,250 at the last conference, and there can be little doubt that the development of the membership will be more rapid if they can divide. One brother said that he believed that they had the only man in the Conference who was strong enough to do the work, and that his greatest objection to division was that they would lose their present pastor. If there is a man among us who can stand the work, it is Bro. Deshazo, and yet his active, vigorous body cannot accomplish impossibilities. The care and responsibility for 1,250 souls is too much, even in a station, to say nothing of a circuit, even as compact an one as Mathews.

On Thursday morning we went to the Tabernacle, which is situated near the centre of the circuit. The people began to pour in, and soon there were about a thousand on hand. Dr. W. W. Smith came by the morning boat, relieving my anxiety, lest he should oversleep or get left somewhere on the road. We had a double-barrelled meeting. The one in the morning was given up to the general subject of education, with special reference to county high-schools, and the one in the afternoon to the Twentieth Century movement. It fell to my lot to speak in the morning, which I did as best I could. Bro. Deshazo was kind enough to help me by calling upon me from his seat to repeat and emphasize one of the sentiments expressed, and I felt encouraged to talk on fifteen minutes longer. I shall not soon forget a remark he made in the course of Dr. Smith's address at the Rappahannock District Conference this summer. Dr. Smith, in making one of his points, said "the skeleton of a mastodon was worth no more than that of a mouse." Bro. Deshazo spoke out from his seat and said, "Yes, sir; it will make more fertilizer." The comparison was a striking one, but the possibilities of ground-bone meal in that mastodon were too great to go unnoticed by Bro. Deshazo's practical mind. Dr. Smith went on with his address, but I chuckled to myself for several minutes, as I am sure did many others.

When Dr. Smith arose to speak in the afternoon at 2:40 he had a task before him. The steamer was due at 7 p. m., at Allmond's wharf, on York river, about 28 miles away. He had to squeeze an address of 1½ hours and 28 miles of driving into four hours and twenty minutes. There are few things harder to do than to speak against time, but Dr. Smith did it finely in Mathews, and in one hour and five minutes he was through. We had time only to announce Bro. Deshazo's subscription of $50, and then leaving him to manage the rest, we struck out for the York. Fortunately, our driver had pride in his team, and in three hours we pulled up at the wharf, with the steamer's whistle sounding in our ears and her red lights in full view. The wharf is 2,000 feet long, and after a rapid walk with a heavy telescope in order to reach the boat, a young man with a lantern called for twenty cents for the privilege of stepping off the wharf upon the boat. Twenty cents is not much, but I felt it to be an imposition on the travelling public, and while I had to pay it, I expressed my opinion in plain language. The right of protest is worth a great deal, and enables one to endure many objectionable things. I judged from the "water-off-a-duck's-back" way in which my words were received that I was not the first protestant who had spoken his mind on that wharf.

The steamer reached Gloucester Point about 8:30 p. m. Dr. Smith went on to Baltimore to testify in the will case of of Miss Melissa Baker. I got off and was ferried across the river to Yorktown. Over on the hill the monument glistened in the beautiful moonlight, and I could but think of the men who years ago had contended on this very spot for the principles of liberty. Where are they now? The hills are here, the river is here, aye, even the houses on the hill, and a cannon-ball imbedded in one of the brick walls are still here, but where are the men? They have gone from the field of action, and can no longer be seen or heard by us. But have they ceased to live? Have the minds that planned the buildings and designed the cannon perished? The moon, the river, the hills may seem to be eternal, and man a fleeting show, but the soul, filled with the consciousness of its own immortality, joins its testimony to that of scripture—"The world passeth away and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

NEW CHURCH COMMITTEE MEETS.

A meeting, which was attended by every member of the Building Committee of the new Court-Street church, was held last night in the stewards room. Reports were received from the three committees which have been making a partial canvass of the church for funds with which to build the proposed $40,000 church.

Over $24,000 was reported subscribed, and plans were discussed and adopted looking to raising the remainder, and committee adjourned to meet again next Friday evening.—Lynchburg News.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

Sunday, at West Appomattox, the new Methodist Church was dedicated. About eight hundred people were present.

The sermon by J. Wiley Bledsoe, D. D., was one of the most eloquent and impressive ever heard in that community. His text was 1st Peter 1:19. He is a man of fine appearance with a kindly expression and a musical voice. After the sermon a collection was taken amounting to about $300.

The music, under the efficient leadership of Mrs. A. H. Clement, assisted by the best local talent and some from Lynchburg, was superb. Such a musical treat has seldom been enjoyed at Appomattox. A most bountiful dinner was prepared on the grounds for all present.

Altogether it was a "red letter" day for West Appomattox, and a happy day for the Methodists and their friends.

The church is a beautiful one and a credit to the village, to the contractors—C. W. Hancock & Son—and to Methodism. The total cost of everything complete is $1,800.

A revival meeting is now in progress, conducted by Rev. H. C. Cheatham, of Martinsville.—Lynchburg News.

TO LOOK AFTER THEIR CONFERENCE.

At a ministers' meeting held at Centenary church, Richmond, Monday morning, Rev. J. T. Mastin made a motion to the effect that Rev. B. M. Beckham, Rev. J. C. Reed and Rev. J. S. Wallace be appointed a committee to look into and report to the Methodist ministers' meeting regarding the coming Mormon Conference to be held in this city and the literature of the Mormon controversy recently sent out by W. S. Campbell, of Salt Lake City.

NORFOLK PREACHERS' MEETING.

The Methodist preachers' weekly meeting has held Monday morning, and was called to order by the president,

Rev. W. H. Edwards, and prayer offered by Rev. Lloyd T. Williams, of Trinity Church. Under the call of the churches the following reports were heard:

At Central, Portsmouth, Rev. R. F. Beadles reported having received 14 new members Sunday. The Mission Sunday-school is growing in numbers and influence; will organize a Church there shortly.

Rev. Lloyd T. Williams reported three additions at Trinity and a profitable experience meeting at night.

Rev. Dr. W. J. Young received six new members at Epworth Sunday and addressed a large meeting of the Junior Epworth League at LeKies Memorial church in the afternoon.

Rev. J. F. Carey reported $75 received from an oyster supper given for the benefit of the Port Norfolk Church last week.

Rev. R. H. Bennett reported 22 conversions as the result of the revival at McKendree church, and that the spiritual and financial condition of the church will be in good shape for Conference.

At Queen-Street Rev. S. C. Hatcher had good congregations and pleasant services.

Rev. W. R. Proctor had five additions at Park View, and exchanged pulpits with Rev. W. P. Hines, of the Baptist Church, at night.

At Cumberland-Street, Rev. Dr. H. E. Johnson had an unusually large congregation Sunday morning and a fair turnout at night, when two young men went forward to the altar and professed faith in Christ.

Nothing special was reported from the remaining churches.

Rev. Paul Bradley gave an interesting outline of his sermon Sunday on the "Goodly Pearls." The lesson drawn from the discourse was "Christ the Pearl of Great Price," as the greatest possible good the soul can possess. Following were the leading points in the sermon.

How men ought to seek this highest of all possessions.

How it is to be found—through Christ. "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness."

It is the greatest object and pursuit of life.

"How paid for"—The real price of the religion of Christ had been paid for by Him in His death resurrection and glorious ascension. Our only payment is to give ourselves wholly by faith and trust in His atoning merits, and to live a life "hid with God in Christ."

The highest element in the "Pearl of Great Price" is that it is durable and unchangeable.

Lastly, this goodly pearl prepares us for "Life, Death and Judgement, and a home in the Celestial City."—Virginian-Pilot.

xxx

Rev. R. H. Bennett will conduct a special revival service at McKendree church Wednesday night. It is learned that a great number of the services Sunday night and persons professed conversion at the homes, which will swell the number of converts to about thirty. Over one hundred members of the Church have re-consecrated their lives to the service of God.

Rev. W. H. Edwards, presiding elder, held his fourth Quarterly Conference with McKendree Monday night and closed up the business of the present year. The reports showed the church to be in the best condition spiritually and financially during its entire history, with over one hundred accessions to the membership during the year. Rev. R. H. Bennett will be able to present a clean balance sheet at the Annual Conference, with the entire debt of the church building, a balance of over three thousand dollars, paid—Virginian.

FATHER AND SON.

DR. SMITH'S ELOQUENT SERMON SUNDAY NIGHT.

Court-Street church was crowded Sunday night with a throng eager to hear Dr. A. C. Smith speak from the text, "And the king said, Is the young man Absalom safe?" After briefly sketching the life of David's young son, Dr. Smith spoke at length about the young men of the community, and the relation existing between fathers and sons. Addressing the former, he said:

"I make no apology for Absalom's conduct. He was a bad boy, and had he striven against the evil that enveloped him, fearing God and eschewing evil, the consequences would have been different. It is not of his conduct I now wish to speak, but of the influences thrown around him by those to whom God had committed him. I declare that I believe the young men of our community are frequently as much sinned against as sinning. Fathers go on from week's end to week's end and scarcely see their children. Their boys grow up under different conditions from those which surrounded them in early youth, and they finally awake surprised to find their children ruined from neglect. Many of you men would work till midnight to for your children, and yet you never kneel in prayer with them and break to them the bread of life.

"What is the chief thought, idea and example you are setting before the young men? It is, 'My son, with all your gettings, get money.' Money! Money! Money! I declare to you I sometimes wish there was some way by which my family could live without its use, for I have come to almost hate it for the ruin I have seen wrought by the love of it."

Dr. Smith closed with an earnest appeal to his hearers to take care of the young people now; to make home attractive, the church a place to be desired, the most beautiful of all the buildings in the city, to establish a public library for their use, and in every way cause them to see that true religion is joyous, buoyant and happy. Then you will be saved the bitter anguish that wrung David's soul when he wept tears of remorse over lost opportunities.

Dr. Smith's physical condition is much improved, and the vigor, both mental and physical, with which he spoke Sunday night, was remarked. He will now fill his pulpit regularly until Conference, which meets November 12th, in Petersburg, at which he will be assigned to another charge, this being his fourth year here.—Lynchburg News.

THE JUNIOR RECORDER.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., NOVEMBER 2, 1899.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 12.

Text of the Lesson, Neh. iv. 7-18. Memory Verses, 15-18—Golden Text, Math. xxvi. 41—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

The topic of this lesson is "The Rebuilding of the Walls of Jerusalem" and requires a study of chapters ii-vi. When the people of God are not an honor to Him, waiting worthy of Him, they are a reproach to Him. Nehemiah felt that the condition of things at Jerusalem was a reproach to God (ii, 17; v, 9), and his desire was to take away this reproach.

7, 8. "They were very wroth and conspired to fight against Jerusalem and to hinder it." This was the attitude and conduct of the enemies of God, who were grieved exceedingly that any one should seek the welfare of the children of Israel (chapter ii, 10). The old serpent who sought to mar the work of God in Eden is ever the inveterate enemy of God and man and will exert himself to the utmost when he sees the people of God zealous for the glory of God. In these chapters we see many of his wiles and may learn from Nehemiah, comfort of Jehovah, how to stand against them (Eph. vi, 11).

9. "Nevertheless we made our prayer unto our God and set a watch against them day and night." Nehemiah was a man of God and therefore a man of prayer (chapters i, 4; ii, 4), but, while his strength was in God and his whole reliance upon Him, he failed not to use the means within his reach. Our Lord taught His disciples to watch as well as pray (Mark xiv, 38). In Eph. vi, 11, 13 we are taught that the whole armor of God is necessary, that we may be able to stand against the evil one. As we saw in last lesson, Nehemiah strengthened himself in God by His word. Then he encouraged the people by telling them of the hand of God upon him (ii, 17, 18), and so priests, Levites, rulers, goldsmiths, apothecaries, merchants and also women went to work, each repairing over against their own house, and so half the wall was builded, for the people had a mind to work (chapters iii and iv, 6).

10. "And Judah said, We are not able to build the wall." It is bad enough to have enemies outside to contend with, but when those who are within the fold or the family get discouraged it makes matters more difficult. In chapter iii, 5 we read that the nobles of the Tekoites put not their necks to the work of the Lord, but here is a leading tribe, the one from which our Lord came (Heb. vii, 14), talking of much rubbish and no strength for the work. If Nehemiah had not been staid upon Jehovah (ii, 20), he might have been sorely discouraged.

11, 12. Not only did the adversaries keep threatening that they would cause the work to cease, but the Jews who dwelt by them became filled with fears. Contrast Isa. xli, 6. "They helped every one his neighbor, and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage." In the story of Gideon all the people who were fearful and afraid were sent home (Judges vii, 3). The Lord wants His people to be strong and of good courage (Josh. i, 6, 7, 9; Hag. ii, 4).

13, 14. "Be not ye afraid of them. Remember the Lord." He appointed the people to their places fully armed and encouraged them. In Isa. li, 12, 13 we have the words, "Afraid of a man, and forgetteth the Lord, thy Maker." And in Isa. x, 2, "Behold God is my salvation; I will trust and not be afraid." If we are afraid, we are forgetting God and not trusting in Him. When we rely upon Him, we cannot be afraid. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, not swords and spears and bows, but might, through God to the pulling down of strongholds (II Cor. x, 4). We have the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit (Eph. vi, 16, 17).

15. "God brought their counsel to naught. We returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work." The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to naught. He maketh the devices of the people of none effect. The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of His heart to all generations (Ps. xxxiii, 10, 11). See also Isa. xiv, 24; xlv, 10.

16. "While some wrought in the work others held the weapons, ready for an emergency. Although not written in Scripture, it is Scripturally true that they also serve who only stand and wait. And it is written that, 'As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff—they shall part alike' (I Sam. xxx, 24).

17. "With one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon." Thus did the builders and the burden bearers as they wrought in the work and were not terrified by their adversaries (Phil. i, 28). Like David, they prepared with all their might, and set their affection to the work (I Chron. xxix, 2, 3). Like Hezekiah, they did it with all their heart and prospered (I Chron. xxxi, 21). When the enemy sought to entice Nehemiah away, seemingly, for a conference, but really to do him harm, he was led to send them this word. "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down." Four times they sent unto him after this sort, but he always answered after the same manner (chapter vi, 3, 4). Read the whole of chapter vi and see in how many ways they sought to ensnare Nehemiah, but see the wisdom of God in him and in all his replies to them. In due time the wall was finished, and the enemies were much cast down in their own eyes, for they perceived that the work was wrought of God. Had the wall been built by skilled masons the credit would have been theirs, but when such unlikely people as apothecaries, goldsmiths, etc., built such a wall they could not but see that God did it. The more disqualified we feel for the work to which God calls us the more glory there will be to God as He accomplishes it through us.

18. "He that sounded the trumpet was by me." And when they heard the sound of the trumpet they were to resort thither (verse 20). Our glorious Captain has all the work under His control. He shall not fail nor be discouraged. He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied (Isa. xlii, 4; lili, 11), and when the trumpet sounds how quickly and gladly all His people shall resort to Him (I Thess. iv, 16-18). The work shall be finished notwithstanding all enemies; the church shall be completed, the marriage of the Lamb shall come, the kingdom shall be the Lord's, and the whole earth be filled with His glory (Eph. v, 27; Rev. xix, 7; xi, 15; Hab. ii, 14). Let us not come down from our great work of living to complete His body and bring Him back.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 12, "The Living Bread"—Text, John vi, 26-35.

"The bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world."

Hunger and thirst are the signals of bodily need and are most imperious in their demands. Continually the wants must be supplied. Great range in choice of foods is possible, but none can do without food of some kind. Yet this is not the most urgent demand of human nature. It is a law of our make up from which escape is impossible that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Starvation with all its attendant miseries and horrors is not the most dreadful fate which can overtake mankind. The deepest pain possible is soul hunger and destitution of spirit. Men can live long on coarsest fare and scanty rations. Men will keep long and voluntary fasts in the midst of plenty when some special gain can be thereby attained. Soul starvation none willingly endures. Better death than this. Instinctively all shrink from the unutterable horror of a hopeless future of comfortless existence.

To satisfy the heart craving for happiness in existence the strangest fancies and wildest delusions have been cherished when the true and rational have been lost out of the life.

That which attracts in Jesus Christ is the deep wonder of His matchless insight into the morally right and true. He speaks, and we are surprised at the marvelous simplicity of His statements. Life seems wondrously luminous, and what before was impenetrably dark becomes clear. We see all so openly and wonder that we ever were perplexed. The soul sees where before it helplessly groped. We know when before we could only doubt and question and surmise.

The wonder of all ages is Jesus of Nazareth. Search all centuries and every land, and you will find no other one like Him. He makes no guesses, hazards no theories and gives no cause of argument. He just announces facts, and we test and find them true. We trust ourselves to His directions and find peace. We obey His commands and are satisfied in soul.

All other expedients fail to give settled assurance to our natures. The books of Ecclesiastes gives us the picture of a man seeking soul fullness. He tries all worldly possibilities and finds in them only starvation of moral impulses and powers. Jesus feeds every energy for good and fills to utmost satisfaction every appetency for happiness and right. Well does He say:

"I am the bread of life."

He is the miracle of manhood, the sign of the ages, the wonder of this world, the prophecy of a future exist-

NOT BY MIGHT NOR BY POWER, BUT BY MY SPIRIT,
SAITH THE LORD OF HOSTS.

IN St. John Carleton Side, many years ago, the Rev. Dr. Knight was holding revival services. The Methodist Church was crowded, but no move. A lady invited the doctor and his wife to tea. My husband and I were also invited. When we were seated in the truly Christian home, the reverend doctor said: "Well, Sister McCollum, what do you think of the meetings?"

I said, "Shall I give you, candidly, my opinion?"

"Oh, yes," was his reply.

"Well, this is it, truly—You are saying to the Lord, 'Oh, save these people through me, or Brother Salter, or Brother Beatty, or Brother McCollum, or Brother Kingston,' and He will not do it, but if you leave your meetings open for the Holy Spirit to govern and lead, He may take the poorest one in the assembly and speak to the conscience and save sinners."

The good and noble man of God said: "Sister, when you preach your first sermon, send for me to come."

Then he acted upon my hint, and the mayor said, "Thank God! all the bars are down," and the church was revived. Souls were saved, and "Great was the Holy One of Israel in the midst of us."

Oh, what a holy influence! and what power!—the ministers were not afraid to trust the meeting to Divine guidance! "They all spake as the Spirit gave utterance," and many were the "slain of the Lord!"

Hear Jesus! "I will not leave you comfortless." "I will pray the Father and He shall give you another Comforter even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him, but ye know Him, for He dwelleth in you, and shall be in you."

This is the great sin of the church—rejecting the personality and guidance of the Holy Spirit: as the Jews reject Jesus through unbelief.

Rev. Dr. Sprague says: "Let Him have the benefit of every doubt!" Read the Acts of the Apostles and mark their obedience to the Spirit of God. And in I Cor. 14: "He that exhorteth on exhortation." Now, exhorters are driven out of the church, and the message given by the Holy Ghost cannot be delivered. The exhorter is now truly silenced, because of some weak or mistaken one. "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation and comfort," and does God not say, "He hath chosen the weak to confound the mighty, and tells us the reason why "That no flesh should glory in His presence." And we are commanded to "covet prophesy." Mr. Quesnel says: "The Holy Ghost is the fountain and fulness of all Spiritual graces, and that there is nothing good, nothing profitable to salvation unless it be done in the power of God communicated by Christ Jesus, and in that holiness of heart which is produced by His Spirit."

HIS TACT WON THE DAY.

A FRENCH missionary in Webster, Mass., who had encountered much persecution and opposition in his endeavors to give the gospel to the people, writes Geo. R. McPaul, was one day warned not to enter a certain house, that the housewife had a stick ready to beat the first Protestant missionary that should attempt an entrance. Nothing daunted, he offered a prayer to God for guidance, stepped across the street and knocked at the door.

"Good day, madam! Good day, madam! Good day, madam!" said the missionary.

"Are you crazy?" said the woman.

"Well, probably you think I am," he replied; "but let me ask you a question: If you think me foolish for bidding you good day three times, what must the Virgin Mary think of you when you keep repeating, Hail, Mary! Hail, Mary! fifty-three times every time you recite your beads?"

"Come in," said the woman. He entered and preached the gospel, and the woman and all the household were converted.

What we need in God's work is the power to see and do exactly the right thing under the circumstances; the skill so to manage the feelings of the persons with which we deal as to quell all hostility and arouse curiosity for the truth to be presented.

BEAUTIFUL HOME FOR JESUS.

A LITTLE girl went on an errand to an elegant house. The lady was proud of her home, and she showed Jennie the carpets, pictures, ornaments and flowers, says a writer in Little Learner's Paper, and asked "Don't you think these things are lovely?" "They are pretty," said Jennie. "What a beautiful home for Jesus to visit! Does he ever come here?"

"Why, no," said the lady.

"Don't you ever ask Him?" asked Jennie. "We have only a room and a bedroom, and we have no carpets or pretty things, but Jesus comes and makes us very happy."

The lady told her husband what Jennie had said, and he replied:

"I have often thought that we ought to thank God for His goodness and ask Him to come and live with us."

They became Christians, and Jesus came to live with them and made them happy. Jesus blesses every home to which He comes.

ADVICE OF A MILLIONAIRE.

THE following story is told of a Philadelphia millionaire, who has been dead some years:

A young man came to him one day and asked pecuniary aid to start him in business.

"Do you drink?" asked the millionaire.

"Once in a while."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year and then come and see me."

The young man broke off the habit at once, and at the end of the year came to see the millionaire again.

"Do you smoke?" asked the successful man.

"Now and then."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year, and then come and see me again."

The young man went home and broke away from the habit. It took him some time, but finally he worried through the year, and presented himself again.

"Do you chew?" asked the philanthropist.

"Yes, I do," was the desperate reply.

"Stop it! Stop it for a year, and then come and see me again."

The young man stopped chewing, but he never came back again. When asked by his anxious friends why he never called on the millionaire again, he replied that he knew exactly what the man was driving at. "He'd have told me that now that I had stopped drinking and smoking and chewing I must have saved enough to start myself in business. And I have."

LITTLE PICKANINNY

BY FRANK BEARD.

ITTING by the roadside,
Smiling in the sun,
Showing all his shining teeth,
Round eyes full of fun;
Happy in the sunshine
At the hot noon hour—
Little pickaninny,
With the big sun-flower.

Sitting in the sunshine,
Nothing on his back
But a sort of dingy shirt
Fashioned from a sack;
Not afraid he'll spoil it
In the sun or shower,
Little pickaninny,
With the big sun-flower.

From the distant cabin
Little feet have strayed—
Sitting all alone there,
Not a bit afraid.
King of all his eyes behold,
Innocence his dower,
Happy pickaninny,
With the big sun-flower.

Talking to the blue-jays, services during the past twenty-four hours for a dislocated shoulder blade; and had he called upon them at 9 o'clock a. m. today; the hour at which Stanton, in telephoning, mentioned that he had seen the doctor?

They both stated, most positively, that no young man had called upon them at that hour; nor had they been asked to set a shoulder blade.

Saturday morning came, and Stanton came, too, carrying his arm in a sling. They solemnly informed him that his story from beginning to end, was false, and a fabrication.

He vainly endeavored to wriggle out of it—by telling Mr. P— that he must have made inquiries of the wrong doctor, as there were two by that name, living very near together.

Mr. P— was quite prepared, however, for this remark, and promptly informed him that he had communicated with both.

With a few words of salutary advice and counsel, from his erstwhile employer, Sidney Stanton, with dejected countenance, sad heart and slow step walked out into the street.

Where is he today? He, the bright—promising young man; with culture and grace of manner anyone might almost envy?

Walking the streets without a character.

That is what a "lie" cost him.

In conversation upon the street—with one who knew under what peculiar circumstances he had left Mr. P's employ, Stanton said: "I have lost one of the best situations I ever had, and all through a 'lie'! God helping me, I will never, never, tell another."

"Would you give him another trial, and his position back again if you were in need of a clerk?" asked a friend, interested in Stanton.

"That is no easy question to give an immediate answer to," said Mr. P—. "If it was only a slip from sobriety which he had made, I would have no hesitation in receiving him back again, for he was, I think, the smartest young man behind the counter that I have ever met during a business career of more than thirty years; and that is saying a great deal. But he is a liar. I would never know where he was spending the time after the way he has deceived me;" and judging by Mr. P's facial expression and voice, he uttered the words with a sad heart—a fair prospect and success, which seemed so well assured, suddenly extinguished by a falsehood.

"Wherefore, putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor, for we are members one of another." Eph. 4:25.

If Sidney Stanton had done this, what humiliation and disgrace, what loss of character and unhappiness he would have spared himself.

were: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

TENNYSON LOVED GOD.

LORD TENNYSON had an enthusiastic admiration for the hymn, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty," writes the laureate's niece, and he considered it as perfect in doctrine as in language, since it set forth, he said (using a homely simile), how "the three persons of the Trinity are like three candles, the light from each of which seems to blend with the others into one light."

It was his dwelling, for the sake of its greater simplicity, on the one light rather than the three lights, which has caused my uncle's utterances on religion to be oft-times misunderstood. Nothing I ever read, even in the pages of that Bible which was Tennyson's constant study, made the deep impression upon me that his words and manner did when he said to me, in just the same natural way as that in which a child would express his delight at his father's making him his companion: "God is with us now, on this down, as we two are walking together, just as truly as Christ was with the two disciples on the walk to Emmaus. We cannot see Him, but the Father and the Savior and the Spirit is nearer perhaps, now and then, to those who are not afraid to believe the words of the Apostle about the actual and real presence of God and His Christ with all who yearn for it."

INFIDELITY DOES NO UPBUILDING.

I WAS much impressed with your editorial in the current issue on the antagonist of Robert G. Ingersoll. You might have truthfully added that infidelity establishes no colleges, universities or theological seminaries; and in the only college ever founded by an infidel, (Girard College, Philadelphia, Pa.) the gospel is carried by consecrated laymen.

The work of infidelity is to destroy, rather than to build up, and a college or university (to say nothing of a theological seminary) would undo what work the infidels accomplish. Through these agencies the Bible would be taught, and thus infidelity would receive a death-blow.

HOW THE KEYS ARE SAFE.

A YOUNG traveler, who was making a pedestrian tour through the Alps, tells a story of Swiss honesty that is well worth repeating.

The Swiss friend who was with the foreign sightseers, observing they were weary after a six hours' march from the monastery of St. Bernard, said, "We shall soon reach my brother's house, and you shall all have a hot cup of coffee and some food."

But when they reached the farmhouse it was closed—doors locked, shutters shut, and the whole place deserted, for it was the time of vintage and everyone was in the vineyards.

Our young traveler was much disappointed, but the good Swiss friend said:

"You will get your refreshment just the same," and reaching up towards a cross made of gay mountain flowers, which hung on the door, according to the pretty Valais custom, she pulled down a great door-key, and in another minute the door was open. Our friend quickly kindled a blazing fire of logs, and in a short time they had a most excellent cup of coffee and some refreshing food.

All this seemed strange to the tourists, and they made inquiry as to how householders dare go away and leave the key in such a convenient place.

"Oh," said the Swiss friend, in quite a shocked tone, "there is no fear of any of our people entering a house which does not belong to them. If the key is put under the cross it is always safe there."

TALES TWICE TOLD

WORDS OF GREAT PROMISE.

HE story is told by D. L. Moody that at the battle of Inkerman, a soldier was just able to crawl to his tent after he was struck down. When found, he was lying upon his face, his open Bible before him, his hand glued fast to the page by his life-blood which covered it. When his hand was lifted, the letters of the printed page were clearly traced upon it, and with the ever-living promise in and on his hand, they laid him in a soldier's grave. The words

Wesleyan Methodist President.

The annual conference of the Wesleyan Methodists in England was held last July in City Road chapel, London. Rev. Frederick W. MacDonald, one of the ablest and most widely known men of the body, was elected president. This position he holds for the current year. This denomination has no bishops, but the superintendent has many of the duties usually belonging to their office.

In many particulars the Wesleyan connection of England is different from the Methodist Episcopal church of the United States. The real power rests in the hands of a hundred of the older men elected to position in the "legal hundred," as it is called, by the whole body of the preachers. These hold the annual sessions and alone have a vote. The appointments are made by a stationing committee and are openly known and subject to revision on suggestions from preachers or churches.

The Wesley guild is the name of the young people's society of this church. Besides the Wesleyans there are several other denominations of Methodists in England, but less numerous and influential.

The Last Great Convention.

In many points the Epworth League convention last July in Indianapolis was the greatest gathering of Methodists ever held. It is likely so to remain for a long time to come. Much good was accomplished without doubt, but the day of great conventions like this has probably passed. The Christian Endeavor gathering at Detroit last summer demonstrated the fact. The crest of the wave has passed.

Some things very desirable, and these monster crowds cannot effect. They must in the nature of things closely resemble each other. They have accomplished their purpose and served the end sought. Let them pass. Some will regret their passing, but not for long. Better things will take their place.

A Great Combine

Trusts and Combines in many lines of production, and controlling the output of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

HERE IS THE PLAN A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideals are: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price."
—Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."
—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine."
—Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work."
—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

"A periodical absolutely solitary in the field it occupies. It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart. It ought to find a place at once in every family circle in the land."
—Bishop W. A. Candler.

"A gem among the monthlies of our land."
—T. Berry Smith, Central College, Fayette, Mo.

W. T. Harris, of Washington, D. C., United States Commissioner of Education, has this to say of a recent number: "It is one of the most remarkable magazine numbers that I have seen for a long time, and I beg leave to enclose two dollars for two regular subscriptions. I congratulate you."

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it."
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none."
—Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate."
—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus."
—The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Naphtali Lucock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning."
—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

"We most heartily commend it to our people as a high-grade periodical, worthy to take its place in every Methodist home."
—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"It will aim to advocate and magnify the things which world-wide Methodism holds in common, and especially to be a factor in the cultivation of fraternal relations between the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."
—Central Christian Advocate.

"The letter press is superb, the illustrations first-class and the reading matter thoroughly instructive, entertaining and edifying."
—Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."
—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"We welcome it, relish it and recommend it."
—Western Christian Advocate.

"It takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."
—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"We cannot but give to the Magazine our best wishes, and hope for it great success."
—Texas Christian Advocate.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

METHODIST RECORDER,

BLACKSTONE, VA.

Rev. Asbury Christian, is nearing completion. Mr. Christian hopes to have the work in press at an early day. He is now writing the chapter which covers the period of 60-70, and has gathered together much of interest especially concerning this period. He has succeeded in getting the rosters of nearly all the troops that left Lynchburg for the war of 61-65, and has many views of the city and surroundings at that time.

Mr. Christian has the complete history of the city, not excluding the dog fight that caused the resignation of the whole City Council. It is needless to say that Lynchburg will appreciate this work of one of her own sons.—News.

LEFT FOR BALTIMORE.

Rev. Dr. John T. Wightman, who has been acting as associate pastor of Court-Street Church for several months past, will leave for his home in Baltimore today (Tuesday). After the regular services of the Sunday-school Sunday morning, Dr. Wightman made a brief talk, in which he referred feelingly to the kindness and consideration which he has received as associate pastor of Court-Street church.

The superintendent, Mr. E. F. Sheffey, made a few remarks in reply, and voiced the sentiment of the entire school when he stated that it was a sorrow to them for Dr. Wightman to leave, and they had greatly appreciated the privilege of having him in their midst.

At 11 o'clock, Dr. Wightman delivered his last sermon as associate pastor from the text, "Charity Never Faileth," and spoke to the large congregation on his feelings of affection for Court-Street Church.—News.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were passed at the fourth Quarterly Conference, North Mecklenburg circuit, Oct. 21, 1899, the vote being unanimous:

"Whereas, By the law of the Church, this is the last time that our presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Riddick, will be with us in his official capacity; and

"Whereas, We desire to express our appreciation of Bro. Riddick in all the varied relations of his office, therefore,

"Resolved: That the four years of his service in the eldership among us have been pleasant and profitable to us as a Church, and we regret to part with him.

"Resolved, 2: That in Rev. J. H. Riddick, as presiding elder, we have found a devout, sweet-spirited minister of the Word; a wise counsellor, a true friend, and a pure-hearted Christian; and that we will remember his wise counsels, his upright walk and godly example, and that our prayers will follow him to his new fields of labor.

"Resolved, 3: That a copy of these resolutions be furnished Bro. Riddick, and their publication requested in the R. C. Advocate, and the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER, and that they be spread upon the records of our Quarterly Conference.

ECHOES OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

THANKSGIVING FUND.

A UNIQUE GIFT.

Miss Carrie Lanceley, daughter of Rev. J. E. Lanceley, has presented to the Twentieth Century Thanksgiving Fund a most beautiful and artistic work of art, made out of postage stamps "from all the Methodist mission fields of the world." As Methodism has entered nearly all the countries of the world, almost every land on the globe is represented by its stamps. In the centre there is a picture of the globe, and over it a scroll bearing Wesley's immortal words, done with beautiful effect, in pieces of stamps, "The World is my parish." Outside of this is a mat, covered with stamps. In all, there are over seven hundred postage-stamps, representing eighty-five countries. A few of the countries represented are: Great Britain, France, Italy, Portugal, Denmark, Switzerland, Gibraltar, Malta, Egypt, Sierra Leone, Gambia, Gold Coast, Lagos, Benin, Orange Free State, Transvaal, Cape Colony, Mauritius, Bermudas, Bahamas, Jamaica, St. Kitts, St. Vincent, Curacao, Panama, British Guinea, Hawaii, Australia, Fiji, Samoa, Dutch New Guinea, China, Japan, Newfoundland, United States, Mexico, South America, etc.

This beautiful, interesting, and instructive piece of art is the result of a great deal of patient labor. It is valued at one hundred dollars.—Christian Guardian.

—c—

A CAPITAL IDEA.

At Arthur, Ont., on Oct. 8th, the Twentieth Century Thanksgiving Fund was fully explained and earnestly presented to the congregation. Some little girls of one of our families, Evelyn and Valda Gillrie, enthusiastically caught hold of the facts. They wished to know how they could earn a dollar for the Fund. Their father proposed that they should gather apples and pick up potatoes; and before the next Sunday two of them had earned their dollar. Good for the girls! If these children are a fair index of the men and women of the Twentieth Century, there is a bright outlook for Methodism and the world. Could not thousands of children in the Dominion earn a dollar each before Oct. 1st, 1900?—Christian Guardian.

—c—

PRESBYTERIAN OFFERINGS

Interest in the Thanksgiving Fund steadily growing among the Presbyterians. Already from only 516 minister subscriptions aggregating over $54.00 have been received. This leaves more than half of the ministers yet to bring their gifts. Toronto Presbytery has pledged $150,000. A missionary to China has subscribed $150. Edmonton N. W. T. Sunday school gave $40 in the Century Fund collection. Toronto congregations held a grand mass meeting Thursday, Oct. 26.—Christian Guardian.

with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

3. Cost.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

2. Influences.

REGULAR COURSE. This course is arranged for those who do not expect to prepare themselves for teaching, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A practice school gives to the students the application of the principles of teaching.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

WHY ESTABLISHED?
It was built by the free contribution of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

TWO LITTLE GIRLS.

I know a little girl
(You? Oh, no!)
Who, when asked to go to bed,
Does just so:
She brings a dozen wrinkles out,
And takes the dimples in;
She puckers up her pretty lips,
And then she will begin:
"Oh, dear me, I don't see why!
All the others sit up late,
And why can't I?"

Another little girl I know,
With curly pate,
Who says: "When I'm a great big girl
I'll sit up late;
But mamma says 'twould make me grow
To be an early bird."
So she and dolly trot a way
Without another word.
Oh, sunny smiles and eyes so blue,
And—yes, now I think of it,
She looks like you!

FREELY GIVE.

Freely ye have received, freely give.—
Matt. 10:8.

Do not be afraid to call on the Lord's people to give. I know they sometimes complain. "Oh," they say, "it is all the time give, give, give! You are always poking under our noses a collection box or a hat." Remind them that on the side of the Lord it is always give, give to them. It might help parsimonious Christians to look a little over their account with the Lord. It would stand somewhat thus:

TOOK HIM 10 PIECES.

General Nicolls, of New Orleans, was well known throughout the Southern States as one of the bravest officers in the Confederate army. He sacrificed an eye, a leg and an arm for the cause which he believed just, and came out of the war, as he declared, "only half a man." But the half that was left enjoyed a joke as keenly as ever. Science replaced the lost members so successfully that nobody who was ignorant of his misfortune could detect it.

The General often told the following story:

Stopping at a hotel in Mobile, a negro boy was detailed to help him prepare for bed. After his bag was unpacked and his coat laid aside, he said: "Now, Sam, take off my leg."

Sam started speechless.

"Don't know yet how to take off legs en? Now, look here!"

He unscrewed the leg, and keeping it carefully covered with its long, black stocking, laid it aside.

"Now, take off this arm."

"No, sah! no sah! Nebber took off no gentlum's arm in my life!" gasped Sam, turning gray with terror.

"You're a pretty valet. Nothing easier." The arm was taken off and laid beside the leg on the table, and the General prepared for sleep and got in the bed.

"Oh, by the way! We'd better take an eye out."

He took it out. Sam backed to the door, afraid to turn his back on his terrible guest, who stretched himself sleepily, and then said:

"Now, Sam, take off my head."

Sam rushed out of the room to the office, and could only find strength to gasp out: "It's the debil himself, sah! He's taken hisself to pieces in room 48!"

The man who has the nerve to make a joke of his sacrifices in any cause is very sure of sympathy and approval.—

"In the loss of Christ I glory,"

Grandest words of trust sublime;

Sing them oft, the sacred story,

"Tow'ring o'er the wrecks of time."

"When the storms of life are raging,"

"Other refuge have I none;"

Through the warfare sin is waging,

Shielded safe by God's dear Son.

"Gently, Lord, oh, gently lead us,"

With the guiding hand, we pray;

In abounding love receive us

"When the mists have cleared away."

"Father, hear the prayer I offer,"

For "my faith looks up to thee;"

"Soon the shades of evening gather;"

Night draws near, "abide with me."

"Lord, dismiss us with thy blessing,"

From a world of change and sorrow;

To the land beyond we're pressing,

And "we're going home tomorrow."

HAIRY VETCH.

What the Alabama Station Thinks of It For Winter Pasturage, Etc.

Hairy vetch (Vicia villosa), sown in September or October, alone or with oats, affords nutritious pasturage during the following February, March, April and May. If not grazed too late, it affords a cutting of hay from April 20 to May 10. Hairy vetch is disposed of as pasturage, hay or green manure in time for quick growing summer crops, such as cowpeas, sorghum, late corn, etc. It grows only from seed, but can be so managed as to reseed the ground continuously.

At the station hairy vetch was cut for hay at four different stages. The yield of hay increased up to the time of full bloom, when the maximum yield of 5,789 pounds of hay per acre was obtained. Chemical analysis showed that, at whatever stage this plant was cut, the hay was nutritious. Considering both quality and quantity of hay, it was concluded that the best time to cut vetch, growing alone, was three or four days before the period of full bloom.

Hairy vetch rapidly enriches the soil in nitrogen if the plant is plowed in for green manure. It is able to draw this nitrogen from the air and add it to the soil only when the roots of the vetch plant are supplied with enlargements of definite character, known as root nodules or tubercles.

When sown in the usual way on most poor soils in Alabama, the vetch plant does not have these "bumps" or nodules on the roots. If devoid of tubercles, hairy vetch does not enrich the soil and fails completely if the land is poor.

Such soils can be made to produce vetch plants containing tubercles by sowing, along with the vetch seed, some of the earth from a place where the English pea or the wild vetch has been grown for several years.

The process of employing suitable soil or other material containing definite kinds of tubercle producing germs is called inoculation.

In order to have available for use in future years a sufficient supply of valuable inoculation material, it is important that prospective vetch growers should sow at least a small area of vetch this fall. The soil from this plot may be used for inoculating larger areas in subsequent years.

Hairy vetch can be advantageously introduced as a "catch crop" into the ordinary rotation of the cotton farm without reducing the area of cotton, corn or small grain.

Forcing Rhubarb in the Cellar.

Horticulturist Fred W. Card of the Rhode Island station, in summing up his experience in forcing rhubarb, expresses a desire to impress upon every one who has a garden with rhubarb in it the fact that he and his family may be enjoying in February and March of next year a more beautiful product than ever grows in the open ground. To do it he will need to transfer a few roots to a dark corner of the fall, packing a little fine mellow earth about them, and then simply see that the plants are kept moist. Whoever owns a garden with no rhubarb in it should see that some is planted there forthwith.

A warm cellar will hasten the crop, but a moderately cool one will give a finer product and probably a better yield. The length of time between planting and harvesting varies from less than three weeks to more than two months, depending chiefly upon the temperature. Allowing the roots to freeze in the field will greatly facilitate forcing. Large roots should yield five to ten pounds per plant, and every ten ounces of that yield will make a delicious pie. The color of the cooked product will be much brighter if it is placed upon the stove in cold water, and it will be sweeter if the sugar is added just before it is eaten.

Wheat in the South.

That wheat can and should be grown by every farmer in the south, especially enough to furnish flour for his own family, is nothing but simply going back to conditions that existed before the war between the states. At that time almost every family had wheat of its own raising. Conditions that existed after the war, when cotton was selling at a good price, have changed, and now the time has come when farmers must raise their own supplies again and not depend on cotton to buy everything that is consumed on the farm.

The time to sow in Georgia, in my opinion and from my experience with other grains, is from the 15th of October to the 1st or not later than the 10th of November. Owing to our spring and summer droughts we must grow more of the winter crops if we expect our farms to become self sustaining and to become a prosperous country, says a writer in Home and Farm.

Onions in Louisiana.

In south Louisiana onion seed is sown in September and October, transplanted to rows 12 to 18 inches apart and well cultivated. The onions are ready for the market in April. In north Louisiana the seed may be sown in January or February in drills, thinned to a stand and cultivated. By the end of spring or early in summer the crop may be gathered, stored or sold.

Red Clover in the Gulf States.

Red clover is reported as growing more popular each year and is now quite a common crop in the black prairie region and in other sections where the soils contain a fair amount of lime. It requires a soil which is rich and in fairly good condition to insure a "catch" of the seed. On many soils where it makes a good start and yields two or three cuttings it soon becomes overrun with other plants and is choked out. It is the best of the family to occupy a good soil two or three years, but is of little value on poor soils. Seed should be sown in September at the rate of 10 to 12 pounds per acre, and it will then give a heavy cutting the following May. It succeeds best in the south when sown with no nurse crop.

News and Notes.

At the recent meeting of the American Pomological society the committee on new native fruits reported as among the most promising kinds: Apples, the Canajoharie, Pride of the Hudson, Koffman's June and the Pride of Tennessee; peaches, the Worcester, Evans and Dewey; grapes, Brown's Seedling and the Charlton; strawberries, the Gibson, Seaford and Hall; the blackcap raspberry, Evans.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings
 of All Denominations.

Happiness is the flower that blooms from the stalk of right living.

What the ivy is to the wall, the flower to the margin of stream, is the tree to the street.—Rev. George H. Combs,
Christian Church, Kansas City.

Reward For Conformity to God's Laws.

The perfected grain of harvest days is the reward which God hands over to diligence, patience and conformity to his laws.—Rev. E. Trumbull Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

God's Power Over Our Health.

Close to God means close to physical health, and far from God means physical as well as mental suffering.—Rev.
George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Greatest Man.

He who does the greatest amount of good is the greatest man. Truthfulness reveals the genuine quality of our nature.—Rev. William Watson, Presbyterian, Birkenhead, England.

A Christian's Twofold Nature.

The whole of the Christian life are the dying of the old selfish nature and the triumph and emergence of the new and holy nature.—Rev. Dr. Warren G.
Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati.

Man's Influence.

It has been said that a man's influence lasts while his work is being done, but I would add to that, for his influence is felt ages after he is gone.—Rev.
T. S. Leland, Methodist, Denver.

All Are Opportunities.

In every man's life there is a supreme moment. No 24 hours of a man's life are the same. This constant change molds our character. Every act either makes us better or worse.—Bishop Joyce, Methodist, Denver.

Our Loving Father.

God is our loving Father, and through Christ we have become his children.
This is the greatest thought ever spoken to the world, and it was so uttered that every child can understand it.—
Rev. R. L. Gerhart, Lutheran, Bellefonte, Pa.

Spiritualism.

Spiritualism is the mother of all true religions, philosophies and sciences.
Every religion of the ages has been simply the result of man's effort to understand spiritualism—that is, truth concerning life in all its forms and problems.—Dr. C. D. Larson, Cincinnati.

Science and Religion.

There are inspirations in the heart that science cannot satisfy. Religion meets the want. It shows us that we are of God and to God we must return.
It gives us the true philosophy of life and the law of living, defining for us our end and destiny.—Rev. Philip O'Ryan, Catholic, San Francisco.

Panacea For All Ills.

Christianity is the panacea for all our ills, the only panacea, and we shall never be well and strong, cheerful and contented, until we take Christianity out of our creeds, where it is like an eagle chained, and put it into our lives, its only fitting residence.—Rev. George

H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Which Shall It Be?

Love of God leads to peace, holiness, joy, happiness. Love of the world leads to discord, unrighteousness, sorrow and death. They are incompatible. Where one lives the other suffocates. Which shall it be? We cannot serve God and Mammon. Let us hate the one and love
God with all our power and strength.
—Rev. Archibald N. Bradshaw, Marble Collegiate Church, New York City.

The Heavenly Telephone.

Whence come the thrills of courage into our souls, of strength for need, of hope for darkness, unless along the line which stretches from the darkened atmosphere of our lives up to the very heart of God, whence descend to us, as angelic music, Divine love and pity upon the long distance line from earth to heaven?—Rev. Dr. Robert Graham, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Trees Enrich Soul Life.

Trees make for the enrichment of the soul life. They bring nature to us in all its healing ministry. There is nothing inspirational in a paved street, no uplift in a brick wall, but the tree somehow lifts us out of the fever of our living, out of the grossness of our thinking, out of the dullness of our dreaming, and makes our every heart to tremble through the inrush of the divine.—Rev. George H. Combs, Christian Church, Kansas City.

Influence of God's Love.

To any man who looks at life through any other medium than the love of God there must appear to be not much to
it. From the cradle to the grave there are but a few steps, and even these few are made through toil and sorrow. If God does not love us, there is not much to life. If he does not love us, it is hardly a doubtful question whether it is better to be or not to be. But when we look at life through the love of God it comes to be infinitely significant.
The universe becomes luminous with meaning when we look at it through the love of God.—Rev. Dr. James W.
Lee, St. Louis.

Secret of a Peaceful Life.

You can have a restful and peaceful life, but the secret of it can only be learned at the feet of the Master. There is a joy which a thousand worlds such as this cannot give and of which no trials or troubles can rob you. It is the rest of the heart, the peace of trust.
Give me my faith in God, and you are welcome to all that remains. Take it away from me, and I can find no substitute for it in any corner of the globe.
Without it I am on the frozen mountain side in winter, with no home in sight, but with it I am sheltered from every storm, and heaven is on the other side of my earthly life.—Rev. George
H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

THE LONGING OF THE SOUL.

Oh, the soul has a definite longing,
A longing for each bright day,
And a thousand thoughts come throng-
ing,
But still those longings stay.

Hope, bright-eyed messenger of light,
The soul longs for, in dark despair,
One word of hope, all would be right,
"Send hope, send hope," the daily prayer.

In all the ages of the world
The soul has longed for sympathy.
Without it human life is hurled
To depths of utter misery.

Yes, sympathy our soul's desire—
The sympathy of heart to heart,
That sympathy that lifts men higher—
Union of souls though far apart.

For rest, for peaceful rest, we sigh,
The rest from care and toil and strife,
A little rest as time goes by,
Until we reach that higher life.

For rest from brooding o'er the past,
For rest from dreading what shall come,
On, we shall find that rest at last,
When life is gone and lips are dumb.

Our souls all yearn for constancy
That only death can ever sever—
The pure and sweet fidelity
We know will last forever.

The soul's best longing is for love—
The love that makes our lives so bright,
That brings us nearer things above,
Where all is peace and joy and light.

Then, too, for that delusive treasure,
That only once to us is given,
The love with more of pain than pleasure,
That brings us near or far from heaven.

Ah, yes! in love our souls are glory,
Love, the spirit's light to heaven,
We love to hear the old, old story,
For that our lives have ever striven.

For all these things we watch and wait—
When will our longings have an end?
'Tis not this side the pearly gate,
Where deepest griefs with pleasures blend.

Yet, to the longing soul comes rest;
The longing heart is satisfied,
'Tis when in mansions of the blest,
We see our Lord, the Glorified.

Then pain and death and toil are o'er,
And joys are found and hopes fulfilled,
And perfect love forever more—
The restless soul is stilled.

Up there in realms of holy light,
Beyond the tears, the grave, the sod,
Around the throne of dazzling white,
We meet a sympathizing God.

No more to sin, no more to weep,
In Christ our Saviour who had died,
We'll wake forever from our sleep,
We'll be like Him, and satisfied.

CONGRATU- LATIONS.

The Central Methodist gives up the whole of its first page to a picture of the new Church to be erected by the flock of which Brother James W. Moore is pastor. It was a real sorrow to many hearts when this pure and eloquent servant of the Master went so far from us. The RECORDER offers its congratulations on the success which is attending his work. The following is copied from the Central:

"On the first page of this impression will be found the plan of the new Fourth-avenue Methodist church. It will be a credit to Methodism in Louisville, and is much needed by that congregation. We are not advised as to the exact cost, but suppose, from some points gathered, that it will be in the neighborhood of $60,000. That is a noble church and plans broadly. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Moore, and his people have worked assiduously, but cautiously, in this great enterprise, and are to be congratulated that success awaits them."

TRANSFERS.

Rev. E. W. Harper, to the universal regret of his brethren and the people all over the Los Angeles
Conference, transferred to the Virginia Conference. Brother Harper is a young man just in the prime of life, and is well equipped for his work. He has made a splendid record during the ten years of his ministry. He is popular, useful, and consecrated. We most heartily commend him to our brethren on the Atlantic Coast.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

A very kind letter has come from Rev. F. E. Shipp with appreciated personal references. We regret that he will transfer to the Virginia Conference and will leave Monticello a few weeks before our Conference session.
Bro. Householder and the Committee will provide for the reception and entertainment of the members. Bro.
Shipp has been an exemplary, faithful, useful, acceptable preacher among us and we lose a valuable man. I take it that his wife is an excellent woman, for I have never heard aught against her, and that means a great deal in these times in application to a preacher's wife.—Florida Christian Advocate.

The editor has no quarrel with transfers. His relations with our brethren who have come from other Conferences have been pleasant,—with some unusually so. He honors them for their work of faith and labor of love. But it does seem if a word is in place on this subject. Bro. Parham writes upon it in another column. The clippings given above tell of two more brethren on the way to live with us in Virginia, if work can be found for them.

The impression seems to be abroad that because we have lost some of our leading men from the pastorate by death and by transfer to other fields that the Conference is not able to do its proper work without outside help. The editor believes this to be a mistake. We have lost strong and valuable men, but never in the history of our Conference have there been more capable workers to take up the burden and heat of the day. We have more trained men than we have ever had before, and while we are not exclusive, and would not shut out from among us a single brother for whom we have work, yet if any brother is coming to Virginia with the impression that the Conference is troubled for lack of suitable men to fill the appointments, he will find himself mistaken.

These comments have no special reference to the brethren who have been transferred to our Conference, for the editor never heard of them before. They may be very worthy brethren, and may be as successful in doing their work and making friends as some already with us, but it is a mistake to imagine that they are necessary because our Conference is lacking in trained men to do our work.

TWENTIETH CENTURY MEETINGS.

Since the last report there have been three meetings held. All of them have been held within the bounds of the Farmville District. This has not been because Dr. Smith selected these points to hold meetings, but because in response to his announcement that he would speak wherever invited, he received invitations from these places. The meeting at Chase City was an unlikely day, but the Church was full, and the impression made was very favorable. Bro. Royall writes: "The prospect here is for $700 or $800 from Chase City circuit. We have $350 in sight and have not called on three per cent of the people so far. We thank God and take courage." Bro. E. S. Emory gave a tract of land, which is worth, at the lowest estimate, $300. Bro. Royall and his wife gave $100.

The next meeting was at Grove church, Cumberland circuit. Owing to a number of causes the attendance was small, but the subscription amounted to $153, which, added to Bro J. E. Clarke's subscription of $100 at the District Conference, and the subscription of $200 made by the Cumberland girls at the B. F. Institute, gives a total of $453 from the circuit up to this time.

On Sunday, Nov. 5th, there was an all-day meeting at Fletcher's chapel, on the Lunenburg circuit. Fletcher's and Providence churches were well represented, and there were one or two families from Antioch. The meeting was one of the best held so far. After a strong address by Dr. Smith and short talks by Bro. Moss and the writer, the amounts already subscribed, amounting to $550, were read, the cards distributed, and opportunity given for new subscriptions. As so many of our pastors are doing, Bro. Moss led off with $100, and Sister Moss with $25, and other brethren followed. Bros. Arthur Hardy, R. A. Blackwell, and W. F. Kennedy, with other members of their families, each gave $100 or more. Others gave in proportion. Sister Gee gave part of her subscription to put on the roll the name of her dear daughter, Susie, who had predeceased her to heaven. The writer in his talk had said that he was sure that the circuit would give $1,000. At the close of the services a few dollars over $1,000 had been subscribed, and there will be much more to come yet. In no charge of our Conference is there a nobler type of Methodism than in the Lunenburg circuit, and were all our charges as devoted, the Conference would easily raise a quarter of a million, exclusive of subscriptions of $500 or over.

JAMES CANNON, JR., Sec.

LISTEN! LISTEN!

The editor of the "Texas Advocate" thinks it was not in good form for Drs. Pritchett and Tigert, who are connectional officers, to take part in the debates on the Barbee and Smith case. That view is held by many.—Arkansas Methodist.

Drs. Tigert and Pritchett, keenly alive to the dishonor under which our beloved Church is resting in the eyes of all other Christian Churches, when their respective Conferences met took the floor in defence of truthfulness in speech and conduct. No man gives up his rights as a member of an Annual Conference when he is elected to a connectional office. Drs. Pritchett and Tigert selected the proper place to speak their minds—on the floor of their own Conferences. They are members of Conference and the action of Conference is theirs, unless they repudiate it. Why were not these Barbee and Smith organs so much troubled when last year Dr. Hoss, thought to be a connectional officer, defended Barbee and Smith in the so-called General Conference organ, and denounced those opposed to Barbee & Smith as "vile, Satanic, malignant, ecclesiastical Ishmaelites;" but, strange to say, the Texas Advocate and the Arkansas Methodist did not lecture him for such language, although he did not use it on the floor of his Conference where he could have been properly rebuked, but in a CONNECTIONAL organ, and then slammed the door in the face of all comers and said that nobody should answer him. Was this "in good form?" These papers may think so, but it is not so. Far more manly and in better form was the action of Drs. Tigert and Pritchett in taking up the matter on the floor of their respective Conferences, where the friends of Barbee and Smith could defend them without a muzzle. It is indeed a matter for thankfulness that some of our men in connectional offices have sufficient keenness of moral distinctions to be outraged by the conduct of Barbee and Smith, and sufficient manhood to speak their minds. The other Christian denominations will not despise us utterly.

A PUERILE CLIPPING.

The Dispatch of Nov. 2nd, had in it an article clipped from the New York Press, entitled, "Doctor Defends Whiskey." in which one Dr. T. J. Hillis is represented as saying certain things. That the editors of the Dispatch should have thought it necessary to give up over one-half column to a clipping in defense of whiskey is to be regretted, but that it should have selected such a clipping is discreditable to the good judgment and common sense of the editors. In the clipping appears the following paragraph:

"The man is justified who, feeling insecure, puts up a lightning rod to protect his house. So the man who cannot handle alcohol in a rational manner is equally justified in taking a pledge and attaching himself to a temperance society. There he will have an opportunity with the others to put himself on exhibition as a person without moral strength or resolution. But he has no right to denounce alcohol because of his weakness any more than he should a lamp post he ran foul when under the influence of his potations. It is difficult to contemplate without pity the position of these poor men—the clergyman and temperance lecturer—deaf to the bugle blast of common sense."

This Dr. Hillis attempts to defend whiskey by ridiculing those who denounce it, as doing so, because they have no moral strength, and as unable to keep themselves from getting drunk unless they sign a temperance pledge. He says, "A man has no right to denounce alcohol because of his weakness." This shows the ignorance of the man, and is the sort of cry with which disobedient children try to get others to do wrong. "Tied to your mother's apron string," is a favorite taunt when boys obey their mothers, who love them, rather than the scalwags of the street. Are the men and women who are fighting whiskey to-day doing so simply because of their own weakness? Are they doing so because they fear they will land in the gutter? Let us see.

(1.) In the same issue of the Dispatch there is an account of a murder in the adjoining county to us, Dinwiddie:

"Mr. W. M. Jolly, a well-known farmer and merchant of Dinwiddie county, was shot and mortally wounded last night at his home, about two miles from Butterworth's, by a negro named Junius Robinson."

Later on, we are told that Mr. Jolly died, and that he leaves a wife and five small children; and later on, it is stated that the negro confessed, and said that the only reason that he shot Mr. Jolly was that he was DRUNK.

In the papers of Nov. 4th, I read that in one of our cities a young lady was awakened from her sleep in her bed by being affectionately kissed by a man. She screamed, and the man broke and ran, and it was learned that he was DRUNK, and, he said, he thought he was in another house and was kissing his mother good night.

A short time ago, in Pittsylvania county, a man was licensed to sell liquor, for which he paid $100. A man visited his bar, got drunk, killed a woman, and it cost the county $585 to put him in the penitentiary. Who paid the excess of $485? The tax-payers.

In a recent address before the railroad branch of the Y. M. C. A., of New York City, Chauncey M. Depew said:

"Twenty years ago, when there were about 15,000 men in the New York Central service, the average proportion of men discharged for drunkenness within a certain period was at least 20 per cent. Now, with 30,000 men employed by the company, not 1 per cent. is dropped from the service for that cause."

I have inserted these facts without comment, and now I want to see how the opinion of this GREAT Dr. T. J. Hillis, (so great that the editors of the Dispatch thought his views worthy of over half column), bears the test of some questions suggested by these facts. Do the widow and fatherless denounce liquor because of their own weakness? Will they hate the sight of a drunken man because they are afraid they will roll in the mud, as drunken brutes do? Will law-abiding, peaceful citizens, like Mr. Jolly was, object to a near-by bar-room because they are too weak? Will a modest, virtuous woman, who has had the privacy of her bed-room invaded, denounce liquor because she feels too weak to resist its power? Will honest, hard-working men and women, who have their taxes increased by expensive trials, poorhouses and lunatic asylums, denounce liquor because they feel themselves to be in danger of becoming murderers, paupers, or lunatics? Does the New York Central Railroad refuse to employ men who use liquor for the sake of the officials who issue the order, or to prevent wrecks, to protect the passengers, and to save the road from damage suits?

The above are simply a few of the many questions which might be asked, and they carry with them their own answer. We have a right to fight liquor to protect ourselves. The time has come to talk squarely for the rights of sober men and women. Men clamor about their rights to drink and have bar-rooms, and cry out for personal liberty (a favorite phrase of the beer-guzzling crowd). We have a right to demand that such stuff shall not be manufactured and sold by the law of the land as will send men out to murder peaceful citizens, to insult and sometimes outrage pure and virtuous women, and to increase the taxes of sober men. This question of personal liberty has two sides, and the time has come not simply to persuade other men to quit liquor for their own sakes, but to demand protection for the lives, happiness and property of those who denounce alcohol, not because of their own weakness, but because if any use it no man is safe.

The shallow ridicule of this Dr. T. J. Hillis is puerile. How can a reputable newspaper, circulating in the homes of Christian people, deliberately select, out of all the mass of literature of all kinds open to it, such trash? The Dispatch owes an apology to every intelligent reader, as well as to every clergyman in Virginia.

A CARD.

TO THE READERS OF THE SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER:

I have recently learned on reliable testimony that the report has been circulated on the Lunenburg circuit that the District Board of Stewards has assessed $300 for my travelling expenses each year I have been appointed P. E. of the Farmville District. This statement, whether made ignorantly or intentionally, is a misrepresentation, and the district stewards who have attended the district stewards' meetings, and the record of their proceedings will confirm.

I have carefully examined the district stewards record for thirteen years and I find no mention or trace of any specific assessment for the presiding elder's travelling expenses, except when providing for their travelling expenses incurred in moving from one district to the other, when a special assessment was made and paid by the district. In my case I find that $27 were allowed for this object, and in the tabulated statement for every object assessed for the presiding elder's salary, district parsonage rent, repairs to district parsonage, and the several Annual Conference Assessments, a separate column is given to the elder's travelling expenses, and this for only the first year of the four, and placed at $27. The Annual Conference minutes also for each year will show that the travelling expenses of the elder and every preacher on the district has never amounted to anything like $300. The fact is, the elder's travelling expenses on the district were never separately discussed nor fixed at any specific sum.

His salary, in the aggregate, for all expenses has been fixed every year at a stated amount, and these varied expenses were never itemized, except in the tabular statements there is a distinct column for the elder's salary, rent of district parsonage and repairs to district parsonage, but none for travelling expenses on the district. Of course every Board of Stewards on every district and circuit include in their figures for the salary the important and essential item of travelling expenses as a part of the salary. I have never heard the district board even discuss this special feature, but at every meeting the salary has been fixed at a definite sum and then assessed between the different circuits and stations on the basis of the preacher's salary. My salary, for the first two years, was fixed at the same amount as that of Rev. T. H. Campbell my predecessor, and for the third year was reduced $75 at MY OWN request, and for this year, as it is my fourth and last, it remained the same, by special action of the board, as the third year, $1,700—$200 of this being credited to same for the district parsonage. I also refused to allow any assessment for repairs and furnishing the district parsonage the third and fourth years when the district board was willing to allow a specific sum, as had been their custom for years, for this purpose. This year, as I could not occupy the parsonage on account of peculiar family afflictions, I relinquished my right to the amount secured by renting out the parsonage, and donating it to the Ladies Parsonage Committee to aid in providing for the needs of my successor. This amount is small, but it will contribute very much toward making the parsonage more comfortable for the new P. E.

I deny most positively that I ever requested the Board of District Stewards to make a large assessment for my travelling expenses on the district, and then oppressed and burdened the preachers and laymen to push and pull me from appointment to appointment, and appropriating to other objects the money assessed and raised for my transportation over the district. I never had such a thought nor feeling. I repel with just indignation the insinuation whether publicly or privately made. A preacher who could be guilty of such covetous conduct is indeed unworthy of any appointment and deserves, like Judas, who held the money bag, "to go to his own place." I have never had the need in my office as presiding elder for eight years to think that any brother minister, layman, or a sister in sending for me and taking me to their hospitable homes, entertaining me as a member of their family, and sending me on their journey with kindly smiles and warm parting salutations and invitations to come again, and kindly offers to send for me any time and anywhere more than I have been able to accept, felt that I ought to have paid my way or would not have felt aggrieved if I had offered to do so. I can say sincerely that in all these eight years I have never received warmer, kinder, more courteous and hospitable treatment anywhere than I have always had on the Lunenburg and Mecklenburg circuits.

TRANSFERS.

Mr. Editor,—The subject of transfers seems to be engaging the attention of our Methodist people in consequence of the gaps occasioned by deaths and other causes in our ministerial ranks, and I thought of submitting my humble views on this question with your permission.

Every well informed Methodist knows that it is customary, and often times proper, when the needs of the work or the health of the brethren require it, to transfer from one Conference to another. This is all right and proper. But when preachers who very nearly all their lives have been floating around, come into a Conference just to get the fat places, and leave after getting all the best picking they can get for another territory to seek other FAT places, then it is time to call a halt.

Then, again, when there seems to be a likelihood for openings in the best charges we hear of the transfer bobbing up to the surface. It is this tendency that is creating in the minds of the brethren prejudice and distrust of the transferring brother.

Another thing, it is an injustice to our brethren, many of whom are fully competent to fill our best appointments, to put over them transfers because they may have high-sounding titles and an extensive reputation.

Give our young men a chance and in the majority of cases the strongest churches will be built up and edified by their ministrations.

In our own Conference we have for the most part been greatly blessed in the transfers who have come to us for they have proven themselves to be master workmen for our Lord, but we must take care or trouble will ensue.

E. P. PARHAM.

BISHOP CANDLER'S LETTER.

MY DEAR BROTHERS:—Suffer a word of exhortation touching our Twentieth Century Movement, which I conceive to be the paramount issue in Southern Methodism at this moment. It proposes a revival in every Church and a thank offering from every member—objects of overwhelming importance.

Both the reputation and the character of the Church are involved in the success or failure of the movement. Discredit and defeat are before us if we fail.

Universal Methodism is enlisted in this great proposal. The Methodist Episcopal Church, North, proposes $7 a member; the British Wesleyans, $6.50; the Irish Methodists, $5; the Australian Methodists, $5; the Canadian Methodists, $3. Our Church proposes only $1 a member. It will thus be seen that if we reach the figure we have set for ourselves we will be the hindmost body in the whole procession. But what if we fall below it? That is not to be thought of. We cannot afford it.

The object upon which we propose to bestow our thank offering makes a moving appeal to every loyal and pious heart. We propose to bestow it upon our educational institutions.

It is but a small sum to give them. Harvard University receives nearly that much annually. One woman gave recently to an institution in California ten times as much as all Southern Methodists propose to give to all their schools at this momentous hour.

Within the last six years the immense sum of $150,000,000 has been given to higher education in the United States. Less than $5,000,000 was given to the institutions of the South. Before this period we were very far behind. Now we are left still further in the rear. Surely the Twentieth Century Movement has not come too soon.

Dull indeed must be the soul which cannot be moved by the facts of our case.

If Southern Methodists cannot under the inspiration of this great movement relieve their struggling institutions when can those schools be relieved? Can we hope for an hour in the near future more favorable?

Southern Methodist preachers were never confronted by a more far-reaching responsibility than that we face in the opportunity presented in the Twentieth Century Movement. Patriotism and piety combine to impel us to action. Let us see to it that every one of us does his duty. I am,

Yours fraternally,

W. A. CANDLER.

AN APPEAL FROM BISHOP WILSON.

DEAR BRETHREN,—In compliance with the request of the Board of Education, I call your attention to the movement in behalf of our educational work inaugurated by the General Conference at its session in Baltimore in May, 1898. It can hardly be necessary to say anything to men who occupy the positions in the Church to which our pastors have been called in advocacy of Christian education. It is no small part of their ministry, and is an obligation laid upon them of their admission to our ranks to induce all to whom they minister to secure the best and most thorough training, mental and spiritual, of which they are capable and which is within their reach. It is the duty as well as the privilege for the Church to provide, according to its ability, the means for such training.

The history of our Church furnishes ample proof that we have not been indifferent to this requirement. At the same time we are constrained to acknowledge that we have not met the demand made upon us in the full measure of our responsibility. Our people have been but indifferently instructed, and have largely failed to appreciate the worth and magnitude of this work. Material interests and purely secular concerns have engrossed their thought and care, while our educational institutions have been restricted in their work, and many of them have been painfully struggling for very existence for want of means that might, without hurt to any, be easily supplied from the resources which God, in his bounty, has given to us.

For some years, in successive sessions, this interest has engaged the attention of the General Conference. By the establishment of the Board of Education, entrusted with oversight and care of this business throughout the Church, and by the various appeals made and measures adopted by the Board with the sanction of the General Conference, it has been sought to bring the Church to a better understanding and a higher appreciation of the work. The exigencies of the situation seemed to call for some special effort; and, accordingly, the last General Conference, moved by the same impulse that has stirred the entire body of Methodism in England and Canada, as well as in this country, made appeal in this behalf to the highest motives which can actuate us.

The century is coming to its close. It has been the richest in positive blessing in all our world's history. On the material side it has summed up, added to, and multiplied all that the ages gone before have known. It has opened up new realms of thought and spiritual life, and so enhanced the dignity and worth of the human life immeasurably. It has given us glimpses of a possible future in this world's history, and so broadened and enriched the world's hope beyond expression. The actual of experience in the hundred years just going make the promise of the ages to come infinitely more real.

No enumeration of benefits is possible in a brief call like this. Only bear in mind that our own Church has had its full measure of this blessing. If we have contributed ought to the world's gain and the advancement of the Church in this period, it is because we have received largely. Remember the hole of the pit from which we were digged, and then look at the rock upon which our feet have been set and the rich inheritance into which we have fallen. Others have labored and we have entered into their labors.

Our highest and wisest representative body has urged us to consider the mercies of God, and by a special service

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

By the President of the United States—Proclamation.

A national custom dear to the hearts of the people calls for the setting apart of one day in each year as an occasion of special thanksgiving to Almighty God for the blessings of the preceding year. This honored observance acquires with time a tender significance. It enriches domestic life. It summons under the family roof the absent children to glad reunion with those we love.

Seldom has this nation had greater cause for profound thanksgiving. No great pestilence has invaded our shores. Liberal employment waits upon labor. Abundant crops have rewarded the efforts of the husbandman. Increased comforts have come to the home. The national finances have been sustained and made firmer. In all branches of industry and trade there has been an unequalled degree of prosperity, while there has been a steady gain in the moral and educational growth of our national character. Churches and schools have flourished. American patriotism has been exalted. Those engaged in maintaining the honor of the flag with such signal success have been in a large degree spared from disaster and disease. An honorable peace has been ratified with a foreign nation with which we were at war, and we are now on friendly relations with every power of earth.

The trust which we have assumed for the benefit of the people of Cuba has been faithfully advanced. There is marked progress towards the restoration of healthy industrial conditions, and under wise sanitary regulations the island has enjoyed unusual exemption from the scourge of fever. The hurricane which swept over our new possession of Puerto Rico destroyed the homes and property of the inhabitants called forth the instant sympathy of the people of the United States, who were swift to respond with generous aid to the sufferers. While the insurrection still continues in the island of Luzon, business is resuming its activity and confidence in the good purposes of the United States is being rapidly established throughout the archipelago.

For these reasons and countless others, I, William McKinley, president of the United States, do hereby name Thursday, the 30th day of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed as such by all our people on this continent and on our newly acquired islands, as well as those who may be at sea or sojourning in foreign lands; and I advise that on this day religious exercises shall be conducted in the churches or meeting places of all denominations, in order that in the social features of the day its real significance may not be lost sight of, but fervent prayers be offered to the Most High for a continuance of the divine guidance, without which man's efforts are vain, and for divine consolation to those whose kindred and friends have sacrificed their lives for country.

I recommend also that on this day, as far as may be found practical, labor shall cease from its accustomed toil, and charity abound toward the sick, the needy and the poor.

In witness whereof I have set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 25th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1899 and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-fourth.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

RAISED THE AMOUNT ASKED FOR

Rev. C. L. Bane, pastor of Union-Station Methodist Church, Richmond, called a meeting of the members of his church Wednesday night and stated that the object of the meeting was to raise some money to pay on the church debt. He told them that he wanted to pay $1,000 before the session of Conference, which convenes in Petersburg, Nov. 15. Over $1,000 was raised that night, and the contributions of several members not present at the meeting will swell the amount to considerably over the amount named.

It was quite an enthusiastic meeting, and the membership is very much encouraged. The congregation has this year paid $2,500 on the principal of the church debt, which is more than has been paid any other year since the church was dedicated. The other finances of the church are in good shape, and 92 members have been added to the church this year. Others will join before the end of the Conference year. This church will send up a good report to Conference.—Dispatch.

NORFOLK PREACHERS' MEETING

The regular weekly meeting of the Methodist preachers was held Monday morning, Rev. W. H. Edwards presiding. Prayer by Rev. R. F. Beadles, of Central Church, Portsmouth. Under the call of the churches the following reports were heard:

Rev. Dr. H. E. Johnson, of Cumberland-street, reported large congregations at both services Sunday. The meeting at night was in the interest of the Sunday-school Missionary Society which has raised during the year nearly $300 for missions.

McKendree—Rev. R. H. Bennett had four conversions in the Sunday-school and received twenty-three members into the church.

At Central, Portsmouth, Rev. R. F. Beadles received sixteen new members.

Rev. J. F. Carey reported one addition to the church at Port Norfolk.

At LeKies Memorial, Rev. W. T. Williams received one on profession of faith.

At Chestnut-street, Berkley, Rev. R. M. Chandler reported three conversions and three additions to the church, and that all the Conference assessments had been met and a surplus was left on hand.

The remaining churches reported large congregations and pleasant services.

Rev. J. W. Baker gave an outline of his sermon Sunday. His theme was, "Business Hindrances to a Religious Life." Text, 1st Kings, 20:40—"As thy servant was busy here and there he was gone." The sermon was discussed under the following divisions:

1st. A great trust—the man in the prophet's story was commissioned to keep a prisoner, but he preferred to follow out his own wishes and attend to his private concerns, so the prisoner made his escape; one's soul may be lost or saved, therefore the soul is of priceless value and a priceless trust. The souls of others are of infinite value and are a priceless trust, for which we will be held responsible.

2d. The sad confession—this man's excuse was certainly a poor one—he was busy; he has many imitators. How many say, "I have no time to be religious."

3d. The painful consequences—the prisoner was gone. The opportunity for personal salvation may be lost while we are busy here and there about other things. And so, of our duty to others, it is pre-eminently our duty to care for the trust committed to us now—our life is required for the loss of our own souls and of others. May God require the loss of others at our hands and may he not call to each one of us, "Where is thy brother?"—Virginian-Pilot.

It is with much regret that the congregation of LeKies Memorial Methodist church will have to part with their pastor, Rev. W. T. Williams, at the close of the present Conference year. Mr. Williams is compelled to ask of the Bishop an appointment on account of the continued illness of his wife. This course will be taken by the advice of his physician, who says that it is essential to Mrs. Williams' health that she seek another and more suitable climate. This will cause the sundering of many warm ties which bind him to his people. He has labored faithfully and efficiently during the year now drawing to a close, and no pastor who has served LeKies was ever more universally beloved. While the church cannot, under existing circumstances, have him as their pastor another year, they earnestly wish for him abundant success in whatever field he may be assigned to.—Virginian-Pilot.

ANTI-POLYGAMY.

The National Anti-Polygamy League, having a membership of about three thousand of the most prominent men and women in the United States, has in preparation a monster petition to Congress against the avowed polygamist, Brigham H. Roberts, and requesting the passage of a constitutional amendment forever prohibiting a polygamist from holding a public office.

All men and women who believe in the sanctity of the home and the purity of American womanhood should assist in securing signatures to this petition.

Unlike other petitions, the women are permitted to sign this one as well as the men. It is right that this should be so as the insult is against the women of the nation. Blanks for the names can be had by addressing Grace J. Cutler, Secretary of the National Anti-Polygamy League, 15 Spruce St., New York City, and the names should all be sent in to Miss Cutler before the third week in November.

Write at once and aid in this great moral movement, for every possible agency will be required to prevent the seating of Roberts.

"I GUESS WE WILL NOT DO ANYTHING FOR THE TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND."

Would you imagine that there could be a minister, a preacher, a circuit that thinks and talks that way? Yet it is, said there is. The fact outlives your maimed imagination. You may well wonder how and where it can be. Would a minister of years and experience say that, when he calls to mind the action of the General Conference, the achievements of Methodism in the past, the needs of the hour, the progress of the movement in Britain and the United States, and the imperative call upon all the churches to consecrate themselves and their substance to God? Certainly not. Would a young man, a probationer for the ministry, say that when he considers the heritage he has in Methodism, the earnings and bequests of the fathers; the hope he has in Methodism, which will be in glory and power what he helps make it; when he reviews what it has done for the world and anticipates what it is sure to do if all are faithful; when he reflects upon the souls saved, the institutions built and set at work, the bright fields of promise in opening missions and enfranchised nations? Certainly not. Would a circuit say that when it bears in mind that it is itself the fruit of mission toil, the product of the devotion and labor of earnest, self-sacrificing people; that it has the advantage of the life and energy of a great Connection, a church whose heart-throbs are felt from the Atlantic to the Pacific and beyond; whose history is a glorious record for the past, and a bright promise for the future; a church that has provided ministers of God, and secured order, strength and fruit? Certainly not. Well, then, who could have thought it or said it? Where are they? Have they clear proofs of no life spirit and life?—Christian Guardian.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

The Board of Stewards of Court-street Methodist church met last night prior to the assembling of the fourth Quarterly Conference. After transacting routine business the following resolutions were offered by Mr. Carter Glass and unanimously adopted by the board:

"Whereas, the pastoral term of Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., at Court-street church will expire in a few days by the law of limitation, and

"Whereas, it is desirable to place upon the official records of the church the high estimate which the congregation puts upon Dr. Smith's worth and upon his services as preacher and pastor,

"Therefore, be it Resolved, by the Board of Stewards of Court-street church, That we contemplate the termination of Dr. Smith's pastorate with feelings of deepest regret, and we but reflect the sentiment of the entire congregation when we declare that his ministry has been to the church as great and as opportune a blessing as God has ever vouchsafed His people here. Thankful for the four years of personal intercourse and spiritual communion with this honored priest of Christ's church, we desire to follow him with this token of our affection and assurance of our prayers for himself and those dearest to him."

Dr. Smith responded in a feeling manner, expressing the pleasure he had in serving the congregation for four years as pastor, and spoke of the kindness he had received at the hands of the membership, for whom he would always entertain the tenderest feelings of affection and love.

The Quarterly Conference was called to order and presided over by Dr. Paul Whitehead, P. E. The questions usually propounded at the fourth Quarterly Conference were answered as far as possible, some being left to fill up at the adjourned meeting to be held next Monday night.

All of the assessments of this church were reported met, and a considerable surplus on some, notably those of foreign and domestic missions.

The pastor reported the spiritual state of the church improving, the Sunday-school never in better condition, but now having reached the maximum of membership until more space is provided.

Captain Adams, chairman of the New Church Committee, was asked to report. It was stated that about 150 members of the church had subscribed $25,843 50; that one gentleman, not a member of the church, had volunteered a subscription of $250, and another business man, an Israelite, had contributed voluntarily $100. The canvass will be pressed as rapidly as possible, and every member of the church requested to contribute. It is expected that the first Quarterly Conference of the new Conference year will authorize work to be begun on the new church.

Before adjourning the following resolution, offered by Dr. W. B. Hatcher, was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the Quarterly Conference most respectfully requests Bishop Wilson to return Dr. Paul Whitehead as Presiding Elder of the Lynchburg District for the ensuing year, believing him to be the right man in the right place, looking well to the interest of the church.—Lynchburg News.

MORMONS IN CONFERENCE.

The Mormon elders laboring in Virginia held an annual meeting at Lee Camp Hall, extending over Sunday and Monday. There were three services Sunday and two Monday. They were fairly well attended, and the elders said that many of those present were Mormons. The startling statement was made by one of the preachers that the sect is gaining from 1,500 to 2,000 converts in Virginia every year.

There are forty-four missionaries laboring in Virginia. They always go in pairs. They do not have an easy time of it. Governor Tyler has comparatively recently received letters from Mormon preachers asking protection from the people among whom they are trying to secure proselytes. In Rockbridge county recently they came near feeling the full weight of the public indignation. The missionaries receive no pay, and expect to receive free lodging and board. It is said they often get pretty hungry. It is generally right difficult to secure a washerwoman.

The chief address delivered during the conference was by Elder Ben E. Rich. It was an exposition of Mormon doctrine and a defence of polygamy. He declared there was no practice of polygamy since it had been made illegal by Federal enactment, but just as emphatically decided that all good Mormons believed that polygamy was right.

The speaker declared that the fight against Roberts, the polygamous Congressman from Utah, was inspired and led by Republicans, Roberts being a Democrat. The speaker said he was a delegate-at-large from Idaho, to the Republican National Convention at St. Louis in 1896, but that he followed Teller when he bolted the convention, and believed now that the free coinage of silver was essential to the temporal salvation of the people.—Richmond Dispatch.

The fourth Quarterly Conference of Queen-street M. E. church was held in the pastor's study at 8 o'clock Monday night, with Rev. W. H. Edwards, the presiding elder, in the chair, and a full attendance of members.

The reports from the various departments of church work for the present Conference year were submitted, and showed the finances of the church to be in excellent condition. All of the assessments have been met and a handsome sum paid on the church debt. The year has been a remarkably successful one along all lines, and the spiritual condition of the membership is most encouraging. It is the unanimous desire of the official body and the congregation that Rev. S. C. Hatcher be returned as pastor for another year.

A resolution was adopted uniting with Cumberland-street in asking that the next session of the Virginia Conference be held in Norfolk. This resolution will accompany the reports to be handed in at Petersburg next week by the presiding elder.—Virginian-Pilot.

At the Norfolk Real Estate Exchange yesterday Mr. T. F. Rogers, auctioneer, sold to Mr. George A. Frick, special commissioner, the piece of improved property at the southwest corner of Cumberland and Freemason streets to Mr. Frank Dusch for $7,000. This is considered a good price, but the interest which attaches to the purchase lies in something else rather than the amount.

Sometime ago the Landmark forecasted this purchase and the purpose of it. At the time the whole story was denied, not by the parties most in interest, but but by others, but it now looks as if the publication was correct. It was then stated that Mr. Dusch would after the purchase, turn the property over to the Cumberland-street M. E. church, and that on the site there would be erected a new house of worship by the congregation to cost in the neighborhood of $50,000.

Whether or not this will be done Mr. Dusch, who was seen last evening, declined to say, but as it is supposed that he bought the property with this object in view, there is reason to believe it will follow. There are many in the congregation who favor a change of site, but this sentiment is not unanimous.—Norfolk Landmark.

The Methodist ministers held their regular weekly meeting this morning. The principal topic of discussion was the report of the committee appointed to advise what steps should be taken, if any, in regard to the election of Mormon Elder Roberts to the United States House of Representatives and the dissemination of Mormon literature throughout Virginia and elsewhere in the South.

The discussion was lengthy and very interesting. It was decided, however, that none of its details should be made public, and further that the text of the committee's report should be withheld from publication.

The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That as pastors and representatives of a membership of more than 800 people in the cities of Richmond and Manchester, we are unalterably opposed to the seating of E. H. Roberts as a member of the United States Congress, and we hereby warn our people against efforts now being made to propagate Mormonism in these cities.

MEMORIAL TO THE

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The General Conference was memorialized by the Rock River Conference to remove the time limit from the pastorate; to make the presiding eldership elective; to limit the office of the bishop to eight years; to define more specifically the duties of general secretaries and agents. There was no discussion of the memorials and little interest in them. They were passed, almost unanimously, as instructions for the delegates, lay and ministerial.—Baltimore Methodist.

AN APPEAL FROM BISHOP WILSON.

(CONCLUDED FROM THIRD PAGE.)

and offering show our gratitude. We want, of course, first of all, a more intense and entire devotion of ourselves to Christ. To present our bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God, is the first and, indeed, only reasonable service in recognition of His mercies. Always conceding and insisting upon this, it is quite in agreement with it that the General Conference should beg you to provide for that need which is most urgent and most glaring. End this century by inducing your people to make an educational offering that shall give your schools and colleges freedom of movement for the next hundred years, and insure the training of a generation that shall do for Christ and His kingdom a work far in advance of any that we can do.

Commending this great movement to your care, I am, my dear brethren,

Yours in Christ,

A. W. WILSON

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VIII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 19.

Text of the Lesson, Neh. viii, 1-12. Memory Verses, 1-3—Golden Text, Neh. viii, 3—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1909, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. All the people as one man spake unto Ezra, the scribe, to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel. When the wall was built and watches appointed, Nehemiah gathered nobles, rulers and people, that he might ascertain by the register of the genealogy who were truly of Israel (chapter vii, 1-6), and some who professed to be what they were not had to be put away (vii, 64). It was after that they gathered as one man to hear the Word.

2. And Ezra, the priest, brought the law before the congregation upon the first day of the seventh month. Ezra was a ready scribe in the law of Moses and had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord and to do it and to teach it in Israel, and the hand of the Lord his God was upon him (Ezra vii, 6, 10). The seventh month was in some respects the greatest month in the year to Israel, as on the first day came the feast of trumpets, on the tenth day the annual atonement, and on the fifteenth day began the feast of tabernacles (Lev. xxiii, 24, 27, 34). The feasts, whether made of silver or ram's horns, suggested atonement, and there are no names written in heaven, nor is there any real love for His Word, without atonement.

3. They had long sessions, for from morning until midday he read therein before all who could understand, and they were all attention. Then day by day, from the first day unto the last day of the feast of tabernacles, he read to the people from the book of the law of God (verse 18). I am not surprised at their interest, for I see hundreds of people come together at all hours of the day, 10, 10:30, 11:30, 2, 2:30, 3:30, 4:30 and 7:30, and sit unwearying to listen to simple Bible readings lasting an hour or an hour and a half, and nothing in the form of a solo, duet, quartet or special music of any kind to entertain them. The same interest manifested by rich and poor in our great cities of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington as in smaller and less busy cities, for the Word of God reaches and satisfies the heart.

4. There were 13 men beside him as he stood before the people, six on his right hand and seven on his left hand, a double perfect number in all, bearing perfect testimony to a perfect word, but the most important person in all the gathering was He who said, "Certainly I will be with thee" (Ex. iii, 12; Joshua i, 5; Judg. vi, 16), and long afterward He said that wherever two or three would gather in His name He would be in the midst (Math. xviii, 20).

5. As he opened the book all the people stood up and in that way manifested their reverence for Him whose voice they were about to hear through the mouth of Ezra. Thus also did the congregation when Solomon blessed them (1 Kings, viii, 14).

6. With heartfelt responses, uplifted hands and bowed heads the people worshiped the Lord. He looks for those who will worship Him in spirit and in truth (John iv, 23, 24), and all else is vain. He speaks of those who draw nigh with their mouth and honor with their lips, while their heart is far from Him and their fear toward Him taught by precept of men (Isa. xxix, 13), but all such are abominations to Him. A life that is a continual "Amen" to God is a life of true worship and is very Christlike. Math. xi, 26.

7, 8. Here are again 13 names of men who with the Levites caused the people to understand the law. Believers should never manifest any superstitious fear of this honorable number. It was as Israel compassed the walls of Jericho the thirtieth time that the walls fell. It suggests "strength made perfect in weakness," for seven is God's strength or perfection and six is man's weakness (Isa. xl, 29; 11 Cor. xii, 9). The word of God is plainly written (Deut. xxvii, 8; Hab. ii, 2), so that any one who believes it may run in God's ways, and the way to understand it is simply to believe it and receive it with meekness (Heb. xi, 3; James i, 21). Dear Mr. Wilkinson says, "If the plain, obvious sense makes good sense, seek no other sense," and another has said, "The Bible was not made for wise men, but for fools," and if we are simple enough to believe it all just as we read it we will certainly be counted foolish by the wise of this world. Let it be so, and let us be glad to be fools for Christ's sake. I know no better rule for good reading than this eighth verse.

9. "This day is holy unto the Lord your God: mourn not nor weep." As they heard the words of the law they wept, for the Spirit wrought, convincing them of their sin before God, and where there is true repentance there is comfort from Jehovah, for there is forgiveness with Him and plenteous redemption. His own words are "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people; cry unto her that her iniquity is pardoned" (Isa. xl, 1, 2). See also Isa. xliii, 25.

10. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." Not only are we to rejoice in the Lord (Isa. lxi, 10; Hab. iii, 18; Phil. iii, 2), but we are to have the joy of the Lord (John xv, 11; xvi, 24; xvii, 13). This was not a joy in circumstances or feelings, but in God Himself, even as when He said, "I delight to do Thy will, O my God," and "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight" (Ps. xl, 8; Math. xi, 25-26). He delighted to give by the sacrifice of Himself the grace of God to all who would receive Him.

11. "Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved." Not hold your peace from giving good testimony, but from mourning and weeping when you ought to be rejoicing and giving thanks. He chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love and hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ that we should be to the praise of His glory (Eph. i. 3, 4, 12).

G. M. SMITHDEAL, President,

12. "Great mirth, because they had understood the words that were declared unto them." Mouths are filled with laughter and tongues with singing when we consider how great things the Lord hath done for us (Ps. cxxvi. 2, 3). There is no joy and peace like that which comes by believing (Rom. xv. 13). A letter received only today from a member of one of the Bible classes contains this testimony: "Sometimes it seemed I must shout aloud for joy over the verses you gave us, and after I left the class time and time again I felt as though I had been on the uplands and breathing the very air from heaven."

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 19, "Liberty and Love"—Text, Rom. xiv. 1-23.

"Let not then your good be evil spoken of."

Most questions and practices, like most objects, have many sides and can be seen from more than one viewpoint. Most persons, however, see all these from but one position, and this is rarely the same for any two individuals. Hence differences of opinions and practices arise. Things assume widely varying forms as we shift our position and relation to them.

Each one must use his own eyes and ears. He must see and hear and judge and act for himself. It is a tremendous responsibility and great danger is involved in it, but it is the demand of human nature and necessary to human development. Each one must go out into the world and take of its goods and use them to his advancement or detriment. Things are all good and valuable for some purposes and at some times. If wrongly used or at improper times, they work harm. Wisdom comes by use. As no one has long enough life or wide enough experience each should give the result of his testing to others as they need it. The danger in the path should be marked that the next traveler may be warned in time.

Our liberty is beyond price. We must at all hazards maintain our rights to think and act as our needs demand. We must have freedom to assert opinions and indulge right practices.

But more valuable still to our development is regard for our fellows. We must maintain fraternal feelings toward them even if we restrict our liberties. We can forego some freedom in expression and action if we can thereby help another or save him pain and harm.

We may see no wrong in a certain course for ourselves, but if following it will cause our fellow men to lose the straight path love demands that we take the road safe for him to follow.

Love must rule. The strong must still help the weak and bear their infirmities till they become strong and not merely bear with them. Refusal to do so makes the strong one weak, and both are overcome in error. It is grand to be strong. It is grander to use strength so as to help and not hurt others.

Learning to Eat.

There is a science and an art of eating. Not everything edible is nutritious. Not all palatable things are wholesome. Some attractive fruits are poisonous. Some articles are good only when prepared in special manner, others only when eaten in a particular way. The range of a baby's diet is restricted. Growth and age enlarge the limits. Civilization increases the bill of fare and brings the foods of many lands to the table.

Our spirit life is no less peculiar. There is a science and art of right living. Growth in heart and moral qualities necessitates knowledge of the things right for belief and action. Sincerity is not enough. To believe a falsity makes it no less false and no less dangerous. Not only is man, as Carlyle says, "the born enemy of lies," but lies are ever the deadly enemies of men. Stones are no less stones because we think them to be loaves of bread. The delusion may not harm them, but it may starve us. It is not enough to love to satisfy the soul. We must find the worthy, the lovable, and then learn how to love worthily.

This is where the Bible is constantly needed. It is the illustrated catalogue of the garden of life, picturing fruits good and bad, and showing their effects upon men. Here lies the value of Christian testimony in showing how others have grown strong or where they have made failure.

How are you growing in the graces of the Christian life? What methods do you use to overcome your natural propensities to evil and strengthen the appetites for goodness and spiritual beauty? Do the years find you improving in soul health and power?

Missionary Vows.

Every Methodist has taken them. Every Methodist should keep them. Not the vow to preach or teach, to go to foreign lands or even to become a missionary in home fields, but to support the home church and the benevolent enterprises of the church, according to one's ability. Some do not fully realize the meaning of this promise and it should be made more clear to them. Every Epworth Leaguer should give regularly and in some fixed proportion of his income to these benevolent causes. We are pledged to support our missions at home and abroad. This obligation is becoming more clearly recognized, and it is encouraging to find our young people especially alert on the subject.

One of the best aids in awakening interest and deepening that already awake is to arrange monthly services in which the different fields where our church is working are treated. Sunday evening once a month can very profitably be spent in giving information by addresses and lectures and receiving collections.

Thanksgiving.

For our harvests safe ingathered,
For our golden store of wheat,
For the cornlands and the vinelands,
For the flowers upspringing sweet,
For our coasts from want protected,
For each inlet, river, bay,
By Thy bounty full and flowing,
Take our praise this joyful day.

For the dangers to the nation,
Warded hence by sovereign love;
For the country, strong and hopeful,
Songs arise to God above.
Never people called and chosen
Had such loving kindness shown
As this people God defended,
Therefore, praises to the throne.

For our dear ones lifted higher
Through the darkness to the light,
Ours to love and ours to cherish
In dear memory beyond sight;
For our kindred and acquaintance
In Thy heaven who safely stay,
We uplift our psalms of triumph,
Lord, on this thanksgiving day.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Our debt to the dead is unspeakable. For good or ill, the world is largely ruled by the dead.—Rev. B. Fay Mills, Evangelist, Boston.

Ethical Life.

Ethical life implies the election of motives other than selfish. In our age who will dispute this—selfishness has been apotheosized as the one rule of conduct?—Rev. Dr. E. G. Hirsch, Hebrew, Chicago.

Highest Freedom.

The highest freedom is not that which is won at the point of a bayonet at a Yorktown, a Gettysburg or a Santiago, but that which comes from the surrender of ourselves to God.—Rev. George B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver.

Work and Dignity.

Work is, the ground on which all men meet. To work is man's highest dignity. Equality, in the commonly accepted meaning of that term, never did, doesn't and never will exist.—Rev. R. S. J. Burke, Reformed Church, Holyoke, Mass.

Two Gospels.

This age of ours must have its two gospels, one form for the sinner and another form for the saved, thus leading the world unsaved to Christ and the world saved into the fullness and absoluteness of Christ.—Rev. M. A. Matthews, Presbyterian, Jackson, Tenn.

Personality.

Personality is proved not in terms of time and space, but in the discovery of intelligent, progressive law, leading not man alone, but all created life, slowly upward from one stage of achievement to another.—Mrs. Celia Parker, Woolley Memorial Chapel, Chicago.

Revelations of Bible Seers.

The Bible seers reveal a spiritual world seen with spiritual senses, touched and opened for the purpose; a world peopled with men and women who have passed from earth and live in the enjoyment of every faculty and sense and power, though in spiritual and not in natural bodies.—Rev. L. P. Mercer, Swedenborgian, Chicago.

Meaning of Salvation.

There can be no sundering of that which belongs to the soul from that which belongs to the body, for both are one for God's purposes, the body in all its functions and occupations becoming only the instrument or minister of the soul. This is what we are to understand by the term salvation.—Rev. Lester Bradner, Episcopalian, New York.

Usefulness in Affairs of the World.

Our usefulness in this world's affairs will largely depend on our habit of cherishing the loftiest ideals while judging our fellow men and all great affairs from the point of view of what man has been, has done and has attained unto in the past and what he may reasonably be expected to be, to do and to achieve in the future.

The system of organized charity now in operation in most of the large cities of the country is not right. The stress on organized charity is another example of the sophistries which the scholar needs to expose. I am in favor of real charity, but that charity is misnamed which compels a man to turn his soul inside out to charity officials before he can get a crust of bread; that charity is misnamed which forces a woman to give her history before she can get a garment to clothe her naked child.—Rev. George C. Lorimer, Baptist, Boston.

Heaven a Perfect Place.

Heaven is a real place, a real condition. It is a perfect place, something that cannot be said of even the best in the world. It is perfect, with a seven-fold perfection. There, as depicted to us in the book of Revelation, is perfect holiness, for there shall be no curse therein; there is perfect government, for there is the throne of God; there are perfect obedience and perfect vision, for they shall see his face; there is perfect identity, for his name shall be upon all foreheads, and no man can be mistaken in another; lastly, there are in the heavenly kingdom perfect day and perfect glory.—Rev. Dr. George C. Needham, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Christian Life.

The provisions and promises of God are equal to his purposes. If failure comes at any point, it is not because God has been surprised by anything for which his resources are not adequate. He wants us to lead lives that will bring us happiness. Any other kind of life ends in tragedy, no matter what may have been the attractions belonging to some of its periods and phases. It is here where God comes in with his intervention that he may make possible that which without his help would be impossible. God assigns us difficult tasks, but he can give us no other. They are the doorways for our entrance into large and glorious possessions. If we join together with God, we can make a conquest of the Christian life.—Rev. Dr. E. G. Thurber, Presbyterian, Paris.

Culture of Our Faith.

The broadening sphere of knowledge is bringing the whole race of man to a better understanding of God. The reason why there is such a wholesale acceptance of the vital truths of religion in these latter days is because experience has revealed the fact that they meet our demands. Through the increasing efficiency of our works faith is gradually becoming the property of the universal mind. Men are accepting such parts of the Christian system as they have been convinced are for the betterment of their condition, and whenever the whole system is so revealed as to be clearly understood, when vital truths are made so manifest as to form abiding conviction, then the whole world will accept them. This is what the world wants and what all men are seeking after.—Rev. T. M. Hartman, Presbyterian, McKeesport, Pa.

A QUEER BOY.

He doesn't like study: it "weakens his eyes,"

But the "right sort" of book will insure a surprise.

Let it be about Indians, pirates, or bears, And he's lost for the day to all mundane affairs;

By sunlight or gaslight his vision is clear.

Now isn't that queer?

At thought of an errand he's "tired as a hound,"

Very weary of life, and of "tramping around,"

But if there is a band or a circus in sight

He will follow it gladly from morning till night.

The showman will capture him some day, I fear,

For he is so queer.

If there's work in the garden his head "aches to split,"

And his back is so lame that he can't dig a bit;"

But mention baseball, and he's cured very soon,

And he'll dig for a woodchuck the whole afternoon;

Do you think he "plays 'possum?" he seems quite sincere.

But— isn't that queer?

VA. ANNUAL CONFERENCE. Proceedings.

The Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in its 117th annual session in the Washington-street church, at 9 a. m., Wednesday, the 16th.

Devotional exercises were conducted by Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, who read the 10th chapter of St. Luke.

The 210th hymn, "And Are We Yet Alive," was sung and the bishop offered a prayer for the spread of the gospel over all lands and the establishing of His Kingdom over all the earth.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper followed, the bishop being assisted in the administration by the following elders: Revs. William F. Bain, W. C. Vaden, Thomas H. Campbell, and Dr. W. E. Judkins.

The business session of the Conference began at 10:15 by the secretary of the last Conference, Rev. Dr. Paul Whitehead calling the roll of clerical and lay delegates.

When the name of lay delegate E. G. Moseley, of Danville, was reached, his presiding elder, Rev. W. P. Wright, reported that Mr. Moseley was present early this morning, but a telegram announcing the total destruction of his tobacco factory last night, necessitated his enforced absence from the session today.

Rev. Paul Whitehead, D. D., was selected secretary of the conference and on his nominations, Rev. S. S. Lambeth, D. D., and Rev. George F. Greene, were elected assistants.

On motion of Rev. Geo. W. Wray it was decided to assemble at 9:30 a. m., and adjourn at 1:30 p. m. daily.

Rev. Thomas H. Campbell announced that Rev. Joseph H. Riddick, presiding elder of the Farmville district, would not be present on account of his feeble condition and had requested that he represent his district for him.

Rev. Asa Driscoll was appointed postmaster for the conference.

The following standing committees were announced:

Sunday-school Board—C. D. Crawley, Dr. G. Anderson, L. W. Lane, Jr., W. H. Riddick, G. L. Hunter, C. F. Comer, Charles Forbes, James T. Minor, T. J. Wray, J. W. Parish, P. J. Amiss, John O. Moss, E. T. Dadmun, R. B. Hartley, T. O. Edwards, W. H. Vincent, George H. Spooner, E. J. Whitehead, George W. Jones, I. W. Price.

Publishing Interests—J. S. Wallace, L. M. Dance, E. H. Rawlings, Richard Irby, W. M. Hayes, R. O. Peatross, J. Q. Rhodes, W. J. Kidd, W. A. Christian, D. J. Evans, S. H. Johnson, Dr. E. Williams, T. McN. Simpson, H. E. Barrow, W. T. Green, Dr. A. W. Ely, W. G. Boggs, J. B. Harrison, R. H. Bennett, J. R. Griffith, W. P. Wise.

Conference Records—G. H. Wiley, C. W. Leftwich, A. C. Berryman, W. A. S. Conrad, B. E. Ledbetter, G. F. Greene, R. B. Blankenship, Paul Bradley, R. M. Maxey.

Rev. J. T. Mastin, submitted the following question for the bishop to answer:

"What are the powers and duties of the Conference Board of Colporters (page 404 of the discipline), and how far is the constitution under which the Virginia Conference Board has worked since 1889 now operative?"

The bishop replied that this was purely a conference question.

The following was offered by Revs. C. L. Bane and J. T. Mastin:

"Resolved, That all communications from our connectional officers go to the proper boards without being read before the conference, and if, in the opinion of the boards or committees, there is anything that ought to be especially read before open conference it be done by the boards or committees."

The resolution was put and lost.

Communications from the Publishing House Sunday-school Board, Epworth League Board of Missions, Church Extension, and Board of Education were read and referred to the proper committees.

The report of the Sunday-school Editor showed the following literature issued by the department: Sunday-school magazines, 41,000, gain 10,000; Children's Visitor (weekly) 45,600, gain, 5,100; Children's Visitor (monthly), 13,100, loss, 15,900; Senior Quarterly, 302,000, gain, 3,000; Intermediate Quarterly, 7,000, gain, 1,000; Intermediate lesson paper, 140,000, gain, 5,000; Our Little People, 210,000, gain, 10,000; Old picture cards, 35,000, gain, 5,000; total gain in circulation, 39,100. Loss on Monthly Visitor, 15,900. Net gain, 23,200. Total circulation, 1,098,700. During three years this relative result has been recorded.

Total number of teachers and scholars, 939,187; decrease, 16,436. This decrease was in twenty-two conferences. In the remaining nineteen conferences there was a gain.

The communication from the Board of Missions says that last year was one of unusual prosperity in nearly all the mission fields, while the home church reports a falling off in membership and a decline in many of its interests. The foreign mission fields aggregate a gain of more than five per cent. in membership and a corresponding advance along the line. There have been several additions to the working force during the year. China has received four additional missionaries, Japan one and Cuba two.

A request that Rev. Edward M. Jordan be taken from the superannuated list and placed on the active list was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations.

The Church Extension Report showed the collections on the sixteenth assessment to be $57,717.09, being $1,519.79 less than on the fifteenth assessment. Of the forty-four contributing the payments, while twenty-four paid less. On the assessments of $7,000 the conferences paid $4,131.54, which is $425.44 more than the preceding year. The net increase of the loan fund for the year is $15,739.04, making a total of $173,921.54.

The names of Rev. A. G. Brown, D. D., Revs. R. B. James, John T. Moore, Joseph H. Riddick, and J. Carson Watson were, by request, referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for superannuated relations.

The bishop was requested to appoint a nominating committee of three to recommend a committee on conference relations and admissions.

Question 18 was called: "Who are superannuated?" and the following were called and their characters passed, and were referred to the committee on that relation: J. F. Brannin, A. M. Hall, Herbert T. Bacon, William F. Bain, William A. Daughon, Thomas J. Bayton, John L. Clarke, John W. Cridder, William A. Crocker, R. N. Crooks, John P. Woodward, John B. Dey, Jas. E. Gates, James R. Waggoner, Charles H. Boggs and W. T. A. Haynes.

Question 17 was called: "Who are supernumerary?" and the following passed in character and referred for continuance in that relation: Revs. William H. Camper, Thomas H. Early and Joseph A. Proctor.

The presiding elders were called and gave interesting accounts of the progress of the work, spiritually and financially, in their districts, and passed in examination of character.

The bishop then called the 20th question: "Are all the preachers blameless in life and official administration?" and the following preachers gave reports from their several charges and their characters were passed: W. G. Starr, J. T. Mastin, J. T. Sewell, C. L. Bane, L. C. Shearer, W. B. Beauchamp, J. T. Routten, George E. Booker, Jr., J. C. Reed, J. S. Wallace, C. D. Crawley, W. L. Jones, H. J. Brown, W. E. Moore, E. A. Potts, J. E. McSparran, W. E. Bullard, George H. Wiley, D. G. C. Butts, Asa Driscoll, J. N. Latham, L. J. Phaup, B. F. Lipscomb, M. S. Colona, A. G. Brown. The reports of Dr. Starr, Revs. C. L. Bane and B. F. Lipscomb were most encouraging.

During the session Rev. W. S. Campbell, secretary of the Virginia Bible Society; Rev. W. H. Joyce, of the Baltimore Conference, and Rev. H. W. Battle, D. D., of the First Baptist church, of this city, were introduced to the conference.

By request of Dr. A. Coke Smith, Friday, at 11 o'clock, was fixed for hearing the report on education.

The opening sermon was preached before the conference by Rev. W. W. Lear, of Market-street church, an immense audience being present. His text was, John xii, 24-25. Subject, "Self-Renunciation the Law of Reproduction, and also the Law of Self Preservation." The speaker handled his theme in an able manner, holding the undivided attention of his hearers from beginning to close.

SECOND DAY.

The conference reassembled pursuant to adjournment at 9:30 a. m., Bishop Wilson in the chair. Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. R. B. Badles, of the Norfolk circuit, Portsmouth district, who led in prayer.

Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., read the report of the General Committee on Conference Orphanage. After giving a minute account of the meetings and proceedings of the sub-committee, the report stated that a site had been selected for the building of the orphanage in the northern section of Richmond, in what is known as Highland Park, with ten acres of land, and that the Methodists of Richmond had obligated themselves to materially assist in the erection of said structure. The report recommended that a bill be presented to the Virginia Legislature for the incorporation of the orphanage by the Virginia Conference, and that the incorporations and first board shall be as follows:

"And that no one shall be a trustee unless he be a member of the Methodist Church and continue as such."

Trustees—J. W. Bledsoe, W. J. Young, J. T. Mastin, A. Coke Smith, F. M. Edwards, L. B. Betty, J. W. Shackelford, W. B. Beauchamp, E. H. Rawlings, W. H. Vincent, C. E. Vawter, S. S. Lambeth, Jr., C. W. Hardwicke, John P. Branch, T. F. Goode, P. T. Barrow, J. P. Pettyjohn and John W. Bradbury.

The report was unanimously adopted without discussion.

A motion by Rev. James Cannon, Jr., to rescind the resolution passed at the last conference, requiring churches in stead of charges to make out statistical reports, provoked considerable discussion, and was lost.

The bishop designated Rev. J. W. Bledsoe, D. D., and Revs. H. M. Hope and J. E. Deshazo as the committee to nominate the Committees on Conference Relations and Admissions.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb read the following:

"Whereas, The Committee of the Joint Board of Finance, appointed to arrange for the purchase of a home for the superannuated preachers have reported to the board that they deem the plan not practicable; therefore,

"Resolved, That we request the Annual Conference to recall its instructions to the board in that matter and that the board be allowed to invest the money loaned by the conference to Rev. Dr. A. G. Brown, and collected by us from him, amounting to $1,741.08, for the benefit of the claimants on its care according to some plan approved by the board itself."

The reading of the above provoked much adverse discussion and it was finally laid on the table for the present.

When the name of Dr. Saunders was called he gave an interesting account of the work of instruction in the Randolph-Macon Woman's College. He stated that there were 52 day scholars and 162 boarders, and that those students were connected with the following churches: Methodists, 102; Episcopal, 21; Presbyterian, 20; Baptist, 11; Disciples, 5; Lutheran, 1; Roman Catholic, 1; Jewish, 1.

Twenty-three of this number are non-communicants, and a special effort is being made to bring them to Christ. There is a well-organized Sunday-school, and all of the boarding students are members of it. Daily religious services are held every morning and evening. The Bible Study Committee has arranged for a course of devotional readings, and the classes meet weekly.

The Mission Committee has charge of a class for the special study of mission fields. This committee raises from the students each session $40, to be used in educating a Chinese girl in one of our Mission Sunday-schools in China. Much is done for the relief of the poor. The headquarters of the International Young Woman's Association for the Division of Virginia and West Virginia is at the Woman's College. The college on the whole is making most encouraging progress.

Rev. Hampton H. Smith, a local preacher of the Eastern Shore district, was, on the recommendation of his presiding elder, Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins, elected to receive deacon's orders.

Rev. Dr. Pilcher, of the Baptist Church, was introduced and created some merriment in the large audience by saying in regard to Brother Irby's remark in a former discussion that certain people should be furnished with literature on the subject of infant baptism. Dr. Pilcher, who is secretary of the Baptist Sunday-school and Bible board, said that he was in the business circulating just such literature and would be glad to furnish the Conference with just as much as they desired.

Mr. C. P. Ryland, a young Baptist preacher, was also introduced to the Conference. In the course of his remarks he referred to the fact that his twin brother is a Methodist and that he himself is as near a Methodist as one can be not to be a Methodist.

The bishop suggested that the young divine add some Methodist fire to his Baptist water and get up steam.

The bishop then called the class of the first year, as follows: Thomas S. Leitch, student at college, continues in class of first year; William L. Jones not before the committee; Wilnot C. Stone, not before the committee, asks to be discontinued; L. Hunter Early, continued on trial and advanced to the class of the second year; James E. McCulloch, continued at the Vanderbilt University; Daniel T. Merritt, continued on trial and advanced to the class of the second year; Robert L. Busby, continued on trial and advanced to the class of the second year; William L. Murphy, continued on trial and advanced to the class of the second year; J. Franklin Cary,

Question 12 was asked: "What travelling preachers are elected elders?" and the following were returned in answer: Lloyd T Williams, H F B Martin, G E B Smith, Graham H Lambeth, P H Clements, Charles E Blankenship, Alexander L Franklin, John D Hosier, W L Ware, R L Wingfield, and T E Johnson passed in examination of character and were elected to elders' orders, except G E B Smith, J D Hosier, W L Ware, R L Wingfield and T E Johnson, who failed to pass the literary examination, and G H Lambeth, who was not before the committee.

The committee appointed to nominate the Committee on Conference Relations submitted the following names:

Committee on Conference Relations—J W Shackford, N J Pruden, R F Gayle, W G Hammond, W W Lear, J N Lathan, E E Harrell, W H Gregory, G H McFaden, N B Foushee, J W Nicholson.

Committee on Admissions—J T Whitley, Ernest Stevens, H J Brown, W H Riddick, D J Traynham, J T Bosman, W W Royall, A C Berryman, R B Scott, C W Cain, and J L Pribble.

What local preachers are elected deacons? and Hampton H Smith, from the Eastern Shore district, and A B of Randolph-Macon college, was elected.

The following transfers were reported by the bishop: W J Willey, from the North Carolina Conference, W G Hammond, from the Baltimore Conference; Dr. S A Steel, from the Southwest Missouri conference; E J Harper, from Los Angeles; W A Cooper, from the Kentucky conference; F E Shipp, from the Florida conference, J C C Newton, from the Japan Conference.

Then the call proceeded on the question, "Are the ministers blameless in their life and official administration?" and West Richmond, Charlottesville, and Rappahannock districts were heard from.

The Rev Mr Campbell, of the Virginia Bible Society, addressed the conference on the work of the society. More than 16,000 copies of Scripture were circulated during the past year. It made an appropriation for keeping the Word of God at the penitentiary and in all the prisons in the State. Many Sunday-schools were found not having Bibles in them apart from the lesson papers and magazines.

The following were introduced to the Conference: The Rev. Mr Cook, of Kentucky; the Rev Dr Rice, of South Carolina; the Rev L N Nash, of North Carolina; and the Rev G G Smith, of the Georgia conference. Mr Smith expressed his gratification at being present on this occasion and said:

"The last time I was in this pulpit I crawled into it with a gaping hole through my neck, the result of a wound received on the field of battle. My grandfather, Isaac Smith, joined the Conference in 1793, before there was a Virginia conference and before the Methodist church was organized. About 50 miles from this place my great-grandmother, Mary Bayless Howard, was converted under the preaching of LeRoy Cole before 1773, and was the first Methodist in the great Howard family.

"I once had the misfortune to write a book, and when a man writes one book he nearly always writes another. Bishop Wilson is no exception to this rule. Sometimes he gets his book published at a royalty, but sometimes, as in my case, he must publish his own books, for we generally get so deep in debt with the first book that we publish another to get out again, and we can't always be like our friend, Captain Irby, make a fortune out of one book. I have here with me some copies of my 'Boy in Gray, a delightful fellow who was my comrade; and some copies of the life of the greatest men in Methodism, Bishop Pierce and Bishop Asbury, and if they are not good books they are certainly cheap ones. To some of my preacher brethren I have sold books.

"All that have got any money have already bought them, and those who haven't got any money don't want them, so I am dependent on my lay friends for purchases. I have been charged with a good many things in my life to which I plead guilty; one charge was that I talked too much, which I think is probably true.

"I have been charged with being rich; now the fact is, I know the history of my family since 1620, and they have always been poor. I was born poor and have held my own remarkably well. But I am not as poor as you think I am, for I have a comfortable home in Georgia and many things to be thankful for. A cow, some chickens, and a St Bernard dog. But I must sell my books. I borrowed $3 from Lafferty, who always supplies my wants, and I must pay him back. The fact is, it is a groundhog case, so I hope you will come down stairs and let me supply your wants."

At 1:30 the Conference adjourned.

The largest congregation that has assembled in Washington-street M. E. church since the conference met in Petersburg, eight years ago, gathered there tonight to hear the sermon of Rev. Dr. J. J. Tigert, editor of the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review. Many in the audience had to content themselves withstanding room during the service. His text was, "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if you do them." It was a strong, helpful sermon.

A business meeting of the Virginia Conference Brotherhood was held after the conclusion of Dr. Tigert's sermon, with the president, Dr. J. J. Lafferty, in the chair.

Rev. W. P. Wright, secretary and treasurer of the Brotherhood, reported that eight deaths had occurred since the meeting of the Brotherhood at the Portsmouth conference, as follows: Revs W R Smitheys, George E Booker, W A Robinson, W D Reed, J K Clayton, R N Sledd, John McClellan and J A Riddick.

The total amounts received and paid out so far on the above deaths was over $6,000, and with other assessments yet to come in, the amount would be swelled to about $10,000, which would give to the heirs of each beneficiary over $1,000. He reported the total receipts this year, including the amount on hand last year of $592.54, to be $6,565.80. He reported the condition of the Brotherhood as highly encouraging, both in the prompt payment of assessments and the addition of beneficiary and non-beneficiary members.

It was decided to hold the anniversary of the Brotherhood at 7:30 o'clock Saturday night, when a number of addresses from prominent members will be made and the annual election of officers will take place.

THIRD DAY.

Conference assembled at 9:30, Bishop Wilson presiding. Devotional services were conducted by Dr. Bledsoe, chaplain of the Miller Institute, Albemarle county.

The second question, "Who remain on trial?" was called. The committee reported that R H Marks, W R Evans, J D Langley, and Francis B McSparran had passed satisfactory examinations in character and studies. They were advanced to the class of the third year.

Frank Burruss, J C Harvey, William E Moore, John T Sewell, and Edward Brooks passed in the examination of character, but not in studies, and were continued on trial in the second year.

Rev. B F Lipscomb, chairman of the Joint Board of Finance, presented the following question of law to be decided by the Bishop:

"When a travelling preacher dies in his active work, do the claims of the widow and orphan upon the conference fund begin from the time of the preacher's death, or from the next session of the conference?"

The bishop replied that the question had already been decided. It begins at the time of the death of the minister.

Question: "Who are admitted on trial?" was called, and John W Lillaston, L C Moore, J K Halloman, T W Ogden, W A Jeffries, R B Lumpkin and H H Smith having passed the necessary examination before the committee, and their characters being approved, they were admitted into the conference on trial.

The following paper, offered at Thursday's session, was, on motion, taken from the table:

"The Joint Board of Finance reported that in its opinion it was not advisable to undertake to provide homes for superannuated ministers at this time, and asked that the money which was in the hands of Rev. A. G. Brown, D. D., to be used for colportage, and which by action of the last conference was paid over to the board to be used by said board to purchase homes for superannuated preachers, be invested and the interest used to aid our superannuated preachers, their widows and orphans.

There was considerable opposition to the resolution, and Rev. J. T. Mastin offered the following substitute, which was adopted by a decided majority:

"Resolved, That the amount of $1,741.08, which was raised for colportage purposes, and which is now in the hands of the Joint Board of Finance, shall be invested by said board in reliable securities and the annual interest of same be reported to the conference, to be used for the distribution of literature among our people."

The order of the day—the report of the Board of Education—was announced.

Rev. James Cannon, Jr., read the secretary's report, showing that $30,281.37 had already been secured on the Twentieth Century Thanksgiving Fund, although only a very partial canvass had been made.

The following is a tabulated report of the contributions to the Twentieth Century Fund by districts:

Richmond district,	$ 2 162 00
West Richmond district,	2 394 00
Rappahannock district,	195 00
Charlottesville district,	1 352 00
Lynchburg district,	6 899 50
Danville district,	1 368 00
Farmville district,	9 196 35
Petersburg district,	514 00
Portsmouth district,	1 285 00
Norfolk district,	1 593 00
Eastern Shore district,	688 00

$27 636 85

The subscription from other sources brings the amount to the statement in the body of the report, $30,281.37.

Rev. A. Coke Smith, president of the Board of Education, followed with a report, setting forth the grounds of the appeal for this thank offering. The report spoke of the blessings of God upon the church in the South, showing that here Methodist began on this continent, and that here it had found its most congenial soil. Appeal was made to the preachers to lead the people with wisdom and zeal and to keep the Southern Methodist church in line with the other branches of Methodism throughout the world.

The report closed with the following resolutions, which were adopted:

"Resolved, That a subscription be now taken up under the terms of the action of the General Conference, said subscriptions to include all previous subscriptions made by the members of the conference.

"2. That it be made the duty of the preachers in charge of every station, circuit and mission in the conference to present this cause to his charge in harmony and co-operation with the plans of the Board of Education, and to seek to secure a thank offering from every member.

"3. That the presiding elder of each district, together with two preachers and two laymen, to be nominated by the Board of Education, in arranging the canvass of the districts.

"4. That the publishers of the Richmond Christian Advocate, the organ of the conference, be requested to give one page of the Advocate to the work of the Twentieth Century Fund, the

"5. That the Board of Education be instructed to turn over to the treasurer of the Board of Missions five per cent. of the cash collections on all subscriptions made from the time of the passage of resolution, to be used for the educational work of the church in the foreign fields."

Rev. W. G. Starr, D. D., president of the Randolph-Macon College, was introduced to the conference. He delivered an address on the great importance of a thorough christian education. His remarks were punctuated with brilliant flashes of wit and humor.

Dr. W. W. Smith, chancellor of the Randolph-Macon System of Education, followed in an able address, replete with valuable information and wise suggestions. He said that the Twentieth Century Fund was already an assured success.

A subscription was called for from the members of the conference, and about $18,000 was subscribed in sums ranging from $10 to $1,000 by the preachers.

Rev. W. E. Edwards, D. D., Professor in Randolph-Macon College, preached an able sermon to an overflowing congregation at Washington-street church tonight. Dr. Edwards was former pastor of this church and is greatly esteemed in Petersburg, the scene of his boyhood days, and of his father's early ministerial labors.

A mass meeting in the interest of the Epworth Leagues of the Conference was held at Market-street church last night, the building being filled beyond its seating capacity. Addresses were delivered by Drs. Young and W. G. Starr. Both speeches were characteristic of the speakers, eloquent and instructive.

The anniversary of the Virginia Conference Brotherhood was held in Washington-street church, Dr. J. J. Lafferty, president, in the chair. The meeting was opened with devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. H. E. Johnson, D. D., of Cumberland-street, Norfolk. The secretary and treasurer, Rev. W. P. Wright, read his report. It stated that the Brotherhood was organized in 1881; that 64 deaths had occurred since that time, and that benefits had been paid to 64 beneficiaries. Eight members had died since the last meeting, and benefits had been paid as follows to their beneficiaries:

Deaths.	Benefits.
W. R. Smithey, ———	$931 67
G. E. Booker, ———	765 38
W. A. Robinson, ———	727 37
D. W. Reed, ———	742 38
J. K. Clayton, ———	748 37
R. N. Sledd, ———	737 38
Jno. McClellan, ———	725 37
J. A. Riddick, ———	682 38

$6,660 30

There is $150 yet in hand to be divided pro rata between the beneficiaries, which will swell the total to $6,210.30. The president was requested to appoint a committee of three members to present to the Brotherhood at its next meeting some plan by which those unable to pay each assessment when it falls due may be carried until the meeting of the next conference.

On motion of R. A. Compton, the secretary was requested to publish in the conference minutes, under his own signature, the names of those who have died, with the amounts paid their beneficiaries.

Several motions were offered providing plans for the payments of the assessments of delinquent members, but failed to pass.

Dr. Johnson suggested that a collection be now taken up to meet the sixteen unpaid assessments, amounting to $48, and in a short time raised in cash $51.87.

The auditing committee, through its chairman, Rev. James O. Moss, reported the books and accounts of the secretary and treasurer to be correct.

The secretary was instructed to print the names of all members who have died since the organization of the Brotherhood in the constitution.

Five hundred copies of the constitution were ordered printed for distribution among the members.

The following officers were elected:

President—Dr. J. J. Lafferty.

Vice President—Rev. R. A. Compton.

Secretary and Treasurer—Rev. W. P. Wright.

Assistant Secretary—Rev. W. W. Royall, D. D. Adjourned.

FOURTH DAY.

Conference convened in the fourth day's session at 9:30 o'clock this morning, Bishop Wilson in the chair. Religious services were conducted by Rev. H. E. Johnson, D. D.

On motion of Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, the hour of 7:30 p. m., Tuesday, was fixed for the service in commemoration of the ministers who have died since the meeting of the last Conference. Dr. Lambeth moved that the service consist of singing, prayer and reading of memoirs, with no remarks. Adopted.

The report on "Education, which was read Friday and partially acted upon was taken up and adopted.

Rev. J. T. Mastin, from the committee, read the report from the Colportage Board. It begins by saying, "With profound sorrow your Board reports the extreme illness of our Colporter, Rev. A. G. Brown, D. D. He lies helpless by the gates of death. There, with perfect assurance of his acceptance with God, he waits to enter into eternal rest. He was a tower of strength among us. His business capacity and devotion to the work have given us one of the best depositories in Southern Methodism and he has put us in a position to inaugurate a system of colportage which will enable us to put our literature into the homes of all our people."

The report further says: "The colportage system of today resembles only in name the system of ten years ago. Only a decade has passed since, at a conference held in Richmond, a motion was adopted that your present agent be recommended to the presiding bishop for appointment to the colportage agency. He consented to serve the board with the distinct understanding that it should not interfere with his work in the regular itinerant ministry (as was the case with the previous agent). This was the beginning of the present system. To appreciate the real state of development, from a financial standpoint, that the colportage work has experienced during these ten years, your attention is called to a few items of the report of 1888-9:

Funds contributed and raised for the work,	$3 869 18
Salary and travelling expenses of agents,	1 435 50
Volume of business	3 089 76

From the above statistics the following facts are obtained: To do the work that the depository was established to do it required an expenditure of $1,435.50 for running expenses, exclusive of office expenses. This amount and more was raised in our churches for the use of the board in the pursuit of its good work. In the year 1889 the new plan of colportage was inaugurated and the same year your present agent was selected to attend to its affairs. It differed mainly from the old plan in that no salary or expense was to be allowed the agent and no money was to be contributed for maintenance. The capital upon which the business was to be conducted was much less than that of the previous year, and was composed of the following:

Books,	$ 734 31
Cash,	1 190 35

Total capital, $1 924 66

This amount was inefficient to conduct a credit business, as the Sunday-school Literature Department of the Publishing House is conducted on a cash basis, the same policy was found necessary to be pursued with the patrons of the depository. This rule, however, has not been strictly enforced. Upon a capital of $3,111.10 the depository has sold books and Sunday-school literature to the amount of $8,621.19. An average monthly payment of 519.10 has been made by the depository to the publishers with whom it deals, and of this amount $496.12 has been paid to Messrs. Barbee and Smith for goods gotten from them.

It appears that the amount due Dr. Brown is as follows:

For books which went into his hands	$ 734 31
For cash at different times from different sources,	1 190 35
	$1 924 66

The committee agreed, on account of the unsalable condition of many of the books, a deduction of twenty five per cent should be made, which amounts to $183 58, leaving $1,741 08 due by Dr. Brown, which Dr. Brown agrees to pay in money in the near future, not later than the next session of the Virginia Annual Conference.

The following preamble and resolutions were offered by the committee, was added to the report and the paper and then adopted:

"Whereas, it appears that the law of our church does not provide for a board colportage; therefore,

"Resolved, That the Board of Colportage of the Virginia Conference be and the same is hereby dissolved.

"2. That a committee of three be appointed, said committee to consider and report what action, if any, it is expedient for this conference to take to aid the book agents in putting our literature in the homes of our own people."

Rev. Dr. Tigert, editor of the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review; Rev. Dr. Pritellett, missionary secretary of the Board of Missions, M. E. Church, South, and Rev. Dr. S. A. Steel, recently transferred to the Virginia Conference, were introduced to the body.

The bishop called question IV., "Who are admitted into full connection?" and the following were reported as having passed satisfactory characters and examinations, were admitted into full connection and elected to Deacons Orders: R. H. Mailes, W. R. Evans, Joseph D. Landey, F. B. McSparran and R. C. Garland.

The young ministers were called before the bishop, who, before propounding the usual questions necessary to their ordination, delivered an earnest and impressive address to them. They gave the bishop close attention.

Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins presented a resolution of sympathy for Rev. A. G. Brown, D. D., in his illness, and also for his family. It was unanimously adopted.

LESSON X, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 3.

Text of the Lesson, Neh. xiii. 15-22.
Memory Verses, 15-17—Golden Text,
Ex. xx. 8—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

It would seem that Nehemiah, after being 12 years at Jerusalem (compare chapters ii, 1, and xiii, 6), returned to Babylon, and during his absence from the holy city much evil was wrought by the enemies of the Lord. The rulers forsok the house of God, Tobiah was permitted to occupy a chamber therein, the Jews intermarried with Ashdod, Ammon and Moab, and the Sabbath day became greatly desecrated (verses 4, 5, 11, 23). Our lesson today has special reference to the last of these.

15, 16. The ordinary work of farm and vineyard and the buying and selling of fish and other victuals and all manner of ware were common events in Jerusalem on God's holy day, notwithstanding that Jehovah had said, "Ye shall keep my Sabbaths and reverence my sanctuary; I am the Lord" (Lev. xix, 30; xxvi, 2), and those who read the law knew that one reason for the long captivity through which they had just passed was their disobedience in the matter of the Sabbath (Lev. xxvi, 43; II Chron. xxxvi, 21). When God gave the Ten Commandments from Mount Sinai from the midst of the fire, the people answered, "All that the Lord hath said will we do and be obedient" (Ex. xxiv, 3, 7), but Moses had not been absent six weeks from them before they are seen worshipping a golden calf (Ex. xxxii, 4, 8). See proof upon proof that the carnal mind is enmity against God, that it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be (Rom. viii, 7). In the lesson record both people of Judah and men of Tyre took part in the Sabbath breaking, and today both Jews and Gentiles seem to vie with each other in committing this same sin. Every year sees an increasing amount of business and amusement on the Sabbath day, and it has actually come to this: There are ministers in so called evangelical pulpits who think it no harm to indulge in recreation on the Sabbath afternoon and teach the people so. The men of Tyre would not have continued to bring their wares to Jerusalem on the Sabbath if the men of Judah, God's professed people, had refused to buy on that day. How much sin the professed people of God are responsible for in this world today God only knows. There is one thing that each individual believer can do, and that is see that one's own life is right before God in this matter of keeping holy God's Sabbath day, for every life made right will help to right others.

17, 18. "Then I contended with the nobles of Judah." He contended with them about forsaking the house of God (verse 11) and about breaking the Sabbath, reminding them of the evils that had come upon city and people because of former sins. When it came to the matter of strange wives, he not only contended with them, but cursed them and smote them and made them take an oath before God that they would stop this sin (verse 25). When he found Tobiah occupying a chamber in the house of God, he simply cast forth his household stuff and cleansed the chamber. He did not deal with the son-in-law of that man who chased him from him, and thus he cleansed the people from all strangers (verses 3, 9, 28, 36). He was God's witness, a comfort to Jehovah, and he dealt with sin with a firm hand. Some Nehemiahs are needed today.

19. "I commanded that the gates should be shut and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath." Thus he took definite and very decided action and appointed some of his own servants to see that his orders were carried out. I do not know any better, more full or more simple instructions as to Sabbath keeping than those set forth in Isa. lviii, 13, 14, which give no permission for our own words or ways or pleasure, but require the day to be wholly given up to God, assuring us that if we do this then we shall delight ourselves in the Lord. In Ps. xxxvii, 4, it is written, "Delight thyself in the Lord and He shall give thee the desire of thine heart."

20. "So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice." If the servants of Christ were always as persevering as the servants of the devil, there might be more accomplished for our blessed Lord. If believers were fully yielded to Christ and zealous only for His glory, He might accomplish more through them. When in Calcutta two years ago, I heard of an old lady who once lived there who always saw something good in every one. Some children one day asked her if she ever saw anything good in the devil. She replied, "Well, children, he is very persevering." If we were as persevering for the good as he is for the evil, it would be well.

21. "From that time forth came they no more on the Sabbath." He testified against them and threatened to lay hands on them if they came again, and that stopped them. If a wrong thing comes under our notice that we have the power to stop or at least testify against it, and we do nothing or say nothing, our silence may make us partaker of the evil. The Spirit through John says that if any one comes bringing not the doctrine of Christ and another should give him greeting, that one becomes partaker of the evil doctrine (II John ix, 11). Nehemiah was not a partner in Sabbath breaking.

22. "And I commanded the Levites that they should cleanse themselves and that they should come and keep the gates to sanctify the Sabbath day." Only the clean can help to make clean. Those who bear the vessels of the Lord must be clean. In the ordinance of the red heifer it required a clean person both to gather up the ashes and to use them in sprinkling the unclean. In II Cor. vi, 14, to vii, 1, if we would know what it means to be sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty and to have God as our Father we are told that we must cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. Nehemiah looks to God alone for his reward and says, "Remember me, O my God." See also verses 14, 31. Unlike former governors, he did not take from the people that which he might have taken, but from his own means he cared for many (chapter v, 14-19). He might have said with Paul, "I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you," and he might have added, "Forgive me this wrong." (II Cor. xi, 9; xii, 13.) We may rest assured that no labor for God is in vain or shall be unrewarded (I Cor. xv, 58; Mark ix, 41).

3, "Until He Come"—Text,
I Cor. xi, 23-28.

"As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye proclaim the Lord's death till He come."

"The great memorial" we may well call the Lord's supper. Nelson's monument in Trafalgar square, London, does not so fittingly commemorate the deeds of that great commander and the debt of the British nation to him as this simple service shows the gift of God in Christ and our constant dependence upon Him.

From earliest times men have devised many schemes to perpetuate their own names and the fame of their achievements. Inscriptions and pictures on rocky cliffs, tablets of stone, clay and metal, buildings, statues, columns, pyramids, books and pictures, all are charged with the same purpose of transmitting to coming generations the story of the former times. A few survive the hatred of men and natural decay. The most part perish and are forgotten.

It is well it is so, for few have anything to tell of value to the race. The Christ story is worthy to be remembered. It has value for every one of humankind. Its importance is vital for well being to all on earth and all who shall come after these and for all ages in all changes and through all worlds. The message of redemption, the offer of salvation and eternal life, needs an adequate memorial. No writings or material constructions are sufficient to preserve and propagate it. What ceremonial can be devised of universal fitness for all men at all times and in all places and circumstances?

The Christian meal is an entirely appropriate and adequate memorial of the work of Jesus Christ on earth. All must eat and drink frequently to sustain bodily life. In doing so there is the active use of one's own powers in taking the food which only God could cause to grow. We receive what we cannot produce. We appropriate and use what no one could force upon us. So we grow and thrive. In spiritual life it is similar. God provides all gifts and graces ready for use, but all are valueless and dead until we appropriate and use and make them our own. The bread of life must be fed upon to produce life in us. In trusting and loving service we feed upon the Spirit of God as truly as in eating we feed on material provisions. This is fellowship with God.

Fellowship with men is another element in the ordinary meal. The family sits at the same table, and all eat of the same food to be strengthened for their common work. Their interests are united. So in the Eucharist the whole family of Christ meets to receive the same spirit and be fitted for united work. Christ, though invisible, is truly pres-

STRENGTHENING THE WORKER'S HANDS.

WELL, sir, it's remarkable," said the Man-Who's-a-Christian-on-Sunday, "how much we business men are pestered and annoyed by solicitors for this thing and that thing in the name of the church or some charitable object. It's really too bad the way they keep after us. I pay for my pew in the church without a whimper, and I've got one of the highest priced ones, too, and I give a little to the missionary societies, so the preacher won't have to preach so many sermons on the subject, but what I give there doesn't seem to make a bit of difference. There's always some one running in here and bothering me during the week to give to something else. It's too bad!"

"Yes," said Uncle Bez, with a dry little smile, "it's a pity about you. You've prospered in business, you've built yourself a comfortable home, you have your sons and daughters settled down in life, and now you begrudge the little you are asked to give now and then to help carry on the Lord's business, to help build up the Lord's houses, to help take care of the souls of the Lord's children."

"But I do give," said the Man-Who's-a-Christian-on-Sunday. "I never whimper about what I give to my own church. It's these extra demands that weary me."

"No," replied Uncle Bez, "but what you give to 'your own church,' doesn't really count for a great deal. It is as you say, 'your own church.' You're one of the owners of the property. You want a nice building that you can be proud of, a nice pew in which you will be comfortable, and you're willing to pay for them. You like to say that such and such a church on Fashion street is 'your church,' don't you? I'm not saying that you'd be excused if you didn't contribute to the support of the church in which you worship; I'm only pointing out that you've no right to expect that contribution to relieve you from helping to carry on God's work elsewhere."

"A Christian," Uncle Bez went on, "is supposed to be chiefly concerned in promoting God's Kingdom. We hear a good deal in these days about 'promoters'; they have syndicated about everything under the sun; they have organized everything into a trust excepting fresh air and sunlight, and they've even shut off the supply of those from some of the women and babies they keep in back alleys and dirty tenements. Well, it's time some of us church people are doing a little 'promoting,' too. The church ought to be a gigantic trust embodying every known method of promoting the cause of Righteousness and of building up God's kingdom. I say that ought to be the chief end and aim of every Christian's life. No, no, I don't mean that we all ought to be preachers; I don't mean that every man ought to turn from his plow and his forge, his shop and his office and go tramping about the country or sailing across the seas in search of heathen to convert. Not at all. You remember when Cyrus, king of Persia, issued a proclamation for the rebuilding of the temple at Jerusalem, he didn't send back the whole people to do the work, but called for volunteers. And all 'whose spirit God had raised' went up to Jerusalem to build the house of the Lord. Well, those who didn't go—what did they do? They strengthened their hands with gold and silver and goods and much or little we can do our share in gold and silver and goods to strengthen the hands of them that go up to build. And I think we are called to do this, besides the free-will offering that we always make. We can't lay back and wait for the millionaires to do it, either."

"And you know," Uncle Bez continued, "you and I don't always know just how God is working. He uses many means of advancing His cause. We may not be able to see that Zerubbabel is working in just the way that we should work; we may not fully agree with some of the things that the children of Shephatiah do; we may not just approve of all the methods of work employed by this or that division of the army that goes up to build the house of the Lord, but, before we begin to condemn and to pull down their hands, and to have them called off. Let us be sure that we know enough about it to be qualified to judge. It was they whose 'spirit God had raised' who went up to Jerusalem. Let us be sure that we do not oppose those whose spirit God raises. We ought to be willing to trust the great Overseer to see that no harm comes to the structure; We can rest assured that He will not allow His kingdom to be injured. Let us leave some things with God, and do our part, as best we can, in strengthen-beasts and precious things, besides, mark you, my brother, besides all the free-will offering. Now then, Cyrus was a heathen king of a heathen nation, but he gave God's people a chance to build the Lord's house. Today, the world is ready and willing to give the church a chance. There was never so little real resistance to God's cause from governments of the world, as there is today. Cyrus has given us the chance, my brother. You and I can't do active missionary work. You can't visit the slums, you can't go to Asia or Africa; God never called either of us to do that, but He has given us all something—some of us much, some of us little—but be it ing the hands of those whom He has moved to do His work."

"Well," said the Man-Who's-a-Christian-on-Sunday, "I suppose you're right. How much do you think I ought to give to that mission down in the slums?"

FIVE MINUTE SERMONS

XLVI. RAISING THE DEAD

IF the pastor had consulted either his collar or his comfort, he would have found a cool spot and have stayed at home. As it was, when he returned from his round of calls, the one was wilted, and the other much disturbed. He threw himself into his chair, saying: "I am sick to death of this kind of thing. I just wish I was working at a trade!"

"What's the trouble, John?" asked his wife, his never-failing comforter.

"Oh, it's nothing new, my dear. My first call this afternoon took me down to Mrs. Hardly's. She was mad because I failed to shake hands with her one Sunday; as near as I could tell, it was when I was trying to see some converts. And she has laid it up against me that I have not shaken hands with her since, although she makes a point of going out at the other door.

Then I went to Bro. Bailey, found him in his shop. He had been reading an article on Theosophy, in the local paper. He had allowed that scrap, hashed up by some ignorant scribbler to upset all the patient teaching of the past five years, and he said that he had about made up his mind that we were all wrong.

"Then the next call was on Mrs. Flint, but she only just opened the door to me and told me that she wanted nothing to do with a church that was always dunning people for money. On my way home, I saw the treasurer, and he told me that he had sent a quarterly statement to Mrs. Flint, showing that she had pledged 25 cents a week, and had paid 35 cents in the three months. He said, too, that Mrs. Hardly had withdrawn her subscription, and that there had been quite a falling off in receipts since I preached that sermon on worldly amusements. He thought I ought not to offend our best supporters."

"Well, John, this is no new or strange thing. In the Master's service we don't expect much better treatment than He had."

"I know it, but I never felt just as I do today. I walked home with Harry Danner: I met him just as he was picking up his kit of tools and leaving the house he has been building for Dr. Purdy. He was so pleased to think that his job was finished, and he stopped several times to view it from different points. Then he told me that the doctor had been down and had paid him just as he put the last stroke on the house. It all made me wish that I was working at my old trade. I had something to show then for my labor; now, it's hard to see that anything has been accomplished. I worked ten hours a day then, for regular wages; now, I work sixteen and am made to feel that I am an object of charity. After all, what does all my work here amount to?"

"There, there, hush, my boy, you are now dark night. He found himself at the graveyard and, suddenly, there was a Shining One at his side, who said, "Raise the dead."

"I cannot," he answered.

"Do you desire to see them raised? If you do, then speak but the word from your heart, and it shall be done."

Then he cried, with the fervor of a great longing, and filled with the grandeur of such a possibility, "Oh, all ye that have lain in the dust so long, ye severed parents and children and lovers, ye who would fain live life again, ye who died without hope, all ye who are sleeping the eternal sleep of death, arise, arise!"

And, lo, the ground was heaving like the sea, and soon the whole enclosure was filled with men and women, parted friends re-united, and many who were praising the power that gave them the opportunity of living another and a new life.

The pastor, still thinking of his afternoon's experience, said: "This is a work indeed! Oh, that God would let me do something like this all the time!"

"THERE WAS A SHINING ONE AT HIS SIDE WHO SAID, 'RAISE THE DEAD!'"

tired. I will draw down the shades, and you must rest awhile."

Whether it was the weariness from his walk or the cool touch of that magic hand on his forehead, he does not know, but the pastor fell asleep. Yet he knew it not. He thought that he lay there awhile, thinking still of his wasted efforts and then he got up and walked out into the cool air of the

And that One answered: "Have you forgotten Tom Seager and Harry Burns and Nancy Connor and scores of others in Somno, who were dead in trespasses and in sins, but who now live in Christ? Do you not preach the life-giving word to them? What of those young ladies on last Sunday evening? Go tell the dead to come."

TOBACCO IN ITS RELATION TO ALCOHOL

Dr. J. H. Kellogg in Modern Medicine

THE Smoker finds himself suffering from dryness of the throat, thirst, general depression of spirits, perhaps slight giddiness, and some cerebral anemia. It requires but a single experiment to convince him that beer, wine or whisky, or alcohol in some form affords very prompt relief from these distressing symptoms, hence the very natural association of cigars with wine or beer. * * * Has not the time fully arrived when those who recognize in alcohol a race enemy and one of the most potent causes of race deterioration, which at the present time is becoming so painfully evident, should also recognize in tobacco the strongest and most active ally of alcohol?

ent in spirit to each one who sincerely looks for Him.

It is also a prophecy of the Lord's return. He has gone to prepare a place and has promised to return and receive His church unto Himself. He is preparing a home for His bride. The church is preparing herself for His coming and her new home. The Lord's supper keeps ever in memory the mutual pledge of fidelity until His return and gives inward grace and love to endure to the end.

Bishop Beverly Waugh.

His life of service covered the first half of the century. He was born in Virginia in 1789 and died in the city of Baltimore in 1858. He was buried in Mount Olivet cemetery, Baltimore, near Bishops Asbury, George and Emory. He was converted at 15 years of age and at 20 entered conference. He filled some of the most important charges in Baltimore conference. He was afterward made book agent at New York and in 1836 was elected bishop. On the death of Bishop Hedding in 1852 he became senior bishop. He was for 49 years abundant in labors. His travels before the age of railroads were very extensive, and in 22 years of service he was never absent from one of his conference sessions as bishop. His death was sudden, from an affection of the heart. He was dignified, simple in manner, kind hearted and of sweet disposition.

Select the Best.

It is a pleasing perplexity which comes each year with the Christmas holidays, this selecting presents for the loved ones. What memories of the past and plannings for the future! What consultations and secrecy! What making and buying! We wish to give each one the best and most appropriate present possible.

So should it be with our gifts to Christ. Shall we give less thought to Him and His claims than to these lesser friends and their pleasure? Give Him your best—the best moments of the day in heart devotion, the best words and smiles and songs and deeds. Select with greatest care your daily gifts for Him, for He has given you heaven's best.

FIGHTING ALCOHOL.

WAR AGAINST RUM SPREADING OVER EUROPE.

Everywhere Recognized That in the Race of Life Those Who Drink Intoxicants Fall to the Rear—influence on Surgery.

Archbishop Ireland, addressing the Catholic Total Abstinence union at Chicago, spoke as follows:

"It is a delight for me to meet my fellow soldiers in the great battle against the vice of intemperance. God bless this union! God bless its workers, old and young! Angels alone could portray the good that has been accomplished. One of the most honorable records in the history of the Catholic church since the year 1872 is that which is written in the life and work of your union. I do not know of any movement during those 27 years that has done more honor to the Catholic people of the United States than your own association.

"During my travels through Europe recently I have discovered that the war against alcohol is spreading through every country on that continent. There is not a single country in Europe today that does not have its annual congress of antialcoholic workers, and these congresses are made up of the best physicians and the leading thinkers of each and every country. They understand that alcohol poisons the bladder. A remarkable surgeon of Brussels told me that surgery is set at naught, with all its discoveries and all its advances, by the use of alcohol; that when a subject is brought to him for the exercise of his surgical skill the first thing he does is to examine the bladder, and if he finds any sign of alcohol in it, as he unfortunately does in 75 per cent of the cases, then he feels that his skill has met an almost insuperable obstacle.

"It is recognized everywhere that in the race of life those who use alcohol fall in the rear. They have not that quick intelligence, they have not that precision of muscular power, they have not that long life, that those who do not use alcoholic liquors have.

"I was permitted to meet here and there throughout Europe men and women in every position in life, who said: 'No, we do not take wine. Our physician has told us we should not, and we feel better without it.' And, thank the Lord—I say this for my own satisfaction and for your pleasure—wherever I went, in the presence of persons the highest and the lowest, in palaces and courts and everywhere, I said, 'I have taken the pledge, and I am a teetotaler.' And I received honor for it that would not otherwise have come to me, because men said: 'That man means to do something. He is in earnest, and he can practice a little self denial for it.' It was mighty little I thought of myself, and yet they said it. What was said of me will be said of all of you.

"Every one who meets you and hears you say, 'I have taken the pledge,' will say of you, 'That is a man (or woman) that is capable of self denial. He (or she) has an interest in humanity.' Words are easy, and words are cheap, and words tell very little. You might go around your villages and parishes and talk from midnight to midday against intemperance, and it is a question whether people will believe you are sincere or not, but just say, 'I have taken the pledge,' and the electricity is infused into your words, and the people say, 'He is in earnest.' Do something. Do not lose your time merely talking. Put some act in with your talk, and the act will give authority to the talk that it would not otherwise have had, and you will have the blessing of God in time and in eternity.

"Total abstinence strengthens the body. Just look at our venerable friend, Mgr. Besonies. I read this morning that he is 84 years of age. Ninety-five per cent of the men who have reached 84 could not get out of their chairs, and yet here is a man who has come from Indianapolis to Chicago and staid with you during your convention. What is the explanation? Total abstinence. Now, if you want to see a green old age and be strong in that old age, keep the pledge. It aids you in your health, it aids you in your self respect, it adds to your honor and does good to your soul.

"We are, after all, Christian soldiers, made to fight for God, to fight in order to gain a reward through eternity, and you might ask me, What shall we do? I know men say I will do this charity or that. I remark that they usually select a charity that does not demand any sacrifice or, if it does, merely the sacrifice of a few dollars. And it is very easy to make the sacrifice of a few dollars, but the sacrifice that God wants, the sacrifice the making of which speaks of nobility of character, is the sacrifice of one's own self. Yet you are called to give it in keeping this pledge.

"Go forth from this convention more devoted than ever to the holy cause of Catholic total abstinence in America, and you have the blessings of the earth and the blessings of heaven upon you."

New York's Tea Saloon.

The United States Church Army has established at 76 Allen street, New York, the former location of a famous dive, a "tea saloon." This is, it is announced, the first of a large number of similar places to be opened in an effort to counteract the evil of the drink traffic. Colonel H. H. Hadley is at the head of the work and is supported by many influential public men. As an adjunct to the "saloon" there is a savings bank feature, and accounts will be opened for any and all who wish to save the difference between the cost of tea and the money that they have been spending for beer.—New Voice.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

LESSON IX, FOURTH QUARTER, INTER
NATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 26.

Text of the Lesson, Prov. xxiii, 29-35—Memory Verses, 29-32—Golden Text, Prov. xx, 1—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

29. "Who hath wee?" The world is full of sorrow because of sin, but the sorrows are greatly increased by strong drink and opium. I have often wondered why the last great promise in the Old Testament, that the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, should be immediately followed by the words, "Wee unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him (Hab. ii, 14-15), unless it be that this is one of the greatest hindrances to the coming of the kingdom. Among the six woes of Isa. v two refer to those who are given to wine or strong drink (verses 11, 22), and it is added, "They regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of His hands; they have despised the word of the Holy One of Israel." The only deliverance is found in Him who allowed the sins of the world to be laid upon Him, who became sin for us, wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities (1 John ii, 2; II Cor. v, 21; Isa. liii, 5, 6). His wounds were indeed without cause, that our wounds with cause might be healed. Let the drunkard and the opium fiend and every sinner see Him suffering for their sins, and His love will break the hard heart.

30. "They that tarry long at the wine." Every form and phase of self indulgence, whether in eating or drinking or business or pleasure, whatever makes self and self interest the center rather than Christ and His interests, are on the same line as those who tarry long at the wine. When those who are given to any form of intemperance (lack of self control) seek to rescue others from their phase of intemperance, the work might be more successful if Math. vii, 1-5, were well considered and acted upon. The beam in one's own eye is a great hindrance to getting the mote out of a neighbor's eye. Christ at the center is the only remedy for a self centered life. His love is better than wine (Song i, 2). He has saved some of the worst, and He is able to save to the uttermost and evermore all who come unto God by Him (Heb. vii, 25). See in I Cor. vi, 10, 11, some samples of those who have been saved and who therefore can be saved. Let those who can truly say, "The Son of God loved me and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii, 20) tell others of Him.

31. "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red." If the woman had refused to look upon the tree concerning the fruit of which the Lord had said "Thou shalt not eat of it," she would not have received such perverted vision as to make her think that the fruit of the tree was good for food, pleasant to the eyes and a tree to be desired to make one wise (Gen. ii, 17; iii, 6).

32. "At the last it biteth like a serpent." There are ways the end of which is heaviness and death, and there is a way the end of which is peace and glory (Prov. xiv, 12, 13; Ps. xxxvii, 37, 38; Math. vii, 13, 14). The reaping shall be life everlasting or corruption, peace or the whirlwind (Gal. vi, 8; Hos. viii, 7). Since it is certain that God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or evil (Eccl. xii, 14), how blinded by our great enemy must all those be who, like Esau, regard not the future because of some present gratification. What a contrast is seen in Moses, who for the sake of the future renounced all the pleasures of sin (Heb. xi, 24-26).

33. "Thine eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things." See Samson and Delilah (Judg. xvi, 1, 19) and consider Samson's strength when he was a Nazirite, wholly for God, and his helplessness and suffering when he allowed this love to come between him and God. The Church, the Body and Bride of Christ, is spoken of as a chaste virgin (II Cor. xi, 2) and as a woman arrayed in fine linen, clean and white (Rev. xix, 8), but the apostate church is compared to a woman on a scarlet colored beast, arrayed in purple and scarlet, decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness. Believers who are asleep, as Samson or Jonah or Simon Peter, are liable to see and to say strange things.

34. "Yea, thou shalt be as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea or as he that lieth upon the top of a mast." Either of these situations are suggestive of the words of David to Jonathan when Saul sought his life. "Truly as the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death." One is apt to think of this when out at sea. I often thought of it in passing over the 20,000 miles of ocean last year and the 19,000 of the year before, as well as on former ocean voyages, but it is equally true in traveling by rail or in the quiet everyday life at home. We know not what shall be on the morrow, therefore it becomes us to say, if the Lord will, we shall live and do this or that (Jas. iv, 14, 15). A saved person may well go on in perfect peace, for with the assurance of sins forgiven, that to die is gain, and to be with Christ is very far better, the step that would usher him into the presence of the Lord is not to be dreaded (Isa. xliii, 25; Phil. i, 21, 23; II Cor. v, 8). But how an unsaved person, knowing that the next step may be out of this world, and that means torment and cut off from God forever, can go on at all in an unsaved state is not easily understood except we remember that the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not (II Cor. iv, 4).

35. "When shall I awake? I will seek it yet again." The insatiable flesh that can never get enough says, "We will fill ourselves with strong drink, and tomorrow shall be as this day and much more abundant" (Isa. lvi, 11, 12). They neither feel nor see the hand of the Lord stretched out in mercy to them; they regard not His chastenings nor heed His entreaties. If they do well a little while, they soon turn, like the dog to his vomit and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire (II Pet. ii, 22). This makes us think of another, ii, 22, in Isaiah, where the vanity of man, his utter nothingness apart from God, is strikingly stated. So full is the natural man of sin that, "though thou shouldst bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle yet will not his foolishness depart from him." (Prov. xxvii, 22.) If only he would allow the Lord to awaken him and show him his danger and the only remedy that he might seek the Lord and his strength.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov.
26, "Our Return For the Lord's Benefits"—Text, Ps. cxvi, 12-19.

"What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me?"

If we received only what we earn and deserve, how much less most of us would get than we now have! It doesn't take long thinking, if one is honest with himself, to become convinced that we all have much to be thankful for. We do not need to compare our lot with those more highly favored or less happily circumstanced than ourselves to get a just estimate of our obligations to gratitude. A little consideration of our comparative inefficiency and helplessness by ourselves and the assistance we receive from others and the conditions by which we are surrounded will force home upon the dullest the fact that we have much cause for thankfulness.

It is a wondrous blessing to have life and as good health as most people have. It is a beautiful one, and one which is adapted to our needs and pleasures, this world we live in. Society, with all its faults, is of greatest benefit to us. On every side we have institutions, public and private, elevating to us in a hundred ways and ministering to our well

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY
ESTABLISHED?
It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING
PRINCIPLE.
The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practical school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

being, for which others have worked and given, but which have cost us no effort. Learning of every kind is ready at hand which has been acquired by hardest toil of others, now offered us for the taking.

Harvests of all lands help feed us daily; looms and toilers in many trades far and near clothe us and house us. Liberties are secured us for which men paid their lives; we have paid nothing. Greatest of all gifts, we have knowledge of God and offers of salvation through Christ and the power of the Holy Spirit. The promise of the present and the life to come are all ours. Have we not cause for thankfulness? And, if we are full of thanks, should there not be giving of thanks with lips and hands and feet?

Count up a few of the benefits you have received this present year and let deep praise to God fill the soul and breathe through all the doings. As God lives for us, let us live for God wholly.

Trinity Church, Denver.

Nothing can emphasize the progress of Methodism in America more strikingly than the contrast between old John Street church, New York, and Trinity, Denver.

But a few years since the great plains stretching east of the mighty

DENVER METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Rocky mountains were the home of the bison in herds innumerable and the only human population was the roving Indian tribes.

Exploration came, then gold prospectors, emigrants, pony express, overland mail, Pacific railroad and tides of commerce and settlement followed.

What was unbroken wilderness at the close of the civil war now has six great centers of population. The bison and Indian are gone and the mining camp is now the great city with all appliances of highest civilization.

Methodism has ridden on the "prairie schooner" and pioneered the mining camp with the earliest comers. Now when wealth from mine and herd comes to the toiler his church shares his prosperity. Denver has built not for pride, but in erecting one of the finest Methodist churches of the land she has honored herself. All the great west is full of the spirit of advance. Her influence is powerful on the progress of the world. In the church she plans broadly and executes boldly. The region unknown to Wesley and Asbury has caught their spirit and will raise sons and daughters who will not shame their ancestral line.

The Value of Perfume.

Odors have a powerful effect on health. Some are poisoners and give violent headache, other are soothing and beneficial.

It is probable that the perfume of flowers plays an important part in the purification of the air for animal use. It has long been believed that the colors of flowers and their perfumes are of great importance in attracting bees and other insects and affecting the fertilization of the plants. But odors are also disinfectants of air. They do not merely overcome the foul smells, but seem to work a change in the chemical combinations and actually purify the atmosphere.

Is it possible that the uncounted blossoms which fill the swamps, cover the fields and trees and robe the bushes of the roadside in beauty in early spring are actually censers of incense to purify the world as the miasmatic vapors rise from the earth, so that plants and men may both live on the earth? Innumerable blooms disperse perfume, and their smell gives health as well as pleasure of smell.

So do good deeds and words in this world of wicked actions keep things habitably sweet. But for them life would be an uninviting desolation of violence and fraud. Keep your censor swinging. Keep things sweet.

That wheat can and should be grown by every farmer in the south, especially enough to furnish flour for his own family, is nothing but simply going back to conditions that existed before the war between the states. At that time almost every family had wheat of its own raising. Conditions that existed after the war, when cotton was selling at a good price, have changed, and now the time has come when farmers must raise their own supplies again and not depend on cotton to buy everything that is consumed on the farm.

The time to sow in Georgia, in my opinion and from my experience with other grains, is from the 15th of October to the 1st or not later than the 10th of November. Owing to our spring and summer droughts we must grow more of the winter crops if we expect our farms to become self sustaining and to become a prosperous country, says a writer in Home and Farm.

Onions in Louisiana.

In south Louisiana onion seed is sown in September and October, transplanted to rows 12 to 18 inches apart and well cultivated. The onions are ready for the market in April. In north Louisiana the seed may be sown in January or February in drills, thinned to a stand and cultivated. By the 2nd of spring or early in summer the crop may be gathered, stored or sold.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings
of All Denominations.
Prayers.

Prayers are the tales of the heart, and we should always try to pray right.
—Rev. Dr. A. B. Simpson, Christian Alliance, New York.

Loss in Prayer.

We lose much prayer for the want of two things—specificness of object and intensity of desire.—Rev. William Ward West, Baptist, Pittsburg.

Imitating Christ.

To imitate Christ means that we must be pure, loving, long suffering, helpful and merciful.—Rev. Paul C.
Curnick, Methodist, Cincinnati.

Faith.

Faith is not only expectation. There is a faith that counts the thing that it asks for as having been given.—Rev.
Dr. R. A. Torrey, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Love.

Remind us not of the love of yesterday, for the saddest part of yesterday is its pleasure that has departed, but, to be a joy, love must be born again each day.—Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

God's Plan For Men.

Whether triumphant in the struggle of life through Divine grace or down in the sloughs of iniquity, for all men
God has a wonderful and beneficent plan.—Rev. Dr. E. G. Thurber, Presbyterian, Paris.

Salvation's Key.

The key to salvation is the human will. Many people ask to which faculty shall we appeal—to head or heart. The answer is we should appeal to the whole man.—Bishop S. M. Merrill, Methodist, Lake Bluff, Ills.

Power of Christ's Grace.

The world darkens the soul like ink poured into a cup of clear water, but the grace of Christ brightens it, as quicksilver will the cup of inky water when poured into it.—Rev. Dr. E. P.
Davis, Presbyterian, Montgomery, Ala.

Life's Best Time.

You frequently hear men say youth is the best of life. That is not the teaching of the Bible. The further the better is its great truth. Neither youth nor manhood is the best time. "The best is yet to be."—Rev. Dwight L.
Moody, Evangelist, New York.

Value of Rectitude.

It is better to be right than sorry, better to walk on hard rock than on quicksand, better to hold yourself beyond the price of purchase than to sell yourself for the largest sum that was ever paid for a soul.—Rev. George H.
Newporth, Congregationalist, New York.

Culture's True Ideal.

The true ideal of culture is the creative ideal. It aims at a new manhood.
It is thoroughly regenerative in its results to the receiver. It emancipates and enfranchises manhood. It gives vitality to a man's perception, imagination and judgment.—Rev. M. W. Everhart, Methodist, Carlinville, Ills.

Eye of Faith.

What the world needs is the eye of faith to see through the fog and smoke and dust and shadows of this world of sin and behold the other world of light and glory and immortality, where "the King in his beauty liveth and the kingdom of God abideth forever."—Bishop Wesley John Gaines, Methodist, Atlanta.

Life's Greatest Blessing.

The greatest blessing in life is that in every experience within the material event is a great spiritual truth, upon which your soul should dwell. If it does, then the great purpose of life will be fulfilled, and your character will grow as God would have it grow. If you have the spiritual possession, you have the highest, the noblest and most enduring thing that God can give you.
—Rev. Dr. W. Robson, Notman, Chicago.

Rational Optimism.

Christianity is a rational optimism.
It is faith seeing the harvest field; it is the soul looking at the sunrise which is sure to come, gilding the clouds on the mountain peak or driving the vapors from the lowly valley; it is the spirit looking through delay and through defeat to final victory and beholding even in the sunset the dawning of life on other and distant spheres.—
President John Henry Barrows, Oberlin University.

Wings of Service.

Men can rise above their present state only on the wings of service. They improve their baser condition only by rendering to the world what they owe.
they become the more happy and hopeful as they serve the more earnestly and unselfishly; they become more useful and indispensable to the world as they shoulder her burdens and responsibilities. Man in the home, in society and in the nation can find the fulfillment of his highest mission only as he travels the highway of service.—Rev. F. C.
Aldinger, Christian Church, St. Louis.

Power of Common Things.

The common things of life must lead you into the presence chamber of God, and until you have done this your life is a rod without power. God is still saying to men everywhere, "What is that in thy hand?" By these things he does his work. God would make the common things of this life helpful to you in lifting you up out of this world toward him. In all these things there is power if you use them not by your own strength, but with the aid and for the service of their Maker.—Rev. Dr.
Thomas Gordon, Presbyterian, Washington.

Churches and Young Men.

Give the young men a chance in the councils and hard work of the church.
They will crowd the churches. It is not so much what the churches can do for the young men, but how much the young men can do for the churches.—
Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Christian Church,
Chicago.

VIRGINIA ANNUAL CON- FERENCE PROCEEDINGS.

[The following report of the Conference proceedings is taken from a number of dailies and weeklies, and is a composite reprint.—ED.]

Rev. J. Sidney Peters rose and said that he desired to get expunged from the records of the conference of November, 1895, the action of the body at that time in the Bennett-Cannon-Lafferty case. His resolution to expunge had incorporated in it the resolutions passed at that session. It reads:

"Whereas, on the 19th day of November, in the year 1895, the following report was submitted to the Conference:

Your committee appointed to investigate the questions between R. H. Bennett and James Cannon, Jr., on the one part and J. J. Lafferty on the other, beg leave to report:

After an honest, prayerful and thorough investigation we find that Dr.
Lafferty in the late unhappy controversy has made statements the truth of which has not been sustained before us.
We desire to say—

First. In our judgment Dr. Lafferty has not had the intent to injure the good name of the late Dr. W. W. Bennett.

Second. In our judgment the unverified statements of Dr. Lafferty are due not to a willful and deliberate design to misrepresent facts, but to the prominence of self in his mental habit, and to the fact that the glory of self is the medium through which, without meaning to injure others, and without conscious dishonesty, he views the history of his connection with the Richmond Christian Advocate and the questions that have arisen out of it.

Third. We condemn the irritating utterances which have marked his conduct of the controversy, and for this reason, and by reason of the utter unprof-itableness of such personal controversy as we have had conducted in public and its liability to engender bitterness and provoke harsh expressions, the Virginia Conference should, and does hereby require of him that all such matters of personal controversy be excluded from the columns of its organ in its issues, regular or extra.

We desire to add that in our judgment R. H. Bennett and James Cannon, Jr., under provocation, have made intemperate personal utterances in print which are open to reproof, and we would require of them not to introduce such personal matters hereafter into the columns of the Methodist Recorder, the organ of the Farmville and Lynchburg districts.

Finally, we recommend that in the matter of inquiry committed to us no further proceedings are necessary.

J. M. BURTON.

In which, from the said report, on the same day and year last mentioned, was adopted by the Conference and recorded as the act and judgment of that body, and as such now remains upon the record thereof. Now, therefore,

Resolved, That the said report and the record of the adoption thereof be expunged from the records and that the secretary be and is hereby directed to execute this resolution.

J. SIDNEY PETERS,
T. N. POTTS.

J. S. Peters spoke in favor of the motion to expunge. He said that he did not believe the purposes of the action of that committee have been accomplished.
He declared himself the friend of Dr.
Lafferty, but no less a friend to the other parties to the controversy. He wanted it understood that the rumor that a resolution would be offered this morning reflecting on the position of these brethren and excusing the others is entirely groundless and wanted the whole matter expunged. He argued, too, its constitutionality. He said that he took this action for "the relief and comfort of those who have been involved in this matter."

At this point, James Cannon, Jr., arose to a question of personal privilege, and stated that the language just used implied that J. S. Peters was speaking as a representative of all the parties; he was not speaking for R. H. Bennett or
James Cannon, Jr.

J. S. Peters continued and said his reasons for expunging the record were that the proceedings were (1) illegal; (2) inconsistent with the action in subsequently passing the character of the parties involved; (3) all the parties were embarrassed in their ministry because of this record.

In concluding, he called on Dr. Tudor, the chairman of the committee, to make a speech. Dr. Tudor then addressed the Conference. He said:

"Some two or three weeks ago I was praying in my room, and after finishing
I leaned on the mantle and thought what part of my work I ought to do that afternoon. As I leaned there, there seemed to come almost an audible voice, saying: 'Consult no one, but on your own responsibility rise on the floor of the Conference and move to expunge the whole record in the Lafferty-Cannon-Bennett controversy.' Soon after this Brother Peters came and talked with me about it. He said: 'How would it do to propose on the floor of the Conference that record?' I said: 'Brother Peters, it is a strange coincidence that I have been moved by the same thought.'

He said: 'Will you sustain me if I move it?' And I told him I would let him know later. I referred the whole thing to the guidance of Providence. I have only waited. On yesterday when Brother Peters approached me with the resolution, I said I would support it. I desire this reflection on my brethren to be removed."

B. F. Lipscomb opposed the resolution. He said that this was the most remarkable proposition he had ever heard on the floor of the Conference in his 23 years of membership. The proposition was professedly in the interest of peace, but if it were taken it would produce strife. It was the reopening of an old sore that it was hoped had been closed; the report of the committee which it was now proposed to expunge was not a hasty action, as had been charged; this matter had been referred to a committee of nine men—one of the strongest committees ever appointed by the Virginia Conference; they had reached their conclusion after days of prayerful and judicious investigation; a great mass of documentary evidence had been carefully sifted, and the report represented the conclusion they had reached; the report was accepted by all the parties concerned without a word of dissent and the Conference had adopted it unanimously; now it is moved to expunge this record without a line of new evidence being offered or any reason to prove that the report of this committee was not correct; the report is there, and is burnt into our record in letters of fire, and could never be erased by any simple motion to expunge the record.

At this point, James Cannon, Jr., again arose to a question of personal privilege, and stated that he wanted to make one point clear to the members of the body. Up to the time that Mr. Peters had presented this motion he had not mentioned this matter to R. H. Bennett or himself.

R. H. Bennett also tried to obtain the floor, but was unsuccessful, the bishop saying: "If you brethren are misrepresented, you can state your point later on."

W. P. Wright arose to speak, but yielded for a motion to be offered by W. W. Royall, that the motion to expunge be referred to a committee of one from each presiding elder's district, and that their report should not be reversed except by two-third vote of the Conference. The resolution was promptly carried, and then Mr. Wright proceeded with his speech, which was a brief argument in favor of the motion to purge the record.

At the close of his speech, while a number of brethren were seeking to secure the floor, notably one or two members of the committee, R. M. Candler secured the floor and moved the previous question. R. H. Bennett again tried to secure the floor on a question of personal privilege but was ruled out by the bishop.

By a vote of 155 to 49 it was decided to take a yea and nay vote.

The roll was called and by a vote of 143 yeas to 82 nays it was ordered that the record be expunged.

When the name of J. M. Burton was called he asked to be excused on the ground that, although a member of the committee, he had not been allowed to explain his vote. The motion being put, the Conference refused to excuse him. Bro. Burton declined to vote, however, on the ground before stated.

FIFTH DAY.

Conference convened at 9:30 o'clock—Bishop Wilson in the chair. Devotional services were conducted by Rev. W. E. Edwards, D. D.

The minutes of Saturday's session were read and approved.

On motion, it was ordered that members of the Conference who were not present on Saturday when action was taken on the resolution offered by J. S. Peters be allowed to record their vote.

James Cannon, Jr., offered the following, which was admitted to record:

"We, the undersigned, hereby enter our solemn protest against the hasty action of the Conference taken Saturday morning, November 18th. We protest against this action because, after we had been publicly accused on the floor of the Conference by J. S. Peters of the unchristian conduct of breaking our pledges, made to this body four years ago, and of holding old grudges in our hearts, and after we had stated that we had been misrepresented and had demanded a hearing, and after we had been told by the presiding bishop that we could make our statement later, we were cut off from any statement and denied the right to reply to these statements of J. S. Peters by the call for the previous question. We protest against this hasty action as, in our opinion, unjust to us and as calculated to destroy brotherly relations among the members of this body.

"JAMES CANNON, JR.,

"R. H. BENNETT."

Paul Whitehead moved that a committee of three be appointed by the bishop to reply to the above.

The bishop appointed as the committee J. S. Peters, W. W. Lear, and J. Wiley Bledsoe.

G. D. Moses, an undergraduate of the North Carolina Conference, who was transferred to this Conference, passed approved examination in the course of study, and was reported as transferred back to the North Carolina Conference.

Paul Whitehead presented the application of R. O. Payne, for admission into the full connection of the Conference. He was formally a member of the Virginia Conference, but had joined the Ohio Conference, M. E. Church. The Conference voted to grant his application, upon condition that he subscribe to the ordination vows.

Rev. J. W. Rosebro, pastor of Tabbs-street Presbyterian church, and Rev. H. L. Derby, rector of the Good Shepherd Memorial Episcopal church, Blandford, were introduced to the Conference. Dr. G. G. Smith, of Georgia, bade farewell to the Conference. He said that this would probably be his last visit to the Virginia Conference, but though he might never meet with them again his heart would ever overflow with love for his brethren of Virginia.

A resolution signed by Paul White head, H. M. Hope, and R. H. Mullen, expressing the appreciation of the Conference of the annual visits of Dr. Smith, and bidding him God-speed and inviting his presence among the body whenever it shall please him to come, was adopted.

W. E. Edwards and B. F. Lipscomb were appointed a committee to send a fraternal greeting to the General Baptist Association of Virginia, in session at Richmond.

The call of the twentieth question, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" was resumed and completed.

A. Coke Smith offered a resolution that a historical roll be made of the members of the Virginia Conference, with the amounts they have contributed to the Twentieth Century Fund, for publication in the Minutes of the Conference. Adopted.

W. Asbury Christian offered the following, which was unanimously adopted.

"Firmly maintaining our belief in the sanctity of the institution of marriage taught by the Word of God, and as upheld by the law of our land, and believing that any influence or movement that tends to lower the standard of marriage, or in anyway threatens its existence, strikes at the foundation of our society, and in consequence at the life of our Church and our Government: and believing that to have a confessed polygamist a member of the chief legislative body of our country will be a menace to the divine institutions of monogamy and that every lawful effort should be made to prevent this calamity to our Christian institution, we, citizens of Virginia and members of the Virginia Conference,

"Resolved, 1. That we enter our protest against the seating of J. W. Roberts, the representative-elect to Congress by the Mormans.

"2. That we urge our Representatives to use all lawful means to prevent the said Congressman elect from being seated in that body.

"3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the ten Congressmen from Virginia.

"W. ASBURY CHRISTIAN,

"G. H. McFADEN,

"F. M. EDWARDS,

"T. H. CAMPBELL,

"J. C. REED,

"E. P. PARHAM."

Richard Ferguson offered the following:

"To the Virginia Annual Conference, M. E. Church, South, Petersburg, Va.:

"We, the undersigned members of the Conference, do hereby most respectfully enter our solemn protest against the hasty and unjust manner in which the majority expunged from the records the action of the Conference of 1795 in the Lafferty-Cannon case, whereby, through use of the previous question, a number of the members of the Conference, and among them all the members of the committee in the case except one, were denied the opportunity to express their opinion and explain their votes.

"RICHARD FERGUSON,

"W. J. Young,

"T. McN. SIMPSON,

"J. M. BURTON,

"L. B. BETTY."

And forty-five other signers.

When objection was made to the word "unjust," these words were substituted: "In a manner hasty, and as we believe, unjust to the minority." Then the paper was admitted to record.

It was ordered that the committee of three appointed to reply to the former protest, offered by James Cannon, Jr., and R. H. Bennett, be requested to reply to the above.

The Preachers' Relief Society, through its Secretary and Treasurer, W. W. Vicar, reported the work of the society for the past twelve months. The assets were reported as $34,002.78, an increase of $895.68 over last year.

The report recommended the following as the directors of the society for the next Conference year: J. Carson Watson, James C. Reed, F. M. Edwards, C. V. Winfree, W. J. Kilby, E. G. Moseley, E. V. White, S. Q. Collins, and W. W. Vicar. The report was adopted and the board nominated was confirmed by the Conference.

An offer from the Chautauqua-by-the-Sea organization to deed to the Conference an auditorium and five acres of land, upon condition that the Conference hold an annual religious service there, after some discussion, was referred to a committee of five to report at this session.

H. M. Hope asked that a subscription be taken among the members of the Conference for Rev. John T. Moore, who is in very bad health and whose physician has advised him to take a trip to another State where the climate would be more beneficial to him. The amount contributed was $210.

After several announcements had been made the Conference adjourned with the doxology and benediction by Bishop Wilson.

MISSIONARY MASS MEETING.

A missionary mass-meeting was held in Washington-street church at night, an overflowing audience being present. Dr. W. E. Edwards presided and the devotional services were conducted by Rev. W. B. Beauchamp.

Rev. L. B. Betty, secretary, read the report of the Board of Foreign Missions. It was an elaborate and carefully prepared document.

The board elected Rev. W. E. Edwards, D. D., president, and Rev. J. C. Reed, vice-president. The following resolution was passed by the Board on the 10th inst.:

"We recognize the great loss which in the providence of God we have sustained in the death of our beloved brother, R. N. Sledd, D. D., for so many years the efficient chairman of the board, and remember the great service he rendered to the Church by his untiring, zealous, wise labor in behalf of missions."

The following resolution passed by the board was commended to the pastors for their favorable consideration:

"Resolved, That we give our approval to the efforts of the Epworth League Board to unite the forces of the League to assist the pastors in disseminating missionary instruction and in raising the regular missionary collections assessed by the Conference. The report closes by wishing to give emphasis to the request of the General Board of Missions that the collections be sent in early in the year."

After the reading of the report, able and instructive addresses were made by Rev. Dr. J. C. C. Newton, late missionary to Japan, and Rev. Dr. J. J. Tigert, of Nashville, Tenn., on the work in Japan and China.

SIXTH DAY.

Conference assembled at 9:30 a. m. Rev. R. T. Wilson called the Conference to order, in the temporary absence of the bishop.

Devotional services were conducted by Rev. R. W. Watts, at the conclusion of which the bishop entered and assumed the chair.

The following telegram was received from the Virginia Baptist Association: Richmond, Va., Nov. 20, 1899.

Rev. Messrs. F. M. Edwards and B. F. Lipscomb, Petersburg, Va.

The General Association cordially reciprocates greeting of Conference. We rejoice with you in your great work, and bid you God-speed.

HUGH C. SMITH, Secretary.

The Committee on Conference Relations submitted their report, recommending the following for the superannuated relation: "J. F. Brannin, A. M. Hall, H. T. Bacon, W. F. Bain, W. A. Laughon, John W. Crider, W. A. Crocker, R. N. Crooks, T. J. Bayton, John L. Clark, J. P. Woodward, J. B. Dey, J. E. Gates, J. R. Waggener, C. H. Boggs, J. T. Moore, Alex G. Brown, J. H. Riddick, J. C. Watson, R. G. James, C. S. Wamsley, W. P. Jordan, H. C. Bowles; and the following for the supernumerary relation: T. H. Early, W. H. Camper, and J. A. Proctor. The report was adopted.

F. M. Edwards, chairman, read the following report which was adopted:

"The Committee on Temperance beg leave to report as follows:

"The cause of temperance continues to command support in our bounds, though we regret that many of the organizations heretofore so active for the suppression of the temptations to dissipation have comparatively ceased to operate. The Church and her pulpit however, we hope, have not failed to declare the duty of the Christian citizen in the matter. The danger of our young people arising from the system of legalized commerce in the destructive intoxicant is recognized by the thoughtful and pious. It seems acknowledged that the only remedy for the great evil is to be found in prohibition. To educate the public mind up to the enactment of such a law as will take away the authority of the State to the bar-room, seems the call of philanthropy. Surely the love of souls—the controlling motive of all true Church activity—must make the ministry and laity of our Conference see duty and privilege combined in the measures that must be tributary to the safety of the people from so vicious a temptation as that of rum.

"It is plain that if sin is chargeable upon the person who offers the intoxicating draft to his neighbor, it must be wrong to vote for license to be given for such offering. It is equally clear that non-action is equivalent to favoring the traffic. To fail to prohibit a wrong is to connive at a wrong whenever the authority for action in the premises belongs to the individual. Your committee hence urge upon pulpit and pew the importance of continuing to cry aloud and to spare not, in view of our youths's peril from the wine cup.

"The paper referred to your committee from the Virginia Christian Missionary Society has been considered, and we recommend the endorsement by this Conference of the petition of the said body to the Legislature of Virginia for a law on the subject of teaching the nature and effects of alcohol in the public schools."

The following recommendation, which accompanied the report, was also adopted:

"That two delegates be elected to attend the Anti-Saloon League, to be held in Chicago, Ill., in May, 1900, and that one member of the Board of Directors of said League be chosen."

F. M. Edwards and Richard Ferguson were elected delegates, and James Cannon, Jr., was chosen as one of the directors of the League. James Cannon, Jr., was elected as an alternate delegate.

R. T. Wilson was substituted for J. Sidney Peters, at the request of the latter, on the committee to reply to the protests of yesterday.

A paper from the George Washington Memorial Association was read to the Conference, asking that the Conference take some steps to commemorate the death of George Washington, and the paper was referred to the Committee on Public Worship for consideration.

J. W. Bledsoe submitted the report of the Committee on Church Extension. The report says that the amount raised during the present year for the cause is $4,548.02—an increase of $419.47 over last year. The board has had at its disposal $2,274.01—50 per cent. of the whole amount raised—and $1,244 brought over from last year. The report calls attention to the noble work the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society is doing. Two parsonages have been assisted, five boxes of clothing and other articles sent to needy preachers in the West, and the society has raised for all purposes $1,832.14—an increase of $45.43 over last year.

The Committee on District Conference Records submitted the following report which was adopted:

"Your committee to examine District Conference records beg leave to report that all the records have been brought up; and are now being carefully kept, with the single exception of the Danville District. The Recording Secretary failed to have an official roll, and also failed to state who occupied the chair of the first session. Neither were the Minutes signed by the chairman or secretary."

Thomas H. Campbell offered a resolution expressive of the high appreciation of Bishop Wilson's presence, but it was withdrawn at the bishop's request.

W. Asbury Christian, chairman of the Committee on Publishing Interests, presented the following report:

"The annual report of the Book Agents for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1899, has been received with satisfaction. It shows the total assets to be $911,688.20, a gain in assets for the year of $40,144.19. We regret, however, that notwithstanding the large yearly gain for some reason there was no distribution of funds as heretofore to the widows and orphans and wornout preachers.

"Despite the distraction incident to war, the terror of pestilence, and the extensive destruction by rain and frost, when the settlement for the year was made there was found to be a large balance in favor of the House. This was due to the loyalty of the Methodist people to this great consecrated institution. We as individuals should recognize our obligation as best we can to serve the Church through this medium, and to make this year one of large increase in the volume of the business of the House. We shall receive with joy the news of the establishment, when the time is propitious, of our missionary publishing house in Shanghai, China, believing that it will prove a great instrument in the hands of God in winning the people to the Lord Jesus Christ.

"We note with pleasure the good work done by Dr. A. G. Brown through our book depository at Ashland, in distributing the books and periodicals of the House.

"We are glad to know that the Sunday-school literature has reached such a standard of excellence as to commend it to all of our people. The steady growth of improvement of the Epworth Era is a source of gratification, and we trust that the day is not far distant when it will be entirely self-supporting.

"The Southern Methodist Review, the Christian Advocate and the Review of Missions are publications which are worthy of our great Church, and we commend them to our people.

We also call attention to the Methodist Magazine, which, though not a publication of our House, is well worth the attention of every Methodist.

"Noticing the improvement in the Richmond Christian Advocate, we present it to our people, and offer the following resolution:

"Resolved that the bishop be requested to appoint the Rev. Dr. J. J. Lafferty and the Rev. H. M. Hope editor and associate editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate.

"As regards the Publishing House Claim, the position of this Conference of last year we reaffirm, and add thereto these resolutions:

"Resolved, 1. That so far from being

CONFERENCE 20th CENTURY MEETING.

Education Day at the Conference was a day of encouragement and joy to the workers in the educational field. The cheering report of the offerings already made, amounting to $30,000, told in advance that the $100,000 spoken of as the minimum for our Conference would be far exceeded when all the offerings by all the charges of the Conference had been made. The report of the President of the Board, Dr. A. Coke Smith, the address by Dr. Starr, President of Randolph-Macon College, and the appeal of Dr. W. W. Smith, the manager of the canvass, followed each other and gave reasons from every standpoint for the movement and for its success in the Virginia Conference. At the close of Dr. W. W. Smith's address a subscription was taken and over $18,000 was subscribed by members of the Conference and persons present. This amount is being increased daily by subscriptions of our preachers, and the total amount will be over $20,000. The largest subscription was that of Dr. W. W. Smith, who gave $1,750, showing that he is not only giving his voice to the cause, but also his money. Other subscriptions by laymen, and members of the Conference of over $100 were, C. V. Winfree, and J. P.

Branch, $1,000 each; J. P. Pettyjohn, R. S. Paulett, Dr. J. M. Williams, and Judge W. E. Holmes, $500 each; G. L. Neville, $350. Two other subscriptions of $1,000 each have been made by E. M. Tilley, of Berkeley, and Col. C. M. Walker, of Farmville, neither of whom were in attendance at the Conference. Subscriptions by preachers of over $100 were, James Cannon, Jr., $1,100; Bishop Granbery, $700; Dr. Starr, $500; R. H. Bennett, $500; E. H. Rowe, $250; R. F. Beadles, $200; W. P. Wright, $250; R. A. Compton, $125; J. F. Mastin, $150; A. Coke Smith, $225; W. J. Young, $250; J. O. Moss, $125; W. W. Royall, $130, and a large number of $100, $75, $50, and $25 contributions.

We are fortunate enough to be able to have an accurate report of the address of Dr. W. W. Smith, and hope to give later report of Dr. Coke Smith and a portion at least of the address of Dr. Starr.

Dr. W. W. Smith spoke as follows:

"This is a pivotal, not to say a critical, day for the cause of Christian education in the bounds of the Virginia Conference. Ten years ago the Conference gave its endorsement and promised its support to the notable advance inaugurated by the trustees of Randolph-Macon college and followed by enterprising leaders in the Farmville District, whereby the educational institutions belonging to our Church have been developed from one plant and endowment worth $175,000 with 130 students to five institutions whose students aggregate nearly eight hundred, and whose plants are worth $700,000. It was then the deliberate purpose of the Conference, a purpose several times reiterated, to make a general and thorough canvass of all our churches for funds to thoroughly establish those institutions, but the exigencies of the situation have from time to time postponed the general effort, and the $500,000 which has been secured in the decade for this important work of the Church, has been given by a few persons in response to personal appeals. The localities most interested have been appreciative and generous, but the great body of our people have not been appealed to as was proposed. This delay has left our enterprises incomplete and our Boards of Trustees hampered, if not seriously embarrassed, by obligations incurred in the work. The Twentieth Century Movement has come to our Conference just at the time when the long deferred effort for its own educational work was about to be made. It gives special occasion and authority for a universal presentation of our cause and promises to solve the problem and remove the difficulties of our educational situation, and to greatly increase the patronage influence and usefulness of our institutions. It comes at a time of real and acknowledged prosperity and of abundant hope. If we do not now carry our long deferred canvass to success we cannot hope to retrieve the disaster by any subsequent effort. Success depends now only on the real interest and zeal of our preachers. What they decree concerning this matter will be done. Hence upon the action of this Conference here assembled to day will depend in large measure the future of our educational work.

"But the day is pivotal also with regard to the standing of our Conference in the great organization with which we are connected. The great Methodist communion looks with just confidence to our Church, its second largest organization in the world, to line up with world-wide Methodism in this notable, yes, this providential movement, and it certainly becomes this, its oldest and next to its strongest, Conference to set a worthy example. For the sake of our influence and example we cannot decline our part in this impressive enterprise; for the concerted undertaking of six million of people all over the world to bring a special thank-offering of thirty million dollars to the treasury of the Lord on the dawn of the twentieth century is a spectacle which must and does impress the world, and which will convince gainsayers that Methodism is still 'Christianity in earnest.'

"The enterprise has now become a test of the efficiency of our organization. It has been deliberately undertaken by order of our highest and final authority. It has been commended by every official leader of our Church and has been formally and officially undertaken by this Conference. We have accepted our part and pledged ourselves to our sister Conferences and to our common Methodism to give it. We have done all this openly and are publicly committed in the sight of the world to do this thing. We cannot plead inability, and failure would be not only disorganizing, but disgraceful. If, with all the authority and all the helpful influences back of this movement, we should fail we can not expect hereafter to accomplish anything by concerted effort and must cease our glorying in the connectionalism of our Church. We are no longer an army moving under leaders to wisely chosen ends, but a mob moved only by impulses which may strike the popular fancy. To preserve our organization and enhance its power for usefulness we must carry this enterprise of the General Conference to full success. Loyalty to our Church demands this much of us.

"And do we not hear in this clarion call of R. W. Perks, which sounded in old England, has rung over sea and land to every division of the hosts of Methodism, something more than the summons of a noble leader to a heroic attempt? Is it not another manifestation of that interposition of the Captain of the Hosts who ever from the beginning of Methodism to this good hour has led us by ways we have not known and to enlargement we had not hoped? Is it not his voice saying that the work of our Church is not yet done, her mission not yet accomplished? Is He not Himself speaking unto the children of Israel that they go forward? See how he has brought His Church to the very verge of the promised conquest of the earth and let us hear His voice in this mustering of the division He has called to the van of His armies. The strongest of all motives with us should be that the Master calls for this thank offering and orders this great advance.

"And let the priests' feet be the first to touch the waters even ere they recede. Let all those who lead our Zion, those to whom we look for guidance, those who command our respect by their capacity and our love by their fidelity, preachers and laymen, now and here, give an illustration of their faith and love which shall be monumental among the noble deeds of Virginia Methodism.

I said that this is a pivotal point in this great movement among us, and I am impressed with a deep sense of its serious importance. But though I present the matter now for your action with profound concern I do it also with confident faith. I have already tested your spirit towards this matter in the District Conferences and elsewhere where I have had the pleasure of presenting it and the noble responses already made justify my confidence in expecting your support today. I lay it, my brethren, on your hearts and consciences to give now and here that cordial support which you unanimously promised when you called me to this."

VIRGINIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS.

changed from our opinion expressed at our last session, the letter of the Book Committee has but strengthened our opinion that it is impossible to justify the conduct of E. B. Stahlman, and Barbee & Smith, and that their action must be repudiated by the highest body of the Church, the General Conference.

"Resolved, 2. That in view of all circumstances, we deem it the wise course to await the regular session of the General Conference, at which time we feel that this question should be given precedence, and the Church be entirely freed from the shame which has been brought upon her by her Agents."

Paul Whitehead moved that the resolutions relating to the Publishing House claim be stricken out.

Asbury Christian, James Cannon, Jr., B. F. Lipscomb, W. J. Young and W. P. Wright advocated the passage of the resolutions, and Joseph H. Amis, John P. Branch, A. Coke Smith, R. T. Wilson, Paul Whitehead and N. J. Pruden opposed them.

The Conference voted first on the resolution of Paul Whitehead, which was lost, and then the report as a whole was adopted by a vote of 117 yeas to 71 noes.

The Committee on Public Worship announced the appointee to preach the opening sermon at the next Conference as R. H. Bennett; C. E. Hobday, alternate; to preach the sermon at the ordination of elders, J. T. Mastin; T. N. Potts, alternate.

J. M. Burton came forward and said that, in reference to his action on Saturday, he allowed his temper to get control of him and had acted in a hasty manner. He deplored the fact that some thought he intended discourtesy to the bishop or the Conference. Aside from the mistake referred to, he had no apology to make.

The bishop asked if he meant to say that he would not comply with an order of the Conference.

Brother Burton replied that he would do all that an honorable man could be expected to do, and if that was not acceptable he would resign his credentials, which were very dear to him.

The bishop said, in reply, that he was only carrying out the decision of the Conference.

On motion of R. T. Wilson, the Conference by a unanimous vote rescinded

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 10.

Text of the Lesson, Mal. i, 6-11 and iii, 8-12—Memory Verses, 3-10—Golden Text, II Cor. ix, 7—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

In this last word to His people through the prophets, before He Himself should come, He tells them plainly what He saw in them that He did not like and urges them to return to Him that He may forgive and bless them. His first word is, "I have loved you" (verse 2), and this is always the burden of His plea. He chose them as a special people to Himself not because they were many or good, but simply because He loved them (Deut. vii, 7, 8). With an everlasting love He loved them, and with loving kindness He drew them, and when they wandered from Him He said that if they would only return to Him He would heal their backsliding and love them freely (Jer. xxxi, 3; Hos. xiv, 4).

6, 7. "O priests, that despise my name." He said to the priests, who were His messengers to the people (ii, 7), that they counted His service a weariness. They brought Him the torn and the lame and the sick and thus despised His name (verse 13). They showed Him no honor either as Father or Master. It has been said that God is not called Father in the Old Testament, but see, in addition to our lesson, Deut. xxxii, 6; Isa. lxiii, 16; Jer. xxxi, 9.

8. "Offer it now unto thy governor." It is actually true that people offer to God what they would not offer to their fellows. They offer Him the result of a misspent life, a worn out body, a half hearted service or that which they can give and never feel it, as some say. In the church or Bible class offering, which is supposed to indicate in some measure our gratitude to God, what does God think of the pennies that are sometimes found there by the hundred, while the donors profess to be so grateful for their privileges? I think I must have several pounds weight of mutilated coin which has accumulated from the Bible class offerings. If all the thousands in these classes were as grateful as the comparatively few who give me the thousands of dollars to pass on in His name, how much more might be accomplished.

9, 10. "I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of Hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand." The words seem to indicate that they only served God or professed to do so because there was some personal gain in it, as when Satan said, "Doth Job fear God for naught?" (Job i, 9.) The revised version seems to say that God would prefer to have the doors of His house shut rather than have them offer Him vain offerings.

11. Notwithstanding all formality and hypocrisy the kingdom shall come, and both Jews and Gentiles shall delight to honor His name. In all the world His name shall be great, "Far above all principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come." (Eph. i, 21.) All kings shall fall down before Him, all nations shall serve Him (Ps. lxxii, 11), and all nations shall send their representatives to Jerusalem from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts (Zech.

xiv, 16, 17). In all times of darkness a look at the kingdom and its glory is very cheering.

iii, 8, 9. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed Me." He gave them all they had, lands and vineyards and homes for which they labored not and which they did not deserve, and He asked them to give Him one-seventh of their time and one-tenth of all the increase which He gave them, not that they might enrich Him in any way, but that He might bless them the more, and they misjudged Him and were ungrateful and unbelieving and despised Him and robbed Him.

10, 11. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts." Let us not fail to believe that He means here just what He says, as He always does unless it is manifestly a figure, and that He is asking His people to return to Him His just portion, that He may bless them more abundantly. If a neighbor with a nice vegetable garden should send you some choice things from his garden in a quite attractive basket and your covetousness should exceed your gratitude and lead you to keep the basket, too, what should you think of yourself? If we fail to give the Lord at least a tenth of that which He gives us or enables us to earn, we are worse than the one who would keep the basket. Jacob gave the Lord a tenth, and some people would not like to be counted meaner than Jacob. Abram gave tithes to Melchisedek. Christians are the seed of Abraham, and the Lord Jesus is our great King Priest, to whom we owe all (Gal. iii, 29; Heb. vii, 1, 2). There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches (Prov. xi, 24; xiii, 7). God so loved that He gave His only begotten Son. The Son of God loved me and gave Himself for me. If His love does not constrain me to give cheerfully to Him, what do I know of it or Him? I was led to see my privilege in this matter while pastor of a church in Boston from 1880 to 1886. I had no stated salary, but accepted as my portion that which was left after all current expenses were paid. Living on the tithes of others and giving all my time to the Lord and having nothing superfluous in my income, I tried to persuade myself that the Lord did not require a tithe from me, but one day in the early spring of 1884 Num. xviii, 26, took hold of me, and from that day to this I have by His grace been obedient in this matter and have known something of the blessedness thereof and earnestly desire it for all.

12. "All nations shall call you blessed, for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of Hosts." This is yet to be true of Israel when the Lord of Hosts shall dwell in their midst forevermore, and the name of Jerusalem shall be Jehovah-shammah—the Lord is there (Ezek. xliii, 7; xlviii, 35). But national promises are oftentimes true for individuals (Job xxxiv, 29), and every believer who becomes obedient in this matter will know increased blessedness and have the consciousness of being a delight to the Lord as well as of delighting in the Lord as never before. "The Lord taketh pleasure in His people. He will beautify the meek with salvation." (Ps. cxlix, 4.) Instead of being content to be saved by Him and have the assurance of a place in heaven as our great ambition, let us yield so fully to Him and live so wholly for Him that we shall be to the praise of His glory all the way home.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 10, "The Indwelling Presence." Text, Col. i, 21-29; Gal. ii, 20.

"I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

It is clear to the least observing that some folks are different from others and that the same persons are different at times. People change. Some who were vicious and impure become gentle and virtuous. Opinions and practices have been altered. The whole appearance is transformed. We can see the outward difference, and they often speak of the inward change in themselves.

In our own personal experience each one is conscious of inclinations to evil and also of impulses to good. At times an ugliness of spirit seems to take possession of one. The very gentleness and excellence of others arouse contrariness and dislike to them in us. We feel ourselves impelled by passions rather than led by reason. Argument only irritates. We know we are wrong, but take malicious delight in persisting in it. It makes us unloving, miserable and dissatisfied, and all the more because we know the fault to be our own and unnecessary and unreasonable. To some extent all have had such experience as this. With some it becomes confirmed and permanent in disposition.

Others, recognizing its wrong and wickedness, strive against it and finally find escape. They find themselves drawn out in affectionate regard toward others, wishing to help them in trouble, sympathetic and sorrowful for their misfortunes and deeply solicitous for their good. Weariness is forgotten in helping others. Cares and personal needs give way before the greater burdens and wants of others. Love replaces all sense of enmity and jealousy. The enthusiasm of lifting others brings a deep joy and fixed determination.

The chief cause in all these changes is usually the sense of our obligations to Jesus Christ and His infinite love to us. We desire to please Him. Giving ourselves to His service, we catch His spirit and are sure He is in us.

The Secret of Happiness.

It lies in forgetting self. Many, if not the most, of us are too busy with ourselves to find true happiness. Our bodily aches and needs, our hopes and sorrows, our plans and ambitions, our opinions and disappointments, our likes and dislikes, jealousies and envies, all keep us very busy and never give any great satisfaction. It is a hard world for any one who is much given to self consciousness and sensitiveness. It never was made so as to run for our special individual benefit, and when we try to get it to run that way we get pinched and crowded.

The only way to find real enjoyment

WHY SATAN SMILED

Many of the churches in town will be closed during the heated term.—Exchange.

When church doors are locked the devil keeps open house. —THE RAM'S HORN.

LD Satan did not business shirk
When church bells ceased to ring.
"I know," he said, "that rush of work
This heated term will bring.
The moon, this sultry Sabbath night,
Looks down on vacant pews
And weak-kneed Christians take delight
In seeking worldly views.

"The heated term," his smile was broad,
"Is what I like to see,
For some who might have worshipped God
To me will bend the knee.
They can not join in sacred song
Nor hear the organ's peal,
And so my varied haunts they throng
And selfish traits reveal.

"The heated term," he smiled again,
"Gives me a pleasing thrill
For then I prove that erring men
Have what they term 'free will.'
The cooling streams, that preachers say
Are free for all to drink,
Are dry just now, but I've a way—"
And here he gave a wink.

"The heated term! I'm never still Although I hide from view
And idle hands I quickly fill
When closed are book and pew.
The policy of 'Open Door'
I cheerfully indorse—
When victims reach Plutonian shore
What matters their remorse?

"The heated term," his laugh was loud,
"Is always my delight,
For then I have a smaller crowd
Of fearless foes to fight.
Some ask for rest. I search for souls
And heated term deride,
For while the languid summer rolls
I lure them to my side.

"My heated term will not begin
Till skies have rolled away
And those who now indulge in sin
Have had their little day.
The perseverance of a saint
Does not compare with mine,
For on the march he'll sometimes faint,
While I keep right in line."

A . LIVING . SAVIOR HOW JESUS BECAME A REALITY IN ONE LIFE

W. LINCOLN PHILLIPS

MARJE was a little waif who spent most of the day and the early evening on the streets selling newspapers and "lights." The newsboys and girls called her "Marje;" the corner policeman, and the cabbies that stood at the bridge near the railway station, knew her simply as "Marje," but in fact her name was Marjorie Drew. Marje's father was a drunkard who spent the most of what he occasionally earned for liquor; her mother was a very rough, boisterous woman who continually quarreled with her neighbors and added to that accomplishment by swearing and drinking. Marje had very early been pushed into the streets to "earn a penny," and often for weeks at a time was the sole support of her dissolute parents. There was something peculiarly attractive about the sweet little oval face, lustrous brown eyes and dark, tangled hair, and that attractiveness usually found a sale for papers and "lights" when others of her mates were unsuccessful.

Marje was accustomed to hard treatment, but occasionally her poor little heart would break down under the strain and, hiding away in some secret place, she would cry a little, feel better, and then after removing the last trace of sorrow from her face, go out into the street again.

One day, while feeling sorely the injury of some street companion, she started off to seek a secluded spot to weep over her trouble, but, as she passed down the street, her attention was attracted by a picture in the window of a shop, underneath which was the word:

"JESUS."

Marie had on several occasions stopped at the door of a mission down the street on Sunday afternoons and heard the children sing "I am so glad that Jesus loves Me," but had never been able to fathom the mystery or understand who Jesus was. But now it was settled. "There!" exclaimed Marje to herself, as she stepped up close to the window and pushed her little nose close to the glass, "That's Jesus."

As the little girl gazed upon the picture, she forgot all about her troubles, and stood motionless, wrapt in thought and attention, looking into the face of Jesus. Suddenly the spell was broken, she looked up, turned as if to start on her way, stopped, smiled, stood a moment in perplexed wonderment and then turned about toward the bridge. As she skipped along, her lips were audibly muttering:

"THERE! THAT'S JESUS!"

"Jesus is good. Jesus is good." "I am so glad that Jesus loves me."

Many were the days that Marje found occasion to look into that window to see Jesus. She soon learned that by going to see Jesus all her troubles were taken away.

One Sunday afternoon, Marje stopped at the mission door and soon discovered a peep-hole in the doorway, and eagerly looked in, all the time listening eagerly to the happy voices singing within, and wishing that she might only "be inside." In her earnest attention she did not observe a kindly faced man step up close to her, and was not aware of his presence until a hand was placed upon her shoulder and a kindly voice said:

"Well, little girl, won't you come inside?"

Marje looked up somewhat frightened, but quickly replied:

"Yes, sir."

"All right, come in," said the man as he pushed open the door and led the way.

During the services that same kindly faced man spoke to Marje and inquired:

"Wouldn't you like to know Jesus, little girl?"

Marje did not answer for a moment, as her eyes were intently fixed upon a number of little boys and girls, kneeling at a bench in the front of the meeting, praying, but when the inquiry was again made, she replied:

"I do know Jesus, sir. He's up in Downey's shop window. I've seen him, often."

Taking the grimy hand of the little stranger in his, the man, with tears in his eyes, appealed:

"Yes, but Jesus will come and live in your heart if you will come and pray with the rest of these little boys and girls. Come along."

Marje made no objection and meekly followed him up the aisle and knelt down at the old bench. Some one prayed; a hymn was sung while everyone in the room was on their knees; another prayer was offered, this time by the man who had led Marje to the altar.

Suddenly the little mopsy head bowed over the bench was raised, Marje looked excitedly about for a moment, jumped to her feet, threw her poor grimy little arms about the praying man's neck and cried out: "Oh, sir! I've seen Jesus—and He's alive!"

DO SOME MISSION WORK AT HOME

After an enthusiastic missionary meeting, a young lady went to the speaker and told him that she would like to become a missionary. Looking at her earnestly, the missionary said:

"I suppose you have been working in the Sunday School, and seeking to win the scholars there for Christ?"

"No," answered the young lady, "I never felt called to teach children; I am not just suited for them. In fact, I cannot say that I have done any of this work at home, but if I went abroad I might be able to begin there."

"Believe me, my dear young lady, if you cannot work for Christ at home, you will not find it easier to do so abroad. We want as missionaries those who have proved themselves soldiers of the Lord Jesus."

A LITTLE WHILE.

By EMMMA A. McCracken.

- A little while since trees, all flower laden and blooming fresh 'neath summer dew and rain,
Were winter clad their pure, white robes arrayed in, but now they blossom fresh and green again.
"A little while," so said the blessed Master, His loved disciples' sorrow to beguile.
They felt but dark forebodings of disaster, and said, "We cannot understand His little while."
- "A little while I linger here among you, and then I go My Father's house to share, Where there are many mansions, I have told you, I go a place for each one to prepare."
"A little while!" Not for those loved ones only our Savior spoke those passing words of cheer,
But for all poor and weary ones and lonely that in the future ages shall appear.
- A little while our loved ones with us linger, a little while of mingled joy and pain,
Then at a signal touch of Death's cold finger they leave us never to return again.
A little while, O lonely hearts that sorrow, through mists and tears Christ's face ye cannot see,
Within the future there's a glad to-morrow, when you with Him forever more shall be.
- A little while of darkness—then the daylight; a little time of trouble—then release;
A little while of sun blaze—then the twilight; a little while of struggle—then God's peace.
A little while of earth and earthly duty; a little while of earth and earthly toil, Ere dawns the endless brightness of Heaven's beauty, the vast eternity of God's great while!

TALES TWICE TOLD.

THE EMBARRASSED STUDENT

R. SPURGEON used to tell a good story about one of his divinity students. It was his custom, in order to test the powers of the young men for speaking, to give them, as they were about to ascend the pulpit, a text to discourse about on their own plan and in their own words. This, of course, was not before an audience, but simply among themselves for practice. On the occasion referred to, he gave to a young man, who as yet had not tried the ordeal, the simple word, "Zacchaeus." The young man, trembling from head to foot, said:

"I will divide my subject into three parts. First, We read that Zacchaeus was small of stature, and I never felt smaller than at the present moment. Second, We read that Zacchaeus climbed a tree, which reminds me of my ascent into this pulpit. Third, We read that Zacchaeus made haste to come down—which accordingly I will now do."

Whether this man ever became a great preacher or not, we are not told, but he certainly showed that he possessed ready wit.

ABSORBED IN HIS WORK.

The late Prof. Philip Schaff, D. D., like his eminent friend, the historian Neander, was noted for his marvelous capacity for study. When devoted to his task he became utterly oblivious of everything else. Such complete absorption made him the subject of many humorous stories, his absent-mindedness being interpreted often as a lack of practical sagacity. One day as he went to his classroom, deeply engrossed in thought, his hat was suddenly removed by a clothes-line stretched across his path. He stopped and good-naturedly viewed the obstruction. After a moment's study of the situation, he deliberately took out his penknife and cut the line in two. Then, picking up his hat, he walked on as if serenely satisfied with this solution of the difficulty. On another occasion, so the story goes, he crossed a stream on horse-back. Instead of let his horse rink on the way across, he rode to the opposite side, borrowed a pail at a farmhouse, went back to the stream, filled it and carried it to the horse.

ADMIRAL PHILIP IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Rear Admiral "Jack" Philip, the commander of the battleship "Texas," in the naval victory off Santiago, is beloved both in the navy and in civil life. Recently he addressed 1,200 boys and girls in the Sabbath School of the Nostrand Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, in Brooklyn. Among other things he said:

"I am no speaker, and I did not come here to even attempt to make a speech. You know we old sea dogs are not educated to talk. But now I am here I am going to give a bit of advice to you boys. You all know the Ten Commandments. Now, these commandments are what we navy men call orders, and I would like to call your particular attention to three of them. The first is, 'Take not the name of the Lord thy God in vain.' The second, 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' The third, 'Honor thy father and thy mother.' When you go to your homes get down your Testaments and read carefully the first, second and third verses of the sixth chapter of Ephesians. Let me read these to you—First, 'Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right.' Second, 'Honor thy father and thy mother,' which is the first commandment with promise. Third, 'That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.'

"After you have read those three verses, I want you to ask your fathers to read the fourth verse and to remember it, too. Here it is: 'And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.'"

INFLUENCE OF A MOTHER.

Mr. Cole, my neighbor, was a devout Christian says a writer in The Indian Witness. Many of us considered him somewhat of a bore, for he was always bringing something in about religion and the necessity of conversion. Mr. Cole came to my house one day and said: "I wish to have a talk with you, Mrs. Miriek." He looked serious, and I knew that he had come to confront me with my duty of being a Christian.

The old man sat down, saying: "Well, I will sit down here, and you can go on with your cooking. I will not disturb you. I have but little to say. It will not take me long to say it."

"I saw your daughter, Jessie, this morning, and I asked her to be a Christian. Do you know what she said? She said: 'My mother is not a Christian. I think she's a pretty good woman.' That is all I have to say to you."

With this, my old friend left, but the words he uttered did not leave, nor have they left me since. As soon as dinner was over, and I had time to be alone, I went by myself. I had thought I was a Christian. There was no practice in my life that would mark me as a sinner. But I had never made a public profession of Christ as my Savior, although I thought I trusted in Him. That day I settled the matter with God, and on the first opportunity united with the church. I had the joy of seeing my daughter, Jessie, converted and unite with the church that very winter.

My life has been changed from the hour that my neighbor told me how my daughter referred to me as an example of one who did not need to be a Christian.

GET OUT AND PUSH.

"This wheelbarrow is all right, and I don't see why I don't get along faster."

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

is to stop thinking so much about self and get interested in some one else, not some one as little and unworthy as ourselves, but the perfect and all good One.

Real joy comes in learning His will and carrying out His plans and in seeing how all things work together for good when He is supreme. If you want to be happy, let Christ come in and own you in all things. Love is self abandonment and devotion to another. Jesus is the highest object of love. True love is the highest condition of human bliss. Love Him and keep His commandments.

Social Life.

It is natural for young people to desire social life. Companionship is most attractive in those years when character is forming and life alliances are to be made. In after years social duties become burdensome to the tired business man after the work of the day is done and are often distasteful to the mother of the family. They prefer the quiet of the home and sometimes come to think that the young people need only what they relish in their older years. In fact, the young people need acquaintance of those outside the home circle. They can develop the best in them only by association with those of their own age, to some extent. They must together meet life's problems and duties. Recreation and amusement are not the chief ends of social life, but are rather incidental to it. Our young people should give a tone of helpfulness and moral worth to all their social functions. For this reason every church needs that, through the League or some other agency, provision should be made for frequent meetings of the young people, and all necessary appliances should be secured for the best intellectual, spiritual and physical development.

The New Reading Course.

Everybody reads. Most read too much of some kinds and not enough of other varieties. Every Leaguer should become intelligently acquainted with the matters of his own church. This can be most easily done by the use of the reading course. It is not necessary for each person to own all the books. The whole chapter can purchase a single set and let the members in turn read the volumes. An excellent way is to have some public meetings where the different books are reviewed. Spend a whole evening on a single one and have several members present essays or addresses on the different chapters. There is no better way to preserve the old Methodist fire than to read Methodist history.

Any Conversions Lately?

If not, why not? Are all the sinners saved or moved out of town? Perhaps they have become so refined that they don't look like old fashioned sinners. Do not be deceived. Sin is deadly, however you may paint it over. Men are lost, now and here, and must be saved. Whoever does not love God supremely and his neighbor as himself is a lost sinner and needs your help to get saved. Realize his condition, pray over it till the Holy Spirit burns it into your soul and gives you an agony for his salvation. Then bring him to Jesus Christ.

SCIENCE ON WHISKY.

EVIL EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL DESCRIBED BY DOCTORS.

Makes the Features Coarse and Destroys Comeliness—Causes Diseases of the Throat and Lungs—Weakens the Intellect.

Alcohol is bad both for beauty and comeliness of person. The face is greatly disfigured by it in regard to form, feature and complexion. It makes the features coarse, the skin unduly red, unsteadiness in facial feature and in time undue size and form of the body at large.—Sir B. W. Richardson, M. D., F. R. S.

Sore throat, so called colds, passive pneumonia, glandular disturbances and ulcerative lesions are ever present menaces which belong to the servant of the alcohol habit. Moreover, it may be claimed that chronic bronchitis is an almost invariable accompaniment to the vanities of the drunkard's cup.—Dr. E. G. Hope.

The effects of drink show themselves in the respiratory organs, the heart, the kidneys or the nervous system.—M. Joffrey, M. D.

The use of alcohol is found to be followed by a diminution of the carbon dioxide and all waste elimination.—T. D. Crothers, M. D.

Alcohol in any dose capable of producing an appreciable effect diminishes the function of the lungs in direct proportion to the quantity taken.—N. S. Davis, M. D., F. R. S.

During the presence of alcohol in the system there is an actual reduction of temperature, a diminution of the amount of carbonic acid gas exhaled from the lungs. Instead of the bodily forces being exhilarated, they show a corresponding depression and this in direct proportion to the amount of alcohol taken.—C. H. Newman, M. D.

Under the influence of alcohol there is a diminished output of carbonic acid gas, and this is due, certainly in part, to the action of the drug on the red corpuscles. Spectroscopic experiments by Dr. Kales have shown that the affinity of haemoglobin for oxygen is reduced by alcohol, and this must affect vital action throughout the body.—Medical Pioneer.

Alcohol causes kidney disease in several ways. It unduly excites the activity of the organs. By impeding oxidation it interferes with the proper preparation of nitrogen wastes, which are brought to the kidneys in an unfit state for removal. When more than a small quantity of alcohol is taken, some of it passes out of the body unchanged through the kidneys and injures their substance.—H. Newell Martin, M. D., F. R. S.

Tissue waste is necessary to the well being of the living organism. Constant molecular change must occur in living tissue, the dead, effete matter being removed to make room for the new living tissue which rebuilds and strengthens the system. Therefore alcohol as a food saver is like a man who rebuilds his sidewalk with rotten plank.—M. Willard, M. D.

The mistaken idea that small quantities of alcohol are harmless permits men to drink beer and stronger drink without question, yet a scientific study and measurement of the senses and functional activity of the body show that 20 drops of alcohol interfere with the normal activity and are manifest in the diminution of the sense acuteness and brain activity. Alcohol also obscures the color sense.—T. D. Crothers, M. D.

It is now generally recognized that children should never take alcohol, which, according to the highest authorities, exerts an exceedingly deleterious action on rapidly growing tissues, interfering with their nutrition and preventing the development of their proper function.—G. Sims Woodhead, M. D.

Alcohol, even when diluted, as in wine, beer and cider, is a poison which changes pathologically the tissues of the body and leads to fatty degeneration.—August Forel, M. D.

Better Without Stimulants.

The late Sir Benjamin W. Richardson, one of the greatest of English physicians, said:

"I have worked actively while indulging in a moderate measure of alcohol daily. I have worked actively while abstaining altogether. In a word, I have made direct personal experiment on the subject, and I am bound to state that work that can be done during entire abstinence is superior in every respect—in respect to amount, quality, readiness of effort, endurance and mental ease and happiness—to that which can be done during times of even moderate indulgence."

No Virtue In Alcohol.

The medicinal value of alcohol is now settled beyond all shadow of doubt. It is worthless, and in lowered vital conditions alcohol in every instance lessens a patient's chance of recovery. Social wine or liquor drinking is going out of custom among self respecting people. They no longer question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" They realize that to a certain extent they are.—Banner of Gold.

Cause of Murder and Suicide.

During the past year there have been 43 murders in San Francisco and 158 suicides. This is a fearful record and can largely be traced to the liquor curse. When a man contemplates murder, he fortifies himself with liquor. Banish liquor, and murder and suicides will be reduced to the minimum.—California Voice.

Vienna Waking Up.

A total abstinence society has been started in Vienna by 120 members. Its programme includes abstinence from alcohol in every form for the benefit of the health and morals of the people and to show the absolute uselessness of alcohol.—Exchange.

its action of Saturday and Mr. Burton was excused.

At 2:15 o'clock the Conference adjourned with the doxology and benediction by bishop Wilson.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

A vast concourse attended the memorial services of the Conference at Washington-street church at night. In the absence of Bishop Wilson, who was holding a council of his presiding elders, Dr. W. E. Judkins presided and Dr. W. E. Edwards conducted the opening services.

Dr. Paul Whitehead announced the names of the ministers who had died during the year, and who were to read their memorials.

At the conclusion of the reading of the memorials, the report of the Committee on Memorials was adopted and the memoirs ordered to be printed in the general Minutes.

Rev. W. F. Bain offered the closing prayer, and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Judkins.

SEVENTH DAY.

Conference met at 9:30 o'clock, Bishop Wilson in the chair. The devotional services were conducted by Rev. F. M. Edwards.

The following question of law was submitted by Dr. A. Coke Smith:

A school, encumbered with mortgages equal to what it is estimated the property would bring, if offered at public sale, having been deeded to trustees for the Methodist Episcopal Church, for certain uses, and having been accepted by said trustees, applying to the Board of Education for a share of the Twentieth Century Thank-offering Fund, to be devoted to the cause of education, the following questions of law are proposed to the presiding bishop for decision:

1. Is such a school the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, within the intent of the act of the General Conference providing for the Twentieth Century Fund?

2. If not, what steps are necessary to be taken in order that such a school may become a beneficiary of said fund?

The bishop answered that a school became the property of the Church, when, upon recommendation of the Board of Education, it was accepted by the Conference.

W. J. Young read the following report:

"The committee appointed to consider the offer made by the Chautauqua-by-the-Sea to give to the Conference five acres of their property, upon condition that the Conference become responsible for the conduct of a camp-meeting and all other religious services at the assembly grounds, recommend the following resolution for adoption by the Conference.

"Resolved, That while we greatly appreciate the offer made by the Chautauqua-by-the-Sea, we do not think it feasible to accept it on the conditions laid down."

J. Wiley Bledsoe offered the following, which was admitted to record:

"We, the committee appointed to consider the paper submitted by James Cannon, Jr., and R. H. Bennett, also that presented and signed by Richard Ferguson, W. J. Young, T. McN. Simpson, J. M. Burton, L. B. Betty, and others, each protesting against the action of the Conference on Saturday last in the case relating to J. J. Lafferty on the one side, and James Cannon, Jr., and R. H. Bennett on the other, and make reply thereto, beg leave to report that we have carefully and prayerfully considered the ground of protest as stated, and make reply to the same as follows:

"We dissent from the statement that the action taken by the Conference was hasty and unjust, as about two hours were devoted to its consideration, and several speeches made on the question."

"To the complaint that the right to reply to certain remarks alleged to have been made by J. S. Peters was denied by the call for the previous question—which remarks were about as follows: 'I fear that the action of the Conference has utterly failed to establish those fraternal feelings that should obtain among ministers of the Gospel of Christ and in suppressing public personal newspaper attacks upon the ministers of this Conference, in proof of which I might cite instances, but refrain'—we reply that we do not believe that the foregoing statement made by J. S. Peters in his speech before the Conference should be construed as accusing any parties of breaking their pledges or of holding old grudges in their hearts."

"The call for the previous question was made and sustained by a very large majority, and that after discussion had progressed at considerable length—the Conference exercising a right claimed and brought into requisition by deliberative bodies to put an end to needless and fruitless debate."

"To the statement that only one member of the original committee had the opportunity of being heard, we reply that the matter sought to be expunged from the record of the Conference having passed from the hands of the original committee and been acted on by the Conference, became the act and deed of that body, and each member of the Conference had an equal right to be heard and no superior or prior rights could be justly claimed by any."

"J. WILEY BLEDSOE,

"W. W. LEAR,

"R. T. WILSON."

Report No. 2 of the Board of Education was read by James Cannon, Jr. The resolution in regard to the Southern Seminary at Bowling Green was discussed at length. A substitute was offered by W. A. Christian that the matter be referred to a committee of five to take charge of this matter and report at the next conference. This substitute was opposed by A. Coke Smith, James Cannon, Jr., W. W. Smith, and J. T. Whitley. The vote was taken to refer to the committee and it was referred by 129 votes for to 61 votes against. The report, as amended, was adopted.

The Joint Board of Finance reported that the appropriation to the beneficiaries of the Conference would be five per cent. less than their claims; $11,026.20 had been collected, and all this had been distributed except about $600, held as a reserve fund. As the roll of beneficiaries was increased this year, the assessment was increased to $15,600.

The report of the Mission Board was submitted. The Board is now organized as follows: W. E. Edwards, president; J. C. Redd, vice-president; L. B. Betty, secretary. The same were appointed delegates to the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, which meets in 1900.

In answer to proper minute questions the following statistical information was imparted:

Local preachers, 114; members, 88,739; infants baptized, 991; Leagues, 173; members, 9,674; Sunday schools, 779; teachers, 9,573; scholars, 61,549; societies, 7,481; houses of worship, 740; value, $11,856,407; indebtedness, $128,794; parsonages, 148; value, $203,279; indebtedness, $20,771; district parsonages, 4; value, $10,300; indebtedness, $250.

The total amount received by the treasurer for benevolent purposes of the Church was $55,253.26, to which is to be added for their purposes the amounts collected by the auxiliary organizations, making the whole amount collected through the year in this Conference $67,279.24.

The net increase in membership is about 160, while the increase in finances is more gratifying.

Joseph D. Langley was elected Assistant secretary to have charge of the statistical journal of the Conference.

E. H. Rawlings, chairman, read the report on Epworth League Board. It shows that since the last report 688 new chapters have been organized. The enrolled membership of the League in our connection is now 227,245, against 202,895 at this date last year, giving a net increase of 24,440 for the year. The report calls special attention to the Epworth Era, general organ of the League.

S. S. Lambeth offered the following, which was adopted:

"Resolved, That the thanks of the Conference be tendered to the people of Petersburg for their whole-souled hospitality; to the pastors and churches of the city for the use of their pulpits; to the transportation lines for reduction in rates, to the reporters of the press for their full, correct and impartial reports; to the secretaries of the Conference."

B. F. Lipscomb moved that when the Conference adjourn it adjourn to meet at 3:30 p. m.

The thanks of the Conference were tendered Mr. A. W. Burgess for his kindness in the way of delivering mail to the Conference, and to the Conference postmaster.

A collection was taken up for the benefit of the sexton of the church.

And then the Conference adjourned with the benediction by W. G. Starr.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Wilson in the chair. The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Oscar Littleton.

The following committee was appointed to consider that part of the report of the Board of Education which referred to the Southern Seminary: W. Asbury Christian, W. F. Davis, R. T. Wilson, J. T. Bosman, and Herbert M. Hope.

The bishop appointed the following as the Joint Board of Finance for the new Conference year:

Clerical—George H. Spooner, R. F.

Gayle, J. M. Anderson, R. W. Watts, B. M. Beckham, W. W. Royall, B. F. Lipscomb, R. B. Beadles, S. S. Lambeth, J. W. Shackford.

Lay—O. D. Batchelor, M. A. Cogbill, Littleton Cockrell, F. T. West, Dr. J. M. Williams, R. S. Paulett, L. L. Marks, George L. Neville, W. W. Vi-car, C. V. Winfree.

The minutes were read and approved. The bishop then addressed the Conference and read the appointments.

And the Conference adjourned sine die.

FARM GARDEN

CRIMSON CLOVER.

It Thrives on Thin Soil—Regions in Which It Succeeds.

Crimson clover, also known as scarlet clover, German clover, Italian clover and carnation clover, is an annual plant native to southern Europe and has long been cultivated as a forage crop in the warmer portions of that country. It is an erect, tufted plant, one to two feet high, with soft, hairy stems and leaves and usually bright scarlet flowers in elongated heads. The root system is well developed and penetrates deeply into the soil, and the plant is a vigorous grower. The seed is larger than that of red clover, oval in shape, bright reddish yellow when fresh, paler in the white flowered variety, and has a highly polished surface. The plants stool freely, many stems arising from a single root.

CRIMSON CLOVER PLANT.

Crimson clover will not stand severe freezing, although it is one of the so called "winter annuals" and under favorable conditions makes much of its growth during the cool, moist weather of fall, winter and early spring. Its strong growing roots enable it to secure nourishment in many soils so poor and thin that red clover would fail entirely. While requiring a warm climate, it will not endure severe drought. It thrives best on rich, rather sandy loam, but when the conditions of moisture and temperature are favorable it gives good results on light, sandy soils as well as on clays, if they are not too stiff and cold.

Crimson clover has come into prominence in this country within comparatively recent years. It can hardly be regarded as a successful crop outside of the region from New Jersey west to the Alleghany mountains and south to eastern Tennessee and Texas. Good crops are often obtained in other sections, but cannot be depended upon year after year. In the middle and south Atlantic states this clover is one of the best crops that can be grown for forage and soil renovation. It has given good results in many portions of the gulf states, but many failures are also reported. In the colder sections of the country this clover is sometimes successfully grown as a summer crop, but it usually winter kills, being killed down in the autumn. At the experiment stations in Rhode Island, New York, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, South Dakota, Nebraska and other states in the north and west the general results of tests show that it is too tender for the climate and is less valuable than red clover. From results recently obtained at the Alabama experiment station it seems very likely that in many cases, especially in the south, failures with the crop are to be attributed to the absence from the soil of the tubercle forming organisms which are necessary for the proper appropriation of nitrogen by the plant. These organisms being supplied to the soil, excellent crops were obtained where without them the result was a failure. These facts are a contribution by Agrostologist S. W. Williams in circular No. 17 to the investigation of grass and forage plants which the department of agriculture is pursuing.

The amount of crimson clover seed, per acre recommended by Dr. Pieters, the seed expert of the department of agriculture, is about 15 to 20 pounds. A sample that will give 90 per cent of strong spouts will go further than one germinating less than 50 per cent. Seed in the husk is sometimes used and with good results in dry weather. When this is used, more seed is needed, say a bushel per acre.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding patronage than any other Methodist institution in the State!

WHY
ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, accepted a face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and do not wish to go to the State Normal School. This work is under the supervision of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practical School gives to the students the application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

A BEE TALK.

Up to Date Houses and Hives That Are Every Man's Privilege.

There are many advantages in keeping bees in a house. While there are many apiarists who use beehouses exclusively, the majority do not. There are also many different kinds and varieties of houses used. A beehouse need not be an expensive one, and almost any kind of house will answer the purpose. None is better than an old dwelling house, and two or more rooms are the more convenient, provided they have an outside face of one end or side, or both.

Perhaps a two room house with one partition is the best. Such a house with two ordinary sized rooms, say 14 feet square, will give 112 feet of outside surface, but take off 12 feet for doors, etc., and the 100 feet left will accommodate 50 colonies of bees by setting the hives two feet apart from center to center, which will give ample working room. The entrances are cut through to the outside and made to correspond to the entrance to the hives. The hives may be set directly on the floor, but I would prefer them set on the usual bottom boards, nailed to cleats at each end, that would raise the hive some four inches from the floor, this for the purpose of chaff packing in winter. Bees thus kept in a house are very easily prepared for winter, and the extra protection thus afforded brings them through the winter in prime order.

A very cheap beehouse and a very convenient one that I have used and which I make exclusively for bees is a small house 10 feet long, 6 feet wide and 6 feet high. This building accommodates 11 colonies, and the expense does not exceed $1 per colony. This is no more than chaff hives will cost for each colony outside. Floor space or the hives to rest on only is used, as ground floor in the center is preferred. The objection to a much longer house on the same plan is that it is not convenient to move, and also that bees become more or less confused where so many entrances are close together and all have the same appearance. This has always been the objection to beehouses, but small buildings such as these, located around at different places, overcome this objection.

In addition to the foregoing paragraphs by A. H. Duff of Kansas, The Farm, Field and Fireside illustrates the latest style of hives, with the statement that they are no man's private property, but about every beekeeper's furniture, used now almost exclusively by all specialists. No. 1 is a hive arranged for comb honey with two supers, each containing 24 one pound section boxes, thus saving a surplus capacity of 48 pounds. The brood chamber contains eight of the standard frames. Hive No. 2 is simply two brood chambers, the upper set of frames used for extracting honey.

Cutting Down Ensilage In the Silo.

Where a silo is so large that in feeding ensilage a layer cannot be removed daily to the depth of about three inches a Rural New Yorker writer recommends to feed from a portion of the silo each day, instead of attempting to feed from the entire surface, especially in summer. During the winter it is probable that one would be able to feed from the entire surface without danger of having any of the ensilage spoiled.

A practicable way, he says, to secure a smaller surface from which to feed is to cut down a portion of the ensilage with a hay knife, just as one would cut down a portion of the haymow. The knife used for this purpose should be one with a serrated edge, and care should be taken that the knife is well sharpened. If the ensilage is cut down so that a smooth edge is left exposed, it will be impossible for the air to penetrate to any considerable extent, and it has been found in actual practice that there is no waste whatever.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Doms Gleaned From the Teachings
of All Denominations.

Contentment.

Christian contentment is the result of a trained and sanctified imagination.—Rev. Warren G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati.

The Divinest Altar.

Home is the divinest altar, the sweetest resting place, on the way to heaven.—Rev. J. T. M. Johnson, Baptist, St. Louis.

Patience.

Patience is like the other Christian graces. It is progressive; it can grow only as it is cultivated.—Rev. L. C. Calhoun, Methodist, Mobile.

Worship.

Worship is more a temper of the soul than an act. This makes any such spot the gate of heaven.—Rev. Dr. William Tracy, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Ideal Man.

The ideal man is not he who has never had temptations, but he who has overcome them.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregational, New York.

Light of Faith.

The light of faith, that glorious light, bursts through the dark clouds of doubt when once the face is turned to the will of God.—Bishop George H. Kinsolving of Texas, Episcopalian.

Opportunities.

Opportunities do not make men. They only reveal men. A small man does not embrace the opportunity, and a large man may wait till his death and not find the opportunity.—Rev. Dr. W. S. Crowe, New York.

Power of Ideals.

Ideals rule the world. They reveal to us our possibilities. Men and nations have ever been led from narrowness to enlargement by the vision of distant and radiant ideals.—Rev. Dr. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

True Religion's Essential Elements.

The two essential elements of real religion are a spirit of charity and habits of personal purity, and those are the very points in one or the other of which most of us fail.—Rev. Frank M. Goodchild, Baptist, New York.

Indifference and Earnestness.

Indifference will put a cloak around a church so that people will almost forget that it exists. Tear away the cloak, and consecrated earnestness will appear, and Satan himself will move out of range.—Rev. Daniel E. Lewis, Baptist, Upper Roxboro, Pa.

Christianity and Civilization.

God's personality comes to man, and man is lifted to him, his individuality honored and his personality saved. Civilization is impersonal, lifting up the masses. Christianity is personal and centers around individuality and personality.—Rev. James S. Stone, Episcopalian, Chicago.

The Meliorist.

The melioristic man occupies the true ground. Striving for the world's betterment, he can look forward to a time when he can fully sing:

God's in his heaven.
All's right with the world.

—Rev. Dr. Robert Stewart MacArthur, Baptist, New York.

Christian Purpose.

A part of the Christian purpose is to live well here. Personal life is to be one not of chance, but of choice. Nothing should be permitted to take the place of personal righteousness. Not even the bribing of charity giving is to be tolerated. One is always present with himself and his God, and the question of when and where to act well does not enter.—Rev. Henry Secrist, Unitarian, Boston.

Higher Universal Organization.

Religion does not suffer from hereticism, but rather from hindrance, a three-quarters belief in God. The notion that we have to mount up an incline step by step till we reach heaven, which is flat after we reach there, makes the notion of heaven tiresome and uninteresting. The tendency of the times is for a higher organization of all things.—Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York.

Power and Faith.

To have power with God, power with the world, power over hindrance, we need to push out into the promises of the Almighty blindfolded and ask no questions. He will carry us forward on the wave of achievement just as far as our faith leads us. Let him command; let us follow. He always leads men and women into splendid successes and mighty victories.—Dr. Stephen A. Northrop, Baptist, Kansas City.

Pulpit Expansion.

The ideal pulpit throbs with expansion—as we understand it, wide with the multiplication of hallowed emotions to win men. This has not been the quality of the pulpit in all the ages. The pulpit in which Ezra stood was potent with expansion. If the pulpit that lacks backbone and common sense does not reach the masses, the periodical preacher is inclined to emasculate the truth. The pulpit ought to be the center of heroic utterance. Then the march of reform, science and statesmanship will grow divine in its evolution.—Rev. Dr. Frank C. Bruner, Methodist, Chicago.

Aim of Religious Life.

The aim of the religious life is so to work as to build the perfect character, as to produce the saved life in self and others. All human activity is to contribute to this end. The true function of art and literature is not simply descriptive, to photograph experience or conditions as they are, but to embody in lasting form ideas of truth clothed in the life which we see about us. Painting and sculpture, fiction and history, are meant to clothe in human form divine ideas, to show out things as they ought to be by means of things which are or may be imagined.—Rev. Lester Bradner, Episcopalian, New York.

The papers have reported so many good sermons from various brethren that much of our space is given up to them.

CORRESPONDENCE

A CARD.

In a recent issue of the Methodist Recorder there appeared a card from Rev. J. H. Riddick in reference to a report, which, he says, has been circulated on the Lunenburg circuit in reference to the amount allowed by the District Stewards for travelling expenses. In view of this card I desire to say two things in the columns of the Recorder:

(1.) Inasmuch as I wrote two articles in the Recorder in which I referred to the travelling expenses of presiding elders, and as I am the pastor of the Lunenburg circuit, it may be thought by some that I was the author of this report. I am not. Having been a Methodist preacher for twenty years, I am not altogether unfamiliar with the method of conducting the business of the Church, and I know that no assessment is made by the District Stewards under the head of travelling expenses of presiding elders, except in case of transfer from one district to another.

(2.) I understand that my articles of Jan. 12th and Feb. 16th have been regarded by some as personal attacks. This I greatly regret. I should never have been cowardly enough, I hope, to make a personal attack anonymously. Had I intended to make a personal attack I should have called names. My articles were intended to be general in their character, and to call attention to reasons why I thought the eldership to be unpopular. I have no ill-will or hard feeling toward any member of the Virginia Conference, and I regret that any one should have regarded my articles as personal attacks.

JOHN O. MOSS.

PAY FOR WHAT YOU GET.

TO THE SO. METHODIST RECORDER:

I notice in your issue of Nov. 2d the following:

"The steamer was due at 7 p. m., at Allmond's Wharf, on York river, about 28 miles away. * * * The wharf is 2,000 feet long, and after a rapid walk with a heavy telescope in order to meet the boat, a young man with a lantern called for twenty cents for the privilege of stepping off the wharf upon the boat, but I felt it to be an imposition upon the travelling public, and while I had to pay it, I expressed my opinion in plain language. The right of protest is worth a great deal, and enables one to endure many objectionable things. I judged from the 'water-off-a-duck's-back' way in which my words were received that I was not the first protestant who had spoken his mind on that wharf."

This wharf is Capt. Allmond's private property, just as the conveyance which brought Mr. Cannon, Jr., from Mathews was the private property of the liveryman. Capt. Allmond had the same right to charge Mr. Cannon, Jr., for the use of HIS conveyance from shore to the steamer, that the liveryman had to charge for his conveyance from Mathews to the shore at Allmondsville. If the liveryman did not charge for the use of his team that is his affair. Capt. Allmond did charge for the use of his wharf, and no one is obliged to use it unless he sees fit. The phrase, "water-off-the-duck's-back," is a gratifying thing at an honorable man's purpose to pay no attention to the complaints of people who are willing to use private property and not pay for it. D. G. C. BUTTS.

Belroi, Va., Nov. 8th, 1899.

(The above note does not change the opinion expressed by this editor that it is an imposition on the travelling public to be obliged to pay this wharfage of 20 cents. He does not claim infallibility for his statements, but having travelled somewhat in various portions of Virginia and having paid tolls elsewhere, he considered the toll in this case to be excessive and so stated. It is simply a matter of opinion, but this opinion has not been changed so far.

Now, as to the statement in the above note concerning "the complaints of people who are willing to use private property and not pay for it," if the writer of the note is referring to me as a person who is willing to use private property and not willing to pay for it, I have the following remarks to make:—

1st. Up to the present time I have tried to pay all my just debts, both private and public. There was no protest in this case against a charge for the use of the wharf, but against the amount of the charge. I uttered an exactly similar protest today against the increase in the price of oil by the Standard Oil Co. monopoly.

2. In paying for the use of private property, I have so far paid dollar for dollar. I have never had to request others to assist me in attending to my affairs, or to help me to arrange a compromise with my creditors.

3rd. In paying for the "use of private property" I have never been willing, so far, to call upon others to make contributions to help me meet my expenses. I do not think I ever would do so until I had cut off every article of expense not absolutely necessary to maintain life and decency.

4th. Having managed to get along up to the present time and pay all my debts, should I ever get into financial difficulties, I shall not trouble the writer of the note given above by selecting him to give me advice and counsel as to the best method of settling my affairs in an honorable manner. Nor, if I should ever find myself "willing to use private property and not pay for it," should I select him as the person to expound to me that rule of John Wesley's which "forbids borrowing without the probability of paying, or taking up goods without a probability of paying for them."

JAMES CANNON, JR.

COLPORTAGE.

Mr. Editor,—The pressing need existing that something be done towards establishing on a proper basis in our Conference the colportage business, induces me write this. It seems to me that as a Church we have done but little towards making colportage a success. We have it in name, but in reality we have no true colportage system in our Conference. The result is that our people are not half supplied with our religious books and papers and doctrinal works. It is surprising that as a Church we are so indifferent and supine in this matter. In the absence of live colporters to go among our people with our religious papers and books we can't have a colportage system worthy of the name. Colporters must be employed by some means to go among our people and visit and sell books and hold religious services. The field for this kind of work is open, and, I may say, white to the harvest. The Baptists are moving along the lines indicated and are meeting with success. We can do the same if we have a colportage system worthy of the name. Let our Conference establish such a system and let it be pushed with vigor, and the results will be most gratifying.

E. P. PARHAM.

DR. YOUNG'S FAREWELL SERMON.

Every pew in Epworth M. E. Church Sunday morning was filled. At night the largest audience that probably ever assembled there was present to hear Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., preach the closing sermon of his four years pastorate. Hundreds were unable to find even standing room, and reluctantly went away. It was truly an ovation to the able and popular pastor. The music by the choir was superb and in harmony with the occasion.

Below we give a synopsis of the discourse. Subject: "Jesus Crucified."

"The text was I Corinthians, chapter 2, verse 2: 'For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.' The sermon was a review of those principles underlying the sermons of the past four years. Among other things, Dr. Young said: I have preached to you nothing but Jesus Christ. I have tried to lead you into a

A PLEA FOR OUR GIRLS AND OUR HOMES.

I do not believe that women and girls are more important than men and boys. I do not think that they should be given any better opportunities. I was a boy once, and the fact that the past few years of my life have been devoted to the training of young girls, has not caused me to forget the great needs of my own sex. But I do believe that girls should have opportunities for training equal, for the purposes for which they were made by God, to those provided for boys. Each sex has its great life-work to perform. Man is the bread-winner; woman is the home-maker. The happiness of the present and the glory of the future both depend not simply on having bread enough and to spare, but upon the character of the surroundings in which the bread is to be eaten, and upon the qualities of the mind and heart of the one who is to direct and control the early years of the young life, before it becomes a part of the moving power of the great world. This important work of home-making and home training is peculiarly the work of woman. Unless she succeeds in this work the great purpose of her being has been thwarted. To fail at this point is to bring ruin upon us as a people. To succeed here is to insure a glorious victory in all other matters worth fighting for.

If we are to maintain our standing as a people, we must have inspiring and uplifting home life. But home life depends on our women, and hence our women must be inspiring and uplifting if our homes are to be so. It is not sufficient that our girls keep the Ten Commandments, or that they have beautiful faces and shapely figures. Moral worth is not to be underestimated, nor is physical beauty to be ignored, but the problems of the home and the direction of young life in this age require something more than these. The model home-maker needs a mental furnishing also to enable her to meet the responsibilities of her position. As a distinguished educator has said,—“She needs alertness and equanimity, judgment and skill, taste and tact, a nature enriched with a varied and exact knowledge, beautified by culture, characterized by strong through discipline, lofty in ideal and possessing the incomparable grace of unselfish ministry. Thus, and thus only, as wife, mother, embodiment and inspiration of the best in society, an ever new revelation of the meaning, beauty and power of the gospel of love and ministry, is she qualified to meet the varied demands of family life.” How many times when pressing upon a parent the necessity of educating his daughter I have been met with the reply that it was not worth while to spend any money on her for as soon as she stopped school she would fall in love with some fellow and get married. Could there be any better reason than this very one for educating one's daughter? Does not a man want the home of his own child to be a centre of light and power, and his own grand-children to have the best of training? And is not knowledge, culture, judgment, and discipline desirable in wives and mothers? Will not the people, whose homes are controlled by such women, become superior to those whose women are comparatively ignorant and uncultured, and lacking in judgment and self-control? There can be but one answer. The true progress of any people depends upon the position occupied by the home, and the home depends upon the women.

Now, ignore or minimize it as we may, Virginia is not keeping up in this matter. Millions of dollars are being spent in other States, where we are spending thousands, and thousands of girls in other States have advantages, where hundreds receive them in ours. In six years of travel from Lynchburg to the ocean, and from James River to the Carolina line, I have seen hundreds of bright, intelligent girls who were eager for higher training, but who, for lack of means, could not obtain it, and who have been obliged to be content with the meagre advantages of a cross-road public school with one teacher for thirty children of all grades, and that running barely six months in the year. There is no part of my work more delightful than to talk with some such girl, and, finding her worthy, to arrange matters so that she can have the opportunity for development, which her heart so much craves. I can but think of how much that training would do for her, and of what a difference there will be in her power as a home-maker. But there is no part more trying than to meet or receive a letter from such a girl after all the rooms in the building have been filled, and all the funds pledged that can be used for that purpose. I have gotten letters from girls begging to do any work for their training, but there was not a vacancy in the house and no work for them to do. It is surely a hard thing to say “No” to one asking for a chance to fit herself to do a greater work for God and humanity.

I come before the readers of this paper today to plead for these girls and for the homes over which, in a few years they will have the directive influence. No one man, no one school, no one Church can do all this work, and we cannot do it all at Blackstone. But every man, every school, every Church must do something, and our Church must do her part if she is to continue to hold her position as an arm of power in the work of saving the world. In no better or surer way can she save the world than by providing cultured, Christian women to make the home life of our State. If, as a Church, we are going to do this great work, it must be done through our schools, and as the school at Blackstone was built under the direct authority of the Church, and belongs to it, I give some reasons why our readers should join in the great Thank-offering Movement, and should help on the good work for girls and homes being done at Blackstone Institute.

(1.) WE NEED MORE ROOM. Every year since the school first opened, it has been full. The number on the roll has been decided so far by the number of beds which could be properly arranged in the building. The principal has sometimes stopped canvassing lest there should be more students than could be cared for. The aim of the school has been expressed in its motto,—“Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences, at the Lowest Possible Cost.” The present building has been stretched to its utmost capacity, and to get more room we must have a new wing, both for bedrooms and class-rooms. Without this added room we must stop where we are, and cut off every year many bright girls when if we only had the new wing we could train them for this great work in life. If we were not already doing all we could do we would not plead so persistently, but our case is peculiar. Every other Church institution has all the room it needs. We are curtailed in our work by lack of room. We beg our brethren and our sisters also to remember this as they make their contributions as large as possible to help us to do more of this great work of preparing Christian home-makers.

(2.) WE NEED MORE MONEY FOR LOAN FUNDS. We are already helping as many girls as we possibly can with our present limited means, but if we can get our new wing built, it would be a great delight to the management of the school to have enough loan funds to fill up every new room with girls who, without the aid of our loan fund, could not possibly attend school. If our Christian men and women would only look at this matter, not as the giving of charity which will simply help one individual, but as a very direct and positive means of elevating a whole household, and perhaps a whole neighborhood, they will see that it is one of the surest ways to establish the Master's kingdom in the earth. Will not our preachers and people help in carrying out this kind of work? We do not believe in treating any girls like paupers, and giving them outright, what other girls have to pay for, but we do believe in giving them a hand by the help of which they can pull themselves up and fit themselves to render better service for the Master.

Our Church has united with world-wide Methodism in the purpose to make a great Thank-offering to God for his great mercies to us in the past, and for the advancement of his kingdom in the coming years. Will it not redound to the glory of His name to make a worthy offering for the cultivation of noble women and, through them, for the elevation of home life?

If any one who reads this plea should become interested and desire to make an offering, large or small, to help the work at Blackstone for our girls and for our homes, if he will send the name and amount of subscription to the undersigned, it will be reported to his pastor and properly credited on the Thank-offering Fund of the charge to which the subscriber belongs, and can be paid in accordance with the plan of the General Conference—either in cash, or any time before January 1st, 1901, or be paid in installments any time within five years.

knowledge of a larger Christ, a Christ manifest in all things. I have sought to show the cross in all things and over all things. I have preached Christ, not a man. I have not forgotten to present the great doctrines of Christianity. Each of these has been presented at least once during the four years. But these have been so presented as to magnify Christ and to lead at last to him. Christ, other than Wesley, or Luther, or Calvin, has been held up before your admiring gaze, and sympathy has often been expressed with that cry which even the denominations are raising: 'Back to Christ.' It has been urged that what the world most needs to-day is Christ, Christianity, and not churchanity.

I have preached the Christ-life as practicable for each individual. So many in the church and out of it admire this life, but think of it as a dream, a picture, a pleasant song. They believe at some day in the future men may begin to live in that way; they postpone the day as a rule until the life in heaven comes upon us. I have cried out with John the Baptist: 'The kingdom of heaven is at hand.' He is a Christian, neither orthodox or not, who lives as Christ lived among men. The aim of the gospel is to make many Christs, and these Christs are perfected like the first, by the cross, and reach the divine ideal by bearing their cross. It has been evident to us all, as we pursued our studies, that the only joy is to be found in this life, because this life alone is a natural life, in harmony with God's purpose in our creation. By thus living, therefore, are we happy, as the eagle is content when the cage door is opened and he is permitted to soar aloft to his native place, or as the swift steed is most satisfied, when, freed from his stall, he flies over the plain. It has not been forgotten that there are losses and self-denials in the way of such a life. These have been fully presented, but at the same time we have seen that for such a life we would pay to give up all.

It has been my aim to preach a Christ whose ideal may be realized in society and all the public affairs of men. The new Jerusalem will come down among men if only we shall allow it to do so, and our citizenship, as St. Paul says, may be in heaven. The politics of city and of State may be clean. The various social vices may be uprooted. The labor problem may and must be answered in a way just to both sides in the controversy. We must pray and work for the making of the golden street, and the pearly gates of a city, into which the things that defile may not enter. I have tried to make you see how Christ is working in the world, and how the passing events illustrate his kingship. The war with Spain, the English war with the Boers, the interesting events occurring in China, the trial and final vindication of Dreyfus, all these have had their message for us, both by the failure of anti-Christian principles and by the victory of those teachings presented in the cross. We have seen all history preparing for his coming, and then all subsequent history a slow but sure development of his word and power among men, so that we may confidently expect the world one day to recognize him as indeed its king.

It has been my purpose to present the Christ as present in the thought of the world. We have seen that the heathen religions are but broken lights of our Master. The literature of the day, as well as of the past, tends to be permanent in so far as it glorifies our King. The myths and fables of all ages are evidently but a childish attempt to realize that which Christ fulfilled. Scientific thought once believed to be in rebellion against Jesus of Nazareth is now coming back, with the Magi, to the manger of Bethlehem. We expect the hour to come when he will be the chancellor of all the universities, when every thought will be brought into captivity to Him; when selfish thought shall become unselfish; materialistic thought shall become spiritual; when the aims of the great minds of the world shall be a larger knowledge of the unseen world; when the face of Christ shall be seen in every mountain transfigured, and His voice shall speak from every bush afire with the glory of God. I have done what I might, in a humble sphere, to hasten this glad hour—an hour which is bound to come.

"In the pursuit of this part of our humble study we have examined all the tendencies of modern thought, not for the sake of gratifying our curiosity or entertaining ourselves, but that we might know the better how to perform the task of exalting the Lord Jesus. We have seen how poor are all human schemes for the betterment of the individual or of society, and how Christ's theory alone commends itself to our better thought.

"I have preached to you this Christ as a Savior. This salvation is not so much a deliverance from punishment, as it is a deliverance from our sins, from all that is ignoble or out of harmony with our real, our better selves. Here and now, by living in the lower man, we find our hell. Here and now, by living in our higher selves, we find our heaven. It is Christ that saves us from all that is small and mean, and brings to us again the image of God. I have not insisted much upon anything with regard to this great salvation; but you have seen how great power has gone forth from that cross, the power of love, to transform the world, and to make men good. Before his purity men are ashamed to be impure. Before his heroism men are ashamed to be cowards. Before his self-sacrifice, men are ashamed to be selfish.

"I have preached this Christ as a maker of servants. The salvation of Christ is complete when His thought and life are reproduced in men. Of himself, Jesus said: 'I am among you as one that serveth.' This is after all to be a Christian—the rendering of loving service to men. Our wealth, our knowledge, ourselves, we hold in trust for one another's good. We neither live nor die unto ourselves.

"This Gospel I have tried to preach to you for four years. But I would that it had been done more worthily and more successfully."

At the close of the sermon the choir sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." During the singing of this hymn hundreds in the congregation wept freely, and Dr. Young was visibly affected. When the service ended the members of the church and congregation flocked to the altar to bid the retiring pastor adieu.

Dr. and Mrs. Young left on the Bay

Linesteamer for Baltimore, where they will spend a short vacation with relatives before going to Lynchburg.

DR. STEEL'S SERMON.

The Methodists had a Union Thanksgiving service at Centenary church. A large audience heard Rev. Dr. S. A. Steel preach. His text was Psalm 107-1: "O, give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; for His mercy endureth forever."

Dr. Steel said in part:

"It is a beautiful custom established now by long usage as a part of American life, for the President of the United States to designate one day in the year, and to invite all the people to unite in the grateful worship of Almighty God as the giver of all good. We have assembled this morning in response to this invitation and in concert with millions of our fellow citizens, to offer praise to the Most High for all His benefits.

"The recognition of God as the source of all our blessings is one of the highest duties of the Christian; for in him we live and move and have our being. Gratitude is one of the noblest sentiments that can animate the human mind. It yields the largest revenue of happiness. It clears the clouds of despondency from the sky. It revives hope in our hearts. It imparts strength to our hearts, reconciles us to our lot, sweetens our toil, and diffuses a divine radiance through all the avenues of life.

"We have abundant reason to give thanks to God, first for the prosperity that has marked the present year. We have had abundant harvests. Plenty has crowned our labors. The earth has yielded her increase, and we have harvested one of the largest crops America has ever known. This abundance has not been confined to localities, but is general throughout the country. On the Atlantic seaboard and the Pacific slopes, in Michigan and Mississippi, on the vast plains of Texas and the far valleys of Oregon, is the same story of fields bending under the weight of their glorious fruitage. Kansas, alone, boasts a crop of 360 million bushels of corn. There has been a marked revival in trade. The railroads are hardly able to handle the business of the country. The activity is in all departments; mills, factories, furnaces and mines—everywhere the stir of prosperous industry. Wages have advanced and prices improved. The laboring men are cheerful and the capitalists cannot complain. When we remember the condition of things a few years ago, with banks failing, credit wavering, gold hiding, trade suspended, strikes paralyzing labor, and general discontent threatening us with revolution, we may well be grateful for the stability and prosperity of this time.

"Let us be grateful for our country. There are many reasons why we, as a people, should rejoice. Nowhere else on earth perhaps can we find seventy-five millions of people living in the freedom and the happiness that bless the United States. It is due to our Christian civilization, to the prevalence of the moral sentiment of our social life, and the influence of those religious ideas and institutions which conserve and support the true interests of men. It is true that we are far from being a religious nation. There is deplorable corruption in high places and in law. The frequency of divorce, the secularizing of the sabbath, the lawlessness, the race conflict, the Mormon problem, the liquor traffic, the overcrowded cities, all these are dark plague spots on our country, and breed death and pestilence to our people. But over against each and all of them we may set the vigorous, moral earnestness that opposes them, and will never cease to oppose them. Our institutions are safe, liberties assured, our national prestige established, our domain so great that morning sun on one side blends with the evening hymn on the other, and the sun never sets on the flag. Every man sets in quiet and safety under his own vine and fig tree, and if he is not happy, it is his own fault.

"Above all let us praise God for His great salvation. All nature proclaims His love. It is written on the earth beneath our feet and the sky above our heads. It is inscribed on every leaf and flower. It whispers in every breeze and murmurs in every stream, and roars in every ocean and thunders in every storm. It sparkles in every star that gems the vault of heaven, and burns in every rolling sun. Creation is a monument of the love of God from the grain of sand on the seashore to the mighty orbs wheeling through the depths of space. But the cross is the crowning crowning achievement of infinite love. The seven-fold effulgence of divinity is seen in the Son of Man. The inner glory of the God-head is revealed in the miracle of redemption. Calvary enchants the universe. Angels, as well as men, bend with adoring wonder over the infinite mystery of the love that found a way to save a sinful world.

"God in the person of His Son,
Has all His mightiest works undone."
"O for such love, let fields and hills
Then lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak."

SERMON OF REV. W. B. BEAUCHAMP.

The Thanksgiving sermon preached at Broad-street church by Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, the new pastor, was a model one. Mr. Beauchamp said in part:

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto God.' It has become a custom with our people in this land on a set day every year to give public thanks to God by proclamation of President and Governor and in public service for His goodness to the nation. It certainly should be the natural promptings of every heart with which God has to deal, with every life which is associated by faith in Christ Jesus—it should be the natural outcome of that heart and that life to give thanks unto God. I love our people and I love our nation, and there never comes a time to me when everything looks dark or when I have any doubts about the outcome of these things to our heart, because above all I see and all I hear I believe in God. That was a splendid faith of our Robert Brownig, one of the greatest poets of modern times, when he sang, 'God is in the heaven, all is well with the earth,' and so I think always of God as above all and in all and through all, and whether we can see it or not, or whether it is given to us to understand the mysteries of everything in Church and State, nevertheless, it is all well because God doeth all things well.

SERMON OF REV. W. B. BEAUCHAMP.

"When God had made the land, the sea, the sky and all the waters beneath the earth, when he had created life and put in it every form, the first scripture we have is that 'God looked upon it all and said it was very good,' and so I think this life in the sight of God is good, and God in his own way, whether we see it or not, will work out all things for good.

"I give thanks to God tonight, and so I think all of us will, that the world in many respects, in many ways, and in many places, is growing better.

"I believe like Dr. Talmage once said in a lecture, that today is the best day the world has ever seen. I believe that this hour is the best hour that the world has ever seen, and that this minute is the very best minute that the world has ever known. I thank God for a faith in Christ Jesus that enables us to believe that through him and by his matchless power, his death and resurrection, that the world shall be God's and the world shall be satisfied with it, and you and I tonight have a reason personally in our lives why we should be profoundly thankful to God for his goodness to us.

"So many people complain and are discontented with their Church and lives on account of such little things, and I cannot but help looking you in the face and saying: Suppose Christ had been turned aside from His purpose by such a little thing and suppose Christ would grow weary with you and with me because of the many little things we do that are not in accord with a Christ spirit; suppose Christ were to say to you and to me, I will have nothing more to do with you because you have been untrue in this little matter, what would be our end and what would be our destination? And here we are tonight ready to take umbrage at the slightest thing, walking with our feelings on our sleeves and ready to feel hurt at any possible slight. I wish tonight that you and I could have in us the spirit that was in Christ Jesus. I was thinking as I came here tonight, that if the people who were at this Wednesday night service were to say that, by the grace of God from this night through to next Thanksgiving night, I will walk as Christ should walk, I will live as Christ would live, I will have the same spirit in me that was in Christ Jesus, I will seek day by day the unction from above that gives power and gives success and makes our lives effective. I was thinking what a great work and what a marvelous influence and what a power for good during this coming year. And as I thought of it I said, may God put this purpose into the hearts of these people as we come together for the first Wednesday night of the conference year to sing and to pray and to begin our mid-week work.

"I like to give thanks to God by word; I like on public occasions to make known to men everywhere that God has been good to me, and I feel in mine own heart tonight as the Psalmist sang: It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord. But do you know what I conceive to be the highest sort of thanksgiving, not by word or prayer or song, but I believe the thanksgiving most acceptable to God is the thanksgiving of deed and of living a life that shall be such a life, a walk that shall be such a walk, a character that shall be so Christly that that day by day our very lives shall be a thanksgiving to God for his mercies to us and his goodness. And those who have a tendency to complain if they would read the life of Christ and think of Gethsemane they would never utter another word of complaint, but would give thanks unto God day by day, morning and evening, for his kindness to the children of men. And I trust that you will not let tomorrow be a formal Thanksgiving, satisfied with the good things to eat, but that you will seek the poor and needy in the nooks and corners of the city and go to them with gifts and with messages of life; and so I trust, my brethren, that this day will not be a formal Thanksgiving with us, but will see some deed done, some word spoken, some prayer made that shall bring joy and gladness into some sad life and in the evening you will find that God will flood your heart with peace that passeth understanding and a joy that the world cannot steal away. And may God help us to do what will be most acceptable to Him."

DR. SMITH'S OPENING SERMON.

Rev. A. Coke Smith, D.D., the new pastor of Epworth M. E. Church, enter ed regularly upon his ministerial work Sunday, preaching to a large congregation in the morning on "Christ Crucified the Distinctive Mission of the Gospel." At night there was an overflow audience and many were turned away, being unable to obtain even standing room. The Doctor preached with great freedom, being fully imbued with the spirit of his subject, "The Gospel of the Kingdom"—text, Mark I., 14:15. He said in part:

"The preaching of John the Baptist gave voice again to the spirit of prophecy which had been silent for four centuries. The people crowded to his ministry, even Herod being an interested listener. He delivered the good news of the advent of the Kingdom of God; yet he died in a prison under the executioner's axe, at the instigation of a vile woman, whom he had offended by his honesty. On the death of John, Jesus left Judea, after a year of almost fruitless labor, and began in Galilee to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom of God. How he ended his life we know. Was this the good news and was this the Kingdom of God? Was an axe or a cross what it had to offer to those who entered it? Yet as we look back we see it was good news in spite of what it brought upon its founder and its early advocate—good news indeed, the best the world has ever heard. And it is the good news of a kingdom stronger than all earthly kingdoms, and one which is here to stay until it has brought all other kingdoms under its power. The gospel of the kingdom—these are the ideas; good news and good news of a kingdom—blessedness according to law backed by infinite power it was announced as good news at the advent when the angels sang their song of 'Peace on earth, good will to men.' It was a new revelation of God's attitude towards men. Christ came to reveal the father. The Old Testament had introduced God over the conscience; Christ came to introduce Him in the heart. 'He that hath seen me,' he said to Philip, 'hath seen the Father.'

"No longer enthroned in awful power, and forbidding approach to him, is he revealed, but with open hand and heart receiving all who will come. And it was good news of helpfulness as well. It found the world in miserable plight. The picture is black wherever looked at. The track of history was marked in blood. Man preyed on his fellow as the beasts of the forest. Life in its highest places was vile beyond description. Misery, crime and vice were everywhere. Into the world thus circumstanced this message of good news—of hopefulness—was dropped as the voice of God upon a stormy sea.

"Look at him who preached this good news. He was born in a manger and buried in a borrowed tomb. From birth to death he was poor; he had few influential friends, and these were afraid to avow their friendship till after his death; yet he was never morose or sour, but grandly calm, claiming the powers of heaven and earth as his own. He drew around him the penitent and needy, and sent them away with something of his own peace in the hearts. His life was a witness against evil in all its forms, and thus aroused outrageous men against him which grew until he stood condemned to die. Yet he faced death with perfect calmness, and in the shadow of the cross predicted the triumph of his kingdom. No influence in human history equals his.

"Look at the men whom he chose as his followers. They, too, were poor and unknown. They had no great mental gifts nor superior moral characters. They were filled with strange dreams of power, when called from their humble spheres to follow him. Yet by association with him they absorbed his spirit and went forth after his ascension to carry forward the work he had come to inaugurate. They remained poor and frictionless, yet shrank from no hardship, were never sour nor misanthropic, but always full of joy. What men had been seeking in wealth, power and pleasure, these men had found in Christ.

"What was the experience of these disciples, has been that of all his followers since. It may be that of every heart. Its constant refrain is 'rejoice.' And it is for all life. This condition of blessedness is not conditioned by circumstances. It spoke its message first to the poor and miserable and stilled their troubled hearts. They took up the song of good news and sent it down the ages. It has swelled like gathering winds and is sweeping the continents and islands with a mighty chorus of praise.

"Back of this gospel is God, the Almighty. The blessedness which it proclaims and brings is neither imaginary or transparent. Men may be imposed upon through the imagination and often are. The joys of wealth are sometimes experienced by those who fancy themselves rich, but facts prevailed after a while. The more we realize this power of the Kingdom of God the more real and persistent are the joys we have in it. The earth is transfigured, old things pass away, and all things become real.

"The Jews were looking for a kingdom in form; Christ came to establish a kingdom in fact. They asked him when the Kingdom of God would appear. He replied: 'The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation,' but it is 'within you.' It does not control by outward law, but rules by inward power. It is at once a despotism and a most perfect liberty. It can make any demands upon its subjects and they account it joy to obey.

"It guarantees the blessedness of the subject. The kingdom being within us, no land can take it from us. Life is determined in its quality from within and not from without. What we are determines what we have. The trained ear detects harmony everywhere; the untrained ear can never know the glories of music, though it dwell in the midst of the grandest harmonies. The untrained mind may sit amidst libraries, but they are not his nor ever can be. The loyal heart sees God, realizes his rule and rejoices in heaven because in his heart. The exhortation of the text comes to us, 'Change your minds and believe the good news.' Give God a chance to do for us what he is going to do—to set up his kingdom within us."—Virginian Pilot.

THE JUNIOR RECORDER.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., DECEMBER 17, 1899

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XII—FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 17.

Text of the Lesson. Mal. iii, 13, to iv, 6—Memory Verses, 16-18—Golden Text, Gal. vi, 7—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

13-15. "Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord." They said: "It is vain to serve God. What weariness! It does not pay to give Him a seventh of our time and a tenth of our increase. Those who do wickedly fare the best. God seems to delight in them." Thus they talked and reasoned from what they saw and rebelled against God. If this lesson comes to any who feel tempted to talk or think after this fashion, let them read carefully the experience and testimony of David and Asaph in Ps. xxxvii and lxxiii. Present circumstances do not always indicate who are blessed and who are not. Sight would decide in favor of Job's friends or the rich man of Luke xvi and others who had present prosperity, but there was an afterward which told.

16, 17. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard." There are those whose eyes have been anointed and opened (Rev. iii, 18; Eph. i, 18) and who, like Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham and Moses and others, see afar off and judge of present things in the light of the glorious future which awaits the believer (Heb. xi, 9, 10, 24-27). They believe that they are dear to God, dearly beloved by Him, because of the merits and sacrifice of His dear Son, and they rejoice in His present unchanging love. They speak of Him and His kingdom and encourage each other to faithfulness (Ex. xix, 5; I Pet. ii, 9), and the Lord hears it all, sees even the thoughts about Him in their hearts, and writes it all down in His book.

18. "Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked." The present life does not declare, neither does the exit out of the body always declare, who are righteous and who are wicked, but the resurrection and the return with Christ shall declare it. Though death feeds on all alike, the upright shall have dominion in the morning, for the ungodly shall not rise in the first resurrection nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous (Ps. xlix, 14; i, 5).

4-1. "For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven." The coming of Christ in the Old Testament is, I think, invariably His coming in glory with His saints to deliver Israel and take vengeance on her and His enemies (Zech. xiv, 5; Isa. xxxiv, 8; xxxv, 4, 10; II Thess. 1, 7-10). With this stage of His coming is associated the day of the Lord which is such a prominent topic in the Old Testament and also in the New, the day of the Lord's wrath (Zeph. i, 14, 18; ii, 1-3; Math. xxiv, 21, 29), just preceding His millennial kingdom. Behold the Lord cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity! After that Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the earth with fruit (Isa. xxvi, 21; xxvii, 6).

2. "But unto you that fear My name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in His wings." And the world sees the sun when it rises, and so when He comes in His glory as the Sun every eye shall see Him (Rev. i, 7). But there is a stage of His coming preceding this glorious appearing when the church shall see Him as the Morning Star being caught up into the air to meet Him on His way (Rev. ii, 28; xxii, 16; I Thess. iv, 16-18). He takes His body, the church, to His judgment seat, where each member is rewarded according to his works (Rom. xiv, 10; I Cor. v, 10; Rev. xxii, 12; Luke xiv, 14).

3. "And ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of Hosts." The association of His people with Him in the judgment is also stated in Ps. cxlix, 5-9; Rev. ii, 26-28; I Cor. vi, 2. He says that His saints do that which He does in them and by them. He will reward His saints according to their works, and yet all the works of every saint are His workings in them (Phil. ii, 13; Heb. xiii, 21). He asks us, who have been redeemed by His precious blood, to yield ourselves unto Him, to present our bodies a living sacrifice, to recognize our bodies as His temples, in which He has taken up His abode (Rom. vi, 13; xii, 1, 2; I Cor. vi, 19, 20), and then as we yield He works in us His good pleasure, the things which are pleasing in His sight, and then rewards us for letting Him do this.

4. "Remember ye the law of Moses, My servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments." It was when He gave them this law that He said, "If ye will obey My voice indeed and keep My covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me above all people" (Ex. xix, 5). They soon found that they were unequal to it, and so an ark was made, and the new tables were put in the ark. Believers learn that Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth (Rom. x, 4).

5. "Behold, I will send you Elijah, the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." John the Baptist said that he was not Elijah, and the Lord Jesus said after John was beheaded that Elijah would come. Gabriel said that John would come in the spirit and power of Elijah, and the Lord said that John would have been Elijah if they had received him (John i, 21; Luke i, 17; Math. xvii, 10-13; Math. xi, 14). Had they received John and Jesus the kingdom would have come; but, having rejected both, the kingdom, which was at hand, was postponed until His second coming (Luke xix, 11-13).

6. "Lest I come and smite the earth with curse." Thus ends the last book of the Old Testament as we have it arranged, and we think of the ending of the first book, "A coffin in Egypt," and contrast the ending of Revelation, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all." He who is the end of the law for righteousness to every believer was made a curse for us and died and was buried for us and rose from the dead and ascended to the right hand of God the Father, and we wait for Him to come again as Son of David, Son of Abraham, in whom all the promises shall be fulfilled (Math. i, 1; Rev. xxii, 16, 20). The curse rests upon all who are not in Christ (Gal. iii, 10, 13; John iii, 18), but He calls and reasons with all to come (Isa. i, 18; lv, 1; Math. xi, 27-29; Rev. xxii, 17) and says, "Him that cometh unto me I will in nowise cast out" (John vi, 37).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 17. "Teach Us to Pray."
Text. Luke xi, 1-13.

"Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

This is the law of all getting. It is the rule of spiritual growth. It is deeper than words. It is the whole being, desiring, hoping, eagerly anticipating. Seeking is more than looking; it is not at all like gazing. It is more soulful than watching. It is hunting with eyes open and ears alert and every sense at tension lest the desired thing escape.

It arises from sense of need. It is urgent, insistent and persistent. It cannot wait, but cannot be diverted. It can be deferred, but cannot be denied. It is reverent, but bold. Ah, this prayerful spirit is the one successful force in life! It holds the secret key of power. It says "Our Father." It knows Him and can look up in His face trustingly and hopefully. All is well, because we know He understands and will do the best for us possible. He dwells in all heavenly glory and beauty. He is the maker of all excellence, and everywhere He bringeth perfection. We adore and worship Him. Sincerely we desire His will in all things in us and around us. May it be visibly seen in all the affairs of men, as it is most truly present in the invisible realms of angelic spirits.

We need sustenance daily. Life depends on the things of earth, and yet our food can be had only as He causes things to grow. We are imperfect and often do the wrong and omit to do the right. We deeply desire forgiveness, for all this is transgression against Him. As we desire pardon, so do we freely and fully forgive all who have in any way wronged us. On all sides are temptations, and the power of evil is great. May we be so directed that we shall not be overcome, but be delivered from all dangers of falling.

A Sturdy Christian.

Such was Elijah Hedding. He belonged to a generation later than that of Asbury and Jesse Lee, but the perils and hardships of early pioneering and foundation laying were not yet past. His was the age also of consolidation, which calls for judgment, tact, steadiness of nerve, clearness of thought. His early life was passed on a farm in Vermont, though he was born in the state of New York. No meeting house was within miles of his home, but an elderly man and his wife, who were Methodists, held a meeting every Sunday in their house, and Hedding at 16 years of age was induced to read one of Wesley's sermons to them each week. In 1799 La was converted and soon began to preach. His early circuits often covered a score of towns and required a hundred miles of horseback riding a week on wilderness roads, swimming streams, sleeping in log huts open to the weather

SAVE, LORD, LEST WE PERISH!

BY THOMAS SULLIVAN.

Some trust in chariots, and some in horses, but we will remember the name of the Lord our God.—Psalms 68: 7.

God, our father's God, whose hand
Hath safely led us on our way;
With anxious hearts, throughout the land,
Thy people turn to Thee today.
Be near us Lord—Thy help we crave,
For Thou, and Thou alone, canst save.

We pray that lawless deeds, that shame
And outrage Justice, soon may cease.
That War—though fought in Freedom's name—
May end. O God, we long for Peace.
Our need is great! Thy help we crave!
Stretch forth Thy mighty hand and save.

For help and counsel, day by day,
Teach us to turn with Faith to Thee;
May we Thy righteous laws obey,
And find therein true Liberty.
From all the ills that now enslave,
We pray Thee, Lord, Thy people save.

THE STORY OF THE WONDERFUL GROWTH OF BETHANY SUNDAY SCHOOL OF PHILADELPHIA.—SOME OF ITS FEATURES

BEARDLESS youth, not twenty years of age, gathered together a little mission Sunday School of twenty-seven children in the house of a shoemaker among the ash-heaps of Philadelphia, February 14, 1838. Near that very spot there gathers, today, the largest Sunday School in America, and possibly the largest in the world. The same youth continues at the head, though come to manhood and crowned with wealth and honors. Possessed of a marvellous faculty for organization, he has, in the past forty-one years won success in whatever direction his mind has turned. The man is Hon. John Wanamaker. The Sunday School is Bethany Sunday School, of the Bethany Presbyterian Church. Instead of the ash heaps, are now miles of handsome homes, beautiful driveways and on every side the appearance of comfort if not elegance.

How was such a transformation wrought, and what helpful conclusions might be drawn adapted to any community? These are the questions one naturally asks when he surveys such an enormous stride from the mission Sunday School of twenty-seven members, to the present membership of 4,000 in attendance on a recent Sabbath. It was to learn the secret of this rapid growth, that I called upon Miss Annie S. Harlow, who teaches a class of 1,000 in the primary department, each Sabbath. Mr. Wanamaker is at present abroad. She said:

"Mr. Wanamaker's Bible class has a membership of 1,600. This is divided into bands and companies. A band has ten members. At the head of each band is a titheman, who is held responsible for looking after the attendance and general character and circumstances of each member of his band. Over the tithemen are centurions, who are responsible for the attendance of the tithemen and look after the general work of the class."

Light dawned upon my mind. Here was an instance of that rare gift of organization which reached from centre to circumference in every direction.

"But, Miss Harlow," said I, "how can you teach a class of 1,000 in the primary department? It might be possible for Mr. Wanamaker to have such a system among the older ones, but you cannot organize young children in such a way."

"To be sure," she replied, "I have my helpers. There is one lady to about every twelve children, who is responsible for their appearance, and looks after their circumstances."

"Mr. Wanamaker is thus able to learn all about every man, woman and child in the Sunday School," I said.

"Yes," she replied. "He not only can do this, but he can call nearly every member by name. Boys who have been away for years at school or in business, find that he has not forgotten their faces or their names in their absence, and he greets them heartily on their return."

"Wonderful," I said. "It is not strange that you have the largest Sunday School in America, with such a superintendent."

Bethany Sunday School is worth going a long way to see. You cannot see it, however, without traveling around some, as it is too large for even the big auditorium of Bethany Church. The Sunday School building proper is by the side of the church. Down stairs you find the primary department, and upstairs the Intermediate, while the big Bible class meets in the audience room of the church. There are an almost endless number of rooms with glass partitions, where the smaller classes of the intermediate teachers meet. To incite perfect attendance, bright colored badges are given each pupil every three months with one, two, three or four stars, according to the quarter and color according to year.

The parents have their interest aroused by the regular reports which are made to them by the teachers, and special exercises day each scholar and visitor is presented with a fan, which, on opening they find has an attractive program printed on it. Another Sunday, the school is turned into a Congress, and the independence and originality of the boys and girls are aroused.

The various departments are graded with care. To graduate from Miss Harlow's junior department, a child must be not less than 10 years old, be able to name the books of the Old and New Testament, repeat the Lord's prayer and the Twenty-third Psalm. When these conditions are met, to the satisfaction of all concerned, he is awarded a diploma and presented with a Bible. The one who is more than ordinarily proficient, is given a badge to which seals are attached. He now enters the intermediate grade upstairs. After eight or ten years in this department, he reaches that age where many boys and girls think they are too old for Sunday School. Bethany will not give him up, but enters him in Mr. Wanamaker's big Bible class, and the tithemen take a personal interest in his future welfare.

The manner of teaching the Sunday School lesson is of interest, and is well expressed by the definition of "true teaching" which was hung on the wall of the Trinity Methodist Church, of Chicago, during the recent summer session of Illinois Sunday School teachers. It said: "True teaching are held at the end of each quarter to which all parents are invited. On such days there is always something original, and in fact, the scholars at Bethany Sunday School are always looking for the unexpected to happen. Getting out of the ruts and keeping out of them, has been the watchword from the beginning. This does not involve throwing the International Lesson Leaves overboard, for Bethany follows these lessons prepared by the International Committee, with the greatest care. But the exercises are constantly varied. One Sunmoves from the simple to the complex, from facts easily understood, to those less understood, from observations in the material world, to observations in the spiritual world." In other words, it draws out the mind of the pupil and prepares it to accept conclusions in a spiritual sense which would not be accepted otherwise, and what is better, this method leaves a lasting impression on the mind. It is the same method Christ adopted 1900 years ago, but which so few teachers of the gospel use today.

Failures in Prayer.

A multitude of things are asked for from God which people never get, and then the failure is laid on prayer. Then the question is raised, "Does God always answer prayer?" and great mystery is thrown around the whole operation.

The mystery is not very deep. The failure was in the prayers and not in God. No use to try to carry water in a sieve. There was no bottom to that asking. It was no praying at all, only wishing for things, with no regard to God's conditions of promise. It is useless to try to tease things out of God or impose upon Him. Prayer is not an instrument put in our hands with which to pick from the tree of life any fruit we chance to fancy.

Have you ever learned to pray? Do you care to learn? Some of the lessons are hard to master, but the result is worth all the exertion. Jesus learned the lessons of prayer on mountain tops at night; in the wilderness, fasting and amid wild beasts and tempting spirits, in the thronging crowds of men, in Gethsemane, deserted by all friends; on Calvary between two thieves. His prayers prevailed. If yours fail, it would be well to ask Him to teach you how to pray and then to pray as He teaches you.

How Much?

How much will be left when all of self
Shall be washed from the soul away?
How much will be left when nature's dross
With the gold may no longer stay?

How much will remain and stand the test
When the true from the false shall part,
When the light of God shall dearly shine
And its rays illumine each heart?

What we have valued as precious gems
And have clasped with our jeweled rare,
When the Lord shall come to claim His own
Will He count with His treasures there?

THE CURSE OF DRINK

ENTAILS GREAT ANNUAL LOSS TO THE COUNTRY.

Money Now Spent For Rum, if Used to Buy Necessaries, Would Add Enormously to the Demand For Articles of Daily Use.

With a great display of justification, defenders of the liquor traffic claim for it that it is a wealth producing industry; that the money expended at the saloon for drink is not lost; that it simply changes ownership, continuing to circulate with the same debt paying energy as if it had been expended for food and raiment instead of whisky; that the toper's money helps to pay for the material and labor represented by the bar counter against which he leans when unable to stand alone, for the tumblers and decanters that adorn the sideboard and the mirrors and other elaborate furnishings usually found in drinking resorts, the cost of which represents crude material and the wages paid to labor for its manipulation all the way from source of supply to the finished product.

They do not state that the so called equivalent they deliver in liquid form has only a fictitious value and that it decreases the productive ability of the consumer without adding an iota of even temporary benefit to the man or his family, who may go supperless to bed for the want of food which the drink squandered money would buy. They do not state that if the money annually spent for drink plus the money the subject would earn each year through not having his earning capacity destroyed thereby were expended for food, clothing, furniture, homes and other legitimate comforts of life, such as are manufactured by the real wealth producing industries, there need not be an idle man in America or a comfortless home, an ignorant child or a pocket void of ready cash with which to defend against a "rainy day."

Most carefully compiled statistics estimate the present annual expenditure for strong drink at $12,000,000,000. Think of the labor and material this vast sum of money would pay for the manufacture of staple goods of merit! Add to it the value of earning capacity restored to the tippler, the lessened cost of enforcing law and order and of maintaining asylums, penal institutions and associated charities, and we obtain only a faint suggestion of what we might be as a nation were the blighting curse of rum removed.

Official figures from government reports and the census bulletin show that in 1890 the amount annually expended in the United States for liquor was $10,000,000,000, which was $630,000,000 more than the annual expenditure for flour, $470,000,000 more than for sawed lumber, $400,000,000 more than for all iron and steel products, $825,000,000 more than for public education and $845,000,000 more than for all church expenses, including foreign missions.

Statistics are of little value as object lessons except to students or investigators unless they are so tersely presented as to exhibit at a glance some astounding facts—such, for instance, as the penalties voluntarily assumed by men for the privilege of self degradation and the inheritance of disease and poverty, certain to follow in the wake of depraved habits.

In a more comprehensive manner perhaps than could be done by statistics Mr. Fernald, an authority on temperance economics, thus reviews the financial advantages of divorce from the miserable habits which now handicap the most successful accomplishments of every legitimate calling. He says:

"Tell the lumbermen of Michigan how many thousands of drinking farmers will then shingle their homes and barns or build new ones, how many thousands of houses will be built in all our suburbs for the workingmen when none of them drink away the money that might pay the rent or buy the cottage. Show the shoe manufacturers of Massachusetts what it means to take all the bare feet of drunkards' children off the ground. Let the iron men of Pennsylvania know that new stoves will at once be needed in 100,000 homes when the saloon keeper ceases to get the money.

"Tell the miners they will have work all the winter through, getting coal enough to put into these stoves. Tell the cotton planters of the south that there will be about 10,000,000 new calico dresses and aprons wanted as soon as the 2,000,000 tipplers cease to tinkle and go home with some spare change. Let the ranchmen of Dakota and New Mexico and Armour's men in Chicago know that there is going to be beef on thousands of tables where now are a few cold potatoes.

"Tell the woolgrowers of Ohio that everybody in this country is going to be wrapped in woolen and sleep under blankets when the blizzards blow and the thermometer ranges about zero and men no longer heat up with liquid fire in order to exterminate their families with atmospheric cold. Tell the grocer he can sell for cash and say goodbye to bad debts when the dimes no longer go into the saloon till. Tell the farmer there is going to be an unheard of demand for flour and meal and butter and cheese and eggs as soon as the bloated beer holders cease fostering that industry and begin filling out the hollow cheeks of wives and children with wholesome food."

There is not one who does not know positively that the crimes of drink are greater than can be depicted by language, yet the Juggernaut rolls on, shedding innocent blood while we seek some interposition from Divine Providence that will open the eyes of the blind to the dangers of the volcano over which slumbers our national and domestic life.—Banner of Gold.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

The friends of Bro. J. H. Riddick were very sorry that sickness prevented his being present at the session of the Annual Conference. Especially did they regret it in view of the fact that he retired from the active work. Bro. Riddick has served the Church for many years with faithfulness and zeal and retired with honor to the superannuated ranks. He has had a most painful affliction—a severe carbuncle—but is now recovering. He resides for the present at No. 111 North Harvie street, Richmond.

CUMBERLAND STREET M. E. CONGREGATION TO MOVE.

The members of the congregation of the Cumberland-street M. E. church will erect a new and handsome edifice at the corner of Freemason and Cumberland streets. The frequent announcement by The Landmark that this would be done, and as frequently contradicted, was officially verified by the Board of Stewards of the church last night. They accepted, most gratefully, the site for the building and authorized the pastor of the church to secure plans from architects in accordance with those prepared and submitted by him. The new church will cost about $50,000 and will be completed by November or December of next year.

The Cumberland-street M. E. church is one of the oldest and largest in the city. From its pulpit bishops and evangelists have expounded the Word of God to immense congregations. It is the mother church of Methodism in the city, and numbers among its children Epworth and Queen street churches, while Centenary could be called its grandchild. About nine years ago, the Rev. Dr. A. G. Brown was its pastor, its interior was extensively improved, new seats being put in and a new and handsome organ purchased. The congregations prior to these improvements had been very small, but under Dr. Brown's effective preaching and masterly manner of conducting church affairs, they gradually increased in size. Then came the Rev. Dr. W. G. Starr as pastor, and for some time the edifice was too small for all who desired to attend Sunday night services. The church again resumed its wonted place for position in influence for good.

After several years the Rev. Dr. H. E. Johnson was sent here as the pastor. He is an able man and a church builder. During forty-three years in the ministry he has erected twenty-one churches and ten parsonages. He realized that new life in his membership would be of great value, and believed this would come with a new building. He believed there was no better site in the city than that at the corner of Freemason and Cumberland streets, and through the magnificent generosity of Mr. Frank Dusch secured the desired location and on it will soon erect a handsome, modern house of worship.

A meeting of the Board of Stewards was held in the pastor's study last night, when Mr. Dusch formally donated to the church the three lots at the corner mentioned, which are valued at $15,500. The donation was accepted and a resolution of thanks for the generous gift was heartily and unanimously adopted. The Board then authorized the Rev. Dr. Johnson to have the plans as submitted by him prepared by an architect at once. This will be done.

These plans call for a building somewhat like Epworth church. It will be constructed of granite and will front on Freemason street, the lot on this street being 58 feet 10 inches front and running back to Cumberland street 144 feet. At the corner there will be a handsome tower and two entrances in this with another at the other corner of the building.

The floor of the main auditorium will be sloped slightly and there will be but one gallery in the building, that across the front facing the preacher. The Sunday school room and infant class room will be in the rear of the church, separated just at the pulpit by sixteen feet doors on weights, which, when opened, will throw all the rooms into one with the pulpit in the center. There will be no choir loft, but the singers with the organ will stand just to the left of the preacher on the main floor.

The building will stand about ten feet from the street, and there will be a handsome grass plot in front. There will be separate entrances to the Sunday school and infant class rooms.

In every particular the new house of worship will be modern, and when completed will be one of the most attractive in the city. Ground will be broken for it about April, and Dr. Johnson thinks it will be completed by November. Everything will be entirely new except the pews and the organ, which were put in the present church about eight or nine years ago. The old building will be sold and already has an offer been made for it.

The direct origin of this new building is peculiarly interesting. Several months ago Mr. Dusch bought one of the three lots and one morning was having it cleared away preparatory to having erected thereon a residence. Dr. Johnson happened to pass at the time and seeing Mr. Dusch said: "You are trespassing sir." "I don't understand you," said Mr. Dusch. "I bought this lot and paid for it." "But," said the Doctor, "I pre-empted this lot for the Lord eighteen months ago." Mr. Dusch at once understood what the preacher meant, and after the conversation had continued some time about a church building on the site Mr. Dusch said he would think over the matter. He at once stopped work and afterwards bought the two other lots, which were presented to the church last night.—Norfolk Landmark.

The Sunday school room of the Centenary Methodist Church, at Queen and Bouh streets, was filled last night, when its congregation gathered together there to bid farewell to the Reverend William H. Edwards, late pastor of the church, but who was made presiding elder of the Farmville district at the last Virginia Conference of the Methodist Church. There was another object which the congregation over which Mr. Edwards was pastor had in view last night, and this was the presentation to him of a silver soap tureen and plate, suitably inscribed with his name and the date of this gift from the congregation to him.

Mr. Luther W. White was chosen to present the silver to Dr. Edwards, and in doing this he made a pleasing little address, telling the reverend gentleman how grieved the congregation was that he was obliged to leave them, and assuring him that their prayers would follow him for his success in his new field of labor.

The Reverend Mr. Edwards, replying, expressed his surprise at the gift and thanks for their kind expression of regard for him, and assured his hearers that he would always remember the pleasant days he had lived in Norfolk.

Everybody then crowded around the minister, told him good-bye and wished him every kind of happiness in his new home. Among those present at this very pleasant gathering was the Rev. E. H. Rawlings, pastor of the Monumental Methodist Church, of Portsmouth, Va.—Landmark.

The Richmond Times says:

The congregation of St. James' Methodist Church held a meeting last night in welcome to their newly appointed pastor, Rev. R. H. Bennett, who arrived in Richmond last evening from Norfolk.

The welcome was a most hearty one, and short addresses were made by many members of the church.

After all who desired had spoken, Mr. Bennett replied in a short talk, and expressed his thanks and pleasant surprise at this warm reception and hearty welcome. He said he thought his appointments were always directed by Providence, and especially so in this case, and with the co-operation of the church he would do all in his power to make this year the most prosperous in the history of St. James.

The farewell reception given to Rev. Bernard F. Lipscomb at Moss Hall by the Epworth League of the Washington avenue Methodist church last night was well attended by the friends of the popular pastor.

No formal program was rendered, the evening being spent in pleasant conversation, those assembled breaking up into cozy little groups in which laughter and good fellowship were rife.

Among those in attendance were Rev. W. R. Motley, of the Thirteenth street Christian church, and Rev. C. C. Cox and wife, of the First Baptist church. These two of Mr. Lipscomb's fellow workers bidding him good bye with apparent regret.

The interest which Rev. Mr. Lipscomb manifested in the work of the Epworth League during his pastorate here has endeared him to the young people of the church especially, and they turned on in full force last night to bid him farewell and God speed in his new field of labor.

At Monumental M. E. Church a large assemblage welcomed the Rev. E. H. Rawlings and his charming wife. The reception, which was given under the auspices of the Epworth League, was held in the lecture which was beautifully decorated with seasonable greenery, to which a dash of color was given by ribbons and bunting of yellow and white, the League's colors. Shaded lamps illumined the apartment, which presented a scene of life and animation throughout the evening.—Landmark.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, the new pastor of Washington-street M. E. Church, occupied his pulpit for the first time yesterday, morning and evening. He preached two excellent sermons and received a cordial welcome from the congregation. The appointment of Rev. Mr. Lipscomb to the pastorate of Washington-street church was the only change made in Petersburg by the recent appointments of the Virginia Methodist Conference.—Landmark.

The congregation of Wright Memorial M. E. Church tendered their new pastor, the Rev. Geo. E. Booker, an elegant reception. The Sunday-school room was beautifully decorated with palms, ferns and cut flowers. Music and good fellowship.

lowship tended to make the evening most enjoyable. A bountiful supper, consisting of the good things of the season, was served, the tables being very handsomely decorated.

Rev. Mr. Robertson and family left Wednesday for their new home. A large number of his old members and friends were at Nassawadox to see them off. Brother Robertson has served us four years and done good work on his circuit. He leaves behind many strong friends and no enemies.—Enterprise.

The annual meeting of the Board of Stewards of the High-street Methodist Episcopal church was held last night, when the following officers were elected: President, J. C. Rowell; Vice-President, R. E. Gill; Secretary, J. R. Harrison; Treasurer, J. H. Gray. The board decided to increase the pay of the pastor, Rev. E. T. Dadmun, the second time during his ministry that this has been done. The congregation has not only spent thousands of dollars in the improvement and enlargement of their church edifice, but has promptly met its every obligation, and has rapidly grown in membership and usefulness.

Rev. J. R. Griffith returned Thursday from Conference. Our people welcomed him again as their pastor. He has been in our immediate neighborhood for 7 years, longer than any other Methodist preacher ever staid and still the people hear him gladly. He has buried more of our dead and married more of our people than any other preacher in the county.—Enterprise.

The Norfolk Landmark prints the following special from Boykin's:

Upon the call of the pastor, Rev. T. O. Edwards, the Board of Stewards of Boykin's circuit met this week. There was an unusually large attendance, one being necessarily detained. Great interest was manifested and intelligent plans adopted. The returned minister was given a warm welcome and an assurance of hearty co-operation. The report made by this charge the past year was the most successful in many respects ever made. The outlook is exceedingly promising for the very finest results.

Yesterday the town people greatly surprised and delighted the Methodist minister and his household by storming them with baskets and waiters containing the substantial and delicacies of the season. So severe was the pelting that the tables groaned under the weight. The Methodists were ably supported in their efforts by Baptists and Episcopalians, there being no representative of any other denomination in the place.

A Thanksgiving sermon was preached in the Methodist church by the pastor, Rev. T. O. Edwards. A large crowd was present.

DEATH OF MRS. SHEPARD.

The citizens were much shocked and grieved this morning to learn of the sudden death of Mrs. W. A. Shepard. She died during last night and it was not discovered until this morning when her servant went to attend her. Mrs. Shepard was taken suddenly ill about two weeks ago while in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond. She was removed to the Retreat for the Sick in that city and remained there until she had recovered sufficiently to come to her home here. After arriving here she was ill for several days but was able yesterday to take a short drive.

Mrs. Shepard was the widow of the late Major W. A. Shepard, for years professor of chemistry of Randolph-Macon College and sister of Mrs. R. B. Davis of Petersburg. Her husband died also suddenly about four years ago.

She was very popular and much beloved in Ashland, where she will be severely missed in both religious and social circles. The remains will be conveyed to Petersburg and interred beside those of her late husband.

The funeral services will be conducted in Duncan Memorial church tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 o'clock and the remains taken to Petersburg on the 2:30 train.

WHY THE CONFEDERACY FAILED

Joel Chandler Harris contributes to the Christmas number of the Saturday Evening Post an authentic account of the daring attempt to warn the Confederate cabinet of the great movement whereby Grant and Sherman were to co-operate in crushing the Confederacy. How the attempt failed and why it failed are the subjects of a chapter of the little-known history of the Secret Service. Mr. Harris has his facts first hand, and he has woven them into a story of such absorbing interest that it might easily be mistaken for pure fiction. The Christmas number of the Post will be on all news-stands Dec. 21.

FARMVILLE, VA.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 136. A Larger Boarding Patronage than any other Methodist Institution in the State!

WHY

ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING

PRINCIPLE.

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

A Practical Arrangement Described by an Ohio Farmer.

A very ingenious arrangement used by an enterprising farm butcher for hanging hogs was originally described and illustrated in Ohio Farmer. It would come in very handy on many farms at this season. Mr. J. E. Wing says: It is very cheap and easily made, and any bright boy can put it together in a day. By its use a boy can easily raise and hang a hog that weighs 400 pounds, and the frame will hold six or more after being dressed, and six 400 pound hogs are as many as any ordinary family ought to kill and eat in one year in Ohio.

FIG. 1.

DEVICE FOR HANGING A HOG.

Fig. 1 shows the side view of the frame. It is made altogether of oak, 2 by 4 stuff, and the legs are bolted on so that they are easily taken off to store or carry about. They are set staggered, as shown at the end view, Fig. 2. The large wheel, B, is about two feet in diameter, and the spindle on the same axle, C, is four inches, so that one pound pulled down on the rope running over B pulls up six pounds on the rope winding on the small spindle, C. The crank, D, also multiplies the power about three times, so that one pound of force supplied to the crank lifts about 18 pounds theoretically. Of course the friction cuts this down somewhat, but the heaviest part of the pig killing is the easiest when this machine is used. The large wheel, B, is easily made by sawing out two disks of hard plank and putting in pins around the circle, spacing the disks about four inches apart and putting the circle of pins about four inches from the circumference.

A, in Fig. 2, shows the iron support for a short crosspiece that holds up the small end of the spindle on which the weight is raised. The bend is made so that the gambrel sticks, which rest on the two stringers, may be slid past the pieces, A, without being caught.

This idea has more genuine merit than nine-tenths of the things that are patented every day.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings
of All Denominations.

The ideal home is where the purse is open alike to husband and wife.—
Rev. John L. Scudder, Congregational, Jersey City.

The Highest Blessing.

To see God and to know him is the highest blessing which the soul can enjoy.—Rev. Dr. E. H. Ward, Episcopalian, Pittsburg.

Strongest Power.

The mightiest power in our land is the power of the gospel, without which anarchy and socialism would be rampant everywhere.—Rev. Dr. E. K. Bell, Lutheran, Baltimore.

Earliest Associations.

The first friendships, first books, first prayers and earliest associations make a man's life. It is not the last but the first impression which counts.
—Rev. William Rader, Congregational,
San Francisco.

Duty and Heroism.

True heroism is always linked with duty. It is never a mere rash or foolish deed. It is a deed done from feelings of love or loyalty to humanity.—Bishop Fallows, Reformed Episcopal, Chicago.

The Scriptures.

We may smile as much as we choose at Scripture, yet every word that God has spoken will be fulfilled. There will be compensations and adjustments, and there will be opportunities for growth.—Rev. A. A. Jennings, Universalist, Toledo.

How to Live Well.

It is not how long but how well we live. We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths. We should count life by heart throbs. He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest and acts the best.—Rev. Dr. Charles E.
Locke, Methodist, Buffalo.

Personality.

There is no teaching or learning except through personality. Christianity is the religion of personality. That which is for man's good must first of all be human and personal.—President
Benjamin Ide Wheeler, University of California, Presbyterian, San Francisco.

Profitableness of Godliness.

Godliness—that is, God likeness—is profitable unto all things, for all time and eternity. It has the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come, a hundredfold in this life and life eternal in the world to come.—Rev.
John P. Brushingham, D. D., Methodist, Chicago.

God's Word Abideth Forever.

There is no other standard of authority, no other law or words, which has stood as God's word has stood. In all times, in all places, in all circumstances, God's word abideth over the law and the gospel, the unerring guide unto salvation and everlasting life.

Innocence and Character.

Innocence is paper that is white because the child has never tried to write. Character is that paper still kept white, though covered with blinding tears or perhaps blotted with black spots that will at last be written over with the superscription of Jesus Christ.

—Rev. Dr. Newall Dwight Hillis,
Plymouth Church, Brooklyn.

Christianity and Commerce.

Christianity introduced the true conception of God into the world and the new and true conception of man. Hope for this life, the hope of progress and advancement, arises in human hearts.
Commerce has the benefit of this and grows with the spread of Christian truth.—Rev. Dr. Marcus A. Brown-son, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Life's Deepest Truths.

Nature is not merely an open book, but a living schoolmistress. Go into the open and learn some of the deepest truths of life. Do not the wasting cloud, the flowing river, the crumbling mountain, the sinking sun and the falling leaf strongly suggest the fact of universal death? We do fade.—Rev. H.
H. Packer, Congregational, Atlanta.

Golden Rule the Solution.

The labor problem of today was made by Christianity, and it will be solved by Christianity. Christianity has brought the laboring man up from slavery, and when capital and labor act strictly in accordance with the golden rule in their dealings with each other all conflict will end.—Rev. Frank W.
Gunsaulus, Congregational, Chicago.

The Pilgrim's Rest.

There is a time coming when the burdens will be laid down and the pilgrim shall rest beneath the tree of life in the heavenly country.

There is an hour of peaceful rest
To mourning wanderers given;
There is a joy for souls distressed,
A balm for every wounded breast—

—Rev. Dr. F. S. Briggs, Methodist, St.
Louis.

Mission of the Church.

The church of Christ in America has an opportunity and a mission to those who have broken the home ties and are adrift upon the sea of life, beyond any church in the world. If she would only make a special effort to reach out after the homeless ones, I believe the Heavenly Father would signally bless this paternal act on the part of his church.—Rev. George B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver.

Way to Happiness.

Diligence is necessary to usefulness.
God's people have been his from all eternity, the "elect," and therefore their salvation is sure, but to make it manifest they must "work out" what God "works in" them. They can assure themselves of their salvation or manifest it to others only through charity. This assurance stimulates to work, to usefulness, and it is the only way to real happiness, as only he can be happy who feels that naught can harm him, for his sins are forgiven, and he is in God's keeping.—Rev. Dr.
Theron H. Rice, Presbyterian, Atlanta.

DRINK HAS KILLED MY BRAW LADDIE AT LAST.

They lifted the coffin and bore it away.
While the neighbors stood hushed round the door;
His coffin whose arm should have now been the stay
Of his mother, a widow, and poor.
Then a burst of the anguish she could not control,
From the lips of the stricken one passed,
"Oh, if I but ken't it was well wi' his soul!
Drink has killed my braw laddie at last!"

Poor, heart-broken mourner, what whisper of peace
Can reach to her depth of despair?
Who can point to the land where all sorrow shall cease,
When she feels that he will not be there?
For a horror of darkness, far deeper than night,
On the fate of her dear one is cast,
Since the demon of drink, in its pit-iless might,
Has killed her braw laddie at last.
And he was so bonnie, his blue eyes' glad beams
Her toils and her cares would beguile;
And his smile was so sweet in his baby-hood's dreams,
Sure he learned from the angels that smile.
How little she thought, as she smoothed his soft hair,
And its rings round her fingers she passed,
That the spirit which spares not the strong and fair
Would kill her braw laddie at last!
Oh if in those innocent days he had died,
As the primroses die in the spring,
A vision of peace in her heart would abide,
For death has been robbed of its sting.
She had thought of him safe from temp-tation's fierce strife,
In the haven of bliss anchored fast;
But now she looks back on his sinblighted life—
Drink has killed her braw laddie at last!
She is not alone in her terrible woe—
How many are mourning today;
Sad mothers whose tears in their bitterness flow
For their lost one laid low in the clay!
They have loved them in spite of the sorrow and the shame
That a shade on their dwelling have cast;
But the power which has tarnished their honor and name—
The drink-fiend has killed them at last.
O ye on whose breast there is pillowed
today
A dear little flaxen-haired head,
Not lovelier your darling now than were they
Whose mothers thus weep for their dead,
Turn ye yourselves from the source of their woe;
Let wisdom be learned from the past,
And clasp not in friendship the hand of the foe
Who may kill your braw laddie at last.

"THUNDER- ING."

At the last session of the Virginia
Conference, during the debate on the Barbee & Smith scandal, after recounting the high standing of the other members of the Book Committee, as compared with the speakers opposed to their actions, and after expressing his indifference (?) to the ethical views of three certain brethren, when compared with the dazzling (?)

interpretations of the professor of Moral Philosophy at the Vanderbilt University, Dr. Denny, (the author, by the way, of the new book on "Projected Mental States"), the member of the Book Committee from Virginia, Dr.
Whitehead, declared, with great emphasis, that "the thunder from the other side" would be heard at the next General Conference, and then—well, we were not told what would happen then, but were left to carry away in our own imagination visions of black, wrathful and windy storm clouds, made more awful by continuous flashes of lurid light, followed by fearful and terrifying peals of thunder. Riding upon the fore-front of the cloud, with reins in hand, furnishing wind for the cloud from distended jaws, stands the chairman of the Book Committee, while peering over his shoulder to make sure that the wind does not fail, is seen the face of E. C. Reeves, the attorney for Barbee & Smith, and member of the Book Committee from Holston. In various parts of the cloud are various members of the Book Committee, making "thunder" big peals, little peals,— from low growls to resounding claps—while in the pit of the cloud, St. Stahlman can be seen emitting lurid tongues of flame which flash across the faces of his near "friends and neighbors," Barbee & Smith, and are by them transmitted to the outer part of the cloud, to be hurled upon occasion wherever needed. Upon the back edge of the cloud are certain editors of the OFFICIAL Barbee & Smith organs, echoing from time to time the sounds produced by the Book Committee, but unable to hear any sounds from any other quarter. "THE THUNDER
FROM THE OTHER SIDE"—awful, portentous sound! Well may the critics and opposers of Barbee & Smith and the Book Committee draw a long breath, and—go on as before, defending the fair fame of our beloved Church, holding to the truth as they see them, despite all threats and "THUNDER FROM THE OTHER SIDE."

But in the meanwhile it is best to know what is going on, and if the figure of Thunder is to be used to conjure with to keep posted as to the claps and peals from different quarters. The Recorder is glad to be able to report the following claps and peals:

(1.) The Conference (North-West Mexican Mission) voted unanimously, without debate, to call a session of the General Conference to settle the Publishing House affair. The next session will be held at El Paso, Texas, and we give you a cordial invitation to attend, and after the Conference, run down to Chihuahua and see how Collegio Palmore has grown.—St. Louis Advocate.

The above is quite a sharp clap from the South-west.

(2.) "A resolution endorsing the withdrawal of Rev. W. P. Lovejoy, D. D., from the Book Committee was adopted."—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

This resolution, from the largest Conference in the Church, is a long drawn out peal from over 100,000 members of the South-East.

(3.) "The following resolutions concerning the Publishing House claim, were presented through W. R. Richardson:

"Whereas, there is widespread dissatisfaction among the preachers and members of our Church in this Conference, on account of the methods employed by the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the collection of the war claim against the United States government, and,

"Whereas, the United States Senate, after thorough investigation, has declared that the Senate was deceived by our Book Agents in collecting said claim, and,

"Whereas, the General Conference in re-electing Barbee & Smith, book agents, was not in possession of the facts afterwards developed in connection with the methods used in collecting this claim; therefore,

"Resolved, 1st. That the South Carolina Conference, now in session, desires to express disapproval of the deceptive methods used by the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in aiding E. B. Stahlman in prosecuting the claim before the Senate of the United States.

"Resolved, 2. That this Conference asks the resignation of Barbee & Smith, in the interest of peace and harmony in the Church, from the office which they now hold."—Southern Christian Advocate.

The resolutions were adopted by a vote of 100 to 74.

These resolutions are truly a reverberating peal of thunder from the South Carolina brethren.

Our readers will remember that last year the Barbee and Smith crowd rushed through resolutions early in the session, and by a parliamentary trick, prevented a reconsideration. When Dr. Carlisle, who intended to speak against the "House," reached the Conference, he found that the matter had been rushed through under the leadership of John O. Wilson, the South Carolina member of the Publishing Interests Committee of the last General Conference, and the editor of the Southern Advocate. He knew of Dr. Carlisle's views. In fact, following the example of Dr. Hoss, he had refused to publish an article by Dr. Carlisle, condemning the transaction. Dr. Carlisle, however, secured the floor on a question of personal privilege, and read the article which had been rejected as improper for publication. Since that time the South Carolina brethren have been thinking, and although the Southern Advocate has been a party to the "conspiracy of silence," facts have been obtained from other sources, and at this Conference the "thunder" rolled, and one more of the great Conferences of the Church has swept into line and demanded the retirement of Barbee & Smith.

The above examples of "thundering" are given that the brethren may not be too much cast down by the threat at our Conference of hearing "THE THUNDER FROM THE OTHER SIDE."

CORRESPONDENCE

LOUISVILLE NOTES AND OTHERS.

Our last Annual Conference saw many changes in our Louisville pastors. Dr. Chapman, after three years of service at Walnut street, was transferred to the South-West Missouri Conference, and stationed at Troost-avenue. This change is one of the strongest in the Southern Church. Dr. Chapman is a scholarly, genial gentleman. As an Archaeologist he has no superior in our Church. Just start him on the Monuments and he soon builds a monument in your memory to his accurate knowledge of the inscriptions. The Doctor could do an invaluable service to the Church by some constructive work. What bearing has the monuments on Biblical criticism?

A transfer, Dr. Lloyd, from Texas, succeeds Dr. Chapman at Old Walnut-street. Dr. Lloyd was for some years president of the Polytechnic Institute, at Fort Worth. He is well equipped for his work. He is careful and painstaking. His mind runs to statistics, which he is able to group in an impressive and convincing way. As a gentleman, he is genial and magnetic. As a preacher, he is reputed strong and spiritual. Walnut-street Methodists are delighted with Dr. Lloyd.

Another transfer occupies the pulpit at Broadway. Dr. Hill is a familiar name to Methodists and laymen. The presiding elder, in welcoming him at the Ministers' Conference, said that there was no prejudice against transfers in the Louisville Conference, especially when they did not, as Dr. Hill, have anything to do with their coming. The Doctor spoke up, saying that he had some knowledge of it before hand. Dr. Hill is the most successful pastor in the Southern Methodist Church. He has been tried in a greater variety of churches, in wider territory than any other man in the Church, and has always met expectations. Even in Baltimore, the city in which the Giraffes lift their lofty heads with longing vision for greener trees, the Doctor found the richest herbage. I do not mean by the "green trees" to refer to a selfish spirit on the part of the brethren, but to their laudable desire to build up the Church. That the Doctor will make things hum at Broadway, which is now so well equipped for aggressive labor, goes without saying. Dr. Hill once succeeded a very diligent pastor, who said to him after he had been at his work for a few weeks, "There is one person on your Record that I have not been able to find." "And who is that?" replied the Doctor. "It is Mrs. A." "O," said the Doctor, "I have found her and had prayers with her." The Doctor grows eloquent in decrying cast-iron system in pastoral work. An article from him on "How to be a pastor" would furnish interesting reading.

I am favored by being sent back to North-Avenue. The Lord is smiling upon us. The Sabbath before Thanksgiving we took up the collection for the new Church edifice. We have already a lecture-room that cost about $10,000. We aim to build a church that, with its equipment, will cost some $65,000. This will give us a Church complete which will cost in the neighborhood of $105,000. We realized in good subscriptions $40,000. This will be increased by $5,000 more. The subscription was accounted a wonderful one. So great is my admiration for Epworth church and Epworth people that it pains me very much to see a handsomer church in Louisville than theirs, but really I can't help it. The proximity of the stone quarries of Indiana makes material comparatively cheap. Pleasantly aside, I have seen nothing in Louisville to compare to the richness and beauty of the interior of Epworth.

Our Conference met at Glasgow. Key presided, giving general satisfaction. Of course, the Publishing House matter came up. The matter of most comment was the decided stand that Dr. Tigert took on the Publishing House claim. I did not hear his speech, but I am told that it was a masterly production, with the Senate record as the basis. St. Stahlman came in for his chastisement. The speech made a profound impression. Dr. Tigert has increased his hold on this Conference very materially. The resolutions which passed, whilst mild, yet were strong enough to suggest and ask for the resignation of Barbee & Smith.

A STORY.

John E. Massy said that a deputation of colored Baptist deacons waited on him in Richmond and asked him how they might get rid of their pastor, who was very unpopular with his sable flock. Mr. Massey said, "The usual custom is to ask him to resign." "But, Boss," replied they, "we don't offered him his resignation two or the times already, but he won't accept."

Of course, this story is simply a story, and has no application. The grace of resignation might be cultivated in the vicinity of Nashville; such as would strengthen the Church. You know that any grace, assiduously cultivated by our membership, or any part thereof, strengthens the whole body.

The Old Virginia has met. I see many changes have taken place. The talented and invincible Steel is back at the Capitol of the Confederacy, where his early years were fruitful in good works. He will charm the Old Dominion with his graceful eloquence and uplift by the power of his pure life. Centenary church is to be congratulated in having this orator and Christian for its pastor. A special annex ought to be built for the Legislature, for I predict that Steel will have that body en masse. It will be a fine chance to do more missionary work. The best and most useful years of Steel's life lie before him. He is rich in learning and, I might add, experience.

Old Beauchamp has the City Hall to hold down. It is hard to say which has the tougher job—Steel with the Legislature, or Beauchamp with the City Hall. Will Beauchamp succeed in his new charge? Succeed anywhere! He is learned and pious, and a careful organizer; a good preacher—but that laugh! That will carry him safely anywhere. It ripples over with clean merriment, and has octaves of undertones and under tones, all melodies. Had rather have a dose of Beauchamp's than a ton of rhubarb and Homeopathic pills. If a people appreciate brains and industry, and religion, and fine social qualities, Beauchamp will finally be Bishop. If not, I entertain for him the hope of his finally ascending to the imperial heights of the Presiding Eldership. If he should reach this lofty place, and from this cloud-capped summit look down upon us lesser men, walking in the humbler vales, I am sure he will send down to us a rich, melodious cackle to cheer us on the way. How can he get along without Rawlings. I am afraid that his good humor may, to some extent, die, deprived of the constant excitement of his friend. God, bless all that delightful set of young preachers who, by their love and friendship, made Virginia dear to the heart of the writer.

The best church in Richmond is St. James, to which Bennett has been appointed. A strong people and strong preacher have been thrown providentially together. St. James will blossom as a rose. My heart goes out to that people in love. Did they not bear with my infirmities for two long years? Did they not minister to me in body and in soul? St. James is the place where the good members of other Richmond churches go when they die.

Enough of this letter. More might crowd out some "pot metal," which might bring sorrow to judicious readers and kindly critics of the Recorder.

ENLARGED HEART.

DEAR BROTHEE CANNON:

I am suffering from an attack of enlargement of the heart. I caught it in Petersburg at our Annual Conference. I have not consulted any physician, no do I think I shall do so. It is not in their line, and I do not think they can prescribe a proper remedy for it.

I saw many dear old brethren, and heard such kind, loving words from their lips that my heart was enlarged, and the only remedy that seems advisable is to love them back again and to pray for them.

Our blessed Master was there, and in softest, sweetest accents was saying: "By this shall men know that ye are my disciples when ye have love one to another." The spirit that moved the beloved disciple to write, "Little Children, Love One Another," was there, and suffering brethren were there, to supply whose needs the brethren opened their hands and gave according to their ability and even beyond it. No wonder that I returned from Conference with my heart enlarged—loving the brethren better than I ever did before!

"David says, 'I will run the way of thy commandments when thou shall enlarge my heart." Then I ought to be more submissive, more patient, more trustful, more hopeful than ever before.

REFLECTIONS SUGGESTED BY THE DEPARTING CENTURY.

The person who can look upon events moral, religious, commercial and industrial, which the closing years of this century have witnessed, unmoved, is not to be envied, surely. It is like taking one's breath away to try to recall the deeds, the inventions, the progress, the improvements which, even during the past hundred years, have been in rapid succession following each other in the world. In this paper I shall not attempt to even glance at these, but I desire to dwell a little on the religious outlook here in Virginia. This will be a fair index of the prospects for the Lord's cause in other sections and among other denominations.

To hear the pastors give in their reports at the last Conference was refreshing indeed to the lover of Zion. Materially and spiritually the Lord's cause has greatly prospered during the last year, and the absence of croaking showed the progress the Church of God is making in our grand old Commonwealth. If there was a long-faced preacher in our body I didn't know it, although after the appointments were read, such an individual might have been found.

Thoroughly convinced for one, am I, that Christianity, instead of dying out in the world, is more lively and a greater power today than it has ever been. The grand contributions that the members of the Methodist Church in this closing century are laying upon her altars for Christian education is a most hopeful sign. Such giving will gain the approbation of Jesus and will prove good preparation for the spiritual baptism which we all should seek diligently and prayerfully for.

I trust that the dawning of the Twentieth century will witness in all Methodism a spirit of brotherly love, and zeal, and holiness, and purity that will make the Church an aggressive force for her Lord.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, Under the law of our Church, our beloved Presiding Elder, Rev. Thomas H. Campbell, cannot be returned to us, and

Whereas, We have always welcomed him in our midst, and have always been edified by his pure Gospel sermons, and

Whereas, He has proven himself a friend to us at all times, in trouble as well as in joy, therefore, be it Resolved by the Fourth Quarterly Conference of High-street Church:

1. That we part with him in sorrow, and pray our Heavenly Father to long spare his useful life. We heartily commend him to any work to which he may be assigned.

2. That a copy of this paper be spread upon our Minutes, a copy given to Bro. Campbell, and copies sent to the "Richmond Christian Advocate," and the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER for publication. W. M. WINFREE, Petersburg, Nov. 13. Rec. Steward.

THE MIRED WHEEL OF METHODISM.

The mired wheel of Methodism today is the failure of the Sunday-school pupils to hear the Gospel from the pulpit. How shall this wheel be prized out?

1. During the session of the school let each teacher ask the exact number in the class who attended regular morning preaching on the previous Sunday. At the close of the school let the superintendent call the classes by number and each teacher respond with the number attending preaching the previous Sunday, while the secretary jots down the number from each class. After the school adjourns, the secretary will add up his figures and thus ascertain the exact number who attended preaching, as well as the exact number who did not attend.

2. Just before the preacher takes his text or begins his sermon let him call for these numbers from the Sunday-school secretary. This will reveal the exact and up-to-date relation of the school to the church, not only to the school, but also to the pastor and parents. Then let the preachers say: "Hereafter I expect to prepare and preach sermons on a level with the heads of the children." Whenever he begins such preaching his sermons will strike the exact level of the hearts of the parents. And in a few weeks the pews will be crowded with both parents and children. And in a few months there will be the most normal, healthful and most lasting revival in that church that was ever known in that community.

3. Immediately after the blessing at the dinner table of that first Sunday's investigation, let the parents take an exact family census as to who attended and who did not attend preaching, and how many were kept away from either Sunday-school or sermon by an excuse which the Lord Jesus would receive.

Then let the following resolution be adopted unanimously:

"Resolved, That hereafter this household (both parents and children) will thoroughly prepare the Sunday-school lesson by studying it together during the days of each week, and on Sunday the entire family will attend together both the Sunday-school and preaching services."

When dinner is ended let the whole family stand and repeat in concert the following definition: "The Sunday-school is the church, assembled on the Sabbath day, for the purpose of studying and teaching, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, the Word of God."

THANK OFFERING MEETING.

The Executive Committee of the Virginia Conference Board of Education, and Drs. W. W. Smith and W. G. Starr, general managers of the canvass for the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering, held a meeting in Norfolk of several hours' duration. The greater portion of the time was taken up in the discussion as to the best plans to be adopted for the routine work of the Board in the management of the canvass. Two or three different circular letters on different phases of the question were drafted and ordered to be printed and sent out. Dr. W. W. Smith having been elected general manager of the canvass in the Baltimore Conference, Dr. W. G. Starr was requested by the Board to take charge of the canvass in Richmond and arrange with the preachers in that city the best plan for the work. In pursuance of the resolutions adopted at the last Annual Conference, requesting the Board of Education to appoint two preachers and two laymen to act together with the presiding elder in conjunction with the plans of the Board of Education, the following were appointed:

Richmond District—Dr. J. P. Garland (presiding elder), Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, Rev. J. T. Whitley, Mr. W. H. Allison, Mr. O. D. Batchelor.

West Richmond District—Dr. W. V. Tudor (presiding elder), Rev. J. C. Reed, Rev. Oscar Littleton, Mr. G. I. Hunt, Mr. John Morton.

Randolph-Macon District—Rev. J. H. Amies (presiding elder), Dr. W. G. Starr, Rev. W. H. Atwill, Captain Richard Irby, Mr. J. W. C. Davis.

Charlottesville District—Rev. J. D. Hank (presiding elder), Rev. C. L. Bane, Rev. Ernest Stevens, Prof. F. H. Smith, Captain C. E. Vawter.

Lynchburg District—Dr. Paul Whitehead (presiding elder), Rev. T. McN. Simpson, Rev. E. E. Harrell, Mr. R. W. Peatross, Dr. J. M. Williams.

Farmville District—Rev. W. H. Edwards (presiding elder), Rev. J. S. Hunter, Rev. James Cannon, Jr., Judge W. E. Homes, Mr. George P. Adams.

Norfolk and Eastern Shore—Dr. W. E. Judkins (presiding elder), Dr. A. Coke Smith, Dr. S. S. Lambeth, Mr. W. W. Vicar, Dr. J. E. Mapp.

Portsmouth District—Rev. W. C. Vaden (presiding elder), Rev. J. T. Mastin, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, Mr. J. C. Parker, Mr. G. L. Neville.

Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder of the Portsmouth District, preached at McKendree Sunday morning to the edification of a large congregation. At night he occupied the pulpit at Trinity, and was heard with great delight by a large and thoughtful congregation. His discourse was founded on John 3:2—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

The subject was introduced by a reference to the character of John, the beloved disciple, who, the speaker said, was always with and nearest to Christ while he was on earth, and who leaned upon His bosom at the "last supper." He emphasized this thought in a striking manner, showing wherein John was in a position to know who are the sons of God.

Entering more fully upon his theme Mr. Vaden said: "We are the sons of God by the spirit of adoption, having been born into the Kingdom of God, through the redemption purchased in the sacrificial death, resurrection and glorious ascension of our Divine Lord.

It doth not yet appear what we shall be.' Here John reminds us of what we do not know; but we sometimes meditate on this, and often visions of the future rise before us and give us some faint and imperfect conceptions of our future home. We love to think on those mansions of light, their walls of jasper and streets of pure gold, and the redeemed in the midst thereof, and of the perfect state of bliss of God's own elect, who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

"But let us take a look into the future. John says, 'But when He appears we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.' To be like Christ we must have a glorious body like His, free from the corruptions of the flesh. And just here let me say that when we reach that glorified state of existence, shut in from sin, sorrow and death, our greatest joy will be to see Jesus face to face and crown him who prepared the way for us to become citizens and fellow saints of this glorious abode, as 'King of Kings and Lord of Lords.' In view of the prospect before us let us continue to serve our Master here in every department of life, ever carrying about us the marks of the Lord Jesus who, while on earth, went about doing good, that at last we may share with Him the glories of that upper and better kingdom."

The sermon, of which the above is a very imperfect outline, was delivered in the speaker's own impressive style, and was full of comfort to all true believers.

The Methodist preachers met at the usual hour Monday morning, the president, Rev. R. M. Chandler, presiding. Prayer by Rev. J. W. Crider.

The following reports were heard from the churches:

Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith had a large congregation at the morning service and an overflow audience at night at Epworth church, and received two new members.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had one accession to membership at Huntersville.

Rev. J. W. Nicholson, of South Princess Anne circuit, reported a good day at Charity church Sunday. The congregation will erect a new and improved house of worship in the spring.

Rev. George Wesley Jones had large congregations. The presiding elder, Rev. W. C. Vaden, preached at night; received two new members.

Rev. Paul Bradley reported two new members at Liberty-street, South Norfolk.

On motion of Rev. W. C. Vaden the chair appointed a committee of three, consisting of Drs. A. Coke Smith, of Epworth; Rev. R. F. Beadles, of Central, Portsmouth, and Rev. J. T. Mastin, of Chestnut-street, Berkley, to formulate a plan for reaching Methodists residing in this section who have not united with any Methodist church, and induce them to join the church nearest to them. The committee will report the plan at the next meeting.

After prayer by Rev. W. C. Vaden, the meeting adjourned to the first Monday in January, 1900.

The building committee of the Cumberland street M. E. church held a meet-

THE FIRST SORROW.

The first bereavement of the Conference year has come to the home of our beloved brother, W. T. Williams. His wife died at the home of friends in Petersburg on Sunday night, Dec. 10th. She had been ill for many weeks, and was moved from Norfolk with the hope that it might benefit her health. She was Miss Mary Moore, the daughter of Dr. Moore, of King William county. The body was interred in Hollywood, and the spirit returned unto God. The sympathy and prayers of the brethren are with our brother.

ing yesterday and organized by electing the following officers:

Chairman—Frank Dusch.

Assistant Chairman—R. B. Featress,

Secretary—George W. Gilbert.

Treasurer—Walter J. Simmons.

Advisory Board—Rev. H. E. Johnson, D. D., W. H. Fletcher.

The committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.

Rev. W. G. Starr, D. D., president of Randolph-Macon College, has written a letter to the president of the Union Mission, Mr. S. Q. Collins, formally accepting the invitation to be the speaker on the occasion of its forthcoming anniversary on the second Sunday in January 1900. The Doctor will deliver three addresses, two in the nature of sermons—one at the Presbyterian church at 11 a.

m., the other at Epworth M. E. church at 7:30 p. m. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock a grand mass-meeting will be held at the Freeman-street Baptist church, when he will deliver an address.—Virginia Pilot.

At a meeting of the building committee of the Court-street Methodist church held last Monday night, it was resolved to issue to architects invitations for plans for the new church building. The following extracts are taken from a letter which has been sent to architects in this city, Norfolk, New York, Boston, Chicago, etc.:

"The undersigned invite preliminary floor plan and one perspective for a church for the Court street M. E. church, South, corner Court and Seventh streets, Lynchburg, Va., till Monday noon, January 15th, 1900, upon the following requirements:

"Auditorium to seat 700, no galleries, Sunday school to seat about 700 with galleries. The Sunday-school will need a library room about 15x20 and about 24 class rooms (to include infant or primary class rooms communicating, each about 15x18), these to centre on the superintendent's stand. The main floor must also have pastor's study about 15x16; ladies' parlor about 16x18; Epworth League parlor about 16x18 and suitable lavatories. The auditorium and Sunday-school room to be arranged so they can be thrown into one, organ and choir near the speaker on same level.

"The committee will pay for the best plan as above $150, for the second best $125, for the third best $100; said plans to be the property of the committee. If the committee decides to use the best plan submitted on the above basis they will pay to the architect who furnishes the same $750 additional for the complete plans, specifications and details."

The letter was signed by Captain R. H. T. Adams, chairman, and Mr. E. P. Thornhill, secretary and treasurer of the committee.—Lynchburg News.

Rev. R. H. Bennett, of St. James Methodist church, will preach a sermon on the question of church teas and supports, for the purpose of raising money. The sermon will be delivered tomorrow night.

The Union Class meeting of Richmond and Manchester was held Sunday afternoon at Barton Heights Methodist church. The meeting was well attended and helpful to all.

At the Methodist ministers meeting yesterday, a committee comprising Revs. R. H. Bennett, W. B. Beauchamp, and J. S. Peters was chosen to suggest the amount that each church should contribute on Christmas morning for the City Mission. The amount to be taken up has been placed at $800.

Rev. W. G. Starr, D. D., president of Randolph-Macon College, occupied the pulpit at Laurel-street Methodist church in the morning; preached an eloquent sermon from the words, "We can do nothing against the truth." At the conclusion of the sermon he presented the claim of the Twentieth Century Fund.—Richmond Times.

Bishop Galloway has accepted the invitation officially extended to him by the Ecumenical Committee of the Eastern Section through the Secretary,

Rev. John Bond, to deliver the opening sermon at the Ecumenical Conference of Methodism in 1901. The Conference will meet in Wesley's Chapel, City Road, London. Bishop Galloway is no stranger to the Wesleyans of England, having once represented our Church at their Conference as fraternal messenger. He then gained a great name for himself. He will worthily represent Southern Methodism before this great Ecumenical body, and sustain his reputation as a faithful and eloquent preacher.

A dispatch from Bishop Morrison, dated Paige, Tex., November 13, 1899, conveyed the following information: "Our Mexican Methodists pledge $5,000 for education." This generous pledge ought to stimulate our Methodists at home. We believe it will.—Nashville Advocate.

BAH!

The New Orleans Christian Advocate makes the following just comment on the sermon of Bishop Nelson of the Episcopal Church delivered in Atlanta the Sabbath before the vote was taken in the House on the Willingham bill. The Bishop's sermon has no doubt given the liquor crowd great delight and they endorse his utterances to the man:

"Bishop Nelson, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, preached a sermon in Atlanta last Sunday in opposition to prohibition. He declares that prohibition increases intemperance. Every saloon-keeper, brewer and distiller in the land will shout, 'That's so,' and yet they spend money by tens of thousands to defeat prohibition in any and every State in which the question is agitated. It would be business-like to contribute to the treasury of the prohibits and help them to get a prohibitory law in every State, as this would greatly help their business. But, then, they are like the good bishop; they don't want to see the nation get on a big drunk, and so they fight prohibition in the interest of the temperance cause. Bah!"

Nearly half of the $5,000,000 which the Presbyterian Church in Ireland proposes to raise for a Twentieth Century Fund has already been subscribed. They have about 600 congregations and 500,000 people.

Old John Street Church in New York City still retains the original altar and the clock which Mr. Wesley sent over, which, though more than a century old, yet keeps good time. It was in this Church that Asbury preached his first sermon.

Ten denominations have established and maintain missions in Alaska, and nine of them are Protestant. The Northern Presbyterian Church has eight churches with about 1,000 members. Six of these churches are native and two white.

The Wesleyan Church of South Africa has started its Twentieth Century Fund, and expects to raise $250,000 by December 1900. It is thought that all the native Christians will raise half a guinea each and the English members three guineas.

The Mormon Church in Utah shows a membership of 127,294, being 23,000 families. The Church has 12 apostles, 58 patriarchs, 3,885 seventies, 3,16 high priests, 11,000 elders, 1,500 bishops, and 4,400 deacons, being an official for each six persons.

Bishop Key spoke some wise words when he told the preachers of the Indian Mission Conference that they should either study or retire, since thinking men "do not like to be beaten over the head all the year with a blader."—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

DEATH OF SIR WILLIAM DAWSON

Sir William Dawson, the late principal of McGill College, Montreal, Canada, and one of the most celebrated geologists of modern times, died Nov. 19. He was born in Nova Scotia in 1720, and after studying at the University of Edinburgh returned home and devoted himself to natural history and geology of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. He embodied these investigations in his "Acadian Geology." In 1842 and 1852 he accompanied Sir Charles Lyell in his explorations. His title to fame rests perhaps more upon the discovery of the Bozoon Canadianese of the Laurentian limestone, the oldest form of animal life, than upon any other discoveries or researches which he made. He was a very prolific writer upon geological subjects, and he has appeared as a scientific lecturer in the United States. He was a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George and was appointed president of the Royal Society of Canada, and in 1884 he was knighted. In 1886 he was president of the British Association. The Montreal meeting was the first ever held out of the British Isles.

The December number of the American Illustrated Methodist Magazine has for frontispiece a portrait of Rev. William Nast, the John Wesley of German Methodism. The interesting and eventful life of Dr. Nast is ably treated in an article in the same issue.

Bishop Charles B. Galloway contributes an interesting article on Blennerhassett. The story of Herman Blennerhassett, seldom told and almost forgotten, possesses a weird mingling of romance and tragedy, and forms a part of one of the most thrilling chapters of our national history—that in which Aaron Burr played such a conspicuous part.

The tenth chapter of the "Illustrated History of Methodism" is "The First Decade of American Methodism." It takes up the early preachers who began to plant societies in New York, Philadelphia, Maryland, and elsewhere in the colonies. The personalities of Robert Strawbridge, Captain Webb, Philip Embury, Barbara Heck, and others among the pioneers of American Methodism, are sympathetically dealt with. The article covers the period immediately preceding the American Revolution, and is based on the latest researches into the incidents of that stirring time.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XIII—FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 24.

Text of the Lesson, Isa. ix, 2-7—Memory Verses, 6, 7—Golden Text, Luke ii, 11—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

2. "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light." The Holy Spirit says by Matthew that there was a fulfillment of this and the previous verse when Jesus left Nazareth and came and dwelt in Capernaum (Math. iv, 13-16). The first verse, according to the R. V., says that in the former time He brought into contempt the land of Zebulun and Naphtali, but in the latter time hath He made it glorious. Sin always brings desolation and affliction, but the presence of Christ brings light and life. Apart from Him is darkness, but He is the Light of the world and also the Resurrection. The prophet, by the Spirit, sees not only the awful reality of the present distress and its cause, but he also sees the glorious future of the nation when a king shall reign in righteousness, the Lord alone be exalted and the people themselves be all righteous (chapters xxxii, 1; ii, 11, 17; lx, 21.) If believers were filled with the Spirit, the ungodly, who live and walk in darkness, would see the light of Christ in our lives (Math. v, 16).

3. "They joy before Thee, according to the joy in harvest." The R. V. says in the first clause, "Thou hast increased the joy." When the Great Deliverer comes, bringing light and life and health, the joy must be increased. It will be everlasting joy. They shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow, and sighing shall flee away. The Lord shall be their everlasting light and their God their glory (Isa. xxxv, 10; lx, 19). Only in the Lord and before the Lord is there true joy, but every believer who is willing to walk uprightly, believing just what God says, may be filled with joy and peace in believing (Rom. xv, 13; Gen. xvii, 1; Deut. xvi, 11; Ps. xvi, 11; Phil. iv, 4). The things which will be true of the nation when the kingdom comes may be true now in the experience of the individual, for when He giveth quietness who then can make trouble, whether against a nation or against a man only? (Job xxxiv, 29.) The secret is in Isa. xii, 2.

4. "For Thou hast broken the yoke of this burden." He shall break all yokes and rods of the oppressor. He who tells us to undo heavy burdens and let the oppressed go free and break every yoke (lviii, 6), how much more will He do this, and all that He asks us to do in His name He is ready to do in us. The only real Christian life is when God works in us both to will and to do the things which are pleasing in His sight (Phil. ii, 13; Heb. xiii, 21). He says to all the weary and heavy laden, Take my yoke upon you and learn of me (Math. xi, 9), the context showing that that yoke was complete submission to His Father's will, a heart that could say under greatest difficulties: "I thank Thee, O Father. Even so, Father."

5. According to the R. V., this verse reads, "For all the armor of the armed man in the tumult, and the garments rolled in blood shall even be for burning." Every association against God or His people shall be broken in pieces, and all their counsel shall come to naught. Therefore it becomes us to say, "I will wait upon the Lord; I will look for Him" (chapter viii, 9, 10, 17). When He comes in His glory for Israel's benefit and to establish His kingdom, it will be with fire and vengeance upon all who persisted in refusing Him (Ps. i, 3; Isa. xxxiv, 8; II Thess. i, 7, 8).

6. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." This is similar to chapter vii, 14. It takes us back to Gen. iii, 15, and the phrase "the seed of the woman." It is in line also with Mic. v, 2, where He is said to come out of Bethlehem. It is seen fulfilled in Luke ii, 6-14, and the angel said to the shepherds, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour who is Christ the Lord." Another prophecy concerning His youth is found in Hos. xi, 1, "I called my son out of Egypt." Compare Math. ii, 15. The whole story of His humiliation, sufferings, death, resurrection and glorious kingdom is all written in the law, the prophets and the Psalms. The present interval between His rejection and His return to set up His kingdom was not revealed to them as it is to us. Paul speaks of this interval in which the body of Christ is being gathered from Jews and gentiles as a mystery kept secret since the world began, but revealed specially to Him (Rom. xvi, 25, 26; Eph. iii, 5, 6; Col. i, 26). "The government shall be upon His shoulder." The next verse says that it shall be a government of peace, and of its increase there shall be no end and that it shall be upon the throne of David. Now, when we compare this with such passages as II Sam. vii, 12, 16; Acts ii, 30; Jer. iii, 17; Ezek. xxxvii, 21, 22, 24; Dan. vii, 27; Luke i, 32, 33, and remember that the New Testament begins and ends with Jesus Christ as Son of David, it does seem unmistakably plain that this coming kingdom is to have Israel for its center, Jerusalem for its capital, the Lord Jesus Christ for its King and the whole earth as its territory. How comforting to know that where He was once so humiliated He shall yet be so greatly exalted! Then shall the full meaning of each of these great names be seen, and all creation and all creatures shall do Him honor (Ps. lxxii, 11; Rev. v, 9-14). In connection with the name "Wonderful" see Judg. xiii, 18, and remember that the word "hard" in Jer. xxxii, 17, 27, is just the same. "Counselor" suggests Ps. xxxii, 8; xxxiii, 11. The mighty God, the Everlasting Father, declares most powerfully that Jesus is God, the Son is divine, or, as He said Himself, "I and my Father are one." "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father" (John x, 30; xiv, 9).

7. "The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this." He who cleansed the temple and caused His disciples to remember that these words were written (John ii, 17) will do it in His time, and all the world shall see. Read and believe Isa. xiv, 24, and be established. Now let Him who is the Peace of God and our Peace rule in our hearts and manage all our affairs and so fill us with His Spirit that zeal to give the gospel to every creature shall consume us and thus His body be completed and the kingdom come (Col. iii, 15; Eph. ii, 14; Phil. iv, 6, 7). If we are only yielded and willing, He will accomplish all His pleasure.

"Heir of all things."

There is great fascination in the thought of coming into an inheritance for which some one else has labored. The leisure and luxury and opportunities given by wealth are very attractive, and those who are able to command them in early life often seem to get more enjoyment out of them than those who have spent a long life of toil before they have been able to afford the comforts of life. There is much of pride if not of arrogance, however, to which one is liable who inherits wealth instead of earning it. Those who get much with little exertion are also liable to be envied by many who are obliged to do without the things which large wealth can supply. Earthly heritages and legacies are liable to many incumbrances and embarrassments. Their advantages are often more than counterbalanced by their burdens. To be heir or heiress of great estates does not of itself insure happiness or well being. Too many times ruin follows for soul and body. Riches may curse instead of bless. Birth cannot secure worth and ability. Some things are impossible to those born heirs to great possessions, some things of great value to character.

Jesus is heir of all things, in all worlds and in all ages, because He is Son of the Eternal God. But how different is His fitness to obtain and use these than can be the case with any other person. Higher than all angels and archangel in nature, the very image of the Divine person, having all His glory and brightness, the very Maker of the worlds, He has all wisdom, power and excellent goodness. He knows and feels and acts as God because He is truly Son of God. But, more than this, He is also Man. He "emptied" Himself, divested Himself of all that which would prevent Him becoming a man under all human limitations and earthly circumstances. He learned as we learn. He felt as we feel. He suffered as we suffer. He met sin, temptation, privation, scorn, opposition, hatred, love, fidelity, friendship and all the conflicting conditions of life as we meet them. He overcame their evils and achieved a perfect human life, a divinely human character, the first in all ages. He became type of a humanity redeemed from all iniquity, purified, made holy, the image of the invisible Deity, God in flesh. He wrought out a unique personality. He became the first fruit of the tree of divinely human life. He suffered, but conquered.

He is worthy both because of His eternal, underived nature and His work and character accomplished in time in human body. He is able to rule all

WORK IN THE POWER OF THE SPIRIT.

REALLY, now, Uncle Bez," said the Man-Who-Wants-to-Whoop-Things-up, "don't you sometimes get awfully discouraged because things move so slow? I don't see how you stand it! Now, if I were running that old church, I'd get some life into it, I tell you! I'd get out a brass band and some hand-bills, if necessary, to let folks know I was on earth! I'd fill up the Sunday School if prizes and treats would bring in the boys and girls. I'd make my prayer meetings attractive if I had to send to New York for popular attractions. I'd keep things a-moving, and give 'em a regular hot old time in Zion, as it were, and wake up some of you dead fellows!"

"It seems to me," replied Uncle Bez, "that I remember something in the Bible like this: 'Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.'

"I don't believe that God intends that His church shall try to capture the world by storm.

"I don't believe that He wants us to force ourselves into the kingdom nor to drag others there by main strength or brute force.

"I don't believe He expects us to catch all the fish in the sea in one week or in one year.

"I don't believe He expects the church to save souls on the whole-sale job-lots plan; or that He expects the individual to become perfect by one mighty effort.

"No, God doesn't work that way. He might cause an oak tree to shoot up from an acorn, in one night's time, but He doesn't. He gives it several centuries to grow. He might bring an island up out of the sea at a moment's notice, but instead, the coral insects live and die for ages before their bodies bring the island above the waves. He might have sent His angels from heaven to proclaim the gospel of redemption to every creature that lives, but instead it has taken 1900 years for the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to reach every land. The earthquake and the tornado are manifestations of God's power, to be sure, but His hand is more surely shown in Nature by the minute processes, the slow work of ages.

"I don't believe I'd put too much dependence upon 'whooping things up.' It isn't necessary to be a cyclonic Christian, in order to be an earnest Christian. The great trouble with us poor mortals is that we want to accomplish everything in a day, and when we can't do that, we get discouraged, and don't care whether we ever do it or not. We are like the Israelites when they were re-building the temple. They started out with a fine rush, but when troubles came they got discouraged and then indifferent, and finally decided that they never could do the work, and that it didn't make any great difference whether they did or not. It was then that God's prophets spoke words of encouragement to them. Zechariah told his visions and gave them God's promise that Zerubbabel, who had laid the foundations of the house, should also finish it. What if they were harassed by enemies? It is not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith Jehovah of hosts. Beside the candlesticks of Israel's light and hope, grow two olive trees with golden pipes through which the trees empty themselves of oil into the bowls of the lamps. These are God's anointed ones, and while Israel abides by them, the light of her hope will burn. No

"I know men used to think that they could earn salvation by their own acts. I know they used to be taught that they could snatch salvation by the power of doing penance; I know they used to try, by the rack and thumb-screw, to force men into the kingdom of God, but, happily, God's children have learned better, and now depend upon the Divine Spirit. The Christian's highest ambition is to be a co-worker with God, in making a new man of himself, in making a new world on earth, and in this gigantic work, he has the consciousness of God's presence and help.

"I don't mean, my brother, that a man shouldn't try to do all he can. I don't mean to find any excuse for sloth or indifference. He must work; work for his own salvation and for the advancement of God's cause on earth; work hard and faithfully, but he must not depend upon his own might or power, his own wit or cleverness, his own worth, but entirely upon the strength which comes from above. And he must not be discouraged because Rome is not built in a day; because he does not attain perfection immediately after conversion; because every knee does not bow at the mention of Jehovah's name. It takes time. He himself, must grow in matter how dim the light may grow, the oil is there, and it will shine again. The source of light and strength is God, and it is only when we depend wholly upon Him that we have the power and strength for doing His work.

grace, and so must the world. It cannot all be done at once. But we know it will be done. 'The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it.' God's children will carry the work on to the end."

MINUTE SERMONS.

BY REV. GEO. H. HUBBARD.

ON THE PARABLE OF THE TEN VIRGINS.

Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom.—Matt. 25:1.

Life is opportunity. Death is emergency. Judgment is revelation. Destiny is fruition. Wisely use life's opportunity and thou shalt neither dread death's emergency nor fear the judgment's revelation. The rather shalt thou gladly welcome both as the necessary forerunners of a joyous and eternal fruition.

FIVE MINUTE SERMONS

XLVIII. PRAYER SENSE.

STRANGER came into the mid-week prayer meeting at Somno, the other night. Bro. Jennings noticed this, and so he prayed with unusual fervor and the burden of his petition was, "Lord, give us souls for our hire." He also told the Lord how they had labored for Him. Others prayed that they might yet "go home rejoicing, bearing many precious sheaves of immortal souls."

This was also the leading theme and thought of their testimony. They told of their fervent zeal for the Lord's work, and the pleasure found in laboring for Him, usually ending up with an expression of the earnest hope they held that they would be repaid in a harvest of precious souls.

Brother Jennings was quite surprised next day when the stranger came into his store, carrying a sample case. After the goods had been spread out, he sat on his counter and said: "I was right glad to see you at our prayer meeting last night. 'Taint offen drummers goes to church. How'd you like it?"

"I always enjoy the prayer meeting because my Lord is there. But do you know, it would have been more enjoyable last night if you people hadn't made so many foolish business propositions to the Lord."

"Why, how?"

"See here. Some of you prayed that the Lord would give you souls for your hire, didn't you? And hire, as I understand it, means wages. Now, how many souls do you suppose you have earned these last ten years? How much would you give a man in hard cash for the amount of work, actual labor, you have done for God? And, remember, a soul is a precious thing, hard to estimate in money. Count up how many you have earned. The church would not grow very fast if God answered that prayer on a square basis."

"Why, I go to church regular."

"Good gracious, man! do you call that work? How much would you earn on a farm if you lay in a hammock and just looked at the fields for an hour and a half?"

"You're rubbing it in pretty hard, Mr. Perry. I reckon you don't know that church would have gone to pieces long ago if it hadn't been for me. I have just kept it agoing. I have paid as much as anybody to the preaching."

"I believe you have paid your money, my friend, but have you paid your debts?"

Brother Jennings was beginning to get angry, as he answered: "I don't owe nary a cent, sir."

"But just look at your account with your Lord. Figure up what your soul is worth. If you are talking about hire, see what you owe God for what He has done for you.

Of course, you can never pay it all, but, before we ask God to give us hire we have never earned, we ought to try a little harder to give Him His due. It isn't you alone, my good friend; how can the churches expect God to trust them with souls, when they are dishonest with His money. God has at least as much business ability as you or I. And then, what nonsense it is to ask God to give us sheaves when we do no sowing. It will not be necessary to pray for a harvest if we really drop seeds of sacrifice into furrows of love. A little less sentiment and a little more sense would improve our prayers."

Brother Jennings had an interview with himself that night, and although he tried to convince himself that he had earned souls, had really been sowing something, he had at last to give up and acknowledge that he had been asking for wages on false pretences. And now he has gone to work.

things because He has learned obedience to righteousness and truth.

He is our brother and became such in order to share His heritage with us. His love to us deserves our love and allegiance.

Will He Come?

That has been the question on the lips of many since the day when, standing on the Mount of Olives, the apostles saw the Lord Jesus taken up from among them. Shakespeare well characterizes the end of life as entrance upon a mysterious land, "the undiscovered country, from whose bourn no traveler returns."

We look for no one else to come back, but He has promised to return. All our hopes of the future are bound up in the fulfillment of that pledge. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ Jesus, we are of all men most miserable" declares the greatest of the apostles.

Bliss has no being, virtue has no good,
But from the prospect of eternal life.

So we eat and drink, remembering His loving sacrifice, His ever present help and sure promise. He will come. Are you working and watching that when He comes you may be ready to receive Him joyously and be received by Him in peace?

When?

So soon as the disciples began to preach the pledge of Christ's second coming men began to inquire, "When is it to take place?" and, "What are the signs of His coming?" The inquiry still continues. Many have tried to forecast from the prophetic numbers of the Scriptures the date of the event. This has to a large extent been profitless, if not worse. But because the time and circumstances are unknown the fact is made no less sure. The important matter for us is not when or how Jesus will come, but, rather, are we ready for Him? We have work to do to get ourselves and the world ready for Him. The whole of individual life and of society must be raised to the plane of the morally and spiritually pure. The greater part of it has been touched as yet only on the outer borders. Our task is not to speculate on dates and details outside our sphere, but to accomplish the work left us to do.

Ring Out, Ye Bells!

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light!
The year is dying in the night—
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die!

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells across the snow!
The year is going; let him go—
Ring out the false, ring in the true!

Ring out a slowly dying cause
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws!

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good!

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thorns and wars of old;
Ring in the thousand years of peace!

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land;
Ring in the Christ that is to be!

RETARDS DIGESTION.

Action of Alcohol In the Stomach
Shown by Experiments.

Dr. Kellogg, the eminent physician at the head of the Battle Creek sanitarium, has been conducting experiments to determine the results of alcohol upon the digestive processes of the body. For the purpose of studying digestion in general he adopted the plan of giving to his patients and to the subjects of his experiments what he calls "test breakfasts" of different kinds and qualities of foods and drinks and at certain times after the breakfast has been eaten removing it from the stomach by means of a stomach pump and submitting it to chemical examination.

In studying the effect of alcohol upon the digestion Dr. Kellogg has given small and large doses of different kinds of liquor in connection with these "test breakfasts." Thus it has already been determined that four ounces of claret, an amount that would contain a little more than one-half an ounce of alcohol, very seriously retards digestion, while two ounces of brandy, a trifle over an ounce of alcohol, totally suspends digestive processes for a considerable length of time.

Dr. Kellogg says that these experiments practically demonstrate the conclusions arrived at by Sir William Roberts, the eminent English physician, who some years ago experimented with alcohol in artificial digestive processes with similar results.—New Voice.

OCEANS OF LIQUOR.

One Bartender Has Sold Enough to Float a Ship.

A Broadway bartender of a mathematical turn of mind by a simple calculation finds that in his career of 36 years at the bar he has sold malt, vinous and spirituous liquors enough to float a large ship.

Never having lost any time by sickness and having had but few days off, he estimated that he has worked an average of 340 days a year. This gives a total of 12,240 days worked. Taking one year with another, he has drawn a half barrel, or 20 gallons, of beer each day. This gives a total of 244,800 gallons of beer sold. Of whisky a conservative average is 300 drinks a day, including mixed drinks. At 60 drinks to the gallon, which is a fair average, this gives 3,672,000 drinks, or 61,200 gallons. Of wine he has averaged sales of 50 quarters a day, or 153,000 gallons, for the 36 years, sufficient to float a battleship.—New York Journal.

What One Frenchman Drank.

A French alcoholic patient, the keeper of a Paris wineshop, gave the doctors the following statement about his drinking habits: "At 6:30 a. m. I rise. At 7 I take coffee and brandy. About 9 I drink three or four glasses of white wine and perhaps eat a little therewith. Between 9 and dejeuner I usually take three or four aperitifs—bitters, vermouth or absinth. For my second breakfast I have one liter of wine and then coffee and rum. During the afternoon I take various consommations. Between 5 and 8 p. m. I take some more aperitifs and average about three or four. At 6 o'clock I have my dinner, or supper, with which I drink one liter of red wine. Between that and bedtime I consume a few glasses of brandy or liquor."

Rum Produces Consumption.

Drink will tend to the production of consumption in more ways than one. It is not merely that the man who indulges in drink predisposes himself to its attacks, but what he spends in drink he is taking out of the general income of his family, which is more or less impoverished. The children are less well nourished in consequence of his self indulgence, and in this way indirect as well as direct predisposition to consumption, and indeed to all forms of disease, comes through drink, not simply through intemperance, but through the self indulgence which leads men to spend so large a proportion of their income in what is to themselves and to their families perfectly useless and injurious.—Dr. William Broadbent.

A Distiller on Whisky.

Here is a little temperance sermon from one of the biggest producers of whisky in Kentucky: "After having lived 81 years I have learned that one drink of whisky is enough, two are too many and three are not half enough. I have also learned that drinking whisky is a business by itself. It is, moreover, a jealous business that doesn't want you to do anything else. You must attend strictly to that when you are at it and let all other business go. And, sir, it is a business that doesn't pay. On the contrary, it is a losing business all the time, sir."—Guidon.

A Total Abstainer.

Rear Admiral John W. Philip recently said, "I have cruised in all parts of the world, eaten the fruits of the country without limit at all hours of the day and night, drunk the water from shore at will, but have never experienced any ill results—due entirely, I think, to total abstinence."—Selected.

Fills Lunatic Asylums.

In a recent treatise on alcoholism by Trull, it is stated that in England 75 per cent of all the cases of pauperism are due to drink and in Germany 90 per cent. In Germany drink leads to 1,600 cases of suicide a year and supplies the lunatic asylums with 3,000 victims.

Drunkards Must Pay.

The Bethnal Green Guardians, England, have given notice that any person who becomes chargeable to the ratepayers in that district through suffering from delirium tremens will in future be prosecuted on his recovery under the vagrants acts.—Exchange.

LESSON XIV—FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 31.

Text of the Lesson, a Comprehensive Quarterly Review—Golden Text, Ps. cxlii, 2—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

LESSON I.—Joy in God's house (Ps. cxlii). Golden Text, Ps. cxlii, 1, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." It is always right and pleasing to God to consider the Jews and Jerusalem. First offerings and first efforts for them bring sure blessing, according to verse 6 in connection with which see the command in Isa. lxii, 6, 7. Remember that God's way is always, The kingdom first, then all else will be added (Math. vi, 33).

LESSON II.—Haman's plot against the Jews (Est. iii, 1-11). Golden Text, Rom. viii, 31, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" In all the Bible we see the conflict between the devil and his agents and God and His people. The adversary often seems to triumph, and so it will be till the kingdom comes, but the Lamb shall overcome, for He is King of kings and Lord of lords (Rev. xvii, 14). Let us be comforted by the assurance that God Himself is a hedge and a wall of fire about His people, and none can touch them without His permission (Job i, Zech. ii).

LESSON III.—Esther pleading for her people (Est. viii, 8-8 and 15-17). Golden Text, Ps. xxxvii, 5, "Commit thy way unto the Lord. Trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass." Esther fasting and praying and taking her life in her hand on behalf of her people is suggestive of Him who laid down His life for us, suffering in our stead.

LESSON IV.—Ezra's journey to Jerusalem (Ezra viii, 21-32). Golden Text, Ezra viii, 22, "The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him." Ezra's trust was in the Lord God, the God of heaven, and looking to Him alone he set forth on the long journey, and God took special care of them and delivered them from the hand of the enemy. When any one relies wholly on the Lord, He will show Himself strong for them (II Chron. xvi, 9), but their heart must be right with Him seeking only His glory.

LESSON V.—Psalms of deliverance (Ps. lxxv and cxxvi). Golden Text, Ps. cxxvi, 5, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." The lessons in Esther and Ezra suggest these songs of praise for deliverances. Difficult places in our lives give God opportunities to show His power. When people are at their wits' end (all their wisdom swallowed up), then He bringeth them out of their distresses (Ps. cxvii, 27, 28 and margin).

LESSON VI.—Nehemiah's prayer (Neh. i, 1-11). Golden Text, Neh. i, 11, "Prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day." Here again we are reminded of our Lord Jesus as we see Nehemiah forgetting himself and his position and bearing the burden of his poor, afflicted people in Jerusalem ready to go to them and bear affliction with them if only he might help them. In chapter ii, 4, 5, we see the possibility of praying even while talking to a person, and of relying upon God for the words we speak.

LESSON VII.—Rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. iv, 7-18). Golden Text, Math. xxvi, 41, "Watch and pray." Nehemiah having obtained the favor of the King, came to Jerusalem and encouraged the people to rebuild the walls. They took hold with a will, and the wall was finished. The enemies did not fail to get in their work of persevering hindrance and discouragement and plotting to overthrow, but Nehemiah's reliance upon God gained for them the victory.

LESSON VIII.—Public reading of the Scriptures (Neh. viii, 1-12). Golden Text, Neh. viii, 3, "The ears of all the people were attentive unto the Book of the law." The greatest thing on earth is to know God, and there is no way to know Him but by His word. He says that we may willingly obey Him (Isa. i, 18, 19) and thus be abundantly blessed. LESSON IX.—Woes of intemperance (Prov. xxiii, 29-35). Golden Text, Prov. xx, 1, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." The great deceiver and murderer and father of lies has many devices, by means of which he seeks to ruin body and soul, but strong drink is one of his best destroyers, for when he gets a person filled with drink they are so completely under his influence he can do what he will through them.

LESSON X.—Keeping the Sabbath (Neh. xiii, 15-22). Golden Text, Ex. xx, 8, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." In this busy world not many people find time to get acquainted with God, so He has graciously given us one day in seven on which He may specially reveal Himself to those who desire to know Him, and He tells us that if we will conscientiously give Him the whole of this day we will learn to delight ourselves in Him, and doing so we shall obtain the desires of our hearts (Isa. lviii, 13, 14; Ps. xxxvii, 4).

LESSON XI.—Lessons in giving (Mal. i, 6-11 and iii, 8-12). Golden Text, II Cor. ix, 7, "God loveth a cheerful giver." The word "cheerful" is literally "hilarious" and is not used elsewhere in the New Testament. The spirit of giving, which God loves, is seen in the gifts of the people for the tabernacle and temple (Ex. xxxv, 29; xxxvi, 6, 7; I Chron. xxix, 9). David would not offer that which cost him nothing (II Sam. xxiv, 24), and Mary brought that which was very costly (John xii, 3), and the poor widow cast in all she had, even all her living (Mark xii, 44). One-tenth of our income and one-seventh of our time is the least we should offer Him. Let us give Him all, and do it hilariously, for He gave Himself for us.

LESSON XII.—Fruits of right and wrongdoing (Mal. iii, 13, to iv, 6). Golden Text, Gal. vi, 7, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." God, who put in the garden of Eden all that is pleasant to the sight and good for food and who so loved us as to give His only begotten, well beloved Son, loves to fill His people with His abundance and takes special interest in all who will let Him.

LESSON XIII.—Christ's coming foretold (Isa. ix, 2-7). Golden Text, Luke ii, 11, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." As truly as He came once in great humiliation to suffer and die for our sins, so surely will He come again in glory as King of Israel and King of kings, and the whole earth shall be filled with His glory. The church, His body, will meet Him on His way and return with Him to reign over the earth.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 31, "The Heavenly Record"—Text, Luke x, 20; Rev. iii, 1-5.

"Rejoice because your names are written in heaven."

It is a common figure of speech in the Bible, that of record books in which the actions of men are written down and preserved by God and that from these documents the future destiny of each person shall be determined. Perhaps it refers to the custom in oriental lands of having a court historian or chronicler, who preserved in writing the notable events of the times and noted the names of those deserving special remembrance and reward because of eminent service given the king.

The idea is expanded in the book of Revelation and assumes a very poetical form with dramatic force. Malachi closes the Old Testament canon with a similar declaration of a book of remembrance in which God's chosen ones are recorded for reward.

The closing year emphasizes the thought of our past life record. What has it been? With all of us the message of the Spirit to the Lord's church should sound warning: "I have not found thy works perfect before God. Be watchful and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die. Hold fast and repent."

Warning and Promise.

"'Tis greatly wise to talk with our past hours."

This is the time when men take account of stock and figure up gains and losses. He who never strikes a balance sheet may get a living, but can scarcely expect to make much success in business. Men need to reckon up at times and see how their investments are paying. If some ventures are failures, close them out. Beware of similar things in future. What pays well increase and take care of. We must be warned by the past. We need at this time to consider seriously what our course in life is yielding. What way does it shape and tend? "If thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come on thee." That warning sounds as sternly as when spoken to the Sardinian people. It applies to us. Again, the promise is equally firm, "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before My Father and before His angels." It will pay to overcome, but is folly to be overcome. We have been sufficiently warned. Let us take heed!

Bishop Gilbert Haven.

He was born in Malden, Mass., in 1821 and died in the old homestead in 1880. He came of good New England Methodist stock, was graduated from Wesleyan university and took a place in the church for which he was well fitted. His was a personality very unlike that of any other man of his time in many particulars. He saw visions of things to be and with great energy set about making them real. He was a reformer and so was feared by many of the timid who dreaded to have old forms disturbed. As he grew old men found him in practical matters soundly conservative of all that was good and safely progressive where advance was needed.

His memorable work was done as editor of Zion's Herald and as bishop in the colored work of the south. His death was hastened by African fever contracted on his episcopal tour to Liberia. Whoever came close enough to him to form personal acquaintance found in him one of the most delightful and faithful of friends. He did much to quicken the church to a higher and broader as well as deeper and more intense life

Personal Pledges.

There is much of helpfulness in pledges made to each other among young people. It is not a sign of weakness, but of strength, to join together in any good resolution. A young man awakens to the fact that cigarette smoking is useless, is wasteful, may be harmful and ought to be given up. He resolves to smoke no more. Shall he go alone? He can do so. He is strong enough, but he likes company. He feels interested that others shall see the truth as he sees it. He talks, argues, persuades and induces others to do as he does. They agree. They pledge to each other. This is no surrender of personal liberty, but is a strengthening bond and cement of friendship and promoter of genuine fellowship.

The League pledge is very valuable. We can well use these covenants in service more fully. Join together in service. Promise each other to be faithful in daily prayer, in testimony in the church meetings, to invite others to Jesus. Pledge and perform.

FARM AND GARDEN

HOW TO WINTER APPLES.

Pitting Outside—Bedding In Barrels. Waxed Paper Wrappers.

I never had better, juicier, tenderer apples to eat in early spring than those taken out of a pit outdoors. For that reason I have always favored the plan of wintering at least a portion of my apples for home use in that way, says

FIG. 1

WINTERING APPLES.

T. Greiner in The Farm and Fireside. This method seems to keep all the flavor and all the brittleness in the apple intact and perhaps is the simplest and safest of all for ordinary uses. The apple is less susceptible to injury from freezing than potatoes. It ranks about with mangels, beets, turnips and similar root crops in this respect.

Every farmer may be supposed to know how to pit potatoes. Apples can be handled in the same manner, only that a little less covering may be needed. Where the subsoil is porous we may dig a pit a foot or more in depth. Otherwise we must select a well drained spot and put the apples on top of the ground, resting on a good layer of clean straw. Pile up the apples in a conical heap, inserting a wisp of straw into the center of each heap and letting it stick out at the top. This latter is for ventilation. Gases and heat must have a chance to escape. Next put on a generous covering of straw or marsh hay. If it is a foot or more in thickness, it will do no harm.

In place of the wisp of straw an upright box, say six inches square and long enough to reach from the ground to a few inches above the top of the heap when done, as shown in Fig. 1, will supply the needed ventilation. The earth covering which comes over the straw all around need not be more than a few inches thick. The pit is thus to be left until freezing weather, when a further covering of straw and earth or a very heavy covering of coarse manure is to be placed upon the frozen earth of the first covering. Roots are pitted in the same manner.

I am going to try still another plan this year. The apples are put in barrels in the usual way and the barrels headed up, although it may not be necessary to press the fruit in as tightly as we do for long distance shipment. The barrels may be left out in a cool spot as long as there is little danger of severe freezing. After that they are bedded in the ground in a well drained and protected spot, as shown in Fig. 2, and covered with plenty of straw and a thin layer of earth. I have no doubt that the apples will come out all right.

For my own table use during the fall and early winter I have again wrapped a lot of Gravenstein apples and Anjou pears in waxed paper, then in tissue paper or ordinary newspaper, and packed them in layers in kegs, using light oats as filling between the layers. These kegs are stored in a meal chest in the granary, where they are safe from rats, mice and thievish bipeds and reasonably so from freezing. The same plan gave me a good deal of satisfaction last year and, I believe, is one of the best that could be practiced for the purpose of having a home supply of choice fruit at that particular season. I have hardly seen a rot speck on either apples or pears thus treated.

Handling Rice.

We have raised both upland and lowland rice this year, and the treatment of both is the same, says a Texas correspondent of Farm and Ranch. You cannot thrash it in safety until it has stood in the shock at least ten days, during which time it goes through its first sweat. It should be handled like wheat during this time if not thrashed then. It should be stacked to protect it from bad weather, but not before the straw is perfectly dry, as otherwise it will stack burn. There is also danger of shock burning if shocks are made too large while straw is green. Rice paddy, or rough rice, weighs 44 pounds to the bushel. It requires special modifications in the mechanism of thrashing machines in the way of speed, grain riddles, etc. The separator has to run at a higher speed and the engine at a lower one than for wheat. A sack of rice, standard weight, is 180 pounds, which millers claim will mill a barrel of 162 pounds weight of clean rice. Various species of rice differ in regard to the quantity of head rice they mill out to the sack, as Honduras mills out ten pounds less of head rice than Japan, which mills 100 to 110 pounds to the sack of 180 pounds.

Seedsman in the United States apparently look for some shortage in vegetable seeds, including some varieties of beans and cabbage, lettuce and early peas.

FLORIDA FARMING.

Velvet Beans and Beggar Weed Are Changing the Order of Things.

"Previous to the freeze of 1895 there was practically no general farming in the state outside of old Florida, the cotton belt of the middle and west divisions. In the peninsula section the growers simply lived out of the store until the orange crop was gathered, when they paid their bills to the extent of $1,000, $1,500 or $2,000 and then began the same round over again.

"The temporary destruction of the orange groves and the introduction of the two invaluable legumes, velvet beans and desmodium (beggar weed), have changed the order of things. Florida is now really richer in leguminous soil enriching crops than the north. She has velvet beans, cowpeas and desmodium with the prospect of a winter legume, the vetch, being presently added to the list, so covering all the year." So writes S. Powers of Florida to The Country Gentleman, in which he has the following to say about the two legumes that he values so highly:

The velvet bean on a good soil will cover the ground with a solid mat of vines six or eight inches deep. It produces large, rich beans, more bushels per acre than corn, 25 or 30 bushels being no uncommon yield. They are very

Rev. James Cannon, Jr., Principal Blackstone Female Institute, Blackstone, Va.
My Dear Brother.—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d, I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered College classes and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than most reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and nine of your Faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates. To render correlation effective I consider two things necessary—an adjusted course of instruction and a Faculty familiar with the courses of the Woman's College and in sympathy with its methods. These you have, I hope, in my turn, that you find the graduates of our College whom you have taken into your Faculty superior as teachers and worthy as Christian women.
Yours truly,
W. W. SMITH.

This letter shows that the instruction given at the Institute is of the most thorough kind, and is entirely acceptable to such judges as the Faculty of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

fattening to cattle and hogs. Thousands of acres were planted last spring in south Florida and nearly all by men who had first experimented in a small way and satisfied themselves of the great value of this crop. Many machines have been tried for thrashing them, hitherto with only indifferent success, but an inventor seems to have devised a satisfactory thrashing machine, a two-horse and a four-horse power.

The cultivation of upland rice has also received a strong impetus in south Florida, and in a few years we shall probably see combined rice and bean thrashers traveling about the country.

A good many bean hullers were manufactured at first, the pods being picked by hand, but the pods are so tightly adhesive that it has been found best to grind them up unshelled. They make the richest feed for cattle, swine and milk cows. I should not be surprised if 30,000 acres of velvet beans are planted in the state next year. In the spring there is such a mass of vegetable matter on the ground that it is a serious task to plow it under, even after it has been cut up with the disk harrow. In a few years, under this course of velvet beans, light sandy land becomes dark colored with humus and will produce 30 to 35 bushels of corn per acre without other fertilizer.

Desmodium is also a leguminous plant and is often called Florida clover. It yields no grain, but can be cut for hay twice a year, occasionally three times, yielding two tons per acre, which, when properly cured, is as fragrant and as freely eaten by live stock as red clover hay in the north. The seed needs to be sown thick in order to reduce the stalks (they will grow seven feet high if standing sparse on good land), and the crop should be cut green.

We do not deny the poverty of most Florida soils, but here is the point: These legumes, with the help of a slight sprinkling of potash and phosphate, will produce two-thirds as much value in grain feed (beans) per acre as the average northern soil, and more forage, and then a manure crop. This yearly manure crop keeps up the land. Desmodium is self seeding. Velvet beans have to be planted every year unless left on the ground, beans and all, and they are too valuable for that.
